friend near him (Mr Hume) flourish a silk bandanna, the importation of which was prohibited, in the face of the then Chancellor of the Exchequer. (A laugh.) All, indeed, who would recollect the history of those silk duties, would come to the conclusion that this country never could have succeeded in an attempt to sustain an exclusive silk manufacture. There was also another signal instance of the failure of the Government to prevent trade of this kind in the instance of the tobacco duties. In this country, with every circumstance in their favour, with penal laws of daily and ready execution, with a set of preventive-service men covering both shore and sea, it was found impossible to put down a contraband trade; and it might be thought that this could be done in the case of Africa, upon a quarter of the habitable globe where, in addition to other disadvantages, they had nearly the whole population within, and various nations of the world without, struggling against them. They needed not the experience of thirty years to teach them that, sooner or later, they must come to the same conclusion as that come to by a great English writer nearly two hundred years since—Sir Josiah Child—whose opinion had been confirmed by several other political writer of succeeding time, that "He who will give a high price for any commodity, shall obtain it by some means or other; of such force, fraud, and subtlety is the course of trade." (Hear, hear.) It was a great consolation to him, who had undertaken the arduous duty of impeaching the present oppressive system, to find his opinions corroborated by evidence laid upon the table of the House, and to find the views which he had held and expressed for years in that House upon the subject so fully corroborated and adopted by all who, from their intimate knowledge of the country, or practical application to the subject, were best qualified to judge of their merits. He did not intend to trespass upon the indulgence of the House by any elaborate analysis of the evidence given before the committees of either House of Parliament, nor was it necessary that he should do so. The committees had examined a vast variety of witnesses, naval officers, travellers, merchants, missionaries, and other persons who had visited the country, and they elicited from them a great variety of conflicting and contradictory evidence. Many of these persons, the missionaries especially, had no more knowledge of the slave-trade than if they had never been in Africa; and although they generally expressed very strong opinions in favour of maintaining the squadron, and of the position and cost of that squadron they had, in their own persons, no knowledge at all. Of the witnesses, as a class, unquestionably the most important were the naval officers employed on the African stations. Of this class of witnesses not less than fourteen were examined before the committee, several of whom differed widely from the framers of that report. It was remarkable that while almost all the officers who had recently been in connexion with the operations of the squadron were utterly hopeless of ever suppressing the slave-trade by any means, the witnesses who had spoken most in favour of the present system of the squadron were those who had not seen anything of the slave-trade, or of the operations of the squadron, for the last six or seven years. Captain Denman stated that in the world, put down the slave-trade in two years, by means of his own. Captain Rutherfield also believed in the final extinction of the slave-trade by force within a limited time, although not so sanguine of success as Captain Denman on the subject. But neither of these gentlemen had seen on the coast of Africa for the last seven or eight years. Since that time the slave-trade had gone on gradually improving its tactics, sharpening its evils, and increasing all those means of evasion which they had adopted with such success. The question was not, he apprehended, whether the slave-trade could be put down by such plans as those laid before the committee by Captain Denman and others. The main question which concerned the House was not whether the slave-trade could be put down by force. Upon this point he found naval officers of at least equal spirit and judgment with Captain Denman, stating that no manner of management of the fleet, no cruising in-shore or off shore, no burning of barracoons, no right of search, no right of seizure, no right of plan whatever which rested upon the principle of force would ever succeed in putting down the slave-trade. Many of them went even further than this, and stated that one of the least means likely to be successful would be the adoption of Captain Denman's plan. He had already stated that the most valuable of the witnesses on this point were the naval officers, and he was certain that the feeling of the House would go with him when he stated that, of the naval officers, the most important witnesses would be the commanders-in-chief—those who had held command of the African squadron. Of such officers three only had been examined before the committee: of those three two were opinionists, and had held that important office lately Captain Matson and Sir C. Hotham. Captain Matson was upon the coast of Africa for three years, and was an officer of great intelligence and of great practical experience. What was the opinion of Captain Matson on this subject? He was asked, "Whether, looking to the extent of that coast, and to the facilities which the coast affords for the shipment of slaves, do you imagine that it would be possible, by any means of naval force, to suppress the slave-trade so long as there exists a demand for slaves on the other side of the Atlantic? -I am perfectly convinced that it would be impossible. Are you acquainted with the particular plan for the suppression of the slave-trade which has been proposed and strongly recommended by Captain Denman? —I know the general outline of the plan. Have you read the sketch of it which he submitted to the Admiralty? Yes Do you think that the vigorous enforcement of that system would effectually extinguish the slave-trade? I am convinced that it would. Do you think that it would to any important degree diminish it?—I do not think it would. Are you of opinion that, though by means of that system of blockade and cruising as there exists at present, the slave-trade is carried on, the slave-trade would shift its quarters, and break out elsewhere? I entertain no doubt whatever of it." At the end of 1846 Captain Matson was succeeded by Captain Bruce. It was not for him to go at the opinion of Sir Charles Hotham, but this he might venture to say, because he had it from the late lamented First Lord of the Admiralty, that Sir Charles Hotham was selected for that command, not on account of personal or political favour, but deliberately because he was, in the opinion of Lord Auckland, the fittest officer in the public service to undertake that delicate and important duty. Sir Charles Hotham, then, owed his appointment entirely to his personal ability. Captain Richards, when on the coast of the squadron, display any deficiency of those great qualities which had procured for him this high appointment? During the sitting of the committee, he (Mr. Hutt) was anxious to inquire into the point, and requested Lord Jocelyn, who was then a Lord of the Board and a member of the committee, and one who voted against every one of the propositions submitted by him (Mr. Hutt) to the committee. He was asked—"As a naval officer and a Lord of the Admiralty, are you able to speak with the transactions of the African squadron while under the command of the late Commodore Sir Charles Hotham?—Yes. Were the operations of the fleet conducted on the part of that officer with zeal, intelligence, and skill?—I have heard the Board of Admiralty, both collectively and individually, give their opinion as to the manner in which they considered the services had been performed on the part of that officer." Now, this was not explain that better than by reading a letter which I have in my hand, which was the last communication made to Sir Charles Hotham on his striking his broad pennant at Spithead. From whom is the letter?—The letter is signed by the Secretary of the Admiralty, by the direction of the Board. Will you be so kind as to read it?—'Admiralty, 15th April, 1849.—Sir, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acquaint you, that your return to England affords their Lordships an opportunity they have much desired, of conveying to you the expression of their approval of the ability and energy with which you have conducted your late command; and it is with much satisfaction that my Lords attribute to your judgment and discretion your having so successfully secured the co-operation of your foreign colleagues throughout your employment abroad. I am, sir, your most obedient servant, W. A. B. Hamilton.'" He was then asked—"Do you think that if it had been possible to stop the slave-trade by such means as were confided to Sir Charles Hotham the slave-trade would have been stopped under his control?—I am decidedly of that opinion." Captain Denman stated in the progress of his examination before the committee, that Sir C. Hotham was one of the most distinguished officers in the British navy, and a man that was always looked up to. Now, what were the opinions of this eminent and excellent officer upon the subject. Capt. Hotham was asked— "How long had you held the command of that African station?—From October, 1846, until March, 1849. What was the naval force usually under your orders? —It seldom exceeded 22 ships of war. How many of those were steamers?—It would be difficult to give an average of those—the number varied very much. What was the largest number of steam-vessels that you had under your orders at any time? The largest number was five. Was that force in a high state of discipline, generally speaking? I thought so. Were your views carried out by the officers under your command to your entire satisfaction?—Entirely so. What was the result of your operations; did you succeed in stopping the slave-trade?—No. Did you cripple it to such an extent as, in your opinion, is calculated to give to the slave-trade a permanent check?—No. Do you consider that the slave-trade has been generally regulated by the strength and efficiency of the British squadron on the coast, or by the commercial demand for slaves?— I consider it is entirely dependent upon the commercial demand for slaves, and has little or no connexion with the squadron." Such, then, was the opinion of gentlemen who could not but believe were as fully qualified to judge of the merits of the question as any living men. But if it should be considered that the evidence of the commodores on the African station should be insufficient, he would give the opinion of one who looked upon the question from an entirely different point of view, but whose opinions were deserving of the utmost consideration. He referred to the late Mr. Bandinel, of the Foreign-office. That gentleman had been for a period of thirty years at the head of that department of the Foreign-office charged with the suppression of the slave-trade, and he came before the committee an old man, with all that moderation and reserve which forty-five years of official life were sure to impart to any naturally judicious and discreet. (Hear, hear.) What was the opinion of this long-experienced and prudent official servant? He said— "The squadron has produced upon the slave-trade no effect at all. The squadron has not been able even to diminish the number of Africans who are demanded by the people of Brazil; they here may get as many as they want." He could quote from the reports of the commissioners other valuable opinions, to show, in the words of Dr. Lushington, that "the squadron had not produced any effect either in suppressing the slave-trade or diminishing its extent." He was content to rest his case, so far as depended upon the authority and weight of the evidence, upon the opinions of Messrs. Hotham, and Mr. Bandinel. (Hear, hear.) He knew not where they were to look for guidance or counsel if a very considerable amount of deference was not given to authorities such as these. He most unhesitatingly declared that he should mistrust his own opinions on the subject, if he found them opposed to authorities such as those he had referred to. (Hear, hear.) He came now to another part of the subject. They would find as they proceeded, that, although the principle of force had a great many admirers, who still believed that they could suppress the slave-trade by force, there was no one who considered the present system as satisfactory. (Hear.) It was rather too much, that, after an experience of thirty years, after having spent £25,000,000 in the promotion of this system, they should all at once discover that the system was a bad one, and required immediate modification. A paper had been placed in his hand that morning, with a notice that an amendment would be moved to his motion, and he found that the hon. member for Derbyshire (Mr Evans) was among the class who, though he was strongly in favour of maintaining the principle of force, still thought that the manner in which we now apply that principle was one that could not be sustained. That hon. member had, therefore, brought forward another plan, a counter-project, in which (Mr. Hutt) we saw a great deal that was obscure, much that was objectionable, and not a small portion wholly unintelligible. ("Hear, hear," and a laugh.) It was quite clear, however, that he thought the present plan was one which required alteration. But although his hon. friend (Mr. Evans) did not express himself in plain language, there were others who did so. One naval captain told them "that they might put down the slave-trade if we would but triple our force upon the coast of Africa." Another stated that "he would engage it with forty ships, chiefly steam-boats;" but he also said, "you must make treaties with the African chiefs along the coast, and pay handsome subsidies to them." Another very respectable gentleman also thought that "if we placed the squadron in a greater state of efficiency, maintained all concerned in the slave-trade, established tradi g posts all along the whole of both sides of the continent of Africa, and change the disposition of the native chiefs—(a laugh)—we might be able to put down the slave-trade." But, lastly, there was a report of the committee of the House of Lords, in which they were told that a little alteration in the management and equipment of our fleets (the Bishops had surveyed the coast, and consulted Sir Hotham on other matters), and that then they could manage it better themselves). a little alteration in the management of the squadron, with little or no additional expense, and the thing was done. Many people were in the habit of talking in this way, of augmenting the squadron, and trifling the cruisers at little or no additional expense, as if the British Government, regardless of the effects upon its subjects at home, had nothing else to do than to try cash experiments in putting down the slave-trade. While he was present numbers of vessels employed by this country in putting down the slave-trade? Excluding packet and surveying vessels, there was not less than one-fourth of the whole British navy afloat. There were twenty-six vessels employed on the western coast of Africa, to which might be added three on the Cape station, three on the eastern coast of South America, and several on the West India station, making in all between thirty-nine and forty vessels employed in this force. It was the opinion of naval officers, wholly inadequate for the purpose. We are now going on, at an expenditure of £700,000 per annum, in the prosecution of this system, and that expenditure was palpably too small in the opinion of those who advocated suppression by force, many of whom were dreaming of nothing so much as how they could augment the expenses. He knew it was considered as rather wanting in good breeding to be talking about expenses in connexion with this subject (a laugh), —but that it implied rather a deficiency of good manners to speak of expense in connexion with the squadron. He did not know how it was, but it appeared to be clear that the drain upon the public resources in two years would be equal to the sum of his own. Captain Rutherfield also believed in the final extinction of the slave-trade by force within a limited time, although not so sanguine of success as Captain Denman on the subject. But neither of these gentlemen had seen on the coast of Africa for the last seven or eight years. Since that time the slave-trade had gone on gradually improving its tactics, sharpening its evils, and increasing all those means of evasion which they had adopted with such success. The question was not, he apprehended, whether the slave-trade could be put down by such plans as those laid before the committee by Captain Denman and others The main question which concerned the House was not whether the slave-trade could be put down by force. Upon this point he found naval officers of at least equal spirit and judgment with Captain Denman, stating that no manner of management of the fleet, no cruising in-shore or off shore, no burning of barracoons, no right of search, no right of seizure, no right of plan whatever which rested upon the principle of force would ever succeed in putting down the slave-trade. Many of them went even further than this, and stated that one of the least means likely to be successful would be the adoption of Captain Denman's pan. He had already stated that the most valuable of the witnesses on this point were the naval officers, and he was certain that the feeling of the House would go with him when he stated that, of the naval officers, the most important witnesses would be the commanders-in-chief—those who had held command of the African squadron. Of such officers three only had been examined before the committee: of those three two were opinionists, and had held that important office lately Captain Matson and Sir C. Hotham. Captain Matson was upon the coast of Africa for three years, and was an officer of great intelligence and of great practical experience. What was the opinion of Captain Matson on this subject? He was asked, "Whether, looking to the extent of that coast, and to the facilities which the coast affords for the shipment of slaves, do you imagine that it would be possible, by any means of naval force, to suppress the slave-trade so long as there exists a demand for slaves on the other side of the Atlantic? -I am perfectly convinced that it would be impossible. Are you acquainted with the particular plan for the suppression of the slave-trade which has been proposed and strongly recommended by Captain Denman? —I know the general outline of the plan. Have you read the sketch of it which he submitted to the Admiralty? Yes Do you think that the vigorous enforcement of that system would effectually extinguish the slave-trade? I am convinced that it would. Do you think that it would to any important degree diminish it?—I do not think it would. Are you of opinion that, though by means of that system of blockade and cruising as there exists at present, the slave-trade is carried on, the slave-trade would shift its quarters, and break out elsewhere? I entertain no doubt whatever of it." At the end of 1846 Captain Matson was succeeded by Captain Bruce. It was not for him to go at the opinion of Sir Charles Hotham, but this he might venture to say, because he had it from the late lamented First Lord of the Admiralty, that Sir Charles Hotham was selected for that command, not on account of personal or political favour, but deliberately because he was, in the opinion of Lord Auckland, the fittest officer in the public service to undertake that delicate and important duty. Sir Charles Hotham, then, owed his appointment entirely to his personal ability. Captain Richards, when on the coast of the squadron, display any deficiency of those great qualities which had procured for him this high appointment? During the sitting of the committee, he (Mr. Hutt) was anxious to inquire into the point, and requested Lord Jocelyn, who was then a Lord of the Board and a member of the committee, and one who voted against every one of the propositions submitted by him (Mr. Hutt) to the committee. He was asked—"As a naval officer and a Lord of the Admiralty, are you able to speak with the transactions of the African squadron while under the command of the late Commodore Sir Charles Hotham?—Yes. Were the operations of the fleet conducted on the part of that officer with zeal, intelligence, and skill?—I have heard the Board of Admiralty, both collectively and individually, give their opinion as to the manner in which they considered the services had been performed on the part of that officer." Now, this was not explain that better than by reading a letter which I have in my hand, which was the last communication made to Sir Charles Hotham on his striking his broad pennant at Spithead. From whom is the letter?—The letter is signed by the Secretary of the Admiralty, by the direction of the Board. Will you be so kind as to read it?—'Admiralty, 15th April, 1849.—Sir, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acquaint you, that your return to England affords their Lordships an opportunity they have much desired, of conveying to you the expression of their approval of the ability and energy with which you have conducted your late command; and it is with much satisfaction that my Lords attribute to your judgment and discretion your having so successfully secured the co-operation of your foreign colleagues throughout your employment abroad. I am, sir, your most obedient servant, W. A. B. Hamilton.'" He was then asked—"Do you think that if it had been possible to stop the slave-trade by such means as were confided to Sir Charles Hotham the slave-trade would have been stopped under his control?—I am decidedly of that opinion." Captain Denman stated in the progress of his examination before the committee, that Sir C. Hotham was one of the most distinguished officers in the British navy, and a man that was always looked up to. Now, what were the opinions of this eminent and excellent officer upon the subject. Capt. Hotham was asked— "How long had you held the command of that African station?—From October, 1846, until March, 1849. What was the naval force usually under your orders? —It seldom exceeded 22 ships of war. How many of those were steamers?—It would be difficult to give an average of those—the number varied very much. What was the largest number of steam-vessels that you had under your orders at any time? The largest number was five. Was that force in a high state of discipline, generally speaking? I thought so. Were your views carried out by the officers under your command to your entire satisfaction?—Entirely so. What was the result of your operations; did you succeed in stopping the slave-trade?—No. Did you cripple it to such an extent as, in your opinion, is calculated to give to the slave-trade a permanent check?—No. Do you consider that the slave-trade has been generally regulated by the strength and efficiency of the British squadron on the coast, or by the commercial demand for slaves?— I consider it is entirely dependent upon the commercial demand for slaves, and has little or no connexion with the squadron." Such, then, was the opinion of gentlemen who could not but believe were as fully qualified to judge of the merits of the question as any living men. But if it should be considered that the evidence of the commodores on the African station should be insufficient, he would give the opinion of one who looked upon the question from an entirely different point of view, but whose opinions were deserving of the utmost consideration. He referred to the late Mr. Bandinel, of the Foreign-office. That gentleman had been for a period of thirty years at the head of that department of the Foreign-office charged with the suppression of the slave-trade, and he came before the committee an old man, with all that moderation and reserve which forty-five years of official life were sure to impart to any naturally judicious and discreet. (Hear, hear.) What was the opinion of this long-experienced and prudent official servant? He said— "The squadron has produced upon the slave-trade no effect at all. The squadron has not been able even to diminish the number of Africans who are demanded by the people of Brazil; they here may get as many as they want." He could quote from the reports of the commissioners other valuable opinions, to show, in the words of Dr. Lushington, that "the squadron had not produced any effect either in suppressing the slave-trade or diminishing its extent." He was content to rest his case, so far as depended upon the authority and weight of the evidence, upon the opinions of Messrs. Hotham, and Mr. Bandinel. (Hear, hear.) He knew not where they were to look for guidance or counsel if a very considerable amount of deference was not given to authorities such as these. He most unhesitatingly declared that he should mistrust his own opinions on the subject, if he found them opposed to authorities such as those he had referred to. (Hear, hear.) He came now to another part of the subject. They would find as they proceeded, that, although the principle of force had a great many admirers, who still believed that they could suppress the slave-trade by force, there was no one who considered the present system as satisfactory. (Hear.) It was rather too much, that, after an experience of thirty years, after having spent £25,000,000 in the promotion of this system, they should all at once discover that the system was a bad one, and required immediate modification. A paper had been placed in his hand that morning, with a notice that an amendment would be moved to his motion, and he found that the hon. member for Derbyshire (Mr Evans) was among the class who, though he was strongly in favour of maintaining the principle of force, still thought that the manner in which we now apply that principle was one that could not be sustained. That hon. member had, therefore, brought forward another plan, a counter-project, in which (Mr. Hutt) we saw a great deal that was obscure, much that was objectionable, and not a small portion wholly unintelligible. ("Hear, hear," and a laugh.) It was quite clear, however, that he thought the present plan was one which required alteration. But although his hon. friend (Mr. Evans) did not express himself in plain language, there were others who did so. One naval captain told them "that they might put down the slave-trade if we would but triple our force upon the coast of Africa." Another stated that "he would engage it with forty ships, chiefly steam-boats;" but he also said, "you must make treaties with the African chiefs along the coast, and pay handsome subsidies to them." Another very respectable gentleman also thought that "if we placed the squadron in a greater state of efficiency, maintained all concerned in the slave-trade, established tradi g posts all along the whole of both sides of the continent of Africa, and change the disposition of the native chiefs—(a laugh)—we might be able to put down the slave-trade." But, lastly, there was a report of the committee of the House of Lords, in which they were told that a little alteration in the management and equipment of our fleets (the Bishops had surveyed the coast, and consulted Sir Hotham on other matters), and that then they could manage it better themselves). a little alteration in the management of the squadron, with little or no additional expense, and the thing was done. Many people were in the habit of talking in this way, of augmenting the squadron, and trifling the cruisers at little or no additional expense, as if the British Government, regardless of the effects upon its subjects at home, had nothing else to do than to try cash experiments in putting down the slave-trade. While he was present numbers of vessels employed by this country in putting down the slave-trade? Excluding packet and surveying vessels, there was not less than one-fourth of the whole British navy afloat. There were twenty-six vessels employed on the western coast of Africa, to which might be added three on the Cape station, three on the eastern coast of South America, and several on the West India station, making in all between thirty-nine and forty vessels employed in this force. It was the opinion of naval officers, wholly inadequate for the purpose. We are now going on, at an expenditure of £700,000 per annum, in the prosecution of this system, and that expenditure was palpably too small in the opinion of those who advocated suppression by force, many of whom were dreaming of nothing so much as how they could augment the expenses. He knew it was considered as rather wanting in good breeding to be talking about expenses in connexion with this subject (a laugh), —but that it implied rather a deficiency of good manners to speak of expense in connexion with the squadron. He did not know how it was, but it appeared to be clear that the drain upon the public resources in two years would be equal to the sum of his own. Captain Rutherfield also believed in the final extinction of the slave-trade by force within a limited time, although not so sanguine of success as Captain Denman on the subject. But neither of these gentlemen had seen on the coast of Africa for the last seven or eight years. Since that time the slave-trade had gone on gradually improving its tactics, sharpening its evils, and increasing all those means of evasion which they had adopted with such success. The question was not, he apprehended, whether the slave-trade could be put down by such plans as those laid before the committee by Captain Denman and others The main question which concerned the House was not whether the slave-trade could be put down by force. Upon this point he found naval officers of at least equal spirit and judgment with Captain Denman, stating that no manner of management of the fleet, no cruising in-shore or off shore, no burning of barracoons, no right of search, no right of seizure, no right of plan whatever which rested upon the principle of force would ever succeed in putting down the slave-trade. Many of them went even further than this, and stated that one of the least means likely to be successful would be the adoption of Captain Denman's pan. He had already stated that the most valuable of the witnesses on this point were the naval officers, and he was certain that the feeling of the House would go with him when he stated that, of the naval officers, the most important witnesses would be the commanders-in-chief—those who had held command of the African squadron. Of such officers three only had been examined before the committee: of those three two were opinionists, and had held that important office lately Captain Matson and Sir C. Hotham. Captain Matson was upon the coast of Africa for three years, and was an officer of great intelligence and of great practical experience. What was the opinion of Captain Matson on this subject? He was asked, "Whether, looking to the extent of that coast, and to the facilities which the coast affords for the shipment of slaves, do you imagine that it would be possible, by any means of naval force, to suppress the slave-trade so long as there exists a demand for slaves on the other side of the Atlantic? -I am perfectly convinced that it would be impossible. Are you acquainted with the particular plan for the suppression of the slave-trade which has been proposed and strongly recommended by Captain Denman? —I know the general outline of the plan. Have you read the sketch of it which he submitted to the Admiralty? Yes Do you think that the vigorous enforcement of that system would effectually extinguish the slave-trade? I am convinced that it would. Do you think that it would to any important degree diminish it?—I do not think it would. Are you of opinion that, though by means of that system of blockade and cruising as there exists at present, the slave-trade is carried on, the slave-trade would shift its quarters, and break out elsewhere? I entertain no doubt whatever of it." At the end of 1846 Captain Matson was succeeded by Captain Bruce. It was not for him to go at the opinion of Sir Charles Hotham, but this he might venture to say, because he had it from the late lamented First Lord of the Admiralty, that Sir Charles Hotham was selected for that command, not on account of personal or political favour, but deliberately because he was, in the opinion of Lord Auckland, the fittest officer in the public service to undertake that delicate and important duty. Sir Charles Hotham, then, owed his appointment entirely to his personal ability. Captain Richards, when on the coast of the squadron, display any deficiency of those great qualities which had procured for him this high appointment? During the sitting of the committee, he (Mr. Hutt) was anxious to inquire into the point, and requested Lord Jocelyn, who was then a Lord of the Board and a member of the committee, and one who voted against every one of the propositions submitted by him (Mr. Hutt) to the committee. He was asked—"As a naval officer and a Lord of the Admiralty, are you able to speak with the transactions of the African squadron while under the command of the late Commodore Sir Charles Hotham?—Yes. Were the operations of the fleet conducted on the part of that officer with zeal, intelligence, and skill?—I have heard the Board of Admiralty, both collectively and individually, give their opinion as to the manner in which they considered the services had been performed on the part of that officer." Now, this was not explain that better than by reading a letter which I have in my hand, which was the last communication made to Sir Charles Hotham on his striking his broad pennant at Spithead. From whom is the letter?—The letter is signed by the Secretary of the Admiralty, by the direction of the Board. Will you be so kind as to read it?—'Admiralty, 15th April, 1849.—Sir, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to acquaint you, that your return to England affords their Lordships an opportunity they have much desired, of conveying to you the expression of their approval of the ability and energy with which you have conducted your late command; and it is with much satisfaction that my Lords attribute to your judgment and discretion your having so successfully secured the co-operation of your foreign colleagues throughout your employment abroad. I am, sir, your most obedient servant, W. A. B. Hamilton.'" He was then asked—"Do you think that if it had been possible to stop the slave-trade by such means as were confided to Sir Charles Hotham the slave-trade would have been stopped under his control?—I am decidedly of that opinion." Captain Denman stated in the progress of his examination before the committee, that Sir C. Hotham was one of the most distinguished officers in the British navy, and a man that was always looked up to. Now, what were the opinions of this eminent and excellent officer upon the subject. Capt. Hotham was asked— "How long had you held the command of that African station?—From October, 1846, until March, 1849. What was the naval force usually under your orders? —It seldom exceeded 22 ships of war. How many of those were steamers?—It would be difficult to give an average of those—the number varied very much. What was the largest number of steam-vessels that you had under your orders at any time? The largest number was five. Was that force in a high state of discipline, generally speaking? I thought so. Were your views carried out by the officers under your command to your entire satisfaction?—Entirely so. What was the result of your operations; did you succeed in stopping the slave-trade?—No. Did you cripple it to such an extent as, in your opinion, is calculated to give to the slave-trade a permanent check?—No. Do you consider that the slave-trade has been generally regulated by the strength and efficiency of the British squadron on the coast, or by the commercial demand for slaves?— I consider it is entirely dependent upon the commercial demand for slaves, and has little or no connexion with the squadron." Such, then, was the opinion of gentlemen who could not but believe were as fully qualified to judge of the merits of the question as any living men. But if it should be considered that the evidence of the commodores on the African station should be insufficient, he would give the opinion of one who looked upon the question from an entirely different point of view, but whose opinions were deserving of the utmost consideration. He referred to the late Mr. Bandinel, of the Foreign-office. That gentleman had been for a period of thirty years at the head of that department of the Foreign-office charged with the suppression of the slave-trade, and he came before the committee an old man, with all that moderation and reserve which forty-five years of official life were sure to impart to any naturally judicious and discreet. (Hear, hear.) What was the opinion of this long-experienced and prudent official servant? He said— "The squadron has produced upon the slave-trade no effect at all. The squadron has not been able even to diminish the number of Africans who are demanded by the people of Brazil; they here may get as many as they want." He could quote from the reports of the commissioners other valuable opinions, to show, in the words of Dr. Lushington, that "the squadron had not produced any effect either in suppressing the slave-trade or diminishing its extent." He was content to rest his case, so far as depended upon the authority and weight of the evidence, upon the opinions of Messrs. Hotham, and Mr. Bandinel. (Hear, hear.) He knew not where they were to look for guidance or counsel if a very considerable amount of deference was not given to authorities such as these. He most unhesitatingly declared that he should mistrust his own opinions on the subject, if he found them opposed to authorities such as those he had referred to. (Hear, hear.) He came now to another part of the subject. They would find as they proceeded, that, although the principle of force had a great many admirers, who still believed that they could suppress the slave-trade by force, there was no one who considered the present system as satisfactory. (Hear.) It was rather too much, that, after an experience of thirty years, after having spent £25,000,000 in the promotion of this system, they should all at once discover that the system was a bad one, and required immediate modification.

Yet, fool'd by hope, men favour the deceit,
Trust on as I think to-morrow we'll repay,
To-morrow's falser than the former day,
Lies more —.

(Cheers.) He had now done. He thought he had made out his case (hear)— and he appealed to the assembled wisdom of that House, as guardians of the interests and prosperity of the country, as protectors of its honour and fame, as humane and Christian men, to pass condemnation on a cruel and delusive system, whose final doom was not distant, by supporting the motion which he would conclude, namely, "that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty will be pleased to direct that negotiations be forthwith entered into for the purpose of releasing this country from all treaty engagements with foreign states for maintaining armed vessels on the coast of Africa to suppress the traffic in slaves." (Cheers.)

Mr. Hume seconded the motion. He called on the Government to adopt an honest, straightforward policy, and not, on the one hand, to maintain an expensive force for the professed purpose of putting down the slave-trade, while, on the other hand, we passed an Act of Parliament declaring the coasting trade, as human and Christian men, to pass condemnation on a cruel and delusive system, whose final doom was not distant, by supporting the motion which he would conclude, namely, "that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty will be pleased to direct that negotiations be forthwith entered into for the purpose of releasing this country from all treaty engagements with foreign states for maintaining armed vessels on the coast of Africa to suppress the traffic in slaves." (Cheers.)

Mr. Hume seconded the motion. He called on the Government to adopt an honest, straightforward policy, and not, on the one hand, to maintain an expensive force for the professed purpose of putting down the slave-trade, while, on the other hand, we passed an Act of Parliament declaring the coasting trade, as

Mr. Labouchere addressed the House under feelings of deep anxiety, because he believed that in its decision were involved the most sacred interests of humanity and the character and honour of the country. He thought that it was the House was openly and unequivocally to withdraw at once, and without any substitute, our squadron from the coast of Africa, thus announcing to the world that henceforward the slave-trade might be free. To that course he (Mr. Labouchere) persuaded the people of England would not agree; and that, should the House adopt it, they would not fail to be called to account for so degenerate and retrograde a course. The hon. member had treated his subject in the opinion given by Sir C. Hotham; but that officer, in his evidence, depicted the horrors that would inevitably take place should our naval force be suddenly withdrawn; and he (Mr. Labouchere) was quite content to rest his objection to the motion on that Hotham's testimony. The hon. member had also fortified his proposal by citing the reports of the two committees of which he was chairman; but it should be remembered that the hon. member had given the sanction of his name to the opinions in the reports; and it should also be remembered that the committee of the House of Lords made a report of a directly opposite kind. The right hon. gentleman proceeded to establish that, though our squadron was by itself insufficient to wholly suppress the slave-trade, it had done much to check and keep down the traffic. He trusted that, what with the establishment of the free colony of Liberia, with the newly-purchased Danish fortress, and with the continued exertions of our cruisers, 1500 miles length of the African coast would be soon freed from the abominations of the slave traffic, and a legitimate trade substituted for it. The effect the withdrawal of our cruisers would have on our West India colonies would be most disastrous. Those colonies were labouring from a state of unexampled depression; but were their struggles interrupted by such a measure as that proposed, the well-founded hope of their return to prosperity would be at once extinguished. The right hon. gentleman was fully impressed the House to reject the motion. He did not ask them to affirm that the squadron should be maintained permanently. Should any one suggest a better mode of suppressing the slave-trade, the Government were willing to consider it without any prejudices. If ever there was a policy that was not the policy of a party, or of this or that Administration, but was the policy of the people of England, this was that particular policy.

Mr. G. Barkley supported the motion. He contended that the slave-trade was now more vigorous than ever; that it was carried on with greater cruelty to the negroes; and that the increased price of the slaves in Cuba and Brazil was caused not so much by the exertions of our squadron, as by the enhanced price of slave produce caused by our adm — on of Brazilian and Cuban sugar.

Sir G. Pechell did not believe that the people of this country were prepared for any such measure of economy as that proposed, and therefore he should give it his decided opposition. The hon. and gallant member urged on the Admiralty the necessity of sending better and more efficient vessels to the coast of Africa, and on the Government the advantage of making treaties with the native African chiefs.

Mr. Anstey warmly supported the motion. He condemned as ludicrous and hypocritical the plan of maintaining a squadron at a cost of a million a year to put down the slave-trade, whilst we admitted slave-produced sugar without scruple. Unless the House was prepared to re-impose the prohibitory duties on slave-grown sugar, he called on them to withdraw the cruisers from the coast of Africa.

Sir R. Inglis was quite prepared to re-impose the prohibition on Brazilian and Cuban sugar, and deeply regretted that the First Minister had ever tarnished the reputation of the anti-slavery party by admitting slave produce to competition with the produce of our free colonies. The hon. baronet drew attention to the different estimates of the expenses of the anti-slavery squadron on the African coast. Last year Mr. Hutt had computed the annual expense at £600,000; this year he magnified the cost of his men in buckram at £700,000; Mr. Anstey increased it still further to £1,000,000; but the returns of the Admiralty showed the actual expense to be £301,622.

Lord H. Vane felt himself reluctantly compelled to vote for the motion, because he was convinced that it would be impossible to continue the efforts that we had made, and that experience proved to have been unnecessary.

Mr. Cardwell confidently hoped that the House would not consent to undo all that has been done. He had intended then to consider what would be the effects on the African race of the deprivation of the civilising influence of legitimate trade and of the Christian faith. The hon. member showed, by citation from the evidence given before the committees, that our squadron had operated effectually in checking the slave trade, and mitigating the inhumanity of that traffic. As the repre-entative of Liverpool, which carried on almost all the legit mate commerce with the west coast of Africa, he asked those hon. members who were about to support the motion, on the ground of economy, in what quarter they intend to leave the coast of Africa? Withdraw the squadron, and piracy and rapine would reign unchecked from one end of Africa to the other. He, for one, could not undertake the responsibility of paralysing the hands of this Government, or of surrendering the policy which we were pledged in honour and conscience to adhere to.

Captain Rous Egerton and Colonel Thompson opposed the motion.

Mr. Gladstone: I hardly know whether it is for the convenience of the House—which I wish entirely and exclusively to consult—that I should proceed to address it this night. (Hear, hear.) I had believed that there was a general expectation of an adjourned debate; and, in that case, if it would be more for the convenience of the House, I would postpone my address; but I would be reluctant that this question should go to a division, and that I should not be allowed to state, in favour of the motion of my hon. friend—(loud cries of "Hear, hear, hear")—without having taken an opportunity of stating to the House, as briefly as I am able, some of the grounds on which I would give that vote. (Hear, hear.) I do not disguise from myself the serious nature of that vote, or endeavour in any manner, or in any degree, to blink the magnitude of the question. (Hear, hear.) I will not dwell pointedly upon the objection that this is not a motion for the withdrawal of the squadron, but a motion for the removal of a preliminary bar to discussion, because it is said to be clear that the discretion of the House is not free, and we are met with an objection arising from our engagements to foreign countries unless we endeavour to remove those engagements. (Hear, hear.) My object, in the first place, then, is to vindicate for Parliament the right of entering into the discussion of this question. (Hear, hear.) Nothing can be more absurd than the present state of our treaty engagements with regard to the maintenance of cruisers on the coast of Africa. (Hear, hear.) If I adopt this motion only contemplates the treaty with France: the treaty with America requires no negotiation, for either party can terminate it by the expression of a wish; but in this treaty with France, we bound ourselves to France, and France bound itself to us, each to maintain twenty-six cruisers on the coast of Africa, to suppress the slave-trade, by whomsoever carried on. After the lapse of some time, France changed her mind—she did not possess the power, or was possessed with the power, that would enable her to do what she willed; namely, to exercise jurisdiction over other than her own subjects—and she applied to her Majesty's Government (and her Majesty's Government wisely acceded to the request) to be released from her engagements, and instead of keeping twenty-six vessels on the African coast to suppress the slave-trade generally, to be allowed to keep only a small squadron, consisting of twelve vessels, on the coast, for the purpose of suppressing the traffic, so as to prevent France is only bound to exclude her own subjects from the trade, so as to prevent we by treaty, forsooth, to be bound to France to maintain a large fleet on the coast of Africa, for the purpose of suppressing the slave-trade? (Hear, hear.) I say that is a state of things so anomalous and so preposterous, that on its own merits my hon. friend was justified in the motion which he has made. If I have come to the determination, and every man must form the opinion for himself, after a long and painful investigation, which I began with an unbiassed and dispassionate mind. I can assure the House that the feelings with which I entered upon the inquiry were not the feelings with which I came at which I have arrived; and those who know me are aware that every prepossession and every impulse I was required to struggle with and overcome before I could bring myself to that conclusion; but I thought the time was come when it was necessary to rouse the moral courage of the country to look this great question fairly in the face. (Cheers.) It is not because I think rightly of the slave-trade, or because I prefer considerations of economy to considerations of humanity, that I vote for this motion, but because, when regard to the slave-trade, I can find no words sufficiently strong to characterize its enormous iniquity. I believe the slave-trade to be by far the foulest crime that stains the history of mankind in any Christian or pagan country; and, therefore, it is not from any light estimate of the atrocities of the trade that I have made up my mind to vote for the motion of my hon. friend. The system which we have so long pursued has been condemned by an authority—by authorities as great as ever was brought to bear on a point of practical policy (Hear, hear); and the authorities who have so condemned it are persons who had every prepossession in its favour—one of them had himself been the author of its experiment, pressed to it with tenacious ability, and would have adhered to it so long as a hope remained of its proving effectual, but who, when undeceived by the stern lessons of experience, have left us the expression of their honest convictions. In the year 1840, Sir F. Buxton said that the system of armed repression was perfectly futile, and that not only was this the case, but that if you could enter into treaty stipulations with all the nations of the world, still such per cents, as he expressed it was, the enormous profits of the slave-trade would be too strong for you. (Hear, hear.) The system has been condemned by the noble Lord at the head of the Government, who, adopting the language of Sir F. Buxton, gave the world to understand that moment you stop the slave-trade at one place it breaks out at another; and it must be remembered that there are 4000 miles of coast from Morocco to the Orange River. The right hon. gentleman speaks of the influence of Liberia, and that the Government should maintain an independent position as that of a Power which has a very salutary influence it exercises; but very hon. friend does not mean to say that the Government should maintain an indifference on the subject of the slave-trade. On the contrary, wherever a Government was found inimical to that traffic, whether that of Liberia on the west coast of Africa, or the Portuguese settlements on the east coast, we ought to aid that Government, and not shrink from any sacrifice to give them effectual assistance. It is not the amount of the sacrifice which the maintenance of the squadron involves that I complain of; but its uselessness, and the mischief to which its presence on the coast gives rise. What has the squadron done? Has it extinguished the slave-trade? No. Is it making any progress towards the extinction of the trade? I wish it could be the attention of the House to that point. My hon. friend, in the course of the last session, which he made, referred to the capture of twenty vessels at Angolas, while speech which he made, referred to the capture of twenty vessels at Angolas, while speech which he made by Admiral Hotham; but Sir Charles Hotham says that that was an accident, and that he took them by chance, getting there six months before he was expected. No doubt there had been an abundance of gallant trials to effect, but the question is whether, on the whole, we are making progress, or whether progress we are making; because, if I could see a fixed and progressive result, I would be willing to go on, in the hope of attaining a good so inadequately great as the repression of the slave-trade. But, as far as I can see at present, your squadron is not the means of 10 or 20 per cent on the slave-trade, and that is the very outside. You have made infinite sums to spend upon the dealers, and have given the traffic a chance for partaking more of hazard and adventure than it before possessed; but does this squadron govern the price in Brazil? (Hear, hear.) Does the squadron in Brazil vary with the efficiency of the station? Is that the case or not? In 1826, according to the purchases entered in the book of an estate there, the price of a slave varied from 300 to 350 milreis. In 1841, they were from 500 to 600 milreis, and I ask you whether the squadron has been more or less effective since? Why, we all know that it has been much more effective—that the force has been greatly augmented, and placed under the command of a man almost unequalled for the performance of such a duty, and yet what has been the price since? In 1848, in the face of this squadron, which governs the price in Brazil, the price has been reduced by the redundancy of the supply to from 300 to 350 milreis. I observed that this is an assumed estimate, and, therefore, 300 to 350 milreis. I observed that this is an assumed estimate, and, therefore, that I may be quite accurate, I will take the price in 1847 when it was from 400 to 450 milreis. There is no reason for doubting the accuracy of the returns made by the Foreign-office as to the number of captures effected. Since 1840—and in taking 1840 I take it because it is the period since which the squadron is said, on the whole, to have been in a state of efficiency, and consequently of increasing effect—in 1840, our captures were 6 per cent; in 1841, 13 per cent; 1842, 13 per cent; 1843, 9 per cent; in 1844, 9 per cent; in 1845, 4 per cent; in 1846, 7 per cent; in 1847, according to an estimate 4½ per cent, and according to the most recent account, 8 per cent. Therefore taking those figures for the average, there is no progress, but there is rather a retrogression on the rival ground occupied by the squadron, and the slave-traders respectively; and while you are improving at a vast cost the organization of your squadron, the slave-traders are improving at a vast cost the organization of your squadron, the slave-traders are improving at a vast cost the organization of your squadron, the slave-traders therefore, take other means in addition to those you already have. The hon. member for Gateshead says (in 1849) the means for the repression of the slave trade did not prove sufficient; therefore, let us take off all our ships instantly from the coast of Africa, and put an end to the blockade at all risks. The right hon. gentleman speaks of various means which made him think that the means of repression by a squadron are not effective; but in this the right hon. gentleman made some statements which, if I went through, I should be able to show were not justified by the documents before him. The right hon. gentleman said that the mortality on board the ships in this squadron was under the command of Sir W. Dolben. I have reason to believe that the returns made on this subject are not of a very accurate character. Indeed, Dr. Cliffe said that he gave these returns to Mr. Bandinel, but they were very inaccurate, and were founded on very uncertain data. But, then, the right hon. gentleman supposes the trade may be regulated; but there is no certainty of [illegible] by [illegible] him in this way, or to lead to the conclusion that [illegible] would be able so to regulate the middle passage, [illegible] ings take place. If we look to the evidence published we shall see there was no prospect of such a measure. My hon. friend (Mr. Labouchere) stated the dangerous of his plan on this point; I therefore need not go farther into it. It has been stated that, on the ground of humanity, this motion should be adopted, as the squadron for the suppression of the slave-trade aggravated the evils of the middle passage. Sir Charles Hotham, whose evidence has been so much relied upon, and whose testimony has been regarded with such high respect, says directly the reverse, and also says that if the trade was set entirely free they could not find the means of transporting the additional number of slaves, and therefore the horrors of the slave-trade would be increased. Captain Matson also told the Lords' Committee, in answer to the question as to whether there would be more room for the stowage of slaves if the squadron was removed, that he doubted whether there would be more or less, as they would be crowded as much as ever in the voyage across; and he adds, if the slave vessels were at an end, he did not believe the life of a slave in Brazil would be worth a year's purchase. (Hear, hear.) This would arise from the cheapness of the slaves. He was asked whether he did not think the presence of the squadron added to the sufferings of the slaves in the Middle Passage; in reply, he said he knew the horrors and sufferings of the slaves in their passage would be as great as afterwards. The slaves were sent in the worst class of vessels, generally ships with deep holds, in which many were placed, and there were two tiers of planks all round the interior of the vessel, and the only admission of air to the slaves was down the centre of the ship, but they were now conveyed in smaller vessels, but on many occasions, when the vessel was not probably so great. Such was the only one deck, so that their sufferings were now confined to the space between the upper deck and the hold. Captain Matson, who also considered, from the nature of the vessels which would be employed in the trade, that the disease and sufferings of the slaves in their passage would be greater if they ran the slave-trade free, than if they continued the present system of repression. (Hear, hear.) One of the main reasons which has been urged in favour of this proposition is the economical one of saving expenditure. As we proceeded so far on the ground of economy, very much the same force there was in favour of those who supported the motion on this ground. The hon. gentleman who made the motion said that the expenditure under this head amounted to £700,000, or probably to £800,000. But, whatever the amount might be, he did not think Sir Charles Hotham said the right hon. gentleman said he wanted. Nothing but one ship could be withdrawn at present, and that was the Penelope, which could not give up all the force while they had the means of repressing the slave trade: for if he found Portugal wishing to engage in that trade, he should be able to do it. But how was this to be done? By means of advice and moral example, from which I fear little would be gained, or by means of our sailors and marines? If the right hon. gentleman means the latter, the question of this nature would be decided. (Hear, hear.) I think, therefore, it is impossible to believe that we can diminish the suffer ngs of the middle passage; on the contrary, that we shall aggravate it by withdrawing our squadron; that is to say, if we abandon the coast of Africa altogether, and give up the protection to our commerce which in all other parts of the world is thought necessary, and which, I say, we never can do—for if ever there was a commerce in the world for the protection of which a British naval force should be present to give aid, it was to that British's commerce which had sprung up in these places where slavery formerly existed, and which must be given up, unless it received protection. (Hear, hear.) The hon. member said on this point, that the lives of British subjects would not be safe without some force on the coast; and the great witness examined before the committee, upon whose testimony so much reliance has been placed, Mr. Hutt, also said something to the same effect, for he stated that there would be a great deal of angry passion and revengeful feeling ex sting on the coast of Africa in consequences of the attempts made by Great Britain to repress the slave-trade, so that violence towards British subjects might arise. He stated; it, therefore, would be necessary to keep up some force. If these are the main reasons which have been brought forward for the motion, I ask the House to consider what would be the evils its adoption would produce? I will here, again, state the opinion of Sir Charles Hotham on this point. He was asked what would be the effect of withdrawing the squadron, and his reply was, that he entertained the opinion that the withdrawal of the squadron would be met by a burst of indignation in this country, which had for such a long period contended for the destruction of the slave-trade. He was also asked nothing substituted in its place (Hear, hear). Sir C. Hotham may be right or wrong in his opinion, but it is a fair question for Parliament to consider, whether this country may not substitute for the present system another more effective one for the suppression of the slave-trade; but do not proceed with the honourable duty we have undertaken, and sweep away the present plan without the substitution of any other (Hear, hear). My first objection to the plan is, that it would be highly injurious to the honour of the country; in the next place, I think, without a greater force than that which we now keep up, we can withdraw from the slave-trade those parts of Africa which have been rescued from the horrors of it. If the squadron was removed there would be such an immense rush to purchase slaves, that the slave-trade, that attempt would be made by violence to substitute in those parts the slave-trade for that legitimate commerce which now exists there. We must recollect that the slave-trade existed there formerly, and had been destroyed; but when you consider the high profits of the trade, and the African coast, the chiefs seeing the indifference of England to the revival of the trade, they might be induced to change their system. If effectual means were not taken to protect English commerce from attacks (Hear, hear), the consequence is, that such an attempts would be given to the slave-trade that it would destroy all civilization in Africa, and it would put an end to all hopes of introducing civilization and Christianity into the interior of Africa, and no hope would then be entertained that the slave-trade would ever be suppressed (Hear, hear, hear). In the next place, we must consider the effect which would be produced by an immense importation of slaves under a free slave-trade in Brazil. We may gather from the evidence of Lord Howden the enormous profits of this trade. That noble Lord had stated, when examined before the committee of the other House, that a cargo of slaves which cost 30s. dollars sold in Brazil for £5,000, thus making 500 per cent profit on the venture (Hear, hear, hear). If such was the gain and profit in th s trade, numbers of small capitalists would enter into it, and might reduce the profits a little by competition, but an immense quantity of the slaves would be destroyed in the passage. It is at present stated, that there are in Brazil immense tracts of land as well adapted for the cultivation of sugar as the finest portions of Trinidad or Demarara, and Sir C. Hotham says the opening for the free admission of slaves into parts of Brazil would be cultivated for sugar. I need hardly say that an immense deal of suffering would follow (hear). The right honourable gentleman said that he would put the question as to whether the immediate suffering would increase or diminish by passing this resolution. I say there can be no doubt that, under the circumstances I have stated, there would be an immense increase of suffering in Africa—an immense increase in the Brazils by the extension of the slave-trade—and the last burden of such a mass of misery would abandon all efforts or the suppression of the slave-trade, and that thus they can obtain an unlimited supply of slave-labour. Some, indeed, go so far as to say that they would be able to cultivate sugar at such a cheap rate that our country could compete with them, so that they would furnish the whole supply of sugar for the European markets. It is admitted on all hands, and it is supported by the testimony of all the witnesses examined, that if our squadron were removed in the first instance, there would be an immense importation of slaves into Brazil. Conceive, then, the effect of this immense produce of sugar, and what would follow. This brings me to another question, which the right hon. gentleman slightly touched upon, but with which our honour and interests are deeply involved. I mean the effect that would be produced on our West Indian colonies by the competit on with Brazil, if we thus set free the slave-trade. I am not going to enter into the question of the sugar duties of 1846, but I fully admit, that by the abolition of slavery in our colonies in 1833, and by the abolition of the prohibitive duties on slave-grown sugar in 1846, we have placed our West Indian colonies at a great disadvantage (Hear, hear). I am happy to find, however, that the opinions that I stated on both those occasions, that they would be able to bear these shocks, and would found the cultivation of sugar on a new basis, have not been entirely disappointed. I am sorry, however, in the returns of the year 1849, that as to 1848, that there has been a great increase since 1845 and 1846. The quantity produced in 1849 was greater than that produced in 1846, and it is now shown that the Africans who immigrated into the West Indian colonies, were not for less wages than they formerly demanded. But after these great advances, would it be reasonable or expedient, by allowing an immense increase in the number of slaves in the Brazils, to produce that great amount of slave-grown sugar that the produce of our West Ind an colonies? It would be more than the West Indian Islands would be able to bear. They would be unable to stand under such competition. (Hear, hear.) That of itself would not only be a great misfortune, as regards our interests, but a great misfortune in the contest between free and slave-labour. (Hear.) But there are other and conclusive reasons against the motion now before the House. In the first place, it would give a great for increased activity to the slave-trade. It would disturb the civilisation of Africa, and would expose to ruinous competition the produce of the free labour of the West Indies (Hear, hear). But the right hon. gentleman asked what is the use of keeping up in carrying out the present system. Now, sir, during the last two years, I believe that we have on the coast of Africa been making great progress in the abolition of the slave-trade. That it has not been [illegible] suppressed that it will not utterly be suppressed by the means at present [illegible] admit; but the greater the territory to be carried on, and the [illegible] the area from which the slave-trade is supplied, the less it [illegible] and [illegible] have to cope, and the more [illegible] [illegible] I am sure the right hon. gentleman will be careful to repress [illegible] that the destruction of barracoons, the infliction of the [illegible] punishments of piracy on the captains and crews of slavers, are not to be thought of as remedies for the evil to be dealt with. Now, for my own part, I think that the destruction of barracoons and the capture of forts on the coast of Africa, are most powerful means for the suppression of the slave-trade in t e territories immediately under our control. All the evidence we have proves this to be the case. I stated, therefore, much advantage from continuing the destruction of those barracoons (hear). Now, sir, allusion has been made to the opinion of Europe, as to our policy and our efforts for the destruction of the slave-trade. Now, I think, already stated, I mentioned last a great change in the public opinion of Europe has taken place since the commencement of our efforts. My opinion is, that if you were to address the different powers of Europe, that you would find opinion to be now more enlightened on this subject than it was when, in 1815, we began to inform them of our views in relation to slavery. I believe that if England, France, and the United States of America, having each of them suppressed their own slave-trade, were to use language not sufficient, but, at the same time, firm, to Spain and to the Brazils—that such language from countries so united, so free, and so powerful, would have a very great effect indeed. (Hear, hear.) That Spain and the Brazils would demean that warning I am not ready to believe. If they did so—if they took no measures for the suppression of the trade, then you would again have to consider the whole question [illegible] consider what progress you had made—whether the slave-trade had been more depressed in the present year than in the last—and what are the means for its most effectual abolition. That there are such means I do not think anybody will deny, but they are means condemned and reprobated by a majority of that committee, having been appointed to consider the best means for the effectual abolition of the slave-trade, appear to have had no other thought than how to condemn and reprobate the very means by which the slave-trade can be extinguished, and how last it have alive and conquered its means by which it can be fostered and nurtured. (Hear, hear.) But as to the suppression of the slave-trade I will not despond—I believe despondency in a great cause to be in itself a main cause of failure. (Cheers.) I can imagine a man saying in 1814, that for three centuries the Algerines have carried on their trade of plunder, piracy, robbery, and the carrying into captivity of Christians—that as the system had lasted for three centuries, no one could be a match to it single-handed, and so insane as to expect it to be put an end to. Sir, the very next year saw the termination of that practice of three centuries (cheers), and the scheme of carrying Christians into captivity put an end to and abolished. Sir, if this cause is so good as to have enlisted the different nations of the world in its favour—with the exception only of Spain in one of its colonies, and of the empire of Brazils—then I consider it to be a cause of anything but hopeless. (Hear, hear.) Nothing can destroy it save such a measure as the amount of moral courage as the honourable gentleman the mover of this motion displays. (Hear, hear.) Nothing but one single fact enacted on this subject, and saying that we are unable to cope with the great evils; he must, we finally give a permanent sway and supremacy to the slave-trade. There are, sir, other considerations and other motives which may influence the House in coming to a decision on this question. But, we have been accursed with great mercies during the past year. We have more than once had to thank Almighty God for the dispensations of his goodness (Hear, Hear). It appears, then, to me, that if we were now to say that the trade in man (cheers) —that this unhallowed and cruel traffic, against which England for near fifty years has been working by the efforts of her greatest statesmen and her best and bravest sailors (cheers)—that if we were to decide to allow this trade to be pursued freely and unhampered, that we should no longer have a right to say, of a continuance of the signal blessings which we have enjoyed (Hear, hear). I think, sir, that the high, the moral, and the Christian character of this nation, is the main source and source of its strength; and that, if the night you admit to the main counsels and source of its strength; and that, if the night you admit to the main counsels and source of its strength; and that, if the night you admit to the main counsels

TOWN TALK AND TABLE TALK.

A Belgrot and a Ministerial crisis—both of them crammed into the space of seven days—have naturally made politics and finance the leading topics of the week. Not that the crisis was of any very lengthened duration: it began in a forenoon, and ended in an afternoon. On Tuesday morning, those metaphorical scourges, the Treasury whips, were cracking through all the West-end, and the political fiery cross was flying from club to club in St. James's-street and Pall-mall. Vast excitement immediately among the Tapers and the Tadpoles! Abundance of significant nods and winks, conveying exclusive information and latest particulars! All the well-breshed statesmen in the clubs were whispering, were wagging behind the plate-glass windows of Brooks's and the Conservative, the Reform and the Carlton! "Things are up at last! I thought it would be so." "Russell to resign!" "Who comes in?" "Disraeli requested to form an Administration!" "Influenza!" And all the quid nunes posted backwards and forwards between Downing-street and Pall-mall with tidings of what Palmerston had said at breakfast, and what Lord John had thought while shaving. But the Ministerial affair soon took a favourable turn. What the doctors at first thought to be a desperate case of small-pox at the best, turned out the gentlest chicken-pox. Lord John [illegible] and that the moment the box Cabinet was ordered to be sent round to the Queen, the Treasury bench would be unpressed cushions on the Treasury bench and deserted halls in Downing-street. So the 168 good Whigs and true looked a little glum, and grumbled as [illegible] to say, and there was a considerable deal of sulkiness; but, in the end, the great M.P.'s accepted the pill, made a wry face or so, said "this was really too bad," and gulped it down. So the slave-trade question continues in its African beat. Mr. Carlyle's maxim, that "enough has been done for Quashee," has been rejected by Parliament, and we are still to spend our annual million in chasing Brazilian schooners and Spanish slippers in and out of the many mouths of African rivers. By the way, I observe, from an analysis in a newly-published Parliamentary paper, that the percentage of our own sailors who die annually on the fever-haunted coast of the Gulf of Guinea is almost identical with the mortality in the holds of slavers during the middle passage.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, who still looks pale and weak, made his financial statement, leaning not very gracefully on a stick. His propositions have been somewhat cavalierly honoured with the title of the "Brick-dust Budget." I am told, at least, that we are in future to have the most beautiful houses ever seen. The fact is, that, owing to Excise meddling, our nineteenth century houses are, in all probability, no more solider than those which the Children of Israel made—without straw—in Egypt. "Had we our own way in these things," said a builder to me the other day, "we should have had by this time a set of standard bricks, as there is of [illegible] all of them of all shapes and sizes—for pediment and pilaster, portico and arch. We should have had them as bright and as hard as marble." The Pecksniffian interest has now, then, the prospect of a fair start before it: we shall see if they succeed in founding a new order of domestic architecture.

The Ten Hours' Bill is another item of Parliamentary interest. I may mention, apropos of it, that in the course of a visit to Manchester, this winter, I saw a very interesting exhibition—a collection made at one of the largest mills—of articles of female work, plain and ornamental, produced by the girls employed amongst the spindles of the establishment during the hours now allowed by the Ten Hours' Bill. The display was quite as pretty as one sees in the state drawingrooms of the awfully prim young ladies' institutions which so abound in the sonolastic regions of Hammersmith and Peckham Rye. Every species of the varying schools of crochet, knitting, netting, and chenille (I think it is called?), were amply represented. Of the humble sampler of our grandmothers, with a straight up and down frame, liberally furnished with two chimneys, four windows, and a door, and built upon the top of the Alphabet and the Ten Commandments—of this old-world style there were but one or two humble specimens. Manchester has, indeed, left all sorts of grandmotherly notions far out of sight. But then Bonaparte has not yet crossed over the Alps in the gandiest of hood swords; and Master —— Napoleon, not yet fully characterised as the greatest of infantry generals—floated among the intricacies in the fragrant [illegible] of Cheapside, and was not yet [illegible] to the [illegible] and purses with cunning work in beads, and tassels and chenonettes of most complicated build and fashion, and all sorts of baby boots and shoes and mits, the products of nimble fingers of the glancing knitting-needle. Some of the contributors to the museum of domestic industry, whose taste did not lie in the path which would conduct it through the use of needle, bodkin copp-hooks and tremendous cotton-reels, proved gentlemen of a different order. Their calculations and arithmetic achievements as the fruits of shortened hours amid the drawing-frames and the carding-mach nes.

By the way, in the Lancashire exhibition to which I have alluded, I was made acquainted with some of the shades of difference which the eye of a stranger does not readily catch, but which individualise the seemingly monotonous cotton towns. Thus, Bolton, for example, affords a specimen of the old-spinning population of Lancashire. Ancient customs and ancient prejudices are nurtured there, and the mass of the work-people are hardly up to the modern social average. Ashton, on the contrary, is spick and span new—of course, I mean in a comparative sense of the word. Ashton is the paradise of mechanics. Nowhere but that of many of its neighbours. Oldham works up into coarse wares the refuse cotton of the finer spanning towns. Stalybridge has the most Irish population; and Stockport is said to take the lead in all efforts made in the art of forging of the working of machinery. Furthermore, the inhabitants of certain other Lancashire seats of industry are characterised as follows—a "Liverpool gentleman," a "Manchester man," a "Bolton fellow," and so on, and so on.

An anecdote is floating about which may serve as a sort of pendant to the famous story of the man—and, by the way, he was, perhaps, not such a fool as he is generally reckoned who preferred supping the liquor to counting the sheep's heads. A friend of Dr. Layard's was expatiating to a gentleman of the Stock Exchange, in a rather high-flown style of panegyric, upon the historic grandeur and significance of the discoveries made at Nineveh. "And then," he added, "there is something," demanded the enthusiast, "something awfully sublime in thus, as it were, lying bare and open these relics of an earlier world, in calling up before one's eyes the mouldering tokens of those past empires which have sunk while the universe was yet in its infancy?" "Why, I don't know," replied the other Lancashire seats of industry are characterised as follows—a "Liverpool gentleman," a "Manchester man," a "Bolton fellow," and so on, and so on.

An anecdote is floating about which may serve as a sort of pendant to the famous story of the man—and, by the way, he was, perhaps, not such a fool as he is generally reckoned who preferred supping the liquor to counting the sheep's heads. A friend of Dr. Layard's was expatiating to a gentleman of the Stock Exchange, in a rather high-flown style of panegyric, upon the historic grandeur and significance of the discoveries made at Nineveh. "And then," he added, "there is something," demanded the enthusiast, "something awfully sublime in thus, as it were, lying bare and open these relics of an earlier world, in calling up before one's eyes the mouldering tokens of those past empires which have sunk while the universe was yet in its infancy?" "Why, I don't know," replied the other, "it's a very fine thing to be sure, but I'd rather have had an eight-day clock!"

Some of the [illegible] of the Royal Academy this year are very remarkable for their [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 419.—Vol. xvi.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1850. [Sixpence.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Great Britain, France, and the United States of America—the three greatest, most intelligent, and most civilized nations of the modern world—the nations that give law to the rest, and whose literature provides the materials of thought and intellectual enjoyment to the most valuable portion of the human race—are severally agreed that a law of international copyright for literary and artistic productions would be just to the men of genius and talent in each of these nations, and advantageous to the interests of all. Each of these great nations suffers from the want of such a law. When a book is published in Great Britain by a British author, he secures his copyright in Great Britain and her colonies, and reaps such reward for his labour and his genius, within those districts, as the merits of his publication and the commercial bargain which he may have made with his publisher will allow. But here his advantages cease. The United States of America—whose language, traditions, and literature are the same as ours—require the enjoyment of his book. They do not for this purpose apply to the English publisher, for the benefit of the English author; they go more cheaply, but less honestly, to work. An American tradesman—having no more right to it than he would have to put his hand into the author's pocket and steal his watch or his handkerchief—reprints it at a cheap rate for his own individual profit, and pays the English author—nothing. Thus is an injury inflicted both upon the English and the American man of talent or genius. The English author loses a portion of the profits to which he might look forward under a juster and better system; and the American author is prevented from writing or publishing, because the American tradesman would rather pirate English books, paying no author's fee, than publish American books, to the sale of which American authors might look for the means of subsistence. Hitherto the piracy has been principally on the part of the Americans; and English writers, who live on bread like other men, and not upon air, and who must pay their way like other people, with hard cash through a debtor and creditor world, have enriched American booksellers, without the slightest modicum of advantage to themselves. The authors of America are fully alive to the importance of the subject, and as anxious as English authors can be to remove this public wrong inflicted upon two great nations for the sole benefit of a few unscrupulous traders, having no claims upon the public regard or support beyond any other tradesmen, whether they be cheesemongers or tailors. At the dinner given to Mr. Dickens in New York, Mr. Cornelius Matthews made a speech upon the subject which showed their feeling. In proposing the toast of "International Copyright," he said, among other things:—

Standing here to-night, the representative, in some humble measure, of the interests of American authors in this question, I say they have been treated by this people and Government as no other of its citizens; that an enormous fraud practised upon their British brethren, has been allowed so to operate upon them as to blight their hopes and darken their fair fame. They have remonstrated, and will, until the evil is subdued. I might speak especially in behalf of the company of young native writers, who, seeing how well the world was affected towards good literature, and moved by some kindly impulses of nature, may have hoped in their way to add something to the happiness, something to the renown of their country. But we are advised how others, who thought they had secured a constant and enduring hold on the public good-will by past character and services, have also been affected by the present injurious state of affairs.

You, sir (he continued, addressing Mr. Washington Irving), in that retreat of yours, classical in the world's affections, having matured a work of some value, and which you think ready for the metropolitan market, take passage down the Hudson in company with one of your farmer neighbours, who has, perhaps, just fattened his fall stock to a grain: with your manuscript in your pocket—recollecting, too, that in times past your handicraft has been held in some repute—you flatter yourself you will find a prompt purchaser for whatever you bring. You call, sir, on certain traders in Cliffs-street; you suggest the MS. "For heaven's sake, Mr. Irving," is the response of the blandest member of the firm, the one that talks to the authors, "don't plague us just now; we have a profound respect for your talents, an ardent affection for American literature; but Mr. Bulwer's 'Zanoni' has arrived, and we must have a hundred hands on it before night. Call again; we shall be happy to see you!"

We behold, sir, the author of the "Sketch-Book," the illustrious historian of New York, very much in the situation of the ostrich of the desert having an egg to lay, but nowhere to lay it; and, like it, I might add, greatly disposed to hide his head for very shame. How has it fared sir, in the meantime, with your sturdy neighbour and his charge? Before he has had a chance to unbutton his overcoat, his merchandise is off his hands, and he casts about in his mind at what comfortable chop-house he shall hold an interview of settlement, and reckon his gains. Now, sir, I would ask, is not your brood of speckled fancies as honestly begotten from the beginning, as his parti-coloured capons? The property is as real, as actual in one case as the other; and why should it not command its price? That, sir, is a wretched country, or a wretched condition of things, where the best products of the best workman in any department are not in demand. And it is just so here at present.

But, although this system has diminished the number of American authors, it has not entirely eradicated them from the earth. Some few great and some popular writers, of whom Mr. Washington Irving and Mr. Prescott are the most illustrious, have made their way to fame in America; and the English publishers have bethought themselves that this kind of piracy and plunder was a game that they also could play at. The consequence has been, that during the last two or three years there has been a reversal of the previous process, and English tradesmen have been endeavouring, not unsuccessfully, to fatten themselves upon the brains of the men of genius produced on the other side of the Atlantic. During the present publishing season, the competition between English publishers for the priority of stocking the book market with cheap reprints of American works has been unprecedented, to the manifest discouragement and injury of English writers, and possibly to the permanent loss of English literature. France is, perhaps, a still greater sufferer by a similar system. Belgium—that can scarcely be said to possess a literature at all—lives upon the literature of France, and contrives, by means of her piratical publishers, to limit the sale of works published in any part of France, for the benefit of French authors, to the boundaries of the eighty-three departments. To every part of Europe where French is spoken—and in what part of Europe is it not?—knavish Belgium sends her pirated stores, and lives upon a property to which she has no more right, in the great court of conscience and of international justice, than she would have to the coats off the backs of the authors whom she pauperizes.

It was at one time imagined that the remedy for this abuse was in the hands of authors themselves, and that an English author could secure his copyright in America by first publishing there, without losing his rights in England; and that, vice versâ, an American author, by a similar process, could first publish in England, and secure a right amongst us, without forfeiting his claims upon his own countrymen. But this does not appear to be the state of the law in either country. In England the question was raised in a recent case, and submitted to the decision of the Court of Exchequer, which laid down the law of the case as follows :—"The object of the Legislature clearly is not to encourage the importation of foreign books, and their first publication in England, as a benefit to this country, but to promote the cultivation of the intellect of its own subjects, and, as the Act of Anne expressly states, to 'encourage learned men to compose and write useful books,' by giving them, as a reward, the monopoly of their works for a certain period, dating from their first publication. We therefore hold that a foreigner, by sending to, and first publishing his work in, Great Britain, acquires no copyright. A British subject who purchases from him such a right as he had in his own country, which could not extend beyond it, cannot be in a better condition here than the foreigner." A similar law holds in America; so that, in point of fact, authors have no power, by any private arrangement into which they may enter, to secure for themselves the fruits of their own industry beyond the boundaries of their own country. An English merchant may send his goods into America, and be paid for them; but an English author's goods are no longer his own when they cross the Atlantic. They are the lawful prey of any man who chooses to lay hold of them; and fortunes may be made of them without so much as a "Thank you" being the reward of him who calls them into existence.

CELEBRATION OF PALM SUNDAY IN THE HALL OF SACKVILLE COLLEGE, EAST GRINSTEAD.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The system was never so rampant as at the present time, and the competition has fortunately become so keen as to threaten to ruin the publishers. This is a consummation devoutly to be wished; for if the powerful fraternity see that bankruptcy and not profit is likely to be the end of the fierce struggle for the possession of other people's property in which they are engaged, there is some hope that they will aid in putting an end to the scandal and the wrong. Their aid is necessary to the success of the cause. It might be imagined, seeing the unanimity of opinion upon the subject in these such great nations, and the general prevalence of the belief that a law of international copyright would confer an honour upon the age, that it would be a task of no extreme difficulty to carry it to completion; but if the reverse has hitherto been the case, a portion of the blame must lie with the publishers. They have not looked upon the question as one affecting the interests of literature and of civilization, but as entirely a matter of the shop. When they find, as they now do, that, even under this vulgar and selfish aspect, they have been completely in the wrong, and that loss, and not gain, will be the end of their perseverance in piracy, there is good reason for the hope that they will enter thoroughly into the cause, and do that for literature which they should have done long ago, had they been wise in their day and generation.

The French Government has under its consideration a project for a law of international copyright, and many of the best minds in America have urged and are urging the question upon the attention of Congress, and some of the most eminent of the American publishers have joined the movement, and are doing justice to literature. In England the question has not assumed the same form, and is confined at present to the squabbles of the publishers among themselves. But the question, like many others that have been too long neglected, is fast ripening even here; and, sooner or later, we cannot doubt, will be settled as France and America strongly desire, and as the interest and character of Great Britain demand. An international copyright will be a triumph of peace and reason, and will reflect honour as well as advantage upon all nations that shall be parties to it.

PALM SUNDAY AT SACKVILLE COLLEGE, EAST GRINSTEAD.

It is pleasant to know that there are still some places in this country in which the time-honoured customs of our forefathers continue to be observed—not only in the mere outward forms and ceremonies, but with all the kindly feeling and hospitality, and with all the social habits of the olden time. One such spot exists at East Grinstead, in Sussex, where the Festival of Palm Sunday has just been celebrated, in the venerable hall of Sackville College. This interesting edifice is situated on the brow of a hill at the eastern extremity of the town, and commands a very extensive view over the surrounding country. It is a massive grey stone building, in the form of a square, covered with the ponderous Horsham slates. It was founded by Robert Sackville, Earl of Dorset, for the maintenance of a Warden and thirty poor Brethren and Sisters. The funds for its support were made payable as rent-charges on certain of the Dorset estates. By the sale of part of these, during the last century, the income of the College was very considerably reduced; so that at present the inmates consist of a Warden, receiving £28 per annum; six Brethren and six Sisters, each receiving £14 per annum; and also eight Probationers, who reside in the College, but receive no pay.

There being no funds directly available for repairs, the building had fallen into a sadly dilapidated condition; but, fortunately, it suffered merely from the effects of time and neglect, its purity preserving it from the innovators and improvers of the eighteenth century, who have irreparably injured so many of our venerable buildings. Since the appointment of the present Warden, the Rev. J. M. Neale (the learned author of the "History of the Holy Eastern Church," in 1846), much has been done in the way of restoration, the funds for these purposes being supplied by the Earls Delaware and Amherst, the present patrons; yet much, however, remains to be executed.

Passing through the arched gateway on the south side, ornamented with pilasters of the period of James I., we enter the Quadrangle, where the whole of the southern half of the building is occupied by the Warden, who has here spacious and comfortable rooms. In the centre, on the east side, is the Chapel, in which the morning and evening service is read every day. It is much out of repair, but it is to be hoped that the work of restoration will soon commence; considerable funds have been already collected for the purpose, the sum of £100 having lately been contributed anonymously. On the opposite side is a spacious room at present unused, but which it is proposed to convert into a library. On the north side are the apartments of the Warden, the Hall (represented in our Engraving), and the Dorset Lodgings. In front of these is an elegant well-house, overgrown with ivy, and having appropriate texts of Scripture. The Dorset Lodgings were used by the Dorset family on their journeys to and from London to their seat at Buckhurst, some 12 miles to the east of the town. Such a resting place was, no doubt, a great advantage in the seventeenth century; as we know that even as late as the time of Gibbon, who was frequently in the habit of passing in this direction on his way to Sheffield Park, the roads were then at times almost impassable, so that the journey from Buckhurst to London in a single day was a thing not to be accomplished.

But the Hall is now the most interesting part of the building. This we enter by a door under an elegant bell-tower, with a peal of musical bells, recently erected from a design by William Butts Bold, Esq., the architect of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, over the centre of the north side. This Hall, until lately used as a scullery, is a spacious lofty room with an open oak roof of three bays, the lower part panelled with dark oak, and having a gallery of the same material at the west end. The walls are ornamented with appropriate inscriptions, and with shields bearing the arms of the various branches of the Dorset family. A large open chimney, with a blazing wood fire, is on one side, across the upper end and down the centre is placed a massive oak table. Around this were collected the aged inhabitants of the village, assembled to partake of the abundant and substantial fare provided for them by the amiable and much-respected warden. The branches of willow with which the walls were tastefully ornamented, the only flower which the inhabitants of the north can at this season substitute for the palms of the East, indicated the festival they have assembled to celebrate. But it is not only on the festival days that such a meal is provided for here, on every Sunday throughout the year, by the liberality of the Warden, a dinner is provided for the poor Brethren and a limited number of the townspeople; and here, in addition to the usual visitors, at the celebration of the festival of Michaelmas, might be seen the Earl and Countess Delaware, patrons of the College, in the hall founded by their predecessors, and restored to its original state by their munificence, seated at the same table with the poor Brethren and Sisters, the poor and the peasant, the Countess and the poor widow; and, after partaking of the same food, joining in giving thanks to that Being in whose sight all are equal.

It was impossible, after witnessing the healthy, happy, smiling faces of the inmates—the aged peasant, and "those who better days had seen," provided with a home, and all the comforts of life, and with the consolations of religion—and not to contrast their happy lot with that of those who are doomed to drag out the sad remains of life in the gloomy union-house which we passed at the other extremity of the town—the only place of refuge for the great majority of the labouring population in their declining years; and, once within its walls, if they have not "the world forgotten," they are too often by the "world forgot."

Such a foundation as this College, carried out as it now is in the spirit of the founder, cannot fail to exert a most extensive and beneficial influence on many of the poorer inhabitants of the district in which it is situated; acting as a stimulus to many to endeavour to render themselves worthy of being admitted as inmates, and of becoming participators of the kindness bestowed equally on all within its walls.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The proposed restrictive measures relating to the press, to which Louis Napoleon's Government has had recourse, for the purpose of staying the further progress of Socialism, have raised a storm of opposition from the journalists of all parties—Red, Moderate, and Reactionist—both in the metropolis and the departments. Even if there were not the glaring evidence of past bitter experience to show the folly of seeking, by such irritating enactments, to stop men's mouths, while a feeble, an incapable, or a bad government furnishes ample cause for complaint amongst the masses, the absurdity of the remedy is exhibited in the fact that the blow aimed at the enemies of society at the press, strikes also at its defenders, by crippling the resources of both alike in the enormous amount of caution-money which it requires to be deposited by proprietors, as a fund out of which any fines to which they may be condemned shall be paid.

Further consideration on the subject, and the strength of the opposition brought to bear against the measure, are said to have disposed the Government to moderate its severity in some respects. For the present it has been referred to a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly, and on their report it will be submitted to debate in the Assembly itself.

On Tuesday evening M. de Montalembert submitted a proposition to the Assembly, with the view of having it referred to a committee, to the effect, that, in consequence of the present unsatisfactory basis upon which the Republic rests, it be resolved that the nation should, on the 1st of July next, be called on to vote, as it had already done in the case of the election of the President of the Republic, on the question as to whether it would definitively have a Republican or a Monarchical form of government. The previous question was immediately called for, and adopted unanimously, the members of the Mountain receiving the announcement of the result with the cry of "Vive la République!"

On Wednesday, the hon. member defended his conduct by saying that there was such a difference as to whether the Monarchical or Republican form of Government was better adapted for France, that he was anxious to bring the question to an issue by the means he had proposed. The matter then dropped.

Several military arrests have been made, in consequence of insubordination having broken out in one of the regiments stationed in the Champs Elysées, owing, it was reported, to the harsh conduct of the colonel.

GERMAN STATES.

The new Parliament, assembled at Erfurth, of those combined States of Germany which have formed a legislative union at the request of Prussia, has as yet done nothing but elect its officers. In the sitting of the 25th inst., the Lower House of the German Parliament elected M. Simson to the Presidency, and to the Vice-Presidency Messrs. Schulz and Reh of the Centre.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—The Pope's return to the "Eternal City" seems at last a thing certain. It is said his Holiness is to leave Portici for Rome between the 3rd and the 10th of April, and to take the Terracina road. The King of Naples is to accompany his Holiness to Velletri, or perhaps to Rome.

TUSCANY.—Accounts from Florence are to the 19th. They state relative to the exchange of notes that has lately taken place between the British and Tuscan Governments, on the subject of indemnities due to divers British subjects on account of losses experienced during the late events at Leghorn, that the Tuscan Minister answered the first note of the British Government, by alleging that the present Government of Tuscany could not be held responsible for what had taken place at Leghorn. To this note Lord Palmerston replied by a second, refuting the allegations, and citing the principles of international law, in virtue of which the British Government is entitled to demand payment of that of Florence. The Tuscan Minister then proposed another course—that of referring the dispute in question to a mediation. This has been consented to by Lord Palmerston, who has proposed the Sardinian Government as a proper mediator.

NAPLES.—The most recent intelligence from this quarter mentions that the decree of the King for the suppression of the Constitution was ready, and that it would be published with another, granting an almost general amnesty.

UNITED STATES.

Intelligence to the 7th has come to hand from New York. The proceedings in Congress are still without interest to the European reader. The correspondence which has passed between Mr. Clayton and Mr. Bulwer, per Britannia, Majesty's Minister at Washington, on the subject of our commercial relations with the United States, has been presented by General Taylor to Congress.

The discussion on the Slavery question was still going on upward.

Sir H. Bulwer had presented a letter against the proposed increase of duty on manufactured British iron by the United States Government, which was referred to a committee. Commercial affairs were dull.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens of the 12th instant state that Baron Gros was assiduously occupied in endeavouring to effect an amicable adjustment of the differences between England and Greece; but, as far as was publicly known, his exertions had produced neither good nor evil. Indeed, the dispute remained in much the same state as before his arrival, without any apparent change being near at hand.

WEST INDIES.

Advices to the 22nd ult. have been received from Jamaica, but they contain nothing of interest.

The trial of Mr. Gurod, the proprietor of the Colonial Standard, for an alleged libel against the Council of Jamaica, had been postponed, at the request of the Attorney-General. A verdict against Mr. Gurod was expected.

The whole of the islands were in a healthy condition. In some districts the manufacture of sugar was suspended, owing to the severe state of the weather. A great dearth of trade prevailed generally.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL.

We regret to have to announce the death, on Wednesday morning, of Lieut-General Sir John Macdonald, the Adjutant-General, after a few days' illness. His loss will be much felt in the office which he occupied, and the duties of which he performed in the most efficient manner. The Colonelcy of the 42nd Foot becomes vacant by his death.

ALLOWANCE OF SPIRITS IN THE NAVY.

The committee appointed to inquire into the expediency of diminishing the pre ent quantity of spirits served out daily to the seamen in the Royal Navy have made their report to the Board of the Admiralty, containing with the following, as a summary of what they propose:—

1. That the present allowance of spirits or wine be reduced one half.
2. That the remaining portion be issued at one-three.
3. That admirals, captains, and ward-room officers shall not receive any payment for the half portion of spirits taken from them.
4. That masters, surgeons, surgeons assistants, and clerks shall receive compensation at the present savings price for the half allowance of the spirits to be reduced.
5. That all officers, raders, and boys who do not receive a portion of spirits, be paid a compensation equal to the savings price of the present whole allowance.
6. That warrant officers, warrant officers' stewards, petty officers, seamen, and non-commissioned officers and privates of marines, shall receive for their half allowance a compensation payment in money of 2d. per mess per calendar month.
7. That second class seamen, ordinary and landsmen be allowed 2s. 6d. per man per calendar month.
8. That man wishing to give up the reduced allowance, shall receive a further compensation, equal to the savings price, for such period as they may think proper.
9. That no new spirits be issued to any one, except under special circumstances, at the discretion of the captain.
10. That in cases of persisting drunkenness, a deduction or discontinuance be made for a time in the compensation allowance.
11. That the monthly allowance to the men out of their growing wages be limited to 12s. per month.
12. That the police on board her Majesty's ships be put on a better footing.
13. That the seamen and marines may be at liberty to make a larger allotment for the maintenance of their families, viz. 3d. in 1s. per month for an able seaman.
14. That the above regulations take effect on the 1st July, 1850, respecting provisions, be brought under review, for the purpose of a more satisfactory adjustment of the scale.
15. That the proposed measure take immediate effect as regards all officers, and all future entries; and that, as regards ships in commission, their Lordships fix a convenient day for carrying the measure into effect, but not later than the navy abolish, in the meantime, have the option of taking advantage of the proposed compensation allowance.

The minute has caused some their report on the important questions referred to their consideration without expressing their hope, and confident expectation, that the measures they have proposed will conduce to the credit of the British navy, and tend to the welfare of their Lordships anxious desire to promote the interests of the seamen

PROPOSED ALLOWANCE OF GROG AND COMPENSATION MONEY.

Admirals, captains, lieutenants, and wardroom officers, half present allowance; compensation, nil.

Marine, assistant-surgeons, second masters, and clerks, half present allowance; compensation, savings price.

Midshipmen, masters' assistant, clerk's assistant, and boys of 1st class, no allowance except by the special direction of the captain, compensation, savings price.

Cadets, and boys of 2d class, nil; compensation, savings price.

Warrant officers, junior engineers, petty officers, able seamen and others of that class, ordinary seamen, non-commissioned officers and privates of Royal Marines, half present allowance, 2 pints per man per day, compensation, 2s. 6d. per calendar month.

Second class ordinary seamen, landsmen, and others of that class, half present allowance, compensation, 2s. 6d. per man per calendar month.

Lord Gough has expressed a wish to defray the expense that would be incurred in providing the men of his regiment, the 87th, Royal Irish Fusiliers, with the bear-skin cap.

ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND.—On Saturday last the anniversary festival of this institution took place at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn-fields; C. Baring Wall, Esq., in the chair. About fifty gentlemen sat down to dinner in the grand hall. The chairman read a letter from the hon. Mr. Phipps, stating that her Majesty had presented a donation of one hundred guineas to the institution. A list of subscriptions and donations was read by the secretary, amounting to nearly £400.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

The Royal assent was given, by commission, to the Mutiny, the Marine Mutiny, and some other bills.

CHANCERY REFORM.

Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of the Masters' Jurisdiction in Equity Bill, the object of which was to reduce the costs, delays, and complications in the Masters' offices. The noble and learned Lord explained the details of the bill.

Lord LANGDALE was willing to agree to any measure that would promote the diminution of costs and delays in the Masters' offices, but he had considerable objections to the details of the bill. He would consent to the second reading on the understanding that he should not be precluded from fully canvassing its merits at a future stage.

The bill was read a second time on that understanding.

The Earl of ST. GERMANS moved for returns relative to the dockyard at Devonport; but, objections having been made by the Government to them, the noble Earl withdrew his motion.

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, their Lordships adjourned, for the Easter recess, to the 11th of April.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEW WRIT.

A new writ was ordered for Totnes, in the room of Lord Seymour, who has accepted the office of Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests.

THE DUTY ON BRICKS.

To questions from Lord R. GROSVENOR, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that he had come to the determination to allow a drawback of fifty per cent on the stock of bricks now in the makers' yards, and that an immediate survey had been ordered, by which the amount of stocks would be ascertained without delay. All bricks henceforth made would be free of duty. He had also resolved to propose a clause in the Brick Duty Bill to abate from contracts made previously to the proposal for the repeal of the duty the amount of the drawback, or of the duty, as the case might be.

To a question from Colonel Sibthorp, Lord J. RUSSELL replied that Lord Seymour had accepted the office of Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests, at the usual salary of £2000 a year.

The noble Lord gave notice that he would, after Easter, move for a select committee to inquire into and consider the salaries and offices held by members of Parliament, and also the salaries of the Judges of the United Kingdom, likewise the costs of our diplomatic establishments.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

To a question from Mr. EWART, Lord J. RUSSELL stated, that an arrangement had been for some time in contemplation, though it was still incomplete, relative to the National Gallery and Royal Academy. It was impossible for us, he said, George III. having given rooms and various privileges to the Royal Academy, with the view of founding a school of art, it would be not merely just to the Royal Academy, but a national object, to continue to them the means of carrying on their school. The Government, therefore, did not think it would be right to ask the Royal Academy to give up the rooms, without proposing a grant to enable them to obtain a site and a building for their school of art. The Government intended to bring in a bill, during the present session, to settle Marlborough House on the Prince of Wales; and her Majesty had signified her consent to allow the Vernon collection, and any other pictures that might be given to the nation, to be admitted for a few years to Marlborough House.

DUCHIES OF CORNWALL AND LANCASTER.

Mr. TAILLAWNT moved for a select committee to inquire to what extent the public are entitled to claim an interest, present or prospective, in the management of the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster; to inquire where the accumulations of the Duchy of Cornwall are invested; who is the heir of personal estate to the Prince of Wales; whether duchy dues from mines are reserved in mineral, or money, and whether they are taken to the profit of smaller mines are directly worked by duchy officers, &c.; and whether the management of the duchy estate has been satisfactory as regards the public, fair as regards its own tenants, or productive of improvement in the state of the rural population.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL contended that the property of the duchies was of a strictly private character, belonging absolutely to the heir-apparent of the Crown, and that Parliament had no right whatever to interfere with it. The fact that reluctance in the expenditure of the Civil List to the extent of £10,000 per annum since the accession of her Majesty, sufficiently proved that the property had been satisfactorily managed. The hon. and learned gentleman opposed the motion, on the ground that no parliamentary reason had been given for appointing the committee.

After some conversation, the motion was negatived without a division.

The House went into a Committee of Supply, and some votes on account for the Ordnance Estimates were agreed to.

CHIEF JUSTICES' SALARIES.

On the motion for going into committee on the Chief Justices' Salaries Bill, Mr. HUTCHINSON expressed his objection to the pressing forward of this bill, after the notice given by the First Minister of his intention to move for a committee to inquire into the salaries of all the Judges.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he thought it desirable to lose no time in fixing the salaries of the Chief Justices, and the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench stood, under an arrangement by a minute of council. The noble Lord assured the hon. member that any office that might fall vacant during the inquiry of the proposed committee should be given subject to any alteration Parliament might make.

After a discussion, in which Mr. Mullings, the Solicitor-General, Mr. Hume, Mr. V. Smith, and Mr. Turner took part, Lord J. RUSSELL said he would not object to leave the salary of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas out of the bill, to await the decision of the Committee of Inquiry; but he did not think it would be right to leave the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in its present unsatisfactory state, as a matter of arrangement between the Chief Justice and the Treasury.

Mr. HENLEY, Sir B. HALL, and Colonel DUNCOMBE objected to the exclusion of Lord Campbell's salary from the examination of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER moved, as an amendment, that the House go into committee on the bill on the 14th of April.

The House divided—

For going into committee	..	..	100
Against it	..	..	51
Majority	..	..	—49

The House went into committee on the bill.

On the clause for fixing the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench at £8000, Mr. MULLINGS moved an amendment, the object of which was to reduce the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench to £7000 during Lord Campbell's tenure of the office, and to £6000 afterwards.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER thought it would be unadvisable to press the committee to a decision on that occasion, and he therefore recommended Mr. Mullings to postpone his motion, and take the sense of the House on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MULLINGS withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HENLEY then moved an amendment, to the effect that the salary of the Chief Justice should be £7000.

Colonel SIBTHORP, Mr. D. Roborts, Mr. Spooner, Mr. Hume, and Mr. Deedes supported the amendment; Mr. Scholefield, Colonel Thompson, Mr. Maurice O'Connell, Mr. F. Wood, and Colonel Reid spoke in favour of the Ministerial proposal.

The committee divided—

For reducing the salary to £7000	..	..	38
Against it	..	..	86
Majority against the amendment	..	..	—48

The clause fixing the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench at £8000 was then agreed to, and that relative to the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas was struck out of the bill.

The Brick Duties Bill, passed through committee.

The School Districts Contributions Bill, and the Pirates' Head Money Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a Bill to provide more ample and effectual securities for advances to Purchasers of Incumbered Estates in Ireland. The hon. and learned gentleman said that there were now not less than £13 000,000 of incumbrances on the estates already brought into the market under the commission; and the object of his bill was to give a power to charge the lands sold, in favour of the parties who might advance the money, to the extent of one-half the value of the property. He proposed that the commissioner should grant certificates for the advances, which would be a primary charge on the land, and be transferable by endorsement in the simplest way, like railway debentures.

Leave was given to bring in the bill.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

ORDER OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Lord J. RUSSELL stated, that he proposed to go on with the Ordnance Estimates on the 8th of April, and after that with the Navy Estimates. He was anxious to proceed with as much despatch as possible after the recess with the Irish Franchise bill, and the Australian Colonies Government Bill, and he thought it would be better to go through the committee of one before entering the committee on the other. The Chancellor of the Exchequer was also desirous of proceeding with the Stamp Duties Bill, and he hoped to go on with it on Monday, the 15th of April; but that would depend on the progress made in the Irish Franchise and Australian Colonies Government Bills.

TAXES ON KNOWLEDGE.

Mr. EWART, on the part of Mr. Milner Gibson, postponed his motion relative to the excise duty on paper and the stamp on newspapers to the 16th of April.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Mr. HUME moved for a return of the income and expenditure of the Royal Academy. The hon. member said that in 1836 the accumulated funds of the Academy amounted to £47,000, and they had the advantage of the use of the National Gallery, which cost the country £80,000; yet it appeared that the Gevernment wished to propose a grant to enable this society to procure a building. Unless there had been great waste, the funds ought at present to be about £100,000; and he would not consent to a grant of public money for such a society, which was an illiberal monopoly, and the existence of which was, by many persons, considered injurious to the fine arts.

Lord J. RUSSELL objected to the return. He thought the House might as well ask for a return of Madame Tussaud's income.

Mr. HUME said he would ask for a return of Madame Tussaud's exhibition, if she had a gallery and accommodation for it at the public expense.

Mr. BANKES, not being prepared to grant a shilling to the Academy, hesitated to support the motion.

Mr. HAWES denied that the Royal Academy had ever received any public money, and contended that the society was a private and not a public institution.

Mr. EWART, Sir B. HALL, and Mr. HENLEY supported the motion.

Mr. NEWDEGATE was resolved to oppose any grant to the Royal Academy, and therefore could not ask them to make a return of their income and expenditure. He thought the proper course for the House to adopt would be to turn the Academy out of the National Gallery.

Mr. F. HOWARD opposed the motion.

The House divided

For the motion	..	19
Against it	..	47
Majority against the motion ..	..	28

On the motion of Mr. PETO, the Titles of Religious Congregations Bill was read a second time.

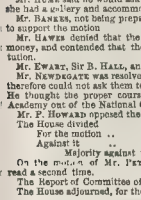
The Report of Committee of Supply was received.

The House adjourned, for the Easter recess, to the 8th of April.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

WILLIAM SMITH-NEILL, ESQ., OF BARNWEILL AND SWINDRIGEMUIR.

THE death of this gentleman, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Ayrshire Militia, occurred on the 22nd of March.



The Neills of Barnweill derive descent from a cadet of the M'Neills of Barra, who settled in Ayrshire about the middle of the 16th century, and acquired the lands of Townhead, Monkton, and others in the vicinity of Prestwick, part of which are still in the family.

Lieutenant-Colonel Smith-Neill was a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of his county, and a Commissioner of Supply. He succeeded to Barnweill at the death of his father, James Neill, Esq., in 1799, and to Swindrigemuir and Kersland at the death of his maternal uncle, John Smith, Esq., in 1838. He was born 17th of July, 1784, and married, in November, 1807, Caroline, daughter of George Price Spiller, Esq., Commissary-General, by whom he had issue —1. James George, Captain R.I.C.S., who married, in 1835, Isabella, daughter of Major William Wardle, and has issue; 2. John Martin Bladen, Captain, 40th Regiment, who served through the entire of the campaign in Affghanistan, was present in every action with the Candahar division, and received the medal of Candahar, Ghuznee, and Cabool, in 1842; 3. William Francis, an officer in the Royal Artillery: 1. Caroline; 2. Margaret-Smith; 3. Sarah; and 4. Henrietta Jane Helen.

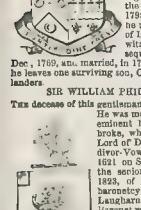
CHARLES GENERAL CRAVEN, OF RICHARDSTOWN, COUNTY LOUTH.

THIS gallant soldier died at Walsall, in Staffordshire, on the 22d March. He was son of the late Major Charles Craven, also a distinguished military officer, and great-grandson of Loven Craven, Esq., a scion of the noble stock of Craven, who served, with his two brothers, in William the Third's army, fought at the battle of the Boyne, and was slain at Aughrim, 12th July, 1691.

General Craven, whose death we record, entered the army as Ensign in the 27th Regiment, in 1790, whence he purchased into the 8th Dragoon Guards, in which he attained his majority, and served in every action the regiment was engaged in, under his Royal Highness the Duke of York, in France and Flanders, in 1794 and 1795. After the retreat through Holland into Germany, he remained in the latter country, under the command of Lieutenant-General Sir David Dundas, and returned with the cavalry to England in 1796; and served subsequently in Ireland and Jersey. He was born 15th Dec., 1769, and married, in 1798, Alice, daughter of John Bamdal, Esq., by whom he leaves one surviving son, Charles-Cooley Craven, Esq., late Captain 72d Highlanders.

SIR WILLIAM PHILIPPS LAUGHARNE PHILIPPS, BART.

THE decease of this gentleman occurred at Haverfordwest, on the 18th February, He was male heir and representative of the very ancient and eminent house of Philipps, of Picton Castle, county of Pembroke, which derived its descent from Cadivor ap Collwyn, Lord of Dyfed, called, from his extensive possessions, Cadivor-Vor, or the Great. The Baronetcy was conferred in 1621 on Sir John Philipps, and continued to be limited to the senior line of his descendants, until the decease, in 1823, of Sir Richard Philipps, Lord Milford, when the baronetcy reverted to the male heir, Sir Rowland Alexander Laugharne Philipps, elder brother and predecessor of the Baronet whose death we record. The Picton Castle estates devolved, however, on the heir of line, and are now enjoyed by Richard Bulkeley Lort Mansel Philipps.



Sir William was born October 2, 1794, and married, October 13, 1829, Elizabeth, daughter of George White, Esq., by whom he leaves a son, Sir Arthur Philipps, Baronet, born January 10, 1840, and four daughters, Sarah Elizabeth, Lilla, Lavinia, and Charlotte.

VICE-ADMIRAL MACKAY.

VICE-ADMIRAL the Hon. Donald Hugh Mackay was the fourth son of the Hon. George Mackay, of Skibo, and brother of the late and of the present Lord Reay. His entered the Royal Navy early in life, in 1794, and was engaged in active and arduous service from that period until 1832.

During our late wars Mackay did his duty gallantly and ably in every part of the world where active service of the kind was required, and particularly in the Eastern Archipelago and the Chinese Seas. He was made a Vice-Admiral of the Red the 4th of May, 1849. This distinguished seaman died at his residence, in the Albany, on the 25 h instant.

Vice-Admiral Mackay bore the prefix of Hon. to his name, because on the succession of his brother to his grandfather's title of Lord Reay, he, and his other brothers and his sisters, were raised to the rank of sons and daughters of a baron.

THE DEAN OF SALISBURY.

THE Very Rev. Francis Lear, B.D., Dean of Salisbury, was a scion of the ancient and honourable family of Lear, and a gentleman of high worth in every relation of life. He was Rector of Bishopstone, near Salisbury, and was appointed to his deanery at the end of Sir Robert Peel's administra ion, through the influence of the Right Honourable Sidney Herbert. The very rev. gentleman died recently at the deanery, in the Close, Salisbury.

THE HON. MRS. OGILVIE GRANT.

CAROLINE LOUISA, wife of the Hon. James Ogilvie Grant, second son of the Earl of Seafield, died at Milton, near Kilmalilock, February 6, deeply lamented. She was the second daughter of Eyre Evans, Esq., of Ash-hill Towers, county of Limerick, by Anna Maria, eldest daughter of Robert Maunsell, Esq., formerly member of the Supreme Council at Madras. Her grandfather, Eyre Evans, Esq., of Miltown Castle, county of Cork, derived from a common ancestor with the noble house of Carbery; his father, Thomas Evans, Esq., of Miltown Castle, M.P. for Castle Martyr, having been third son of the Right Hon. George Evans, of Caherass and Bulgaden Hall, and brother of George, first Lord Carbery. Mrs. Grant has left a son, Francis William, born 9th March, 1847.

EASTER TENURE.—Farringdon Ward, in the City of London, the aldermanry of which was bought by William Faryndon, goldsmith (1379), remained in that citizen's family upwards of 80 years. It was held by the tenure of presenting a gilt flower at Easter, which was then a flower of great rarity.

THE BRICK DUTY.—The reduction of the duty from bricks upon a warehouse costing £4000, will make a saving of £100, which is 2½ per cent. on the whole cost. On another warehouse, costing £2400, which has more of stone work and less of brick, the saving is about £48, which is rather under 2 per cent. For a house costing £1000, it will make a saving of £15, which is 1½ per cent. Upon cottages it will save, upon the whole cost, about 2½ per cent.

GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND.—On Monday night the eleventh anniversary of this excellent institution was held at the London Tavern; Mr. Benjamin Webster in the chair. The usual loyal toasts having been proposed and duly honoured, the chairman afterwards, in an appropriate speech, gave "Prosperity to the General Fund," which elicited a very humorous reply from Mr. Buckstone, and a very hearty response from the company present. Mr. C. Dickens, in giving the health of the chairman, pronounced a glowing eulogy upon the character of Mr. Webster, and expressed his hope that the future prospects of the profession might be equal to their wishes. According to a statement laid before the meeting by the secretary, the total amount at the debit side of the institution was £5934, the amount of funded property £2300, and the sum disbursed £569 is. 9d., with the prospect, as Mr. Buckstone phrased it, of a large family being thrown upon their hands at an early period. The music throughout the evening, which was under the direction of Mr. Balfe, was conducted, to the great gratification of the company, by Misses Rainforth, Birch, Dolby, Lucombe, Williams, Rainsford, Weiss, and Messent; Messrs. Harrison, Wilworth Frederick Chatterton, Weiss, Land, Macnitz, F. Bonda, Shoubridge, George, Smythson, Bouge, Gray, and Master Sloman. The evening's subscriptions to the fund were announced to be about £400. The spirit of hilarity was admirably kept up throughout the evening, and the chairman very ably sustained the various duties which the occasion devolved upon him to discharge.

THE GORHAM CASE.—BISHOP OF EXETER'S LETTER.

WE are impressed, by the Bishop of Exeter's Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, just published by Murray, with a very firm conviction that a serious crisis is impending over the Church; and, in laying before our readers an analysis of that production, it is our desire and intention to treat it seriously and impartially. The Bishop addresses the Archbishop of Canterbury "with the most painful feelings." "Never before has the Primate of all England," he says, "thrown himself upon the judgment of the world as the writer of a controversial book." His Grace has recently published a new edition of an old work in which baptism is treated of, and in the preface to which he refers to the present "distressing controversy." As a party to that controversy, the Bishop of Exeter examines the new matter in the Archbishop's book, and asserts that the "original views in it present a notable contrast to the lower views on the same subject which the Archbishop has for some years adopted.

Through twenty pages the Bishop controverts the Archbishop's present doctrines concerning baptism, which he contends are new and changed, though he admits unconsciously changed, from the Archbishop's former doctrines. The principal point at issue between the two prelates is, the faith of those who present infants for baptism; the Archbishop having expressed an opinion that "the Saviour will favour and hear the prayers of all parents who concur in like simplicity and faith" in "the necessity of that spiritual regeneration." The Bishop speaks of this as "substituting vicarious prayer for the sacraments; and as "little short, if indeed short, of heresy." He actually accuses the Archbishop of "flinging to the winds the declarations of Scripture and of the Church interpreting Scripture." He describes the Archbishop as "making the prayer of faith' of the parents of infants necessary to their beneficial reception of the sacrament;" and he says that the "teaching" of the Archbishop is "RANK POPERY, and WORSE THAN POPERY."

Dr. Philpotts overstrains the Archbishop's language, who does not assert, as far as we understand, that the prayers of the parents are necessary to the efficacy of baptism, but only that they would be heard with favour. On points of this description, with much minute criticism, the Bishop employs the first part of his pamphlet, and he at once makes it apparent that the contest is not confined to him and Mr. Gorham, but extends to the Archbishop. There is nearly the same vital difference of doctrine between the Bishop and the Archbishop, as between the Bishop and Mr. Gorham.

The Bishop says, "If self-contradiction were all that I had to object to your Grace's book, I should not think it necessary to trouble you or myself; much less the Church at large, on the matter" (though the Archbishop is guilty, according to the Bishop, of Popery and heresy). "My complaint is of a much graver character. My Lord, you were summoned to attend the hearing of the late cause before the Judicial Committee of her Maje-ty's Council, in order that you might assist them in dealing with the questions of doctrine which were mooted in that cause; and I cannot but think that instead of leading you had misled those whom you were to instruct, not only by mis stating the matter on which you advised, but also by misquoting and, or almost all, the authors cited by you in confirmation of your statement." That is a serious charge. The Bishop, after accusing his metropolitan of "heresy and Popery," accuses him of mis-stating, and misquoting, and misleading her Majesty's Council. He also accuses the Archbishop of "giving the sanction of his authority" to a "judgment marked by the most palpable misapprehensions—and therefore mis-statements—of doctrine, and by omissions, unparalleled in any other similar document, of the true grounds on which justice required that the judgment should be founded." The Archbishop is said to have "concurred in the false, destructive declaration that the Church has no positive doctrine on the efficacy of the sacrament of holy baptism;" and, "as far as in him lies, and as far as the effect of the sentence of the Privy Council goes," "sanctions a decision that the Church over over which he presides is no part of the Church of Christ." The Bishop admits "that these are grave charges," which, "if he fail to establish them, will fasten on himself the guilt not only of calumny, but of schism." He accordingly devotes two or three and twenty pages to proving all these charges against the Archbishop.

We do not see in his statements any direct proof that the Archbishop has misstated the matter at issue, or actually misquoted any authorities, though he may have understood the matters at issue and those authorities differently from the Bishop, and may have been unacquainted with some nice points of criticism with which the Bishop is familiar. The whole of this part of the pamphlet consists of such criticism; and admitting that the Bishop is right in every point—which we neither affirm nor deny—what he advances does not justify the very serious charges he has brought against his metropolitan. We may, too, be permitted to add, that what he says of not thinking it necessary to trouble himself or the Church with the Archbishop's self-contradictions, though they amount to heresy and Popery, had the Archbishop not been summoned to attend the hearing of a case before the Privy Council," to which the Bishop was a party, and in which the judgment went against him, implies that he has much less zeal for the integrity of the Church, and the purity of its doctrines, than for a case in which he is personally concerned. The decision of the Privy Council led him to bring forth the charges of heresy and Popery against one of his judges.

The Bishop devotes the remainder of his pamphlet, which consists altogether of ninety pages, to the examination of the judgment of the Privy Council. He begins by stating that the heresies of Mr. Gorham, for which he refused him institution, are these:—"1st, That, by declaring original sin to be a hindrance to the benefit of baptism, he denied the article of the Creed, 'One baptism for the remission of sins.' 2ndly, That he separated entirely the inward and spiritual grace from the sacrament, inasmuch as he stated regeneration to precede baptism, when baptism was rightly received." "These heresies were glozed over or almost unnoticed in the judgment," in a manner which the Bishop compares to "a man being charged with murder, and a judge noticing only the assault, but such as established manslaughter." "Mr. Gorham's special error," he says, "is not simply omitted; it is, by implication, denied. So much suppression of truth," he adds, "converts a formal absolution of Mr. Gorham into a virtual condemnation of his doctrine."

The Bishop also condemns the judgment, in addition to condemning it because the Archbishop misled the Council as to the doctrines of the Church, "because a canon of 1604" and the "Act of Uniformity are not cited, though they are the most direct, palpable, and conclusive bearing on the matter at issue," and though they were pressed on the attention of the Court by counsel. He condemns the judgment, too, because "the Court did not apply itself to a consideration of the terms in which the Articles of the Church are expressed, and, if ambiguous, having recourse to those sources from which they were derived, to explain them." The whole of this part of the letter also turns on the different views taken by the Bishop, and by the Archbishop and Mr. Gorham, on what the Church prescribes concerning the sacrament of baptism

A more direct accusation against the Judges, made by Dr. Philpotts, is that they have "listened to clamours from without, or to suggestions of timid caution from within the Church," that "they will introduce confusion into the Church, and it may be into the State, drive hundreds of conscientious men out of the ministry, and destroy the feeling and support now so prejudices of a large and valuable portion of the laity." The danger they apprehended, he alleges, "was visionary, for there are not probably six men, calling themselves churchmen," though evidently the Archbishop is supposed to be one, "in particular, but Mr. Gorham's special heresy." The Bishop charges the Judges with having "adopted a temporising measure which it was thought would satisfy both parties." He affirms, that "they have neglected the law of the Church to resort to "me" and he "appeals from this legally supreme court to another and a higher tribunal." "It was not," he affirms, "a common case of false doctrine in which I used the power committed to me by God, and which, before I was consecrated Bishop I pledged myself to exercise." "There is no heresy in baptism beyond this (of Mr. Gorham), none which involves a more complete denial of truth. It is a thorough, systematic denial of all true conceptions of regeneration." "We cannot," he asserts, "maintain the Catholic faith as to holy baptism to be the faith of the Church of England, without maintaining that the court which decided otherwise decided contrary to the faith." "From such a decision I announce 'undertainly in thrown over everything." "Some will be tempted to seek truth elsewhere, in the Church of Rome, which promises them rest from the search after truth."

"No, only peace," says the Bishop, "and rest, and quiet confidence have been broken by the judgment, and the hands of those made to 'hang down who have laboured zealously for the Church,' but very serious doubts have been raised whether the Church, if she continue passive under the judgment, will not forfeit her claim to be a portion of the church of Christ." In conclusion, the Bishop advises the Archbishop "to call together your com-provincial Bishops, and invite them to declare what is the faith of the Church on the Articles impugned in this judgment."

"I Mean while," he says, "I have one most painful duty to perform. I have to protest, not only against the judgment pronounced in the recent cause, but also against the regular consequences of that judgment. I have to protest against your Grace's doing what you will speedily be called to do either in person, or by some other exercising your authority in the province, and I do hereby solemnly protest before the Church of England, before the holy Catholic Church, before Him who is the Divine Head, against your giving mission to exercise care of souls within my diocese to a clergyman who proclaims himself to hold the heresies which Mr. Gorham holds. I protest that any one who gives mission to him, till he retracts, is a favourer and supporter of these heresies. I protest, in conclusion, that I cannot, without sin, and by God's grace I will not, hold communion with him, he in who he may, who shall so abuse the high commission which he bears." The Bishop will not hold communion with those who give effect to the judgment.

The letter of the Bishop, with the charges he makes, and the defiance which, in conclusion, he hurls against the authority of the Archbishop and the Privy Council, adds amazingly to the gravity of the affair. The Bishop of Exeter, whatever though he be, does not stand alone in his opposition to the Privy Council and the two Archbishops—the doctrines he espouses are supported by a very large body of the clergy. He may be intemperate, still he is a man of great power, of great dialectic skill, of considerable theological reputation, and of high standing in the Church. He is now seventy-three years of age. Such a man, so high in rank, with due reverence, as he says, for his Archbishop, but with great affliction, accuses the Privy Council of committing injustice, and his superior of heresy. Such accusations so made cannot pass by as the idle wind: they must be, and in fact already are, taken up, and the results can scarcely be otherwise than most important and deplorable. The dispute which began between the Bishop and Mr. Gorham has already extended through the whole Church; and involves a contest between a large part of the Church and the highest authority in the State.

The further facts of the case that have transpired are these:—

An address, subscribed by Peers, members of Parliament, and others connected with the diocese, has been presented to the Bishop of London, stating that they are deeply impressed with a sense of the dangers to the faith and vitality of the Church of England which the judgment in the case of "Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter" involves; of its certain tendency to destroy the bona fides of all subscription to religious tests; and of the general unfitness of a court so composed as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for the treatment of questions of Christian doctrine; and earnest him to take counsel with his right rev. brethren concerning the application of a remedy to these evils, and, particularly concerning the adoption of means which may enable the Church to declare, in such words as shall appear most effectual, its doctrine touching the sacrament of baptism. The Bishop has replied to the address, that he is alive to the necessity and the duty of taking counsel with his brethren at the present crisis, and, of doing all in his power to avert the injurious consequences apprehended. He believes the task of devising proper measures is not hopeless, if the truth be maintained in a spirit of moderation and charity

Four of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church of Scotland have by writing tendered to the Bishop of London their "deep and heartfelt thanks for his faithful refusal to concur in the recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, whereby it is propounded that the regeneration of infants in holy baptism is not the clear and unquestionable doctrine of the Church of England, and that a minister of that Church may reasonably deny that infants are regenerated by holy baptism." In returning his acknowledgments, the Bishop of London says:—"Holding it to be unquestionably the doctrine of the Church of England that infants receive remission of original sin in baptism, through the merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and united to them by that sacrament, and finding in Mr. Gorham's answers to the Bishop of Exeter's questions a distinct denial of that doctrine, I could not bring myself to concur in the reasons assigned by the Judicial Committee for recommending her Majesty to reverse the judgment of the Court of Arches Mr. Gorham holds that the remiss on of original sin, adoption into the family of God, and regeneration must all take place, in the case of infants, not in baptism nor by means of baptism, but before baptism—an opinion which appears to me to be in direct opposition to the plain teaching of the Church, and utterly to destroy the sacramental character of baptism. I cannot admit that this opinion is to be reconciled, by any latitude of interpretation, which can reasonably be claimed, with the Church's articles and formularies; nor do I believe that it is an opinion which is held by more than a very small number indeed of our clergy."

INTERIOR OF BRAMPFORD SPEKE CHURCH, DEVON.—(SEE PAGE 187.)

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. E. J. G. Hornby, to the rectory of Bury, Lancashire. The Rev. F. Johnson, to the rectory of Ludlington, Northamptonshire. The Rev. Henry Gray, to the rectory of Aldsworth. The Rev. P. U. Brown, to the rectory of St. Lawrence, Norwich. The Rev. J. G. Marsham, to the rectory of Wramplingham, Norfolk. The Rev. T. B. Llewellyn Bowen, to the rectory of Bodvari, Flintshire. The Rev. Wm Alexander, to the rectory of Fermoanmongan, Ireland. The Rev. R. H. Baxter, to the vicarage of Seaham, Durham. The Rev Robert Alexander Parkes, to the vicarage of Clondulf, Dromore. Rev. J. Blomefield, to be one of the chaplains in the Hon. East India Company's service, and attached to the Bishop of Calcutta.

VACANCIES.—Ormskirk vicarage, Lancashire, dio. Chester; value, £367, with residence; patron, Earl of Derby; Rev E J. G Hornby prom. Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead chaplaincy; stipend, £75. Port as, Unlow, Hants; Rev. J. R. Huston, resigned. Deanery of Salisbury: rector of Bishopstowe, near Salisbury; value £1000 a year; in the gift of the Pembroke family.

VISITATION.—The Archdeacon of York has fixed the following days for holding his next visitation:—York, April 23rd; Pontefract, 24th; Doncaster, 25th; Rotherham, 26th.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently been presented with acknowledgments of esteem and regard:—The Rev. Philip Bennett Power, of Woburn Episcopal Chapel, from his congregation; the Rev. E. P. Blakesey, "for his zealous and triumphant advocacy of Protestant principles, in a discussion with the Rev. J. B. Nagleton, Roman Catholic priest, March, 1850;" the Rev. Anastius Gaspard Edouart, late incumbent of St. Paul's Church, Blackburn, from the congregation; the Rev. W. H. Gow-r, from the teachers in the Sunday Schools belonging to the church of St. Andrew, Holborn; the Rev. Thomas Lathbury, from the members of the Bath Strangers' Society; the Rev. Henry Neville, curate of Yarmouth, from a number of those in the habit of attending his ministry; the Rev. Stephen Brain Sutton, late curate of St. Mary's Church, Kirkdale, from the congregation; the Rev. George Pettitt, for fourteen years missionary in India, on his return to his evangelical lab ors in the East, by friends in his native town, Birmingham UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—The Chancellor of the University of London has lately received a Royal warrant, appointing the following noblemen and gentlemen Fellows of that University:—Right Hon. Lord Monteagle; Right Hon. Lord Overstone; Right Hon. Sir James R. G. Graham, Bart., M P; Right Hon. T. S. Macaulay; G. Cornewall Lewis, Esq., M.P.; Henry Hallam, Esq., George Grote, Esq.

The Gloucester Church Union have adopted an address to the Bishop of Exeter in expression of their grateful approval in reference to the position in which he has been placed by the recent judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The number of clergy in the rural deanery of Leeds, which is coextensive with the original parish of Leeds, has increased since the coming into operation of Dr. Hook's act to upwards of sixty, with the prospect of further increase.

GRAND BANQUET BY THE EAST INDIA COMPANY TO GENERAL LORD GOUGH.

On Saturday evening last, the Hon. the East India Company entertained General Lord Gough and a distinguished party at the London Tavern, in honour of the return of the noble and gallant veteran from his victorious career in India. The numerous suites of apartments on the principal and upper floors were appropriated as reception-rooms, withdrawing-rooms, &c., all being decorated specially for the purpose, and adorned with costly mirrors, damasks, and exotics. The large banqueting hall, in which the dinner was served, presented a magnificent appearance. The display of gold and silver-gilt plate was profuse and gorgeous—epergnes, quaint and ponderous flagons, tazzas, candelabra, &c., being arranged over the whole surface of the tables. At the principal table were two spirited and massive equestrian groups in solid silver richly chased—the one taken from one of the cartoons exhibited in Westminster-hall, and representing Robert Bruce attacked by assassins, the other Prince Maurice at the battle of Rasmen. In the centre of this table was a plateau bearing a beautifully executed figure of Fame, in frosted silver, about 2 feet high, standing on a pedestal surrounded by wreaths of laurel, and holding forth a crown of victory towards the place allotted to the honoured guest of the evening. On buffets at the end of the room, and on either side, there was also ranged in order a collection of massive and unique gold and silver-gilt dishes of curious forms and of various ages. The whole array presented a spectacle of grandeur and luxury alike worthy of the rich and powerful body by whom the entertainment was given, and of the noble and gallant general whose brilliant victories have added so largely to their power. The dinner itself was equally luxurious, and comprised every known delicacy and the most recherché viands, and the wines included the products of the most esteemed vintages of every wine-growing country

The chair was filled by Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B., chairman of the East India Company. Viscount Gough sat on his immediate right, and around the table, on the same side, were seated in the following order, the Marquis of Westminster, the Marquis of Breadalbane, Earl Grey, Lord John Russell, Viscount Hardinge, Hon. Captain Gough, Sir Robert Campbell, Bart.; Right Hon. Fox Maule, Right Hon. Sir R. Peel, Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Right Hon. Edward Ellice, Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, Sir Howard Douglas, Bart.; Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart.; Sir George Pollock, Sir James Macdonald, G.C.B.; Sir Charles Malcolm, the Solicitor-General. And on the left of the chairman were, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the Deputy Chairman of the Company, Sir William Gumm, the Earl of Clare, Viscount Jocelyn, Charles Mills, Esq; the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor of England, Right Hon. Sir Frederick Adam, G.C.B.; Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, M.P.; Right Hon. Sir W. Somerville, M.P.; Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Sir James L. Lushington, G.C.H.; Sir James Macdonnell, K.C.B.; Sir John Doveton, Sir George Clark, M.P.; Major Edwardes, &c.

DEPARTURE OF PRISONERS FROM THE ABBAYE, AT PARIS.

Among the noblemen and gentlemen who were invited to the banquet, but were unable to be present, were the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Anglesey, Lord Ripon, Sir George Grey, and Sir J. C. Hobhouse.

Covers were laid for 120 guests, and about that number sat down. Both Viscount Gough and Major Edwardes were recognised on their arrival by the crowd assembled outside the Tavern, and were loudly cheered. Lady Gough, her three daughters, and a number of other ladies were present in the gallery, and remained during the whole evening, evidently taking a deep interest in the proceedings.

The band of the Coldstream Guards were in attendance, and played at intervals during the evening.

The usual loyal toasts having been given and duly honoured, the Chairman once more rose, amidst breathless silence to propose the toast of the evening, which he gave in nearly the following words:—My Lords and gentlemen, we are assembled here this evening to do honour to one of the bravest and most distinguished soldiers of the British army—(cheers)—a soldier who has commanded—has fought—has conquered in more battles than any general who has ever headed an army in our Asiatic possessions—battles, the results of which, in importance to the British nation, have only been second to those of that illustrious hero whose achievements have never been equalled. (Hear, hear.) My Lords and gentlemen, I rise to propose to you "The Health of Lord Viscount Gough" (loud cheering), restored to his country, by the blessing of Providence, after a long absence, and, I may add, after a long and brilliant career of Indian glory. My Lords and gentlemen, it is unnecessary for me in this assemblage to detail to you the services of Lord Gough—they are identified with the imperishable records of the British army. In many countries and many climes, and in many of our bravest battles, more than thirty years has Lord Gough fought for his country. On the glorious records of fame I believe there are few names entered which are better or more universally known than that of Lord Gough, who, with his gallant 87th, was the captor of the first eagle and the first banner of France. But, my Lords and gentlemen, it is in relation to Lord Gough's services in that quarter of the world in which we, the East India Company, are more particularly interested, that I would now claim your attention. Lord Gough has been a faithful servant to the East India Company. He has served the Government of India as Commander-in-Chief of our army with his whole heart, with entire devotion, with that singleness of mind which is peculiar to him, with that faithfulness and that success which demand their deepest acknowledgment. My Lords and gentlemen, China, the vast empire of China, submitted to his victorious arms; and in India he has gained a magnificent kingdom for the British Crown. (Loud cheers.) The gallant chairman then turned to Lord Gough, and addressed him as follows:—My Lord Gough, in the name of the East India Company, I have the highest gratification in expressing to you their cordial acknowledgments for the never-to-be-forgotten services which you have rendered to them and to your country. (Hear, hear.) In their names I welcome you back to your native land, and I am sure there is no individual present in this brilliant assemblage who will not unite with me in the fervent prayer that you may long live to enjoy the well-deserved honours and the rewards conferred upon you by a gracious Sovereign and a grateful country. My Lords and gentlemen, I beg to propose to you "The Health of Lord Viscount Gough," with all the honours.

BUST OF VISCOUNT GOUGH, BY G. G. ADAMS.

This toast was received with loud and continuous cheering, the band of the Coldstream Guards at the same time striking up "See the Conquering Hero comes."

When the chairman turned round to address Lord Gough, one of the attendants placed a wreath of laurel in the outstretched hand of the figure of Victory, and turned it round so as to face Lord Gough. As soon as this was observed by the company, there was a renewed and general burst of cheering.

Lord Gough returned thanks in a very appropriate speech, which was received with enthusiastic applause.

Several other toasts followed, and the company separated at half-past eleven o'clock.

A fine bust of Viscount Gough has just been modelled by Mr. G. G. Adams, 8, Eccleston-street East, Pimlico; and will be executed in marble, after it has been exhibited for a short time at Messrs. Colnaghi and Co.'s, Pall-mall East. The likeness of the veteran hero is remarkably striking.

DEPARTURE OF PRISONERS FROM THE ABBAYE, IN PARIS.

One of the results of the recent Socialist movement in Paris was the conviction of eighty-three soldiers, for having deposited crowns at the Bastille. They were sentenced to be transported to Algeria; and the scene which our Artist has sketched, shows the party on foot, on their way from the Military Prison of the Abbey to the Railway Station. They were escorted by cavalry and foot; and the crowd strongly sympathised with them by shaking hands with them. Women might be seen begging alms, linen, provisions, &c., from the persons at the balconies and windows: the police attempted to remove them. Children got between the legs of the escort, who, however, did not repel them: in short, every mark of sympathy is shown to the prisoners on their way through the quartier, and from every class of persons.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JAMES KERSHAW, ESQ., M.P.

Mr. Kershaw is the successor of Mr. Cobden in the representation of Stockport. He contested the borough at the general election of 1847. Mr. Cobden was then absent on the Continent, and was returned at the head of the poll with Mr. Heald, who defeated Mr. Kershaw by a majority of 566 to 536 votes. Mr. Cobden was also returned for the West Riding of Yorkshire, for which he made his election to sit; and in December, 1847, Mr. Kershaw, after a severe contest with Major Marsland, was returned by a majority of 581 to 545.

Mr. Kershaw's immediate connexion with Stockport commenced in 1842. At that time two-thirds of the factories in Stockport were idle; whole streets of houses were deserted; poor's rates and private subscriptions were insufficient for the daily increasing destitution of the population. Mills and machinery had lost their value—there was no demand for labour, whether skilled or unskilled—and, in short, no period of misery and distress had ever before so pressed upon all classes, from the manufacturer to the artisan. It was hailed as a prospect of better times when Mr. Kershaw purchased and set to work the Mersey Mills, giving employment to about 1200 hands. The firm of which he is the head were known for their enterprising spirit, and the variety and extent of their trade. Their printworks at Ardwick gave employment to 300 hands, most of them of a high degree of skill. Their warehouses were amongst the largest in Manchester: they had an immense amount of work done for them in other factories, and by the hand-loom weavers in their own houses. They made prints for the markets of Portugal, Greece, the West Indies, Brazil, Mexico, the East Indies, and the home market; and it was, therefore, believed that they would soon give still further employment in Stockport. The expectation was not disappointed: a manufactory called India Mills was built, it covers 1165 square yards. In one apartment on the ground-floor, lighted by 109 lights, there are 1000 patent power-looms, and in that room 3000 persons sat down at a tea party to celebrate the opening of the mill, in 1846. Mr. Kershaw now pays about £1300 a week, or £68,000 a year, wages in Stockport alone; and at all their works the firm pays not much under £100,000. This of itself accounts for his having been invited to become a candidate for the representation of the borough; but he was also known as an earnest promoter of education amongst the people. From his boyhood he had been a teacher at a Sunday-school; and as by constant exertion and diligent attention to business he won his way to prosperity, he was always ready to subscribe liberally to schools and all places of public instruction, and on one occasion gave no less a sum than £1000 to the Congregational Board of Education, which was assigned to the schools in Cavendish-street, Manchester, and to which Mr. Kershaw afterwards gave further sums amounting to not less than £700, as additional subscription. His early took an active part in politics, and at the first election for Manchester (which, with all its skill, industry, wealth, and population, sent no representative to Parliament until after the passing of the Reform Bill). Mr. Kershaw was vice-chairman of Poulett Thompson's committee, and, at the subsequent election, chairman. He was amongst the most active of those who exerted themselves to obtain the municipal franchise for Manchester, and was successively chosen at once Councillor-Alderman of his ward, and finally Mayor in 1843. In 1837 he was appointed a county magistrate. He was one of the earliest members of the Free-Trade Association, afterwards the League, in Manchester; took an active part in all the proceedings of its council, and was one of the largest subscribers to its funds. He has been the maker of his own fortune, and is one of those men whose success speaks encouragement to all who are willing to work their own way patiently and with honest perseverance. He was born at Manchester, in 1774. His father was a working man, earning at best but small wages. At that period there were but few schools—few people who cared much for the instruction of workmen. It was no easy matter for those who had to earn their bread to accomplish any education. James Kershaw when a mere boy obtained employment in a warehouse, and managed in intervals of work to learn something, so that at the age of sixteen he was able to get a clerkship in a mercantile establishment. His constant attention to business, his general ability, and the knowledge he speedily acquired of details made him so essential to his employers and so won their confidence, that, whilst yet a very young man, they made him a junior partner in the firm, and of that firm, with a vastly extended business, he is now the chief. In Parliament he belongs to the class of business members, and has spoken but little. His first speech was against the Regium Donum to Dissenters both in England and Ireland, on the ground of opposition to all State grants to any church. Mr. Kershaw is a staunch advocate of the voluntary principle, has voted with Mr. Trelawny against church-rates, and with Mr. Osborne as to the Church in Ireland. He is a supporter of Mr. Hume's Reform, Mr. Cobden's Financial and International Arbitration measures, and Mr. Berkeley's motion for the Ballot. He voted with Mr. Ewart for the Abolition of Capital Punishment, for the Irish Arms Bill of 1848, and against the suspension of the Habeas Corpus in 1848; against Mr. Disraeli's motions both last and this session; with Mr. Cayley for repeal of the Malt-tax, for the repeal of the Navigation Laws; with the Government, on the Irish Franchise Bill and on Mr. Hutt's motion for the withdrawal of the African Squadron. He was a member of the Committees of the School of Design and Public Libraries, and on a division with the Earl of March was elected a member of the Committee on County Expenditure.

MR. ALDERMAN KERSHAW, M.P. FOR STOCKPORT.

The Portrait, an excellent likeness, is from a photograph by Messrs. Beard.

PROCESSION OF THE HIGH SHERIFF OF LANCASHIRE, AT ROCHDALE.

DEPARTURE OF THE HIGH SHERIFF OF LANCASHIRE FROM HIS RESIDENCE AT ROCHDALE TO LIVERPOOL.

THURSDAY, the 21st of March, 1850, will long be remembered in Rochdale, on account of the grand demonstration which took place on that day in compliment to Clement Royds, Esq., the High Sheriff of the county palatine of Lancaster, on his departure to the assizes at Liverpool. It was a complete holiday throughout the town: shops were closed; mills, factories, and other establishments suspended their daily toil, and the inhabitants vied with each other in evincing their respect and esteem towards a fellow-townsman, for whom they entertained so much attachment and good feeling.

Shortly after Mr. Royds had received his appointment as High Sheriff, a committee was formed by the inhabitants of Rochdale, who determined upon the erection of a complimentary arch upon the Old Bridge, situated in the centre of the town. A subscription for this purpose was commenced, which was so liberally responded to that a fine ox was purchased and roasted whole, and distributed amongst the poor people. A most substantial dinner was provided, and partaken of by 151 of the oldest and poorest inhabitants, whose united ages amounted to 11,446 years. A grand display of fireworks took place in the evening, and there were numerous other amusements.

A procession was agreed upon, and it cannot but have been most gratifying to the High Sheriff that all parties most cordially entered into the proposal to give him a joyous escort on his way to perform his official duties. An address was also prepared, and signed by the magistrates, the clergy, the authorities, and most of the principal inhabitants.

Upon the appointed day the neighbouring gentry, tradesmen, yeomen, armers, and persons of all grades, poured early into the town, to witness the display and take part in the procession. The weather was fine. Flags were hoisted in all directions, bands of music paraded the streets, and the church bells rang merrily.

The arch under which the procession passed did great credit to Messrs. Mills and Barnish, the builders. The wood-work was covered with calico to represent stone, and the whole decorated with flowers, evergreens, and a profusion of flags, banners, and appropriate devices, amongst which were the Royal arms, the arms of the High Sheriff, the county, and the borough. The words "Royds, Sheriff" were inscribed on both sides of the arch, and also the Royal motto, V.R., and the Crown, which were lighted with gas in the evening, and had a brilliant effect. There were also two other arches—one erected by Mr. John Haworth, druggist, in Drake-street; and the other, in Smith-street, was erected by the authorities.

As early as nine o'clock in the morning parties began to assemble on the lawn at Mount Falinge, which is situate very near the town, the seat of the High Sheriff. Shortly after ten o'clock, Mr. James Gibson (as the representative of the chief constable of the town, who was absent in London), the commissioners, and other gentlemen, presented to the High Sheriff a congratulatory address; to which Mr. Royds appropriately replied, and, in the course of his address, observed that he had resided at Rochdale for nearly three-score years and ten.

After most of the company had partaken of breakfast, the procession began to form, and at eleven o'clock left the residence of the High Sheriff in the following order:—

County Constabulary. Four Marshals, on horseback. Band of Music. Manorial and Parish Constables. Fire Brigade, on two engines, fully accoutred. Deputy Chief Constable of the Town, accompanied by the Commissioners, etc abreast. Freemasons. Band of Music. The Rochdale district of Independent Odd Fellows, with appropriate flags and banners. Order of Foresters. Band of Music. Protestant Association. Band of the Worsley Troop of Yeomanry Cavalry, in full uniform. The Rochdale Troop of Yeomanry Cavalry, commanded by Lieut. Crooke. Steward of the Lord of the Manor. Deputy Steward. Coroner. Magistrates. Clergy. Two Grandsons of the High Sheriff, on beautifully caparisoned ponies. Trumpeters. Javelin Men. The High Sheriff's State Carriage, drawn by four splendid greys, containing the High-Sheriff, Under Sheriff, and Chaplain. Javelin Men. High Sheriff's Private Carriages, containing Mrs. Royds and family. These were followed by at least one hundred and fifty carriages, containing the principal gentry of the county, and by near four hundred horsemen intermixed between the carriages.

When the High Sheriff arrived at the arch, the enthusiastic cheers of the multitude rent the air. A balloon was inflated upon the arch by Mr. Abraham Tempest, which went the distance of sixty miles to a place called Bree's Wood, in Shropshire. The procession was under the direction of mounted marshals, wearing white favours and wands; and great praise is due to them and the committee for their excellent management. The cortège passed through the principal streets of the town to the railway station at Blue Pits, which is about three miles from the residences of the High Sheriff. Throughout the line the High Sheriff was vociferously cheered.

After the departure of the High Sheriff, the procession returned to Rochdale, and there separated. Public dinners took place at most of the inns in the town, the principal dinner being at the Grapes Hotel, under the presidency of Mr. F. L. Johnson, the chairman of the committee, Mr. Royds' health was drunk with great enthusiasm, and the evening was spent with great conviviality.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—During the last eight years upwards of 640 slavers have been taken on the coast of Africa, and of that number of vessels three-fourths have been taken within thirty miles of the coast. It is the general impression of naval officers, that it would be much more advisable to grant a bounty on the tonnage of vessels taken near the coast of Africa, if found fitted or proved to be engaged in the slave-trade, in preference to the plan at present adopted, of awarding a bounty according to the number of slaves taken. The plan of granting a bounty on the tonnage of the vessels taken would strike at the root of the trade, and place the conduct of the cruisers above suspicion of letting them touch the coast in the expectation of catching them when full of slaves. "Prevention is better than cure," if the squadron is to be kept on the coast; and a bounty on the tonnage of the slave vessels taken in attempting to reach the coast would be the most effectual means of suppressing the slave-trade.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

BY THOMAS MILLER.

CHAPTER XX.

STREET AMUSEMENTS.

At different times several ephemeral little treatises have appeared professing to teach the inhabitants of London how to live upon £50, £100, and divers other sums a year, not one, however, pointing out the way by which any of these incomes were to be obtained. Mrs. Glasse went very differently to work when she attempted to throw a new light upon the economy of cooking, by advising her readers to "first catch their hare," thereby conveying most sensible information in one brief unmistakable sentence, and leaving them to proceed with the receipt, or not, just as they were or might be provided with the animal treated of. Although this introduction is hardly to the point, it will serve to lead us to the ways and means hundreds in London have recourse to of obtaining a livelihood, by appealing to our eyes and ears, by the sights and sounds which they produce in our busy streets; causing those within doors to curse their deafening clamour, and those without, who are interrupted by the assembled crowd, and prevented from passing on their way, to utter anything but blessings upon their "devoted heads;" proving the moral of the old fable, that what is fun to one is death to another, by one class being amused at the expense of another's annoyance.

For our part we look on these street performers with a very lenient eye, knowing that they are struggling to live in the best way they can, and that their humble endeavours to please afford amusement to thousands. Look how the little urchins run at the first sound of Punch's well-known voice—what a pattering there is of shod and shoeless feet from every court and alley in the neighbourhood as soon as his "chuck, chuck, churee" is heard, startling the silence of the street. They whip up their marbles, and start off with their peg-tops half wound to get a front place; for the hardened old rogue was a favourite with their forefathers, and they are never weary of seeing him bang Judy with his truncheon. They have a keen relish for his rather coarse jokes—the only objectionable point in this old exhibition. How they dance round an Italian boy with his organ, forgetting all their poverty and hunger for the moment, while some little rascal, the raggedest in the group, keeps excellent time with his castanets, which are four bare bones placed between the fingers of each hand, and rattled over his head with laughter and delight, while he thinks himself the chief contributor to the amusement.

But Punch and Judy are the chief characters in our Sketch. Punch was a different performance in our youthful days: then he went out, got drunk, came home and quarrelled with his wife; from words they got to blows, and there used to be a tremendous fight between them, and sorry we are to say the drunken old rascal swore dreadfully. At last he struck Judy a tremendous blow with his truncheon, and she fell down senseless, as if dead. Then the conscience of the hump-backed villain smote him, and he wept and wailed over her, until at last the Doctor came, felt her pulse, and pronounced her dead. Punch was inconsolable for her loss, pronounced the Doctor a quack, and then they went at it. Oh! what a fight that was between Punch and the Doctor! but the man of physic fell beneath the truncheon of the hook-nosed old blackguard, and appeared as if dead. Punch was next tried, and knocked the Judge off the bench for finding him guilty of murder, and sentencing him to be hanged. Then the gallows was brought out, and you made sure that the old villain's career of crime was ended; but not a bit of it; like Mat Prior's thief, he—

> Now fitted the halter, now traversed the cart,
> And often took leave, but was loth to depart.

He seemed willing enough to be hanged, but did not know how to place his neck in the halter—sometimes he put his arms through the noose, then half his body, but never by any chance did he allow the cord to touch his neck. At length he and around the table, on the same side, were seated in the following order, the Marquis of Westminster, the Marquis of Breadalbane, Earl Grey, Lord John Russell, Viscount Hardinge, Hon. Captain Gough, Sir Robert Campbell, Bart.; Right Hon. Fox Maule, Right Hon. Sir R. Peel, Right Hon. Sir James Graham, Right Hon. Edward Ellice, Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, Sir Howard Douglas, Bart.; Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart.; Sir George Pollock, Sir James Macdonald, G.C.B.; Sir Charles Malcolm, the Solicitor-General. And on the left of the chairman were, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, the Deputy Chairman of the Company, Sir William Gomm, the Earl of Clare, Viscount Jocelyn, Charles Mills, Esq; the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor of England, Right Hon. Sir Frederick Adam, G.C.B.; Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, M.P.; Right Hon. Sir W. Somerville, M.P.; Sir Thomas M'Mahon, Sir James L. Lushington, G.C.B.; Sir James Macdonnell, K.C.B.; Sir John Doveton, Sir George Clerk, M.P.; Major Edwardes, &c.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON.—STREET SIGHTS.

DEPARTURE OF PRISONERS FROM THE ABBAYE, AT PARIS.

Among the noblemen and gentlemen who were invited to the banquet, but were unable to be present, were the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Anglesey, Lord Ripon, Sir George Grey, and Sir J. C. Hobhouse.

Covers were laid for 120 guests, and about that number sat down. Both Viscount Gough and Major Edwardes were recognised on their arrival by the crowd assembled outside the Tavern, and were loudly cheered. Lady Gough, her three daughters, and a number of other ladies were present in the gallery, and remained during the whole evening, evidently taking a deep interest in the proceedings.

The band of the Coldstream Guards were in attendance, and played at intervals during the evening.

The usual loyal toasts having been given and duly honoured, the Chairman once more rose, amidst breathless silence to propose the toast of the evening, which he gave in nearly the following words:—My Lords and gentlemen, we are assembled here this evening to do honour to one of the bravest and most distinguished soldiers of the British army—(cheers)—a soldier who has commanded—has fought—has conquered in more battles than any general who has ever headed an army in our Asiatic possessions—battles, the results of which, in importance to the British nation, have only been second to those of that illustrious hero whose achievements have never been equalled. (Hear, hear.) My Lords and gentlemen, I rise to propose to you "The Health of Lord Viscount Gough" (loud cheering), restored to his country, by the blessing of Providence, after a long absence, and, I may add, after a long and brilliant career of Indian glory. My Lords and gentlemen, it is unnecessary for me in this assemblage to detail to you the services of Lord Gough—they are identified with the imperishable records of the British army. In many countries and many climes, and in many of our bravest battles, more than thirty years has Lord Gough fought for his country. On the glorious records of fame I believe there are few names entered which are better or more universally known than that of Lord Gough, who, with his gallant 87th, was the captor of the first eagle and the first banner of France. But, my Lords and gentlemen, it is in relation to Lord Gough's services in that quarter of the world in which we, the East India Company, are more particularly interested, that I would now claim your attention. Lord Gough has been a faithful servant to the East India Company. He has served the Government of India as Commander-in-Chief of our army with his whole heart, with entire devotion, with that singleness of mind which is peculiar to him, with that faithfulness and that success which demand their deepest acknowledgment. My Lords and gentlemen, China, the vast empire of China, submitted to his victorious arms; and in India he has gained a magnificent kingdom for the British Crown. (Loud cheers.) The gallant chairman then turned to Lord Gough, and addressed him as follows:—My Lord Gough, in the name of the East India Company, I have the highest gratification in expressing to you their cordial acknowledgments for the never-to-be-forgotten services which you have rendered to them and to your country. (Hear, hear.) In their names I welcome you back to your native land, and I am sure there is no individual present in this brilliant assemblage who will not unite with me in the fervent prayer that you may long live to enjoy the well-deserved honours and the rewards conferred upon you by a gracious Sovereign and a grateful country. My Lords and gentlemen, I beg to propose to you "The Health of Lord Viscount Gough," with all the honours.

BUST OF VISCOUNT GOUGH, BY G. G. ADAMS.

This toast was received with loud and continuous cheering, the band of the Coldstream Guards at the same time striking up "See the Conquering Hero comes."

When the chairman turned round to address Lord Gough, one of the attendants placed a wreath of laurel in the outstretched hand of the figure of Victory, and turned it round so as to face Lord Gough. As soon as this was observed by the company, there was a renewed and general burst of cheering.

Lord Gough returned thanks in a very appropriate speech, which was received with enthusiastic applause.

Several other toasts followed, and the company separated at half-past eleven o'clock.

A fine bust of Viscount Gough has just been modelled by Mr. G. G. Adams, 8, Eccleston-street East, Pimlico; and will be executed in marble, after it has been exhibited for a short time at Messrs. Colnaghi and Co.'s, Pall-mall East. The likeness of the veteran hero is remarkably striking.

DEPARTURE OF PRISONERS FROM THE ABBAYE, IN PARIS.

ONE of the results of the recent Socialist movement in Paris was the conviction of eighty-three soldiers, for having deposited crowns at the Bastille. They were sentenced to be transported to Algeria; and the scene which our Artist has sketched, shows the party on foot, on their way from the Military Prison of the Abbey to the Railway Station. They were escorted by cavalry and foot; and the crowd strongly sympathised with them by shaking hands with them. Women might be seen begging alms, linen, provisions, &c., from the persons at the balconies and windows: the police attempted to remove them. Children got between the legs of the escort who, however, did not repel them: in short, every mark of sympathy is shown to the prisoners on their way through the quartier, and from every class of persons.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JAMES KERSHAW, ESQ., M.P.

MR. KERSHAW is the successor of Mr. Cobden in the representation of Stockport. He contested the borough at the general election of 1847. Mr. Cobden was then absent on the Continent, and was returned at the head of the poll with Mr. Heald, who defeated Mr. Kershaw by a majority of 566 to 536 votes. Mr. Cobden was also returned for the West Riding of Yorkshire, for which he made his election to sit; and in December, 1847, Mr. Kershaw, after a severe contest with Major Marsland, was returned by a majority of 581 to 545.

Mr. Kershaw's immediate connexion with Stockport commenced in 1842. At that time two-thirds of the factories in Stockport were idle; whole streets of houses were deserted; poor's rates and private subscriptions were insufficient for the daily increasing destitution of the population. Mills and machinery had lost their value—there was no demand for labour, whether skilled or unskilled—and, in short, no period of misery and distress had ever before so pressed upon all classes, from the manufacturer to the artisan. It was hailed as a prospect of better times when Mr. Kershaw purchased and set to work the Mersey Mills, giving employment to about 1200 hands. The firm of which he is the head were known for their enterprising spirit, and the variety and extent of their trade. Their printworks at Ardwick gave employment to 200 hands, most of them of a high degree of skill. Their warehouses were amongst the largest in Manchester: they had an immense amount of work done for them in other factories, and by the hand-loom weavers in their own houses. They made prints for the markets of Portugal, Greece, the West Indies, Brazil, Mexico, the East Indies, and the home market; and it was, therefore, believed that they would soon give still further employment in Stockport. The expectation was not disappointed: a manufactory called India Mills was built; it covers 1168 square yards. In one apartment on the ground-floor, lighted by 109 lights, there are 1000 patent power-looms, and in that room 3000 persons sat down at a tea party to celebrate the opening of the mill, in 1846. Mr. Kershaw now pays about £1300 a week, or £68,000 a year, wages in Stockport alone; and at all their works the firm pays not much under £100,000. This of itself accounts for his having been invited to become a candidate for the representation of the borough; but he was also known as an earnest promoter of education amongst the people. From his boyhood he had been a teacher at a Sunday-school; and as by constant exertion and diligent attention to business he won his way to prosperity, he was always ready to subscribe liberally to schools and all places of public instruction, and on one occasion gave no less a sum than £1000 to the Congregational Board of Education, which was assigned to the schools in Cavendish-street, Manchester, and to which Mr. Kershaw afterwards gave further sums amounting to not less than £700, as additional subscription. He early took an active part in politics, and at the first election for Manchester (which, with all its skill, industry, wealth, and population, sent no representative to Parliament until after the passing of the Reform Bill). Mr. Kershaw was vice-chairman of Poulett Thompson's committee, and, at the subsequent election, chairman. He was amongst the most active of those who exerted themselves to obtain the municipal franchise for Manchester, and was successively chosen at once Councillor-Alderman of his ward, and finally Mayor in 1843. In 1837 he was appointed a county magistrate. He was one of the earliest members of the Free-Trade Association, afterwards the League, in Manchester: took an active part in all the proceedings of its council, and was one of the largest subscribers to its funds. He has been the maker of his own fortune, and is one of those men whose success speaks encouragement to all who are willing to work their own way patiently and with honest perseverance. He was born at Manchester, in 1794. His father was a working man, earning at best but small wages. At that period there were but few schools—few people who cared much for the instruction of workmen. It was no easy matter for those who had to earn their bread to accomplish any education. James Kershaw when a mere boy obtained employment in a warehouse, and managed in intervals of work to learn something, so that at the age of sixteen he was able to get a clerkship in a mercantile establishment. His constant attention to business, his general ability, and the knowledge he speedily acquired of details made him so essential to his employers and so won their confidence, that, whilst yet a very young man, they made him a junior partner in the firm, and of that firm, with a vastly extended business, he is now the chief. In Parliament he belongs to the class of business members, and has spoken but little. His first speech was against the Regium Donum to Dissenters both in England and Ireland, on the ground of opposition to all State grants to any church. Mr. Kershaw is a staunch advocate of the voluntary principle, has voted with Mr. Trelawny against church-rates, and with Mr. Osborne as to the Church in Ireland. He is a supporter of Mr. Hume's Reform, Mr. Cobden's Financial and International Arbitration measures, and Mr. Berkeley's motion for the Ballot. He voted with Mr. Ewart for the Abolition of Capital Punishment, for the Irish Arms Bill of 1843, and against the suspension of the Habeas Corpus in 1849; against Mr. Disraeli's motions both last and this session; with Mr. Cayley for repeal of the Malt-tax, for the repeal of the Navigation Laws; with the Government, on the Irish Franchise Bill and on Mr. Hutt's motion for the withdrawal of the African Squadron. He was a member of the Committees of the School of Design and Public Libraries, and on a division with the Earl of March was elected a member of the Committee on County Expenditure.

MR. ALDERMAN KERSHAW, M.P. FOR STOCKPORT.

The Portrait, an excellent likeness, is from a photograph by Messrs. Beard.

PROCESSION OF THE HIGH SHERIFF OF LANCASHIRE, AT ROCHDALE.

DEPARTURE OF THE HIGH SHERIFF OF LANCASHIRE

FROM HIS RESIDENCE AT ROCHDALE TO LIVERPOOL.

THURSDAY, the 21st of March, 1850, will long be remembered in Rochdale, on account of the grand demonstration which took place on that day in compliment to Clement Royds, Esq., the High Sheriff of the county palatine of Lancaster, on his departure to the assizes at Liverpool. It was a complete holiday throughout the town: shops were closed; mills, factories, and other establishments suspended their daily toil, and the inhabitants vied with each other in evincing their respect and esteem towards a fellow-townsman, for whom they entertained so much attachment and good feeling.

Shortly after Mr. Royds had received his appointment as High Sheriff, a committee was formed by the inhabitants of Rochdale, who determined upon the erection of a complimentary arch upon the Old Bridge, situated in the centre of the town. A subscription for this purpose was commenced, which was so liberally responded to that a fine ox was purchased and roasted whole, and distributed amongst the poor people. A most substantial dinner was provided, and partaken of by 151 of the oldest and poorest inhabitants, whose united ages amounted to 11,446 years. A grand display of fireworks took place in the evening, and there were numerous other amusements.

A procession was agreed upon, and it cannot but have been most gratifying to the High Sheriff that all parties most cordially entered into the proposal to give him a joyous escort on his way to perform his official duties. An address was also prepared, and signed by the magistrates, the clergy, the authorities, and most of the principal inhabitants.

Upon the appointed day the neighbouring gentry, tradesmen, yeomen, armers, and persons of all grades, poured early into the town, to witness the display and take part in the procession. The weather was fine. Flags were hoisted in all directions, bands of music paraded the streets, and the church bells rang merrily.

The arch under which the procession passed did great credit to Messrs. Mills and Barnish, the builders. The wood-work was covered with calico to represent stone, and the whole decorated with flowers, evergreens, and a profusion of flags, banners, and appropriate devices, amongst which were the Royal arms, the arms of the High Sheriff, the county, and the borough. The words "Royds, Sheriff" were inscribed on both sides of the arch, and also the Royal motto, V.R., and the Crown, which were lighted with gas in the evening, and had a brilliant effect. There were also two other arches—one erected by Mr. John Haworth, druggist, in Drake-street; and the other, in Smith-street, was erected by the authorities.

As early as nine o'clock in the morning parties began to assemble on the lawn at Mount Falinge, which is situate very near the town, the seat of the High Sheriff. Shortly after ten o'clock, Mr. James Gibson (as the representative of the chief constable of the town, who was absent in London), the commissioners, and other gentlemen, presented to the High Sheriff a congratulatory address; to which Mr. Royds appropriately replied, and, in the course of his address, observed that he had resided at Rochdale for nearly three-score years and ten.

After most of the company had partaken of breakfast, the procession began to form, and at eleven o'clock left the residence of the High Sheriff in the following order:—

County Constabulary. Four Marshals, on horseback. Band of Music. Manorial and Parish Constables. Fire Brigade, on two engines, fully accoutred. Deputy Chief Constable of the Town, accompanied by the Commissioners, six abreast. Freemasons. Band of Music. The Rochdale district of Independent Odd Fellows, with appropriate flags and banners. Order of Foresters. Band of Music. Protestant Association. Band of the Worsley Troop of Yeomanry Cavalry, in full uniform. The Rochdale Troop of Yeomanry Cavalry, commanded by Lieut. Crooke. Steward of the Lord of the Manor. Deputy Steward. Coroner. Magistrates. Clergy. Two Grandsons of the High Sheriff, on beautifully experienced ponies Trumpeters. Javelin Men. The High Sheriff's State Carriage, drawn by four splendid greys, containing the High-Sheriff, Under Sheriff, and Chaplain. Javelin Men. High Sheriff's Private Carriages, containing Mrs. Royds and family. These were followed by at least one hundred and fifty carriages, containing the principal gentry of the county, and by near four hundred horsemen intermixed between the carriages.

When the High Sheriff arrived at the arch, the enthusiastic cheers of the multitude rent the air. A balloon was inflated upon the arch by Mr. Abraham Tempest, which went the distance of sixty miles to a place called Bree's Wood, in Shropshire. The procession was under the direction of mounted marshals, wearing white favours and wands; and great praise is due to them and the committee for their excellent management. The cortège passed through the principal streets of the town to the railway station at Blue Pits, which is about three miles from the residence of the High Sheriff. Throughout the line the High Sheriff was vociferously cheered.

After the departure of the High Sheriff, the procession returned to Rochdale, and there separated. Public dinners took place at most of the inns in the town, the principal dinner being at the Grapes Hotel, under the presidency of Mr. F. L. Johnson, the chairman of the committee. Mr. Royds' health was drunk with great enthusiasm, and the evening was spent with great conviviality.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—During the last eight years upwards of 640 slavers have been taken on the coast of Africa, and of that number of vessels three-fourths have been taken within thirty miles of the coast. It is the general impression of naval officers, that it would be much more advisable to grant a bounty on the tonnage of vessels taken near the coast of Africa, if found fitted or proved to be engaged in the slave-trade, in preference to the plan at present adopted, of awarding a bounty according to the number of slaves taken. The plan of granting a bounty on the tonnage of the vessels taken would strike at the root of the trade, and place the conduct of the cruisers above suspicion of letting them touch the coast in the expectation of catching them when full of slaves. "Prevention is better than cure," if the squadron is to be kept on the coast; and a bounty on the tonnage of the slave vessels taken in attempting to reach the coast would be the most effectual means of suppressing the slave-trade.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

BY THOMAS MILLER.

CHAPTER XX.

STREET AMUSEMENTS.

At different times several ephemeral little treatises have appeared, professing to teach the inhabitants of London how to live upon £50, £100, and divers other sums a year, not one, however, pointing out the way by which any of these incomes were to be obtained. Mrs. Glasse went very differently to work when she attempted to throw a new light upon the economy of cooking, by advising her readers to "first catch their hare," thereby conveying most sensible information in one brief unmistakable sentence, and leaving them to proceed with the receipt, or not, just as they were or might be provided with the animal treated of. Although this introduction is hardly to the point, it will serve to lead us to the ways and means hundreds in London have recourse to of obtaining a livelihood, by appealing to our eyes and ears, by the sights and sounds which they produce in our busy streets; causing those within doors to curse their deafening clamour, and those without, who are interrupted by the assembled crowd, and prevented from passing on their way, to utter anything but blessings upon their "devoted heads;" proving the moral of the old fable, that what is fun to one is death to another, by one class being amused at the expense of another's annoyance.

For our part we look on these street performers with a very lenient eye, knowing that they are struggling to live in the best way they can, and that their humble endeavours to please afford amusement to thousands. Look how the little urchins run at the first sound of Punch's well-known voice—what a pattering there is of shod and shoeless feet from every court and alley in the neighbourhood as soon as his "chuck, chuck, churee" is heard, startling the silence of the street. They whip up their marbles, and start off with their peg-tops half wound to get a front place; for the hardened old rogue was a favourite with their forefathers, and they are never weary of seeing him bang Judy with his truncheon. They have a keen relish for his rather coarse jokes—the only objectionable point in this old exhibition. How they dance round an Italian boy with his organ, forgetting all their poverty and hunger for the moment, while some little rascal, the raggedest in the group, keeps excellent time with his castanets, which are four bare bones placed between the fingers of each hand, and rattled over his head with laughter and delight, while he thinks himself the chief contributor to the amusement.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON.—STREET SIGHTS.

But Punch and Judy are the chief characters in our sketch. Punch was a different performance in our youthful days: then he went out, got drunk, came home and quarrelled with his wife; from words they got to blows, and there used to be a tremendous fight between them, and sorry we are to say the drunken old rascal swore dreadfully. At last he struck Judy a tremendous blow with his truncheon, and she fell down senseless, as if dead. Then the consciences of the hump-backed villain smote him, and he went and wailed over her, until at last the Doctor came, felt her pulse, and pronounced her dead. Punch was inconsolable for her loss, pronounced the Doctor a quack, and then they went at it. Oh! what a fight that was between Punch and the Doctor! but the man of physic fell beneath the truncheon of the hook-nosed old blackguard, and appeared as if dead. Punch was next tried, and knocked the Judge off the bench for finding him guilty of murder, and sentencing him to be hanged. Then the gallows was brought out, and you made sure that the old villain's career of crime was ended; but not a bit of it; like Mat Prior's thief, he—

> Now fitted the halter, now traversed the cart,
> And often took leave, but was loth to depart.

He seemed willing enough to be hanged, but did not know how to place his neck in the halter—sometimes he put his arms through the noose, then half his body, but never by any chance did he allow the cord to touch his neck. At length he succeeded in persuading Jack Ketch to show him the right way: the hangman did so, placed his own neck in the noose, received a crack on the head with the staff and a kick behind, and there he hung and swung to the delight of every beholder. Then came the Devil, horned, tailed, cancer-eyed, and black as ebony; but Punch was game to the back-bone, and fought with all his might, causing the Devil himself to retreat several times before he would give in. Nor did we ever think the Devil beat him fairly, for he came behind, like a sneaking thief as he is, pinioned both the arms of Punch, while the latter had his face turned towards us in triumph, and bore him away on his back—we could even hear the prominent paunched old hero swearing, as his horned antagonist vanished with him below the green baize.

The dog Toby is a modern innovation. He belonged not to the Punch and Judy of our boy-ish days.

But our description is not complete without the spectators. Look at that ragged woman holding up her child. The little rogue claps his tiny hands, and crows again at every blow Judy receives; and that poor mother is more delighted with the pleasurable expression of the little one's countenance than she is with the exhibition, for her heart and eyes are fixed on her child. But for Punch sounding in the street, the urchin would probably have been creeping about the house, or seated upon the hearth scorching the cinders he picked up from under the grate. Even that thin, pale-faced girl, who holds up a baby half as big as herself, and throws the long loose hair aside which fell over her clear blue eyes, as she came running and panting up with her heavy burden, stands looking on delighted. That respectable-looking old gentleman also halts, though half ashamed of being seen in such a motley assembly; then passes on with a smile on his face, for he remembers pausing many a time, when going or returning from school with his books swung idly over his shoulder, to look at Punch and Judy; and while he walks along, his mind turns back to the days of other years. Then the drum—what a spirit-stirring sound it makes! and the shrill pandian pipes, struck in a strain of faded recollection, yet clear and shrill: they sound! the man's head seems as if placed on a swivel, and he hammers and bits away as if for very life.

But swifter is the crowd running? To see an organ-boy and his monkey. What an excellent tumbler Jacko is—his long tail seems no incumbrance to him, but head over heels he goes. What a strange language his jabbering seems, a running of one word into another; and he looks at us as if pitying our ignorance for not understanding him. There is something about his countenance, conducive to merriment; something so old-manish in the expression of his face, that we cannot forbear laughing at him. See how he cracks that nut, how nimbly he plies his fingers, and how knowingly he looks up at us all the time, as if wondering whether he shall get another or not when that is eaten. What a living caricature he is of our race; now an indignant nutty old man, jabbering and spitting out his vexation; then a mischievous boy, playing all kinds of tricks, and, though grumbled at, lised by everybody. Poor fellow! we almost regret that he was ever caught and shoved into that scarlet jacket to add to our street amusements; and when we see him looking sorrowfully at the fare that we can read his thoughts, can imagine that his memory has wandered far away, to where he hung up in his "old ancestral trees" by his prehensile tail, before the days of his captivity, chattering to his brother monkeys, who could comprehend every word he uttered, or pelting his venerable old grandfather with nuts from the topmost bough of the highest tree that waved amid his native forest. Heigho! The longer we look the more do we feel inclined to look that is sure, under the circumstances, to be triumphant again. But France is rapidly retrograding. She has not only gone back to the point from which she started in her Revolution, but much beyond it, and cannot be said to enjoy one-half of the real liberty she enjoyed under the reign of Louis Philippe, to say nothing of the material prosperity which accompanied it. That Monarch would not have dared to propose such coercive measures affecting the press as have been proposed within the last week by the Government of Louis Napoleon. The Government is a tyranny—the various factions are tyrannies—and the Assembly is as great a tyrant as any of them. Real freedom and real liberty are nowhere to be found, and common sense seems to have fled the unconginenial soil of the Republic. Everything presages a coming storm.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

COURT OF ALDERMEN.

At a Court held on Tuesday, the following resolution, on the motion of Alderman Farebrother, was unanimously agreed to:

That this Court, with a warm recollection of the high talent and integrity with which the Right Hon. Lord Denman performed the functions of the Common Serjeant of this City, and having watched the honourable advance of his Lordship to the high position of Chief Justice of England and to the Peerage of this realm, cannot allow his Lordship's retirement from office to pass without a mark of respect, and a public testimony of their admiration of the high bearing of his character, and their earnest hope that he may enjoy that dignified ease which his great talent and manliness of his conduct have so justly earned

THE DOCTRINE OF TRANSUBSTANTIATION.—At the same Court Alderman Salomons gave notice of a motion that the Town Clerk do report whether, the oath against transubstantiation having been by act of Parliament repealed, there was any occasion for administering it amongst those taken in the Court of Aldermen. Alderman Farebrother had no objection to the consideration of the subject. He certainly did not relish the idea of giving up a long-established custom without being convinced that the abolition of it would not be mischievous. Sir Peter Laurie said he had never administered the oath in his ward, and he never would. Alderman Humphery suggested that each Alderman should come to the next Court prepared to give a definition of transubstantiation. (Laughter.)

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S CORPORATION.—A general meeting of this court took place on Tuesday, at the company's offices, Bartholomew-lane, City; Mr. George Lyall in the chair. The statement of accounts showed that, with a balance in hand of £1024 5s 5d, the receipts for the past year had amounted to £26,939 10s. 7d., and the expenditure to £24,195 14s. 9d., leaving a balance in their favour of £2813 15s. 10d. The bill now in the House of Commons for regulating the Merchant Seamen's Fund was laid before the meeting, and the committee proceeded to consider the various claims for relief, and ordered pensions pensions and temporary relief to the amount of £ to the applicants from the funds. It appeared that since the meeting in December last there had been 282 applications for relief from disabled seamen and the widows of seamen.

LLOYD'S.—RESIGNATION OF MR. R. ROBINSON, M.P.—The half-yearly general meeting of the subscribers was held on Wednesday, in the room of the establishment; Mr. W. F. Sadler in the chair. After the disposal of the ordinary business, a letter from Mr. R. Robinson, M.P., tendering his resignation of the chairmanship, on account of illness, together with the reply of the committee, and the resolut on passed thereon, was read. The resolution regretted the retirement of Mr. R. Robinson, and wished him many years of comfort and happiness. After the reading of those documents, Mr. Chapman, on behalf of Lloyd's Register, on the part of the general body of the subscribers, address d the meeting, and, after paying a very handsome tribute to the merits of Mr. Robinson, and eulogising his services in the capacity of chairman, proposed the following resolution:

That the cordial thanks of the members of Lloyd's in general meeting assembled be presented to George Richard Robinson, Esq., M.P., for the valuable services rendered by him during a period of sixteen years whilst fulfilling the important duties of chairman of Lloyd's, for the ability and courtesy which he uniformly displayed on presiding over their general meetings, for the unremitting zeal with which he watched over their interests in his place in Parliament, and for the anxious desire which he at all times evinced to promote their welfare and prosperity.

The resolution being ably seconded by George Fenning, Esq., was put to the vote and carried unanimously. Allusion being made in the report of the committee to Mercantile Marine Bill, now before Parliament, and affording a fitting opportunity to bring forward the subject of the increased frequency of collisions at sea, and the operation in that respect of what is known as the "running down clause" in the policy of insurance, the opinion of the subscribers was taken as to the propriety of memorialising the Board of Trade on the subject, and the same being approved, the meeting adjourned.

SUPPLEMENTARY CHARTER TO THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SURGEONS.—A meeting was held on Monday, at the Freemasons' Tavern, of those fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons who disapproved of the change in the charter of the institution, proposed by the council, by which those who had not been legally admitted members at the date of the new charter in 1843 should, after twenty years' standing, be admitted without examination to the fellowship; Mr. Robert Druitt presided. After a few words from the chairman deprecating the present agitation, a resolution was proposed by Mr. Roberts, and seconded by Mr. Holmes Coote, to the effect that those fellows who were present regarded the proposed change as an act of grievous injustice. This was carried by a large majority, two dissentients only. Mr. Erichsen, approving of the conduct of the majority of the council, began: supported by only one gentleman besides the mover and seconder. In accordance with the spirit of the resolution, a memorial, addressed to the president, vice-president, and council of the Royal College of Surgeons, was read and adopted, setting forth that the memorialists learned with regret and disappointment that the council had applied to Government for a supplementary charter for the purpose of rendering members eligible to the fellowship without a second examination; that the memorialists had been induced to incur the expense, loss of time, and possible disgrace of the ordeal in reliance upon the assurance of the college that the charter of 1843 should be a "final charter," and they submitted that the proposed alteration would be injurious to the profession and unjust to themselves; that it would degrade the fellowship and render it valueless in public estimation; and, lastly, that it would be a breach of faith towards those who had subjected themselves to the examination. On these grounds they prayed that the proposed alterations should not be carried out. After the meeting the memorial was signed by the majority of the gentlemen present.

EQUALISATION OF THE LAND TAX.—On Tuesday a meeting of the Commissioners of the Land Tax for the county of Middlesex was held at Clerkenwell Sessions House, to consider the powers vested in them with respect to the equalisation of the land tax. About 130 commissioners were present. Mr. Mann, chairman of the Holborn district, presided, and opened the business of the day by explaining at some length the object of their being assembled, after which Mr. Coppock moved the following resolution:—"That the unredeemed portion of the land tax payable by this part of the county of Middlesex, which by the Act of Parliament passed in the 38th year of King George III., c. 5, is charged with the sum of £17,661 11s. 7d., be reassessed by an equal pound rate upon all property liable to the tax within every hundred, lathe, wapentake, rape, ward, or other division, within that said part of the county." Mr. Coppock prefaced his resolution briefly by stating the nature of Parliament relative to the land tax, and concluded by saying, "They had been doing wrong many years; let them now do right; length of time could not justify, but rather aggravate, the injustice against the interest of the public." Mr. Stallwood seconded the resolution, which was met by an amendment for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the subject, and obtain legal opinions as to the power of the commissioners to act in the matter, after considerable discussion, in which Mr. W. Payne, Mr. Offer, Mr. Pownall, and others took a part, was lost, there being for it eighteen votes, and against it twenty-five. Another amendment was proposed by Mr. Fenwick, to the effect that "Whereas much dissatisfaction is expressed by the inhabitants of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and other parishes in the county of Middlesex, at the mode in which the land-tax assessm nt is raised, and much difference of opinion existing in the minds of the council as well as to their power to alter the present mode of assessment—resolved, that the commissioners do petition Parliament for an act in which their powers shall be more accurately defined, and that a committee be named to carry this into effect," which was carried; consequently, the original resolution was lost. The meeting then adjourned till the 4th of April next.

OPERATIVE TAILORS OF THE METROPOLIS.—A public meeting of the tailors of the metropolis took place last Thursday, at the London Tavern; Mr. Alderman Sidney, M.P., in the chair. It appeared that this meeting was convened for the purpose of bringing before the notice of the city, merchants, bankers, and the public generally, the evils engendered by the slop, sweating, and middlemen system in the tailoring trade, and also the destructive effect it has on the honest working man, and of the unfair practices pursued by Government contractors in their contracts for clothing, &c. Also to adopt certain resolutions to put on Parliament to grant a committee of inquiry into the spiritual, moral, and physical condition of the operative tailors of London, and to put down the sweating system of the boner-working system. Resolutions were unanimously carried to the effect that it was the duty of the clergy to assist the operative tailors to ameliorate their present condition, and that the meeting was fully aware that the only effectual means of dealing with the evils of which they complained, was by obtaining the sanction of Parliament to a law compulsory on all employers to have their work done on their own premises. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

GOOD FRIDAY.—Yesterday being Good Friday, it was observed as a close holyday at the Bank of England, the Stock Exchange, Lloyd's, South Sea House, East India House, and the different docks, the Custom House, Excise, and all the Government departments, with the exception of the Post-office, which was open as usual for the receiving of letters and newspapers, and also the receiving-houses throughout the metropolis; there was, however, no delivery in town after twelve o'clock. The chief money-order office, Aldersgate-street; the branch offices—Lombard-street, Broad, Strand, Charing-cross, and Old Cavendish-street—as well as the other p aces, were closed both for paying and granting orders; also, all the courts of law and police offices. Bills of exchange becoming due yesterday were paid on Thursday, as all places of public business were closed on Friday.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—The ballot at the Bank of England on Tuesday, on the question of the increased dividend of four per cent, as recommended by the directors, was declared by the report of the scrutineers, at the close of the voting, to be unanimously in the affirmative.

THE DRAINAGE OF LONDON.—The committee appointed to examine the plans for the drainage of London having decided "that the praise of having framed a design for the drainage of the metropolis capable of being carried out is due to Mr. M'Clean alone," the public should have some knowledge of the simple but comprehensive plan by which Mr. M'Lean proposes to improve the drainage, and secure from pollution the splendid river now desecrated by the filth of this great city. Mr. M'Lean relies upon the natural levels of the land upon which London and its suburbs are erected, to render the drainage complete, and, as far as possible, ensure the purification of the river Thames. He proposes to form two main sewers or drains, the one on the north side of the river, the south side of London. The one on the north side is to terminate close to the river, beyond Blackwall. The sewer on the south side is to terminate at Bugsby-marsh, below Greenwich. Each of these mains sewers, at convenient terminations near the river, will be made capable of containing sixty millions of gallons of water, or the greatest quantity that can pass into each of them during the flood tide. By eight other minor sewers, each constructed in conformity with the levels of its peculiar district, it is proposed to intercept all the sewage matter now discharged into the Thames, and convey it to the two main sewers above described. The real advantages derived from this system are—first, that all the proposed sewers may be provided with means, from the Thames, the Regent's Park, or the Grand Junction Canals, even supposing a better supply of water is not obtained for the metropolis; secondly, that each sewer has sufficient fall to ensure the complete drainage of the metropolis, without the aid of any machinery, and is arranged so as to combine with the present system of sewerage; thirdly, that it ensures the sewage passing into the river during the first five hours of ebb tide only, and that it will be carried with a vast body of water, and will pass away to such a distance as will render its return with the flood tide impossible. It is also so arranged as to give the greatest facilities for applying the sewage for agricultural purposes, either in a fluid state, by pumping it along the levels of the Regent's Canal, the Grand Junction Canal, and the River Lea, on the north side, and the Kentish Railways on the south side of the Thames; or, if the more preferable plan is adopted of converting it into solid manure, of transmitting it by river, and by the several railways and canals adjoining the two dépôts. It will require no additional expense to make the sewage available for any company desirous of contracting for it, than for securing its discharge into the river by the present sewers below Blackwall. And, lastly, the whole of the works may be completed in one year from the time of their commencement, at a cost not exceeding £900,000.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, March 23:—Males, 769; females, 653: total, 1462. Deaths during the same period:—Males, 520; females, 506: total, 1026. The above return includes the whole of the metropolitan districts.

Increase in the mortality, for since 1 Vegan to rise, the deaths during the two previous weeks were in the first 875, in the second 967. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1840-42, they fluctuated between 1017 and 1197, the last amount of mortality having occurred in the twelfth week of 1845; the average of the ten weeks, corrected for increase of population, is 1071; the present return is therefore only less than the average by 45. The only diseases in which an increase on the week is remarkable, are the classes which affect respectively the organs of respiration and the organs of circulation. The only instances in which complaints in the respiratory organs have been so fatal as in last week in the season of the year, occur in 1845 and 1847; from pneumonia there were 90 deaths (of which 71 were amongst children), the corrected average is 85; from bronchitis there were 99 (of which more than two-thirds were among adults), the corrected average is only 47. Both these diseases show a considerable increase, when the deaths are compared with the numbers returned in the two previous weeks. This excess both on the weeks immediately preceding and on the corresponding weeks of former years, is a fact very difficult of explanation. By the last three mean temperature, which last week was only 37 8 deg., shows a great fall on the week throughout the whole month of February and the half of March; and, taking the corresponding weeks of 1840-5, it appears that it was never so low as at present, except in 1840 and 1845, and that in six of those years it ranged from 40 d g. to 43·7 deg. The deaths from consumption last week were 135, a number less than the average. Among children, as well as persons of middle age, deaths from typhus are not so fatal as usual, but measles, from which the c were 23 deaths, and diarrhœa from which there were 20, are above the aver ge. A death from cholera is recorded in the following week. At the Lord Mayor's Day, on the 16th of March, the son of an ironmonger, at the age of 10 weeks, died of infantile cholera, after an ill ess of 20 hours. It deserves to be mentioned that three deaths were registered in one week from tetanus, three of which were from locked jaw, the double that number are returned in a year. The following are the particulars:—At 5, Charles-street, Hackney road, the son of a compositor, at the age of 3 years, died of "chorea, after an illness of three weeks." At 25, Trinity-street, Borough, Sarah Ann, the child of a painter (deceased) died at the age of a year and 10 months, of "chorea," and at 1, James-street, in Lambeth, the son of a glass-packer (deceased) died at the age of 15 years, of "chorea, after an illness of 23 days." The three deaths occurred, one on the 15th, and two on the 16th of March. Children are returned almost every week as accidentally suffocated in bed; amongst other deaths registered last week from this cause are two which occurred in one house. Two men and a woman died from the intemperate use of strong drink. Two men and six women died between 90 and 100 years of age. 111 persons died in workhouses, 54 in hospitals, of whom 18 were in naval and military establishments, and 6 in lunatic asylums.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily reading of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was above 30 in. on Sunday, Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday; the mean of the week was 29·97 in. The mean temperature (37·8 deg. is stated above) was lower than the average of the same period in seven years, particularly on Sunday, Monday, and Saturday, when it was from 7 to 11 degs. less than the averages of those days.

IRELAND.

THE LORD-LIEUTENANT'S REPLY TO THE DEPUTATION FROM THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—At the levee that was held on Friday week, by the deputation of the council of the Chamber of Commerce of Dublin, with his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, at the Castle, the deputation represented, in strong but most respectful terms, the great injury which the abolition of the Vicregal Court must inflict on the trade and commerce of the city of Dublin, already sorely depressed by the circumstances of the times, the heavy taxation under which the people laboured, and the little prospect there was of any amendment in their condition, even without this infliction. But should it be the determination of the Government to persevere in so injurious a course, the deputation expressed a hope that some equivalent would be supplied to compensate for the very damaging effect of such a proceeding. To these representations it is stated that his Excel ency replied that, even supposing the abolition of the Vicregal Court to have some temporary injurious effect on the trade and commerce of the city of Dublin—the extent and duration of which, however, he trusted, was greatly exaggerated—it did not appear to him that any such consideration of a special nature should have any weight in opposing an arrangement of a permanent character that had been under consideration for many years. Nor did he think it likely, judging from established precedent, that it would be admitted or recognised by Parliament as a well-grounded claim for compensation. But he assured the deputation that he would have much pleasure in considering and discussing with them any practical measures which the Council of the Chamber of Commerce might suggest, and such as Parliament could entertain, having for their object the permanent benefit of the city of Dublin. The deputation having stated that fears were entertained by the citizens that the abolition of the Vicregal Court would be followed by that of the courts of law and equity, his Excellency observed that the deputation has no such intention had ever been contemplated by the Government as the abolition of the courts of law in Dublin; in fact, that he considered the courts of law essentially necessary to be maintained.

THE CATHOLIC PRIMATE.—The Freeman's Journal has published an extensa a long pastoral to the clergy and people of his archdiocese, occupying five columns of the paper, from Dr. Cullen, the newly consecrated Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh. It is a meek and Christian production, directed mainly to inculcate the principles of charity and good-will between men, and is a happy foreshadowing of the benefits which the archdiocese is likely to derive from the pastoral care of the author.

PENNY-RENT MEETINGS.—These meetings are spreading far and wide over the country. They are no longer confined to the north, but have branched into the other provinces.

SALE OF ESTATES.—Every attempt at disposing of landed property in this country in the ordinary way proves unavailing, and it appears that the facilities and advantages of the Encumbered Commission Court, in obtaining the best title without delay, expense, or the risk of litigation, have induced purchasers to look to that court alone for investment.

ABOLITION OF THE LORD-LIEUTENANCY.—The agitation against the removal of the Lord Lieutenant increases. The Lord Mayor has returned from London, and will, it is said, preside at another aggregate meeting of the citizens on the subject. Ward meetings are also to be organised, and fresh energy given to the agitation.

EMIGRATION.—From the various outports there is a very considerable emigration, chiefly of a class superior in circumstances to those who had crossed the Atlantic in such myriads last year. The quays at Cork, Limerick, Galway, Sligo, and Drogheda are daily crowded with emigrants swarming from the interior, and taking shipping either direct for America, or indirectly by the steamers for Liverpool, the great emigration dépôt of the empire. The city of Dublin presents similar scenes, and comfortable farmers and shopkeepers, and a poorer class of the peasantry than have hitherto been able to undertake the voyage, are indiscriminately hastening away to a land that offers brighter prospects. The Galway Vindicator, referring to the tide of emigration from that port, says:—"Scarcely a vessel offers for America that is not immediately filled with passengers of a superior class and description. Those who sailed by the Northumberland, a few days since, were of a very high order, and had every appearance of comfort, being exceedingly well supplied for their voyage: they were also of the ordinary description of the farming class, and many of them had considerable sums of money with them, for the purchase of land on their arrival in the New World."

POSTSCRIPT.

TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, LIMEHOUSE.

BY FIRE.

This fine structure, one of Sir C. Wren's productions, which formed so prominent an object for miles down the river, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday (Friday) morning. The sacred edifice stood at the extremity of Commercial-road East, on the south side, and adjacent to the Blackwall Railway. The fire was discovered about nine o'clock by some persons who were passing outside the burial-ground in the Commercial-road, and who observed smoke issuing from the roof near the tower. The fire-engines were speedily on the spot, but not in time to prevent the entire destruction of the building. Nothing is yet known as to the origin of the outbreak.

LORD GOUGH.—This distinguished veteran purposes to arrive in Bath on Monday next. We understand that a numerous body of his friends in that city will meet him at the station (2.10), whence he will proceed to the Guildhall to receive the address of the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Bath. On the following Wednesday his Lordship is to be entertained at a grand banquet (the most noble the Marquis of Thomond in the chair), to be given at the Guildhall, the use of which for the occasion has been kindly and promptly granted by the worthy mayor.

HOLYDAYS AT THE LAW-OFFICES.—According to official notice, the Judges' Chambers will be closed on Monday and Tuesday next. The holydays in the offices of the Court of Chancery will terminate on Saturday week, and in the offices of the Common Law Courts after Tuesday.

THE RAILWAYS AND THE EASTER HOLYDAYS.—The various railway companies have put forth their holyday bills of fare this year with an evident desire to lessen the attractions which, in bygone days, Hampstead and Greenwich, and other suburban places, possessed for the million. The liberal terms on which passengers have heretofore been conveyed in holyday seasons to Boulogne, Brighton, Dover, Canterbury, Folkestone, and other fashionable resorts, have been this year still further reduced; and during the Easter recess parties may visit any of these places for a mere fraction of the ordinary fares, with the option of returning in two, three, or four days. The South-Eastern, North Kent, and Brighton railways, being essentially pleasure lines, offer peculiar advantages to holyday-makers, and will no doubt meet with a proportionate degree of public patronage.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The approach of the holydays has rendered the political world of Paris quite as dull as that of London. The President of the Republic, however, quits it on the 31st, paying court to the army of Lyons. On Saturday afternoon, he distributed several decorations to the officers, sub-officers, and privates, during a visit to the various barracks of Paris. He was received with much enthusiasm, and saluted each chief of "Vive Napoleon!"

Lord Brougham has arrived in Paris.

THE SCOTTISH HOSPITAL.—On Wednesday, a general court of the governors of this institution, established for the relief of poor and infirm natives of Scotland resident in London, was held in the hall of the hospital, Crane-court, Fleet-street; Sir J. Webster, F.R.S., in the chair. The report for the last quarter stated, that in January last 386 persons were relieved, the amount distributed among them being £240 0s 6d. In February 398 persons were relieved, and £224 9s 6d. distributed amongst the recipients. In March 395 persons were relieved and £202 19s. 6d. expended upon them. The receipts for the last quarter were £ 164 2s. 6d., and the expenditure £ 602 11s. 8d., leaving a balance of £437 11s. 11d.

THE ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.—This excellent institution held its anniversary on Tuesday evening, at the London tavern. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge presided. About 150 gentlemen were present. In proposing the toast of "The Queen," the illustrious chairman mentioned that her Majesty had been graciously pleased to present a donation of 250 guineas to the institution, and which entitled her to a bed for one inmate during life. Sir C. Anderson passed a high eulogium on the merits of the institution, and the services that the chairman had rendered it by his patronage and munificent benefactions. It was afterwards mentioned that the illustrious chairman had left a party, which was assembled to celebrate the birthday of his son, Prince George of Cambridge, in order to be present at the anniversary of the institution. The claims of the society having been warmly advocated by Sir George Carroll, Mr. Bodkin, Q.C., and a number of other gentlemen, it was announced that the subscriptions of the festival amounted to the munificent sum of £2900. His Royal Highness then vacated the chair, and the company separated, highly gratified with the results of the festival.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

THE twenty-seventh Exhibition of the Society of British Artists, and the fourth since the Society received its charter of incorporation, is by no means an improvement on its predecessors; it is an Exhibition, however, that will well repay a visit. The mere London sight-seer will find much to please and amuse him; the connoisseur will detect a few pictures to admire, and many to censure; the students art; and the artist, on the other hand, not a little to approve of, and a great deal more to avoid. It should, therefore, be seen. The rooms form a very agreeable lounge; and the money tax is paid for admission is well bestowed in furtherance of a School of Art that the Society maintains with great energy on its own part, and with a real and permanent advantage to the public.

The collection consists of 735 works of art, contributed by 29 members of the Society, and 314 artists who are friendly to the institution or struggling into reputation, and anxious to have their works well seen. The 29 members contribute in all 208 works, and the 314 other artists the remaining 529. There is a preponderance of landscapes, while portraits are few in number, and historical composition almost none.

Mr. Hudstone, the President, has contributed two pictures—one, of an ambitious nature, is "Constance, from "King John":—

Here I and sorrow sit
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

But, unfortunately, the artist has chosen a half-length, or something less, so that the ground-like humidity of Constance (so beautiful in the part) is entirely lost. His portrait (kit-cat size) of the Hon. Lewis Percival Peel is a much better work of art, and still better is No. 38, "Portrait of the son of Edward Hopwood, Esq., of Hopwood, with a great hound by his side," from the brush of Mr. Ansdell. There is much delicate painting in Mrs. Peel's portrait, but Mr. Hopwood's son and his hound, senta from Sir Thomas Lawrence.

Mr. Pyne, the Vice-president, is not up to the mark of his former efforts. His best contribution to the gallery is his "View in the Thames at the Custom House, with the Lord Mayor's Show moved." The distance is finely and pu ticularly managed; but surely the water is not true to the Thames as we now see it, but to what it will be like when it is no longer used as the sewer of the greatest city in the world. No. 1, "Stonehenge, Sunset," is a large and fine picture, and is nicely handled.

Mr. C. Baxter (an artist fast rising into a well-merited reputation) contributes No. 12, "Portrait of George Olini, Esq.," and No. 236, "Portrait of Isabella Stewart." The latter is a charming little figure in the hand of Mr. Cuit which Time removes it from complete success. The Isabella Stewart is a head in oval, most exquisitely felt and rendered.

The largest and best contribution of Mr. J. W. Allen, the Secretary, who has eight works in all, is his "View of the Thames and Windsor Castle and Runnymede, as seen from Cooper's Hill." He has mapped out his scene with great exactness, and caught the character of the landscape with a painter's and a poet's eye. Mr. Allen is set to be told that Cooper's hill is the most celebrated hill in English poetry, still more celebrated than Grongar hill or Essesum-hill.

Mr. H. M. Anthony is the Mr. J. Mogford, jun., of Suffolk-street, in the extravagance and ill-placed positions of his colours. Of his seventeen contributions to the gallery, not one is without its characteristic absurdities, or without its undoubted evidences of genius. His sunshine picture is No. 144, the "Landing of the Wye, and Ice Harbour with the Severn, as seen from Wardcliffe"—one of the loveliest spots in Great Britain, but rendered in a manner preposterously untrue. His chiaroscuro scenes, and separate studies of human beauty and costume, are equally absurd. There is great merit, however, in one or two of his less exaggerated scenes.

Mr. Boddington, who exhibits eleven pictures in all, exhibits, at the same time, but slender progress in his art. He has a very neat manner of English scenery in the Lea, but his treatment of such subjects, and wants vigour rather than fidelity or feeling.

What are we to say of Mr. J. F. Herring and his ten contributions of horses, and dogs, and ducks, and all that Edwin Landseer and Woodcatcher (a Welsh lad) appreciate and renders so truly? He is still the same—admirably true to nature, and most ingenious in point of composition. There is little, however, that we have not seen before in his pictures, although the character of combination is new. His "Scene at a Farm-yard"—a country girl, in a blue dress, feeding ducklings at a cottage door—is somewhat new to Mr. Herring, and forms a pleasing picture, such as all can understand, and all will like.

The best art and best picture in the collection are by Mr. J. J. Hill, and are called (No. 3) "Rustic Courtship," (No. 165) "The Young Shepherd," (No. 269) "A Shepherd Boy," and (No. 485) "The Cottage Door." In the whole of these he has caught a certain pastoral prettiness, or poetic delicacy, which is very beautiful, and not very common in art. The expression of the shepherd's eyes, gazing his heart away, in the picture of "Rustic Courtship," is particularly happy. His "Portrait" is not so good; and his "David"—a full-length of David and the black Goliah—hardly up to what we should have expected from him. Shepherd boys on the banks of the Thames or the Mulla are easier to transfer to canvas than poet kings in Scripture are from the bright fancy or vision of the moment.

We have seldom seen Mr. Salter so good as he is in No. 87, "A Bacchanalian Dance"—his single contribution on this occasion. He has been of late years so unwhat negligent in his drawing, and seven y in giving flesh and beauty to his hands and feet. Here, however, he redeems his former neglect, and gives us a picture such as Poussin would have liked to have looked upon. There is much a picture such as Poussin would have liked to have looked upon. There is much skill evinced in the general composition of the group of dancers. The picture, however, in point of delicacy of treatment, is not up to Mr Frost's admirable manner of treating subjects. It is up, we think, notwithstanding, to the level of EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.—NO. 2. "MEDORA."—PAINTED BY W. FISHER.

FINE ARTS.—EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

WITH these, Engravings we close our illustrative notice of this attractive collection.

The upper Engraving is from Mr. Fisher's "Medora," 2 feet 2 inches in height, by 1 foot 10 inches in width—in the North Room. In our first notice of the Exhibition we characterised this picture as of careful execution—the face beautiful, and expression good.

The second picture, Mr. Johnston's "Novice," 3 feet 6 inches by 2 feet 11 inches—also in the North Room—is very rich in colour; and the lady would appear to be in doubt whether to throw off her sumptuous attire, and adopt the asceticism of the skull, the rosary, and the conventual cell.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.—NO. 138. "THE NOVICE."—PAINTED BY ALEXANDER JOHNSTON.

the late Mr. Howard, who acquired a well-earned reputation for pictures akin to Mr. Salter's Bacchanalians.

The two Wilsons, who have long been contributors to the Suffolk-street Exhibition, continue to send, as before, and to maintain their respective reputations. They are always hovering on the debateable land between what is good and what is excellent in landscape art. In whatever they do there is so much to commend and so much to pass by, that this long hovering is somewhat provoking to their admirers. It is the sin of the present age, both in painting and in writing, for each individual to produce too much. The public, it is true, forces both painter and author somewhat unwillingly into this position, but there can be very little doubt that Mr. Mulready's one good work (his solitary contribution to the Somerset House Exhibition) was a surer and more lasting attraction than Mr. Anthony's seventeen chemists'-shop-windows-at-night pictures, which flare upon the eye at every turn in the present Exhibition, and demand a momentary attention, whether the visitor will or no.

But it is time to pass from this subject, and from the works of the leading members of the Society, to the better-class productions contributed by exhibitors who are not members, or by members of the Society whose names are not yet known as painters of reputation or of extraordinary promise. We shall group such works as we are now to notice in the order of the catalogue, and shall not exclude a work or two by some of the artists of whom we have already spoken.

58. "Reward of Cultivation." Mrs. Paulson.—This is a new name to us. The picture evinces a careful and conscientious study of nature, and habit will lead to still better things.

85. "On the Greta Coast of Cornwall." S. R. Percy.—A small, careful transcript of a cool, sweet scene, nicely felt and rendered.

100. "Waterfall near Hæg, between Christiania and Bergen, Norway." W. West.—A large picture, bold and rough in its treatment; full of vigour and fidelity; but cold—colder even than Norway.

101. "Portrait of his Grace the Duke of Manchester." T. H. Illidge.—A full-length, the size of life, easy in its attitude, and not devoid of character.

109. "A Study from Nature, Hampstead Heath." A. Clint.—Truthful, and nice and warm in its touches.

117. "Hazy Morning on the Thames near Medenham." H. J. Boddington.—We have already spoken of Mr. Boddington. This is the best of his contributions to the present collection. It is a large and well-executed picture, true to the Thames in one of its prettiest parts.

120. "Rocen." W. A. Wilson.—Painted in imitation of David Roberts.

123. "Near Chiswick." J. Tennant.—This view of the Thames at Chiswick is not so good as Mr. Boddington's "Thames at Medenham," just noticed.

137. "The Lucky Gamekeeper." A. Fraser.—A luncheon scene, with a gamekeeper receiving a glass of nappy ale from a pretty girl. He squeezes her hand at the same time. There is some nice painting in parts. The dog seems unfinished.

158. "Berghen-op-Zoom." A. Montagne.—A picture in Mr. Fyne's manner clever, and nearly up to Mr. Fyne's mark.

164. "Tea-Table Chat." T. Clater.—The best picture that we have seen by Mr. Clater for some time. It is a tea and scandal scene, with five ladies of Queen Anne's time seated at table, discussing characters and bohea.

173. "Scene between Barnes and Putney." J. Tennant.—Better than the Chiswick scene by the same artist, and very faithful, while free and spirited in execution.

175. "St. John the Baptist." W. C. T. Dobson.—A small full-length figure of St. John when young. Not devoid of spiritual feeling, but somewhat poor in point of colour, and even in drawing.

216. "The Temptation." G. Wells.—A full-length of Eve; not ungraceful but not the Eve of Milton or of mankind.

231. "Inhabitants of the Palace of the Cæsars—Rome in the Nineteenth Century." F. Y. Hurlstone.—A group of Murillo-like peasants, in Mr. Harlstone's best and most careful manner. We have spoken in the earlier part of our notice of the general merits of Mr. Hurlstone's contributions to the present Exhibition.

251. "The Cottage Door—Winter." J. Wilson, jun.—A small circular picture True, and delicate in its handling.

307. "Evening on the Thames, near Medenham." J. Wingfield.—Mr. Wingfield is not so happy in his out-door scenes as in his interiors of Hampton Court and other old English houses, which he always peoples in a clever and accurate manner.

351. "Flowers." H. Hughes.—Well grouped, and richly coloured.

395. "The Princess Elizabeth (afterwards Queen) kneeling, and declaring her fidelity to her sister, Queen Mary." J. Noble.—There is much innocent beauty in the figure and face of Elizabeth, but Mary is a sad virago. Mr. Noble should have viewed Queen Mary with the aid of the late Mr. Patrick Tytler's excellent work on her reign.

396. "On the Machno, North Wales." W. West.—By the painter of the large Norwegian scene just noticed. It is clever, and in Mr. Creswick's manner.

491. "Portrait of General Klapka." G. Foggo.—Will be looked upon with interest. It is valuable as a likeness, but has little merit as a work of art.

505. "The River Lee, near Old Bow Bridge." W. A. Brunning.—A rural and pretty scene, yet close to London. The whole arrangement of the picture is happy and, in point of execution, it is careful.

Of the remaining works, we have only to add that Mr. Everitt contributes some valuable representations of Aston Hall, in Warwickshire, much in Mr Nash's style; and Mr. S. Read a clever interior of a Welsh cottage (No. 583).

EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

(Continued from page 197.)

NO. 170.—KEY.—16TH CENTURY.

US general description of this Exhibition in the last week's Journal will have prepared our readers to expect some additional notice of it; and we are now enabled to present illustrations of some of the more prominent works of art which were then necessarily omitted, on account of the skill and labour required to do justice to the elaborate ornamentation of the specimens selected for engraving.

As might have been expected, the objects from Windsor Castle (placed at the disposal of the committee by her Majesty's gracious permission) have attracted the greatest share of attention; and of these, the Nautilus Cup, of the seventeenth century, of which we subjoin a representation, is not the least admired.

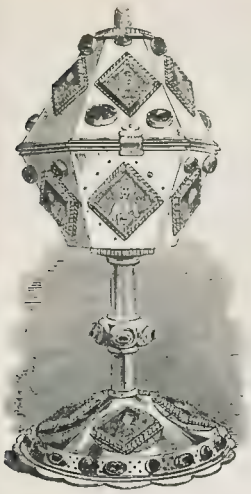
It seems to have been a favourite conceit of the operative artists of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to mount the shell of the nautilus with figures of nafads, nereids, tritons, and other marine gods and goddesses; for, in addition to this beautiful example, which is supported by a figure of Neptune, and surmounted by another of Jupiter, there is one in this Exhibition belonging to Messrs. Garrard, which is not unworthy of notice, and several others are known to be in the possession of private individuals in different parts of the country.

Whilst speaking, also, of the specimens from the Royal cabinet, we must not omit mention of the fine shield of embossed steel, damascened with gold and silver, said to have been presented by Francis I. to Henry VIII. at their far-famed interview on the Field of the Cloth of Gold; it is generally supposed to have been designed and wrought by Cellini, but it is not surprising that this cannot be ascertained with any degree of certainty, since for many years this treasure was thrown aside unnoticed and forgotten, until his late Majesty George IV. caused it to be mounted in its present frame and placed in Buckingham Palace, whence it has since been removed to Windsor Castle, and we can safely venture to affirm that it will never again be consigned to obscurity. Certainly, it was a gift not unworthy of a King to a King, nor is it at all improbable that Francis might have desired to present some chef-d'œuvre of one of his most highly patronised artists on that gorgeous occasion. The subjects represented on this shield are scenes from the history of Julius Cæsar, the figures being thrown out in high relief, and the whole forming, perhaps, the finest specimen of damascening work which has ever been wrought. This art, which consists in combining or encrusting metals one with another, is in all probability exclusively of Eastern origin, and takes its name from the city of Damascus, which for a long time was so famous for its manufacture of steel, particularly of sword blades. It does not appear, however, that the ancients were acquainted with the art, although they practised a method of inlaying metals, which must have produced a very similar effect.

In our preceding Journal we adverted to the fact, that at the introduction of Christianity a number of religious emblems were produced necessarily of a conventional form, and the Chalice which we have here engraved (the property of Mr. A. J. B. Hope, M.P.) is a striking exemplification of this remark, for we find that it was strictly ordered that the edges of this sacramental cup should not be "turned down:" the reason for this injunction is sufficiently obvious; and indeed, possibly from the same motive, many of the communion cups in use at the present day do not differ very materially in design from this Italian chalice of the fifteenth century. In early and primitive times this vessel was frequently made of wood or glass, or even of horn; but it was subsequently ordained to be constructed of gold or silver. It was not an uncommon thing for the chalice and paten to be buried with ecclesiastics, and several have thus been found. From these, and from the stone slabs incised with these emblems (as indicating the place of sepulture of a priest), it is manifest that this vessel has retained a strong similarity in form from the earliest ages. This example is executed in copper gilt, and is ornamented with enamels of the Apostles round the knob or handle. Notwithstanding that there are many of these chalices of very high antiquity yet extant in our colleges and churches, it is a curious fact that, in the year 1193, all other means of raising the sum required for the ransom of Richard Cœur de Lion having failed, the whole of the church plate in the kingdom was cheerfully contributed for this purpose, the King promising to make restitution when he recovered his liberty—a promise which he subsequently faithfully performed.

The same degree of conventional form is also perceptible with regard to the Pyx or ciborium, the vessel in which the consecrated wafer was kept; and the specimen of which we have given a representation below has many points of similarity to that which we noticed in our last, belonging to the Archæological Institute. It has small enamels, on glass and pieces of niello, of Christ and the

THE EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.



CIBORIUM.

Apostles surrounding it, the work of the fourteenth century but it is questionable whether the ornament at present surmounting it has not replaced one of an earlier date and more appropriate in character. It is the property of the Hon. Robert Curzon, jun.

Hitherto we have not been able to mention the extremely curious steel and wrought iron work, of which there is a goodly number of examples executed in almost every conceivable Gothic device, that style technically denominated "flamboyant" much predominating however, and sufficiently attesting the fact that much of this work was executed in the towns of Augsburg or Nuremberg. The iron knocker of the 16th century, of which we subjoin an Engraving, is curious as affording an illustration of the transition from the pure to the debased Gothic style; and the small key forming our initial letter is probably of nearly the same date. They are both the property of Mr. Fuglo. Mr. Pratt has also contributed a good example of one of these ancient knockers, of which an Engraving is here given.

KNOCKER.

NO. 1.—NAUTILUS, MOUNTED IN SILVER-GILT, THE PROPERTY OF HER MAJESTY.

The groups of Venetian glass below has been formed from specimens contributed by the Duke of Buccleugh, Mr. Farrer, and Mr. Slade. We observed in our former notice of this Exhibition how famous Venice had become in the middle of the fifteenth century for its manufacture of ornamental glass, and more appropriate examples of the different processes in vogue could scarcely have been selected by our Artists, either for beauty of form or design.

We had intentionally omitted noticing several of the more interesting of the objects from the Universities and corporate bodies, hoping to have been enabled to engrave them; but when it is remembered that there are now nearly one thousand works of ancient art on view in these rooms (many objects having arrived since the opening of the Exhibition) it will scarcely be wondered at that we cannot even give a bare enumeration of them. The master bowl; two cups, mounted in silver-gilt, of the fifteenth century, from Oriel College, Oxford; the cup given by Bishop Langton, in 1497, to Pembroke College, Cambridge, and known by the name of the "Anathema Cup," from the inscription engraved on it; also the silver-gilt cup of the fourteenth century from the same College, and the "Poison Cup," presented to Clare Hall by a physician in the reign of James I.: and, above all, the two crystal vases, set with precious stones, the property of her Majesty, will not fail to attract the visitor's attention. Of all these relics, however, none are of more intrinsic worth than the Ewer of Sardonyx, mounted in gold, and enamelled, which formed one of the crown jewels before the French revolution in 1791, and is now the property of Viscountess Beresford.

NO. 41.—ITALIAN CHALICE.—15TH CENTURY

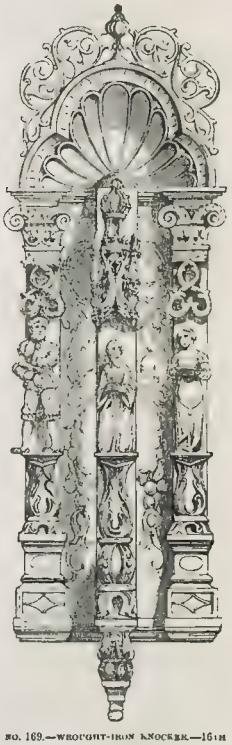
There are many interesting specimens of armour, embroidery, embossed leather work, jewellery, and enamelling, which we hope to have an opportunity of commenting upon at some future time.



NO. 169.—WROUGHT-IRON KNOCKER.—16TH CENTURY.

GROUPS OF VENETIAN GLASS.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

The Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the youthful members of the Royal family, left Buckingham Palace at ten minutes before four o'clock, on Monday afternoon, for Wind-or Castle, at which Royal residence the Court will pass the Easter recess. The lit-tle trimus party were conducted to their carriages by the Marquis of Westminster (Lord Steward), the Marquis of Breadalbane (Lord Chamberlain). Lord Edward Estalan Howard (Vice-Chamberlain), and the Lords and Grooms in Waiting. The Court travelled from London by a special train on the Great Western Railway, and at the Windsor terminus at a quarter before five o'clock. The Royal suite consisted of the Countess of Charlemont, Hon. Misses Paget and Macdonald, the Earl of Morley, Mr. R. Ormsby Gore, Lord Alfred Paget, Colonel Bouverie, General Bowes, and Mr. Birch. At the station the Royal party was received by a guard of honour of the second battal on of Scotch Fusilier Guards, under the command of Col. M cklethwait, the band playing the National Anthem. The yard and its approaches were crowded with spectators, who welcomed the arrival of the Queen with great cordiality. The bells of the parish church also rang a merry peal in honour of the return of the Court to the Royal borough. The illustrious party were conveyed to the Castle in seven pony phaëtons, preceded by outriders in scarlet liveries.

On Tuesday morning the Queen and the Prince walked together in the slopes and Windsor Park. His Royal Highness afterwards rode out on horseback, attended by Colonel Bouverie. In the evening the Duchess of Kent dined at the royal table.

On Wednesday precisely the same routine prevailed.

On Thursday, the Queen and the Prince took their usual early walk in the grounds adjacent to the Castle. There was no addition to the Royal dinner party this evening.

The Royal Children have taken their accustomed walking and riding exercise during the week.

At the Privy Council held at Buckingham Palace on Friday last Viscount Errington had an audience of the Queen, and, on behalf of his father, Earl Fortescue, resigned his seat as Lord Steward of her Majesty's household. The Marquis of Westminster had also an audience of her Majesty to kiss hands, on being appointed Lord Steward of the Queen's household. The noble Marquis received from the Queen his wand of office, and was sworn of her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester received their Royal Highness-es the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary and a select party at dinner on Tuesday eve ing, at her residen e, Gloucester Hou-e, in celebration of the birthday of her ne,hew, his R y l Highness Prince George.

The Duke of Wellington attended the early service on Sunday last, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Archbishop of Canterbury preached the sermon at the daily service. The Bishop of Oxford will preach to-morrow (Easter day) in the Chapel Royal

The Duchess of Marlborough, who was confined of a still-born daughter a few days since, is satisfactorily progressing towards convalescence.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury have arrived at Maurice's Hotel, Paris.

His Excellency the Turkish Ambassador entertained Lord and Lady Palmerston and a select party at dinner on Saturday last, at the residence of the Embassy, in Bryanstone-square. His Excellency afterwards had an assembly.

His Excellency the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer, who were detained in England last week by the indisposition of their youngest son, have since left town for Paris.

The Countess Grey had an assembly on Saturday evening. The Duke of Wellington and Lord and Lady John Russell were among the guests of her Ladyship. The noble Earl and Countess left town on Monday, for Howick Hall, Northumberland.

The Earl Spencer has left Spencer House, for Althorp Park, where his Lordship will entertain a large party during Christmy Hunt Races.

The Lord Chancellor is better, but his Lordship will not be able to resume his judicial functions for some days.

Viscount and Viscountess Pollington arrived at the York Hotel, Albemarle-street, last week, from Frankfort-on-the-Maine, after a protracted sojourn on the Continent.

Sir George Grey left town on Tuesday, for his seat, Fallodon, Northumberland

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lady Mary Wood left town on Tuesday, for their residence, Hickleton Hall, near Doncaster.

FESTIVITIES AT BELVOIR CASTLE.

Belvoir Castle, the fine old baronial seat of the Duke of Rutland, has been the scene of very brilliant festivities during the past ten days. A very large family party had been partaking the noble Duke's hospitality for some days previously, when, on Friday, the 15th instant, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge arrived on a visit to the Duke of Rutland. Their Royal Highnesses were received on their arrival by the noble Duke in the guard chamber, to the former ornaments of which is now added a magnificent brass Sikh gun, presented to the Duke of Rutland by Viscount Hardinge.

A magnificent banquet was served at eight o'clock, covers being laid for twenty-six guests. The din ng-room presented a very grand appearance, the famous silver cistern, on its superb pedestal by Wyatt, forming a conspicuous and admired ornament. The Duke's state pages were in attendance, and all the servants wore their full-dress liveries. During dinner, the Duke's private band played a selection of favourite airs

On Sunday, the whole of the company attended Divine service in the chapel within the Castle, where an excellent sermon was preached by his Grace's private chaplain, the Rev. Mr. Sharpe.

On Monday, the members of the Belvoir Hunt met in the vicinity of the Castle, in honour of the Royal visitors. The hounds were not long in unkennelling Reynard, and, as the "varmint" scampered over the Vale of Belvoir, a capital view of the chase was obtained from the Castle ramparts. The Duchess of Cambridge and the other ladies of the party were in open carr ages, and drove about the vale for some time. The Duke of Cambridge and the Duke of Devonshire enjoyed the sport from the saddle.

On Tuesday, through the kind hospitality of Gregory Gregory, Esq., the whole of the p rty, including the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duke of Devonshire, &c., were invited to an inspection of Harlestone Hall, his new seat, near Grantham, whi h, for design, architecture, taste, and splendour, is scarcely surpassed in the kingdom.

The Royal party, and also the Duke of Devonshire, afterwards left for Egerton Lodge, Melton Mowbray, on a visit to the Earl of Wilton.

The following were among the company present to meet the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge at the Castle :—The Duke of Devonshire, the Marquis of Granby, Baron Koller, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, Viscount and Viscountess Newport, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter and L dy Mary Cecil, the Marquis of Tweeddale, Lord Charles Manners, Lord Forester, Sir Frederick Trench, Sir H Perrer, Mr. and Lady Elizabeth Drummond, Mr. Sloane Stanley and Miss Stanley, Rev. P. Mules, &c.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK.—A special meeting of this company was held on Tuesday at the De Grey Rooms, in York, for the consideration and approval of the several bills now before Parliament relating to the company's affairs, and also to consider and discuss the position of the Great North of England purchase shareholders. The half-yearly meeting also stood adjourned to that day for the election of directors and auditors. The chairman of the company (G. Leonard, Esq.), who presided, took a review of the general condition of the company, and the relative position of its several classes of shareholders. He concluded by moving a resolution to the effect that the Great North of England Act, 1849, and the guarantee of £17 upon unpaid, four per cent on such proportions as should be called until 1856, the £8 now paid up to receive dividend pro rata with the general stock of the company. After a long discussion, an amendment to pay four per cent on the whole of the called-up Great North of England shares till 1856 was negatived, and the directors' recommendation adopted. The bill to amend the Great North of England Railway Purchase Bill, and to complete the purchase, was submitted to the meeting. On a division, there were nineteen hands against it, and the motion was carried by a majority of 821. A poll was demanded, the numbers being —for the bill, 2001, and against it 7936. Mr. Pullen was chosen a director, in the room of Mr. Love. The other directors were re-elected; and Mr. O'Brien, the new secretary, was introduced to the shareholders.

NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY.—RESIGNATION OF THE ENGINEMEN AND STOKERS.—On Monday last, the engi.e-men and stokers of this company gave fourteen days' notice of resignation, in consequence of certain reductions which the directors have determined to make in the amount of their remuneration. The pay of the engine-men, who are divided into four classes, is about an average of 6s. per diem; and what is intended to reduce their pay is, that those days they are not traversing the line, but are only in the shed cleaning or repairing their engines, to 4s. a day; a proportional reduction also to be made in the case of the firemen.

THE MOTHER IN SEARCH OF HER CHILD.—I need not tell you how the mother spent the weary hours. And yet I will tell you something. She used to wander out, at first at will without a purpose, till she rallied her thoughts, and brought all her energies to bear on the one point; then she went with earnest patience along the least known ways to some new part of the town, looking wistfully with dumb entreaty into people's faces; sometimes catching a glimpse of a figure which had a kind of momentary likeness to her child's, and following that figure with never wearying perseverance, till some light from shop or lamp showed the co d strange face which was not her daughter's, or twice a kind-hearted passer-by, struck by her look of yearning woe, turned back and offered help, or ask her what she wanted. When so spoken to, she answered only, "You dont know a poor girl they call Lizzy Leigh, do you?" And when they denied all knowledge, she shook her head, and went on again. I think they believed her to be crazy. But she never spoke first to any one. She sometimes took a few minutes' rest on the door-steps, and sometimes (very seldom) covered her face and cried; but she could not afford to lose time and chances in this way: while her eyes were blinded with tear, the lost one might pass by unseen.—Household Words. Edited by Mr. Charles Dickens.

COMPOSITE COLUMNS.—No. III.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

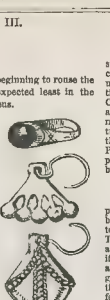
EGYPTIAN IMPORTATIONS.

THE GREAT INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION of 1851 is already beginning to rouse the energies of foreign countries; and those from whom we expected least in the way of manufactures, have already sent over some specimens.

CAIRO DOLL.

The first batch has been from Egypt. It consists of toys, ornamen-s, drawings, and antiquities. Allow us to state, in serious truth, that the following illustrations are all carefully copied from the originals, in our po session.

From the Toys we select a Cairo Doll, as being the most interesting. The laws of the Mahommedan religion forbid the making of anything like life. Should a sinner so transgress, he will, on the last day, have to furnish a soul for every one of his productions, and failing this, will be utterly lost. In evading this penalty the Cairo doll-maker has perfectly succeeded—it certainly is like nothing alive. The two day' scots are supplied by bits of looking-glass, and the doll is tawdrily painted with bright red and yellow colours.

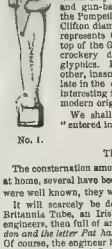


The Ornaments consist of ear-rings and rings for putting on the fingers, ankles, and wrists. Of the first, No. 1 is a ring, of brass, in which a piece of blue crockery is set. No. 2 has been cast in brass, and roughly filed. No. 3 is made of hollow copper, with a brass hook to go through the ear. The selection will possibly put Messrs. Hunt and Roskell on their mettel, more especially as the de gns have not, as yet, been registered. By the way, it is not yet clearly known whether any invention sent over will be considered patent, or whether sharp artificers may at once set to work and appropriate the notion.

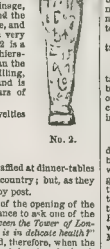
EGYPTIAN DRAWING.

In the Drawings, the Egyptian has somewhat jeopardised his chance of the seventh-class ticket for the Moslem paradise, for he has, to a certain extent, represented life. The drawing portrays an Eastern gentleman, surrounded by poetical attributes. The original was first exposed for sale on the Eskebiah at Cairo, and purchased for half a penny—or one penny English. It is an interesting sp-cimen of the renaissance of art in the East; and, as a production pub ished in defiance of the Koran, may be matter of grave consideration to those who foresee the decline and fall of the Ottoman Empire.

Of the Antiquities we select two specimens. We class them with the industrial produce of the country, because their manufacture employs a large and intelligent class of Arabs living on the Nile. They are also said to be found in large quantities in the neighbourhood of our own Staffordshire and Birmingham, and to be from thence exported to the East, for travellers. The school of design from which they are made is that of the Waterloo bullet and gun-barrel, the Roman and Grecian coinage, the Pompeii bronze the Royal George oak, and the Clifton diamonds. No. 1 is of corroded bronze, and represents Osiris. He was purchased on the very top of the Great Pyramid, for sixpence. No. 2 is a crockery divinity, on whom are written hieroglyphics. His value was less determined than the other, inasmuch as five were bought for a shilling, late in the day. Each is five inches high, and is interesting from the undeniable traces it bears of modern origin.



No. 1.



No. 2.

We shall keep our eye upon further novelties "entered inwards."

THE VAGRANT CONUNDRUMS.

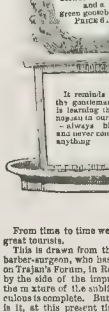
The consternation amongst these impostors continues. Baffled at dinner-tables at home, several have been compelled to quit the country; but, as they were well known, they were seized and handed over to us by order.

It will scarcely be deemed possible, that, on the day of the opening of the Britannia Tube, an Irish visitor had the bare-faced assurance to ask one of the engineers, then full of anxiety, "What is the difference between the Tower of London and the letter Tee but one?" The astonished Iron has straightened him a little, much to his detriment." Of course, the engineer had other matters to attend to; and, therefore, when the answer was given, "Because one contains the state jewels, and the other the jewel's state," it created no sensation. As it may be tried on again, this caution is necessary.

The other night, in the middle of the great conflagration at Ratcliffe-highway, a notorious wag, who ought to have been in bed some hours, actually stopped one of the firemen, to ask him "What three authors would you name in describing this fire?" The man was not literary; and, when the answer was explained to be "Dickens Howitt Burns!" he merely turned the hose of the engine against the inquirer, and so got rid of him.

But the most flagrant of all was the atrocious question let loose in the smoking-room of the House of Commons the other evening, in which the honourable representative for —— asked his colleague, "Why is a shrimp like a member of Parliament?" The announcement, "Because he's got M P at the right end," produced a scene of uproar that baffles description, and in the subsequent debate nearly led to the resignation of the Ministry.

THE HORTUS MINIMUS.



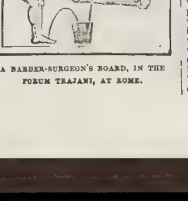
This is the size of the plant, it is raised by a division of a tubule and a Green gooseberry Price 6d.
It reminds one of the gentleman who is learning the corn-pean in our house — always blowing and never coming to anything

Our miniature plant, which, for the present, we may likken to a small horse-chesnut in its shock, remains in statu quo, and appears likely to do so for some time. We add its portrait, and also mention that we have purchased some others. One is like a thimble with a three days' beard, or rather stubble generally; this we keep in the window in our own mind, nothing more than a piece of ginger pahted green and called a plant 4. is some sand; and the third appears to be a group of tiny bottle-brushes. Like the performances at the different theatres just at present, there is very little life in them. They are, however, the only spring flowers that appear likely to flourish this season; with every indication of such a severe summer, that we expect to gather round the June log and drink mulled cyder with intense satisfaction. It is expected that skating will re-commence on the serpentine about the dog-days.

ODD NOTES OF TRAVEL.

From time to time we shall offer any little oddity of travel likely to escape great tourists.

This is drawn from the board of a barber-surgeon, who has a little shop on Trajan's Forum, in Rome. Viewed by the side of the imposing ruins, the m xture of the sublime and ridiculous is complete. But more absurd is it, at this present time, to travel from Naples to Pompeii by rail, and, when you arrive, and have the solemn relics of antiquity before you, to find them echoing with the whistle of the locomotive inscribed "Sharpe, Roberts, and Co., Atlas Works, Manchester." And this over the ground whereon Giancus and Ione made love!



A BARBER-SURGEON'S BOARD, IN THE FORUM TRAJANI, AT ROME.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Having past through with more than usual success the "before Easter" session, the future prospects and arrangements are full of hopeful promise. The company, in all its departments, is rich in individual talent, and complete in its union. Without advertising unentitled y to Sontag and Labache, we may call attention to the qualifications of Parodi, Bellett, Colletti, Gardoni, Sims Reeves, and Catherine Hayes. In the ballet we have Carlotta Grisi, Amalia Ferraris, and Marie Taglioni. The present week will be distinguished by a peculiar novelty the native talent, Reeves excepted, Catherine Hayes, will be the chief illustrators of the "Lucia" on Tuesday; and the Thursday will be signalized by the re-appearance of Madame Sontag and Lablache in the opera of "Don Pasquale;" the part of Norina enabled by the former, and the ultra comicality portrayed by the latter, are indeed a rare combination. The opera will be followed by the facinations of the new ballet.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The campaign before Easter terminated on Saturday last, with the fourth representation of Weber's "Der Freischütz," which was honoured a second time by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert. The house was very well attended, and the enthusiasm of the audience was strongly marked by the encores. The opera will, no doubt, be a standing favourite throughout the season; although, generally as is the present ensemble, we should be still further delighted if Viardot and Mario at some future period were the representatives of Agata and Gusto—the cast would then be perfection. Formes has gained greatly in his singing since the first night: the language and recitatives were more familiar to him, and he was consequently not so much fettered in his acting as on his opening performance. The roughness of his sonorous organ almost suggests the name of Kasper. The poetical nature of the singer asserts its supremacy in eve y phasis of the terrible drama: his drinking-song, so full of demoniac gaiety; his revenge bravura, so replete with overwhelming energy; his incantation scene, so striking in picture-que pantomime and varied vocal power; and his final death-struggle, and defiance of all authority, above and below, realize completely the picture of the doomed hunter, so vividly created by poet and musician. Formes's delineation, and Mdle. Vera's fascinating Aennie, with Coe's recitatives, orchestral and choral forces, will render the Italian version of "Der Freischütz" a memorable event in our musical annals. Grisi, Mdlle. de Meric, Mario, Tagliafico, and Tamburini are daily expected from St. Petersburg, and will appear in the course of the ensuing week. "Massaniello" will be performed next Tuesday, for the début of Signor Tamberlik. Ronconi will join the company immediately after the closing of the Italian Opera-house in Paris. Mdme. Viardot will come to London at the termination of her Berlin engagement. It senti's "Mofse" will be one of the earliest novelties.

SADLER'S WELLS.

We fulfil our promise to present our readers with some analysis of Miss Glyn's admirable performance of Isabella, in Southern's "Fatal Marriage," which she performed a second time on Friday week. Since Miss O'Neill's, an interpretation so passionate, powerful, and effective has not been witnessed. The part is one exactly suited for an actress of impulse. Domestic in its elements, it is slightly idealised by connecting the sufferer with the convent, and making her a transgressor out of the Church. Terrible is the kind and the degree of her expiation. Her marriage is accursed—misery is her portion. After nearly seven years' supposed widowhood, she marries a second husband. On the morrow her first husband returns. Taken prisoner in war, sold into slavery, having recovered his freedom, Biron returns to the woman who had up to yesterday been faithful to him, and had then only yielded from the force of poverty and the influence of gratitude. For him the love of Isabella is as strong as ever. The joy of meeting with him makes her at first forgetful of the awful bar only just placed between them. But soon the dreadful consciousness returns, and the full horror of the situation becomes apparent. Here it was that the wildness, the energy, and the abandonment of emotion, as displayed by Miss Glyn, reminded us of some of the great acting which we used to witness some twenty-five years ago. It was, indeed, the tragedy of pathos. In the previous scenes the noble woman had stood before us devoted to her husband, rejected by his father, tempted by his scoundrel brother, overborne by her creditors, entreated and delivered by her friend, in all these various positions exhibiting the utmost delicacy and womanly feeling, and the tenderness and beautiful pathos these were by Miss Glyn, "the fount of sympatnetic tears," having been gradually unsealed, was prepared to flow, and the heart was ready to respond to the appeal of nature, and of that art which, in its perfection, looks like nature—nay, in reality becomes identified with her. The passion and the pathos of the closing scene, indeed, fearfully vivid as it almost looked too much like reality. The audience were awed by the terror and melted by the tenderness of the scene. While it lasted they were profoundly hushed—no sound of assent or dissent broke forth into universal applause. We have no doubt that the character will be repeated. We have only to add that it ought to be generally witnessed.

During the week, Mr. Love, the polyphonist, has exhibited his wonders of ventriloquism.

PRINCESS'

On Tuesday evening, Miss Emma Stanley gave her most interesting entertainment in the concert-room of this theatre. It was called "A Peep before and behind the Curtain," and consisted of a musical melange, remarkable for its originality and taste. The music was supplied by Mr. W. Lovell Phillips, and did credit to his invention. The room was well attended, and the performance was, in all respects, deservedly successful.

Preparations are making in real earnest for the Easter week. Mr. Anderson, at DRURY LANE, expects to eclipse himself for all disappointments by the success of a magnificent spectacle, contrived by Mr. G. H. Rodwell, in which scenery, dresses, and appointments, including effects mechanical and magical, are to be on the most splendid and gorgeous scale. We trust, for sake of the management, that the fact may equal expectation. The t.tle is, "The Devil's Ring; or, Fire, Water, Earth, and Air." Music and fairydom will contribute to the enchantment of the spectacular scene. We are happy to announce that a domestic play, by Mr. Bayle Bernard, is also forthcoming: It is entitled "The Passing Cloud;" which may be added, as in rehearsal, a new musical farce, called "The Cricket-Match."

The HAYMARKET will commence with the comedy of "Much Ado about Nothing," and give the holiday-folk an opportunity of appreciating Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean in Benedick and Beatrice. After which, it advertises a grand new burlesque extravaganza, entitled "Ivanhoe," by the Brothers Brough: among the attractions of which, and not the least, are the two Keeleys, Mr. Buckstone, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, Miss P. Horton, and the sonorous Bland.

THE PRINCESS.—This theatre presents its audience with a translation from the French, for an Easter piece. It will be entitled "the Queen of the Roses; or, the Sorcerer of Candahar"

THE NEW STRAND continues "The Vicar of Wakefield," with its novel afterpieces.

The HAYMARKET.—Cymon and Iphigenia" is to be the subject of Mr. Planché's Easter piece, and this is to be adapted from Garrick's "Cymon." This play of arrick's was itself adapted from Dryden's poem, and was intended to convey the same moral. It is called by Garrick a "dramatic romance," and he had the conscience —or no conscience—to extend to three acts. Strange to say, Garrick altered the name of Iphigenia into Sylvia. The whole thing is a mere burletta; but it was acted "with great applause, for the first time, in the winter of 1767." We have also heard that it had greatly exhibited at the Opera House, and afterwards at "New Drury"—the scenery of which it is therein feared might rival that of Old Drury. Its last performance was in 1827, when Mdme. Vestris played the heroine, and Miss Paton Sylvia. It furnishes ample material for an effective extravaganza.

SADLER'S WELLS will commence with its magnificent-ly-mounted tragedy of "Macbeth," the rehearsal of which, on Wednesday week, we have already had occasion to witness. Highly creditable to exhibit at holiday seasons the highest examples of art, both poetic and histrionic. Advantage of such seasons should be taken to elevate the taste of the populace; not merely to cater to it, as Mr. Barnum, Mr. Barrett, Mr. Lumley, "Stagers," and similar exponents of a barbarous custom seem to be superseded by a more generous principle, and a wiser regard to the progress of education. While, however, we register the merely burlesque and spectacular entertainments, we pause to confer praise on a nobler experiment, where all that the scene can afford is devoted to the service of the highest poetry. We should have been better pleased if that poetry had been modern, and the advantage of the time been given to the living dramatist. That it has not been so given is an injustice, touching which complaint can neither be too loud nor stern. What with revivals of the old and burlesques on the other, the poet is systematically excluded from the boards at the seasons most favourable to his success.

The ADELPHI will continue with "The Mother's Dream," which will be followed by a new piece, called "Playing First Fiddle; or, Follow my Leader." During the week Mr. Adams has exhibited his "Orrery."

At ASTLEY'S, we are promised a romantic spectacle by Mr. Fitzball, whose skill in such pieces is first-rate. It is founded on the French piece called "the Four Brothers of Ay non."

At the SURREY, a romantic drama by Mr. Webb, entitled "The Adventurer," and a spectable piece called "The Three Princes," which is promised to be on an unusually magnificent scale.

Mr. Lisabe, who made his début as a flautist, at Miss Farmer's concert on Friday, the 22d of March, is likely to take a leading position as a fine-player His tone and style approach nearer to the late Mr. Nicholson's than we have yet heard. He uses the improved Boehme flute, and seems to excel in adagio airs—a style in which Mr. Nicholson excelled.

IMPROVED PENCIL-CASE AND PENCILS.—Mr. Riddle has just invented a "Self-supplying Pencil-case," the improvement in which consists in placing the reserve of lead round a newel, within a case, near the point, so that when one lead is used, on screwing back the propelling wire, a fresh lead drops into its place; then, by again screwing forward the propeller, the user may go on writing, as before. Mr. Riddle has also invented an ever-pointed pencil in cedar, which consists of a hollow stem of wood, into which pieces of prepared lead, slate, crayon, or other material for writing or drawing are placed. These pieces may be pushed forward, as the point is worn away, by means of an external ring. The stem may be re-filled when required. These are useful inventions, worthy of universal adoption.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual concerts given at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the auspices of the committee of management of the Royal Academy of Music, are not entertainments exciting much fashionable severe and searching criticism. The intent is principally to enable the subscribers and patrons of the institution to judge of the state of existing talent amongst the pupils, and of their progress from year to year. The aid of professors, who have been previously students, is put in requisition to constitute the full orchestra, and a few practised chorus singers are also engaged, to inspire confidence in the future aspirants for professional fame.

The first concert, on Saturday last, naturally exhibited not a mediocrity, but there was also infinitely more promise, and the programme is, after all, but a debtor and creditor account, even in our best entertainments. The beautiful contralto voice of Miss Owen, in singing the air "But the Lord is mindful," from Mendelssohn's "Paul," indicates a bright future for her. Miss Taylor, in Romberg's ode "The transient and the eternal," displayed a penetrating quality of a soprano voice that will be turned, no doubt, to good account. There is agreeable promise in the tenor organ of Mr. W. Lyon. Miss Holroyd must amend her intonation and cure her nasal tone, but she has a fine voice to work upon. A pizzicato, whose fright was so excessive as almost to put her hors de combat, will have to acquire confidence. The compositions of Mr. Sidgell (an overture) and Mr. Banister (a madrigal) must be mentioned as musician-like, if not creative.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The third concert of the Amateur Musical Society was given last Monday, at the Hanover Rooms.—— Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was effectively performed—conducted by Mr. Surman!—last Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, by the London Sacred Harmonic Society; but Miss Catherine Hayes did not arrive in time from Ireland having been detayed by stress of weather—to take the soprano part.——A concert was given last Monday night at Sadler's Wells Theatre, at which Mollie Magner, Misses Dobby and Lowe, and Mr. Sams Reeves sang; Ernst and Benedict were the solo instrumentalists.——Mr Henry Phillips gave his entertainment on Monday and Tuesday at the Surrey Theatre.—Mr. Henry Russell through the week (Friday excepted) has given his entertainment at the Lyceum Theatre.—On Wednesday, at Exeter Hall, conducted by Costa, Handel's immortal oratorio "The Messiah" was performed, with Miss Catherine Hayes and Miss Priscilla Horton, Mr. Sims Reeves and Herr Formes.——On Thursday, Mr. Parry gave an evening concert at the Hanover Rooms, at which the oratorio "The Death of Abel" was performed, together wi h Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," with Miss Rainforth, Mrs. Noble, Messrs. Lockey, Benson, and Bodda as vocalists.——Last Monday, Mr. Henry Phillips will give a new musical enterta nment at St. Martin's Hall.——On Wednesday, Herr Molique will conclude his series of chamber concerts; and Mr. Lucas will give his third musical evening; and on the same night will be the sixth of the spring series of London Wednesday Concerts.——M Billet's third and last excellent selection of classical pianoforte music will be performed next Friday.——Next Wednesday, at the Hanover Rooms, there will be a full meeting of the committee to regulate the arrangement for Mr. Piatt's farewell concert, on Wednesday morning, April 24th. The offers of our native and foreign artistes to assist pour in from all quarters, and a grand entertainment will be given.——Next Friday, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society, at Exeter Hall, conducted by Costa.——"A night with Beuler," the popular writer of comic songs, took place last Wednesday, at the Hanover Rooms, being a annual entertainment. He was assisted by Mrs Aveling Smith, Misses Stewart, Ferguson, Lucy, Messrs. N. J. Sporle, Ransford, Day, Mason, Chumbley, Mathews, &c.—— Herr Ernst, Herr Kuhe, Miss Lanzoni, Mdlle. Magner, and Sims Reeves, will join a short musical tour of Mr. Albert Schloss, being at Worcester on Monday, at Cheltenham on Tuesday, morning and evening, and on Wednesday at the Town Hall, Birmingham, with the aid of the Festival Choral Society.——Amongst the musical arrivals is that of Senor Echeverria, a Spanish guitarist of eminence, who plays with marvellous skill on the mandor, an instrument which he has improved by novel combinations. This artiste was formerly an officer under Espartero, by whom he is highly recommended, as well as by Cabrera, the Duke's rival in arms.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The second Philharmonic concert in Paris, under the direction of Berlioz, realised the most ardent hopes of its enthusiastic founder; the attendance was great, and the performance perfect, including his magnificent "Harold" Symphony, and selections from Gluck's "Alceste," and the "Freischütz" overture. ——Mdme. Viardot was to leave Paris last Thursday, for Berlin, where she will appear immediately in the "Prophète" (in German), under the composer's direction.——Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was to be performed on Good Friday, at the Italian Opera House, in Paris.——Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" was amongst the successful productions at the Italian Opera House in St. Petersburgh; Grisi, Corbari, Mario, Marlo. Tamburini, Tagliafico, &c., sustaining the principal parts.—— A new opera, by the Brothers Ricci, entitled "Crispino e la Comare," has been successfully produced at the San Benedetto, in Venice.——Jenny Lind sang at Dresden on the 16th instant.

COUNTRY NEWS.

EXPECTED VISIT OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL TO MANCHESTER.—The Premier is expected to pay a visit to Manchester and neighbourhood for two or three days next week. His Lordship is to be the guest of Sir Benjamin Heywood, at Claremont, and his visit is to be strictly private. His Lordship's object is understood to be to see fir himself the aspect of things in this great manufacturing district.

FIRE AT GLASGOW.—A fire occurred on Monday night, by which the larger portion of the extensive premises known as the Port Dundas Grain Mills, occupied by Mr. Currie, has been totally consumed, very little being saved from destruction. The origin of the fire is impossible to account for; the mill, when left at eight o'clock by the parties employed in it, having been all safe, and no appearance whatever of anything wrong. The total damage will not be much, if at all, under £15,000. The proprietors of the building and the occupier are fully insured.

The Bradford working men are forming money-clubs, to accumulate £5 each member, as a purse for a trip to London during the show of industry from all nations.

SERIOUS BANK ROBBERY.—On Saturday, a gentleman in the commission trade, in Manchester, after having paid all the cash he had to pay at his warehouse, took the remaining notes and a cheque (to all £768) to pay into the bank of Sir Benjamin Heywood and Co., St. Ann-street. He folded up the notes and cheque together, held them in his hand, and put his hand into an outer pocket of his coat. He had not been two minutes in the bank before he missed the notes, which he believes he had in his hand at the door of the bank. The money consisted of three Bank of England notes of £100 each, all dated Jan. 19, 1849, three of £20 each, one of £10, and one of £5; all the numbers of good being known to the gentlemen, payment of all of them was promptly stopped. With the notes was a cheque for £333 2s. upon Sir Benjamin Heywood and Co., payment of which was, of course, instantly stopped. Nothing has since been heard of the missing notes.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The coursing season has run itself out, and the steeple-chases have nearly got to the end of their tether; in fact, they appear in a desperate hurry to finish, for we observe that the calendar for the coming week embraces no less than twelve meetings, viz., on Tuesday, Riddersmoor, Rochford, Long Sutton, Bridgewater, Ormskirk, and Bury St. Edmunds; on Wednesday, Route Hunt, on Thursday, Fighting Cocks, on Friday, Aberga enny, and, on Saturday, Liverpool Hunt and Moreton-in-Swale. There will also be three or four meetings in Ireland.

The racing world is also getting into full work; Catterick will occupy Monday and Tuesday next, Northampton the two following days, and the Hoo, a pleasant little meeting in Lord Hearse's park, on Saturday; we see the number of good little meeting in Lord Hearse's park, on Saturday; we see the number of good sports. In the succeeding week we shall have Croxton Park and the Great Metropolitan; after which, the "pure legitimate" commence proceedings at Newmarket, where we shall have our first peep at the south country Derby nage.

TATTERSALL'S.

TUESDAY.—Owing to the absence of many of the subscribers at Frith Manor Steeple-chase, the business transacted this morning was on a very moderate scale; remarkable, however, for a marked improvement in Osterley, Mounseer, Belus (said to be all right), Prestige, Buckhound, and Beehunter, for their respective engagements.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE STAKES.
3 to 1 agst Osterley (t)	10 to 1 agst Chanticy	15 to 1 agst Halo
6 to 1 —— Mounseer (t)	10 to 1 —— Belus (t)	30 to 1 —— Wanota
8 to 1 —— Mahratta	15 to 1 —— Ballingafad
CHESTER CUP.
12 to 1 agst Glauca	16 to 1 agst Gossack	25 to 1 agst Roland
15 to 1 —— Miss Ann	18 to 1 —— Poop-o'-Day Boy	28 to 1 —— Fugleman
DERBY.
6 to 1 agst Bolingbroke	15 to 1 agst Vestiguer	22 to 1 agst Mavors
10 to 1 —— Italian	15 to 1 —— Cruiser	30 to 1 —— Cyprus

WESTMINSTER AND ETON BOAT RACE.—The contest which formerly took place almost annually between these two schools, and which, as our readers may be aware, has latterly been prevented by the head-master of Westminster, on the score that rowing had a tendency to injure the health, will in all probability be renewed during the present season. All old Westminsters and Etonians look forward to this match with as much pleasure as to any of the school cricket-matches at Lord's; and thinking, as they must, that the fact of a boy occasionally hurting himself by rowing affords no more reason for abolishing that sport than an accident at cricket or shooting (of which there are many) affords for prohibiting those manly amusements, they will be glad to learn that Dr. Liddell's objections are removed.

BROWN'S PATENT PLANT FUMIGATOR.—This new apparatus consists of a circular box, to the side edge of which is affixed a long tube, and to the upper a copper receptacle for the tobacco. Both these communicate with the interior of the box, which is fitted with a revolving bower, worked by an external handle. The blower produces a draught through the tobacco, and by the same action, the smoke is driven through the tube to the plant.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CHESS TYRO.—It is an extremely difficult matter to induce players to adopt any other notation than the one they are accustomed to. If the more not so we should long since have seen the simple and concise notation of the Germans superseding the cumbrous peripherals of our own.

CLIFTONIENSE, J. T., G. Y. E.—For our solutions to the Number for March 16th

Q. Glasgow.—Enigma 319 is perfect y correct Pray try it once more, for we can ill afford the space for all the variations it admits

C F S.—Many thanks They are all most welcome

FERNELYANIAN.—I. You may doubtless use the "Staunton Chessmen," in Cerrara or Ivory, at Skeets', the publisher, King William-street, Charing-cross. 2. The match between Mr Stanley and Mr Lincoln was played at New Orleans, in the winter of 1846, and was won by the English player

G A H.—It is not lack of interest in the subjects, but want of space in our columns, which has compelled the postponement of the Chess Table. Do not despair, however, of seeing them resumed some day or other

J A W.—Your solution in four moves is unquestionably correct, and ought to have been noticed by the journal in which the problem appeared

W E H.—The key move is the only correct "Indian Problem" it—1 Q h to his sq

W. C. Manchester.—It deserves and shall have publicity

R D M. 1. The games between Messrs S and H, which you mention, are published in the Chess-Player's Chronicle. 2. You have failed, like every other correspondent, to finding the key to Mr Kt's admirable Problem, No 311

ALPHA.—Mr S. Amaud played two games only with Mr Horwitz, and they appeared in our Journal about two years back

W G—As we stated in our Number of March 16th, Problem No 310 can be solved by White taking the Black Q for his first move

S G.—For game by correspondence now pending between Newcastle and Glasgow, we shall publish upon its termination

PERCY.—We have room only to give you the key moves to the positions mentioned. 1. Kt to P's 4th (ch) If Black play—1 K to his 5th, you reply with—2. B to Q 5th, &c; if he play—1 K to Q B 3d, you answ r—2. Kt to Q B 4th, &c. If he play—1 P to Q B 5th, you take the P en with your King, &c; and finally, if he move 1. P to K 8 th, you move—2 Kt to Q B 8th, &c. See the solutions for June and July, 1846) Enigma No 472—1. Kt to K 7th 2. Kt to K B 3d, 3. Kt to B 5th, &c. Enigma No 340—1. Q to her K 3d (ch), 2 Q to her K 5th (ch); 3. Q to K 5th (ch), &c

BRITON, R. W.—Such game and Problem shall be noticed anat week

CURIOS, R. W. Oxford. W. R. W. L. Denbigh. HELL-ET.—Now under consideration

J G W, W. Shrewsbrough.—See the Chess-Player's Chronicle for April 1st

LIBERTY.—With the best play on both sides it would be drawn

PERCY.—We have room only to give you the key moves to the positions mentioned. 1. Kt to

A CONSTANT READER.—Whether a Rook and Bishop, as we against a Rook, has been a vexed question among the best players for the last two hundred years. See the profound analysis by Mr. Kling, at pp. 448-456 of the "Handbook."

J S, Worcester.—Mr Grimson's solution of Her Ries' Problem, No 321, is the only correct one out of some hundreds which have been sent to us

S G.—We shall report progress, if possible, next week

SOLUTIONS of No 323 by R G H, TEDD, F P, R V, S T, M P, G W T, BRUTUS, J D, DERBYON, J A W, are correct. All others are wrong

Any amateur desirous of a game by correspondence will find a competitor by addressing Mr. J. Harding, Literary Institute, Dundee

H J Harding, Literary Institute, Dundee

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 321.

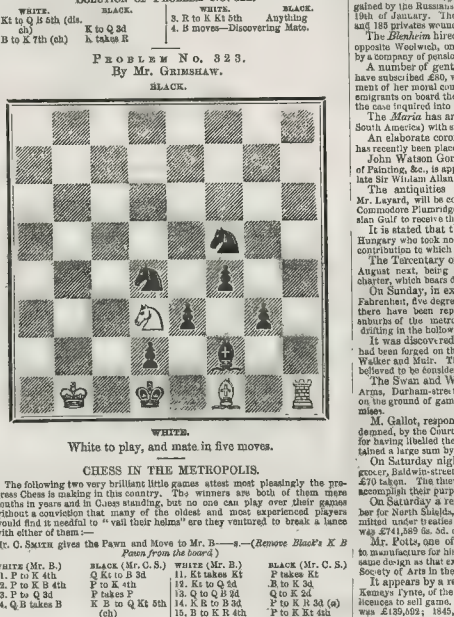
This admirable position seems destined to create as much sensation as the great "Indian Problem" itself. It has now been published a fortnight, and up to this time we have received the following one correct solution. Under these circumstances, which are unprecedented during the whole period that Chess has been a staple feature in our paper, we shall withhold the key for another fortnight.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 322.
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q 8 th (dis. ch)	K to Q 3d	3. R to K t 8th	Anything
2. B to K 7th (ch)	K takes R	4. B moves—Discovering Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 323.

By Mr. GRIMSHAW.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

The following two very brilliant little games attest most pleasingly the progress Chess is making in this country. The winners are both of them mere youths in years and in Chess standing, but no one can play over their games without a conviction that many of the oldest and most experienced players would find it needful to "vail their helms" ere they ventured to break a lance with either of them:—

Mr. C. SMITH gives the Pawn and Move to Mr. B——s.—(Remove Black's K B Pawn from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. C. S.)	WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. C. S.)
1. P to K 4th	Q Kt to B 3d	11. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
2. P to K B 4th	P to K 4th	12. Kt to Q 2d	B to K 3d
3. P to Q 3d	P takes P	13. Q to Q B 2d	Q to K 2d
4. Q B takes B	K B to Q Kt 5th (ch)	14. K R to B 3d	P to K R 3d (a)
5. P to Q B 3d	B to Q R 4th	15. B to K R 4th	P to K Kt 4th (a)
6. K Kt to K 2d	B to K B 3d	16. B to K Kt 3d	P to K Kt 5th (b)
7. K B to K 2d	K Kt to B 3d	17. K R to B sq	P to K 6th
8. Q B to K Kt 5th	Castles	18. B takes K P	Q to K Kt 4th
9. Castles	K B to Q Kt 3rd (ch)	19. P to Q 4th	P to Q B 4th
10. K to R sq	Q Kt to K 4th	20. B takes R (ch)	K takes B
	And Black gave Checkmate in five moves.	21. B to Q 6th	P takes P
		22. B takes R

(a) Playing the Q B to K Kt 5th would have been more decisive.

(b) Much better than Q B to K Kt 5th, for suppose—

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
16.	B to K Kt 5th	19. R to K 8th	Q to her 8th
17. R takes Kt	B takes B	20. B takes K P
18. Q to her Kt 3d (ch)	R to K B 3d	And White has an irresistible attack.

MR. H. BIRD gives his K Kt to Mr. PINKERLEY.—(Remove White's K Knight from the board.)

(King's Bishop's Opening.

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. P.)	WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. P.
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	10. Q to K 6 6th	P to Q 4th
2. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	11. P takes P in passing	Q takes P
3. Castles	K B to Q B 4th	12. Q Kt to R 3d	Kt to K Kt 2d
4. P to Q B 3d	Kt takes K P	13. Q to K B 4th	Q to K B 3d
5. P to Q 4th	B to Q Kt 3d	14. Q R to K sq	Kt to K B 4th
6. P takes K P	Castles	15. B takes Kt	Q takes B
7. B to Q 5th	K Kt to his 4th	16. B to K 5th	P to K B 3d
8. Q to K 5th	Kt to K 3d
9. K B to K 4th	Q to K R 3d
And White announced Mate in seven moves (a).

(a) The modus operandi is as follows :—

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
17. B to Q 6th	Kt to Q 3d	19. R to K 5th (ch)	Kt to K B sq
(If Black take the B, White, by playing his Q to K 7th, gives mate in fewer moves)		20. Kt to K t (ch)	R takes R
18. R to K 7th	R to K B 3d a	21. Q takes R—Mate

a By now taking the K B P (ch) with his Queen, Black can prolong the mate to the 7th move, as his adversary foresaw.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 550.—By B. W. F.

White. K at Q B 3d, R at K 2d, Kt at Q R 4th, P at Q Kt 3d.

Black: K at Q 5th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 551.—By Mr. FINCH.

White: K at his sq., R at Q B 3d, B at Q 8th, Kt at K B 2d, P s at K 4th and Q R 4th.

Black: K at Q Kt 3d, Kt at Q B 2d, P s at K R 6th, K 4th, and Q R 4th.

White, playing first, gives mate in seven moves.

No. 552.—By Mr. CAWLEY.

White: K at his 3d, Q at K 4th, Kts at K Kt 3d and Q 4th, P at Q R 2d.

Black: K at Q B 3rd, Q at K 2 sq., R at K sq, B at K R 6th; P s at K R 3d, Q Kt 4th, and Q R 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Monday, her Majesty's Royal Easter bounty to the aged poor was distributed at the Royal Almonry, Maddox Street-yard, by the Bishop of Oxford, the Lord High Almoner, the Rev. E. Goodenough, Sub-Almoner, and Mr. Hanby Gromen. Upwards of 500 aged men and women were presented with 5s each, all being above 60, and many upwards of 100 years of age. The ceremony was presented in Whitehall Chapel, on Thursday, to 62 aged men and women, two being added to the list of recipients for every year her Majesty attains. This gift amounts to about £300 in individuals.

The Queen and the Prince Consort have given a renewed proof of their earnestness in promoting the welfare of the working classes by transmitting to the committee for promoting the establishment of baths and washhouses for the labouring classes a further munificent donation of £100 towards the funds for completing the model establishment in Goulston square, Whitechapel, and have thus again testified to the validity of the claims which the poverty of that district has on the sympathy and help of the wealthier quarters of the metropolis.

The Honourable William James Colvile, and the Honourable Misses Catherine Dorothea and Georgiana Clementina Colvile, the brother and sisters of Lord Colvile, of Culross, who has recently succeeded to that title by the death of his uncle, have by her Majesty's letter of license been declared entitled to the rank and precedence of the son and daughters of a baron

The Marquis of Clanricarde, the Postmaster-General, is at present in Paris, with the object of negotiating modification of the rates of postage upon letters passing between Great Britain and France, so as to diminish the present charges. A rate of 10d. for a letter under a quarter of an ounce is certainly too high, when a letter may be sent from Calais to Paris for 2d., and from Dover to the north of Scotland for one penny.

The Scotsman says that three barbers have been prosecuted at the Central Police Court, Glasgow, for having exercised their calling on the Sabbath-day. They were, however, acquitted, it being successfully contended that the old Scotch acts of Parliament (1661 to 1691), on which the prosecution was founded, were quite inoperative and inapplicable at the present day.

The steam ship Apollo, which arrived last week from one of the Dutch ports, experienced such severe weather on her passage, that it was requisite, in consequence of the fastenings of the cattle having become loosened and the animals restive and troublesome, to cast a considerable number of the live stock into the sea, and to kill others on board.

The newly organized Pontifical army is to be composed of three foreign legions; namely, one of Austrians, one of French, and one of Spaniards or Swiss. Gen. St. Arnaud, who has been appointed to the command of the French force, has proceeded to Rome, to confer with the Pontifical Government on the subject.

Marshal Radetzky has directed Baron Puchner to give the persons who have been employed in their functions in Venice a daily salary for their maintenance; and, in order to alleviate the misery of the working classes, he has further directed that the works of the arsenal of Venice, and of the hydraulic work connected at Porta Nuova and Malmocco, shall be pressed forward with the greatest alacrity.

The St. Petersburgh Gazette of March 14 gives an account of a victory gained by the Russians in the Caucasus, under Major-General Wrenski, on the 19th of January. The Russians had only nine privates killed, and eight officers and 185 privates wounded.

The Blenheim hired convict-ship, Mr. Molison master, left her moorings, opposite Woolwich, on Saturday afternoon, with a number of convicts, guarded by a strong force of pensioners from Tilbury-fort, for Van Diemen's Land.

A number of gentlemen, members of the Stock Exchange, London, have subscribed £80, which has been sent to Caroline Arnold, as an acknowledgment of her conduct in courage in exposing the outrages committed on the female emigrants on board the barque Indian, and in overcoming the difficulty of getting the case inquired into by the authorities in Australia

The Maria has arrived at Liverpool from Huanchaco (west coast of South America) with silver and other rich metals, valued at 24,000 dollars.

An elaborate coronal (the gift of the Rev. Mr. Allen, of Bushley) has recently been placed in the Abbey Church, Tewkesbury.

John Watson Gordon, Esq., President of the Royal Scottish Academy of Painting, &c., is appointed the Queen's Limner in Scotland, in the room of the late Sir William Allan. Sir David Wilkie was Sir W. Allan's predecessor.

The antiquities and curiosities lately discovered at Nineveh, by Mr. Layard, will be conveyed to England in her Majesty's frigate Gambia, 40, Commodore Plumridge. The gallant commodore has sent the ship to the Persian Gulf to receive them.

It is stated that the Austrian Government has exempted the Jews of Hungary who took no part in the insurrection from the payment of the war contribution to which General Haynau condemned the whole Jewish community.

The Tercentary of Bury school is to be celebrated on the 15th of August next, being the 300th anniversary (according to the old style) of the charter, which has been found to date the 3rd of August, 1550.

On Sunday, in exposed situations, the thermometer stood at 25 deg. Fahrenheit, five degrees below freezing point. On more than one day since, there have been frequent falls of snow, with a keen north-east wind in the suburbs of the metropolis the open waters were covered with ice, and the snow drifting in the hollows lodged to a considerable depth.

The forgery discovered on Friday week that a number of one-pound notes had been passed on the Clydesdale Banking Company. The names forged are Walker and Muir. The extent of the forgery has not yet been learned, but it is believed to be considerable.

The Swan and Windsor Castle, Long-acre, as well as the Salisbury Arms, Durham-street, Strand, have been refused licenses by the magistrates, on the ground of gambling and betting transactions going on within the premises.

M. Gallot, responsible editor of the Reforme (Paris), has been condemned, by the Court of Assizes, to six months' imprisonment and 2000f. fine, for having libelled the Pre-dent of the Republic, by asserting that he had obtained a large amount by illegitimate gambling at the Bourse.

On Saturday night, the warehouse of Mr. William Grove, wholesale grocer, Baldwin-street, Bristol, was broken open, and property to the amount of £70 taken. The thieves had to force no less than five locks before they could accomplish their purpose.

On Saturday a return to Parliament, obtained by Mr. Wawn, the member for North Shields, was printed, stating the sums paid for foreign vessels admitted under treaties of reciprocity. The total amount paid to the end of 1849 was £741,869 6s. 3d. of which £39,295 17s. 4d. was paid in the year 1849

Mr. Potts, one of the exhibitors, has been honoured with instructions to manufacture for his Royal Highness Prince Albert two candelabra of the same design as that exhibited by him in the recently opened Exhibition of the Society of Arts in Edinburgh.

It appears by a return printed on Tuesday, at the instance of Colonel Kemeys Tynte, of the net produce of the duty paid on game certificates, and for licenses to deal in game, that the total sum received in the official year of 1844 was £139,502; 1845, £136,327; 1846, £140,613; 1847, £145,427; and 1848 £126,882.

On board the emigrant-ship John Thomas Foord, no less than thirty-three of the emigrant passengers died of cholera, in her recent passage from Plymouth to Melbourne (Australia).

A bill has been introduced into Parliament for the erection of a national gallery for Scotland at Edinburgh. The buildings (which are to be on the Mound) are to contain apartments "for other purposes connected with the promotion of the fine arts."

Some importations have recently taken place at the port of Liverpool of an article, called whale foots, from the United States of America. The article is considered to be under the general term of grease, and therefore admissible under that head duty free.

A plantation, extending, it is said, over 10 or 12 acres, the property of the Duke of Sutherland, and situated near Beauregarde, Inverness, unfortunately caught fire on Tuesday evening last, and was destroyed.

The Sheriffs have received a communication from Sir G. Grey, informing them that the execution of Anne Merritt, under sentence of death in Newgate for poisoning her husband, is to be respited during her Majesty's pleasure. A further investigation of the case has been considered necessary by the Home Secretary, after communication with the Lord Chief Baron, owing to doubts which have been expressed by physicians and surgeons of great eminence of the correctness of a very important part of the evidence, depending entirely upon the accuracy of a medical opinion.

After a space of more than three hundred years, nuns are again stationed in the University town of Cambridge. On Monday, the 11th instant, the schools of the Roman Catholic mission were re-opened, under the superintendence of two nuns of the Order of the Infant Jesus, from the convent of Northampton. On the Wednesday following, mass was celebrated by the Rev Thomas Quinlan, the pastor, for the special invocation of the Holy Ghost on the labours of the sisters, after which the children went in procession to the schools.

The very beautiful oriel window, which lately adorned the south end of the ancient city palace of John o'Gaunt, in Lincoln, has been removed; and, having been purchased by the county magistrates, is to be placed between the entrance gates to the Castle.

EXHIBITIONS FOR EASTER.

DIORAMA OF THE ROUTE OF THE OVERLAND MAIL TO INDIA.—LEAVING SUEZ.

The success of the long Moving Panoramic Pictures from New York, has excited what would almost appear to be an insatiate taste for that class of artistic productions in our own metropolis. Strange it is that we should have received such a hint from a nation by no means distinguished for its school of painting; and we suspect the explanation will be traceable to certain broad effects which alike characterize Transatlantic scenery and manners. How far this species o

PANORAMA OF THE NILE.—THE SIMOOM.

PANORAMA OF THE OHIO.—CLEARING A FOREST.

EXHIBITIONS FOR EASTER.

PANORAMA OF NEW ZEALAND.—BIVOUACK OF SURVEYORS.

attraction will be realized in the success of the English Moving Panoramas and Dioramas which have just burst upon the town for its holiday novelties, we will not venture to predict. As regards composition, drawing, colour, and other means of art, our own pictures are, unquestionably, of the highest class; whilst they are as remarkable for their freedom from exaggeration, and adherence to nature, as their American prototypes were characterized by those equivocal recommendations.

The first of the London novelties we have to notice, though the last in the order of production, is to be opened on Monday, at the

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION,

In the house No. 14, Regent-street (adjoining the Parthenon Club), built by Mr. Nash, the architect, for his own residence. The Exhibition consists of a moving Dioramic Picture, shewn through a flattened oval frame at one end of the splendid saloon which Mr. Nash (if we mistake not) fitted up and embellished in the style of one of the galleries of the Vatican, at Rome. The picture passes in view before the spectators, and shows the main points of the Route of the Overland Mail to India, commencing with Southampton Docks, whence the steamer destined for Alexandria takes its departure. Thence succeed Calshot Castle; the Isle of Wight, with her Majesty's marine residence, Osborne; the Needles; the Bay of Biscay, the Burlings, or Berlingas, a small cluster of rocks on the Spanish coast; Cintra, with its rocks, cataracts, precipices, palaces, and gardens; the mouth of the Tagus, with its vessels and boats, Cape St. Vincent and Cape Trafalgar; Tarifa; Gibraltar, with its mighty rock—its bay, amphitheatre of hills and picturesque scenery; Algiers (a sort of parisienne for France), the only part of the coast of Africa visible from the steamer's deck as she stretches away to Malta; the small islands of Pantelaria and Gallita; Malta, with its busy harbour; Alexandria; the steamer's passage up the Nile, and its arrival at Boulaac, at night; Cairo, full of interest, and realising more than any other Oriental town the ideas first generated by the "Arabian Nights;" the van journey across the Desert to Suez.

"Many objects diversify the desert route, which is accomplished, allowing for stoppages, in sixteen hours. Sometimes a group of Mu-rulmen cavaliers or a body of Egyptian soldiery are passed—now a camel-driver mourning over his dead camel, and anon a cluster of Bedouins, smoking by the light of a fire which cooks their nocturnal meal. At every eight or ten miles there are low brick buildings or stations, which serve for post-horses. Here the vans change horses. At the centre station, which is the largest, a prolonged halt takes place, and dinner or supper (as the case may be) is supplied. There is little to tempt the passenger to remain at Suez—nor, indeed, is there much time for delay. The steamer lies in the offing, and all speed is used to complete the embarkation for India."

Our Artist, in the Engraving upon the opposite page, has transferred this portion of the Diorama.

Passing down the Red Sea, we obtain views of Jedda, the port of Mecca, whither Mahomedan pilgrims greatly resort; Mocha, once the emporium of Arabian trade; and Aden, now in the possession of the English, and admirably answering the purpose of a coal dépôt. Next are the cluster of islets—the Maldives, in the Indian Ocean; Point de Galle, in Ceylon; Madras; and the pictorial journey closes with Calcutta—the "City of Palaces," which, with the natives in their variegated costumes, the Europeans in their palankeens and carriages, the body-guard of the Governor-General, the boats and pinnaces which ply upon the Hooghly, all combine to present a striking picture, and to furnish at once a termination to the voyage, and a climax to the Diorama.

Of the highly artistic execution of this magnificent work we can convey to the reader but a faint idea by description; for sublime and picturesque scenery, beautiful aërial effects, characteristic groupings, variety of incident, richness of colour, and tone or atmosphere skilfully varied with the several countries—in all these appliances and resources, the Overland Route Diorama is superior to any work of its class hitherto produced in this country.

When to these great features we add that the picture is the combined work of Mr. D. Roberts, R.A., Mr. Herring, Mr. Absolon, and Messrs. Grieve and Telbin, the reader has sufficient assurance of its high excellence.

Mr. Stocqueler, the author of the "Handbook of India," will accompany the exhibition of the picture with an illustrative lecture.

PANORAMA OF THE NILE.

This Exhibition at the Egyptian Hall has much improved in its character. The scenes are now highly painted in distemper, and with that liberal fidelity which is merited by the oldest and the largest buildings in the world. The Egyptians, we fear, are not the only persons who have mistaken size for greatness—the French even now will match them in this. The drawings for the present panorama have been made by Joseph Bonomi: they are painted, and capitally painted too, by Mr. Henry Warren and Mr. James Fahey. The scenery is accompanied by descriptions, which are very well delivered indeed by the appointed lecturer. The imagination is greatly awakened by the magnificence both of the works of nature and art here presented to the senses.

The second part of the Panorama exceeds, as it ought, the interest of the first. It represents the eastern bank of the Nile. It presents us with the capital of Nubia, and, of still more value, the Rock of Ibreen, or the Pramis of the ancients. Some of the more incidental pictures are interesting, such as that of the serpent-charmer and the ruined city of old Essouan. The rising of the Dog-star is also full of sublime associations; its being the beginning of the Egyptian year not being the least—happening about the middle of July. The most striking, however, to the popular mind, is the representation of the Simoom, with a copy o which we present our readers. The sand-storm is supposed to have overtaken a caravan from the Oasis Amun in the Lybian desert. The exhibition coincides with the images of the Sphynx, the real history of which is given by the lecturer, as distinguished from the legendary. Altogether, this Panorama is exceedingly interesting, amusing, and instructive.

BANVARD'S PANORAMA OF THE OHIO.

This excellent representation of the "beautiful" American river is worthy of the scene which it professes to depict. It is strongly and truthfully painted, and is especially attractive from its peculiar character. The panorama is a moving one, and occupies more than one cylinder. It takes the spectator right through the heart of America, commencing with the Ohio from the mouth of the Miami to the Rapids and Falls, and presenting in its course, now a cultivated city, now a clearing in the wild, and now a forest on fire. It is, in fact, the virtual realisation of a voyage down that delightful stream. A moonlight landscape, in particular, is very charming; and many of the islands that divide its channel are exquisitely romantic. All kinds of water-craft are seen floating upon the tide; while the shores are varied with scenery and animated groups of all descriptions. The texture of the water is admirable—so clear and transparent that the illusion is perfect. One of the most prominent objects is Cincinnati, the Queen of the West, and largest city of the United States. The dimensions of this panorama deserve to be recorded—they are titanic. It occupies upwards of 1200 yards of canvas in length. Its merits, after all, consist in its presenting faithful copies of the scenery and objects represented. These are so faithful, that they appear, as it were, Identifications. The holiday visitor cannot do better than visit the Egyptian Hall, and trace, by means of Mr. Banvard's pictorial realization, the Thames-like windings of the Ohio, until it loses itself in the arms of the Mississippi. The movements of the scene are accompanied with verbal explanations, which are clearly and intelligently delivered. We have engraved a portion.

PANORAMA OF NEW ZEALAND.

This picture was duly noticed in our Journal at the time of its being first exhibited. It has been painted by Mr. S. C. Brees, from drawings made by him during his location in New Zealand as principal engineer and surveyor to the New Zealand Company. It succeeds admirably in illustrating the habits of the colonists; the customs of the natives—their pahs, habitations, and canoes—as well as the buildings, farms, and clearings. The main points are the entrance to Port Nicholson in Cootes's Straits; a panoramic view taken from the top of Mount Victoria; the town of Wellington; another panoramic view of Wellington, from the Thorndon Flat, Te Aro Flat, Mount Victoria, the district of the Hutt River, and a scene in the Wairarapa.

We have engraved a portion of the Picture, exhibiting a party of surveyors and men bivouacking in the bush. The several varieties of trees, and their size, are observed banks, and the direction of the flow of water in streams. The encampment is always made near a stream, for the convenience of water, and the ware or hut built open in the front, with the roof running down to the ground at the back. It is formed of poles, covered and enclosed with bark or fern. An immense fire is constantly kept up in front, day and night. The surveyors fare consists of salt pork and dampers, or bread made in the bush, without yeast. pigeons, ducks, and eels also make a change: their beverage is tea, and their luxuries pipes and tobacco.

The scenery of this Panorama is remarkably well painted; the picturesqueness, the mountain grandeur, and the forestial wealth of this truly wonderful country, are beautifully depicted; and the several incidents of native and colonial life are vigorously executed. The information afforded by the picture, as well as by Mr. Brees's explanatory lecture, will be as important to any intending emigrant as it is interesting to the sight-seer.

THE CYCLORAMA.—THE GREAT EARTHQUAKE AT LISBON.

LISBON, AT THE CYCLORAMA.

The Colosseum has undergone much improvement lately. Much of the old scenery has been removed, and substituted by more novel views. Mont Blanc has at length given place to the "Tête Noire Pass and Valley of Chamouni"—truly a picturesque as well as a contrasted scene to the "Cascade Barbarina," descending from the hollow of the mountain is, in particular, grand and striking. But it blends the beautiful with the sublime The titanic firs and the elevated bridges relieve the eminent fall of water with variety: and the church and village of Velagon on the right, seated on a summit, and crowned with pines, present a singular spectacle one, indeed, almost unique; while, on the opposite side, the magnificent torrent careers within a channel of rocks and pines which serve as a sort of rampart, and keep within bounds the mighty and ever-boiling flood

Two other scenes, also, merit particular attention—the Tchin Shan, and the Silver Mine in full work; to which we ought to add the Stalactite Caverns, as constructed by the late Mr. W. Bradwell and Mr. Telbin. But our main concern lies at present with that portion of the establishment now called the Cyclorama, and consisting of an exhibition of moveable paintings. To this purpose the large building in Albany-street has been appropriated, with a newly-erected hall of large proportions, constructed to serve likewise as a concert-room. To both the visitor enters through the Albany-street corridor of the Colosseum, passing up a staircase to the "rustic Armoury, or Refreshment Cottage." All is in the best taste—all on a vast scale of magnificence. The painting now exhibiting takes for its subject Lisbon and the Earthquake of 1755. We are presented with the beautiful, varied, and sublime scenery of the Tagus, the movement of which produces a peculiar feeling in the spectator. The theatre in which he sits seems like a vessel floating down the stream, and passing one object after another—the mountainous shore—the ships and vessels, the merchantman and the xebec—the nunnery, the fort, the mansion, the palace, the various convents, the Consulate House, and, at length, the City, with its palatial, ecclesiastical, public and private buildings—all doomed to sudden destruction. The last scene presents the Grand Square of Lisbon, "with its gorgeous palaces and magnificent ranges of streets, massive arches and noble flights of steps, vases, and other colossal decorations, with the beautiful statue and fountain of Apollo." We should have mentioned that the scenes are accompanied with musical illustrations, performed by Mr. Pittman, on the new Apollonicon, built by Bevington. These illustrations consist of the Rivulet Movement of Pastorale, by Beethoven; of an aria from "Figaro," by Mozart; the Duo by Meyerbeer; the Wedding March, by Mendelssohn; with a Brazilian melody, a Portuguese dance, "Il Terremoto," and Corale (Protestant).

The approach and the effect of the earthquake are powerfully indicated—the subterranean roar—the darkness—the appalling crash—the horror and the desolation. We next see the ships foundering, and the convents, &c., in process of destruction with which the lowering sky only too visibly threatens them. All is terror and despair. But this passes, and the site of the city returns, now covered with ruins where so lately we contemplated the glories of architecture—all by the visitation of an inscrutable Providence, involved in one common wreck, with more than thirty thousand of its dwellers. A more magnificent series of pictorial wonders cannot be imagined; and we doubt not that it will be generally the public patronage. The work also has been all produced under the direction of the late Mr. W. Bradwell, and has been painted by Messrs. Danson and Son, to whom the execution of this splendid task does the highest possible credit.

DIORAMA OF THE ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

The charming scenery of her Majesty's Visit to Ireland has afforded Mr. Philip Phillips, the well-known scenic artist, the subject of a very attractive picture, or series of pictures, which he is exhibiting in the Chinese Gallery, at Hyde Park Corner. Mr. Phillips, a short time before the arrival of her Majesty at Cork, made Queenstown his head-quarters, and there witnessed the arrival of the Royal fleet, and then attended in the steam-tug, so as to sketch the leading points and incidents of the progress. The passage leading to the Saloon in which the picture is shown, represents "the Harebyke of Cork." The Diorama commences with a View of Queenstown, and the Landing of the Queen and the Prince; next is the Royal Squadron at anchor. The succession of marine scenery is cleverly painted, as are also the mountain heights. The Lakes of Killarney: Dunloe (with the moon rising); Ross Castle (in the morning); Tore Mountain and Cascade (here introduced), have the effect of highly-finished pictures. The scene shifts to a glimpse of the miseries of the country, in the roofless village, the ruined tower, associated with the cruelty of a Irish wedding; the Royal Squadron in Waterford Harbour; the Tuscar Lighthouse, with a blackening storm; and Killarney, in all its loveliness, lead on to Kingstown, where the Royal debarkation is vividly depicted, as is also the departure for the north Clontarf, Drogheda at sunset, Dundalk by moon light, and Castleblaney at midnight, are the next prominent features; Armagh, with its cathedral-crowned summit, succeeds; then, Bangor at sunrise; Carrickfergus, with the Royal fleet; and the splendid reception of her Majesty at Belfast completes the series.

Had we not in the last Volume of our Journal so fully illustrated the scenery of the Royal visit, we should have devoted more space to this picture, which is exquisitely painted pictures, which not only merits the highest commendation as a work of art, but as a graceful commemoration of one of the most felicitous of Royal progresses.

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION OF 1851.

Her Majesty's Commissioners for promoting the Exhibition of 1851 have had under their consideration the subject of the prizes to be awarded to exhibitors, and have resolved to take immediate steps for having medals struck of various sizes and different designs, it being their opinion that this is the form in which it will, generally speaking, be most desirable that the rewards should be distributed. They will endeavour to secure the assistance of the most eminent artists of all countries in producing the medals, which will, they hope, be valuable as works of art of the highest class, besides serving as memorials of the events in connexion with the Exhibition. They have decided to select bronze for the material in which the medals are to be executed, considering that metal to be better calculated than any other for the development of superior skill and ingenuity in the medallic art, and, at the same time, the most likely to constitute a lasting memorial of the Exhibition. A notice, stating the conditions of competition, will be issued without delay.

With regard to the mode in which the prizes are to be awarded, the Commissioners think it inexpedient to establish beforehand rules so precise as to fetter the discretion of the juries upon which the task will ultimately devolve. It will be sufficient for the present to indicate the general principles to which it will probably be advisable to conform in the award of prizes for successful competition in the several departments of the Exhibition.

In the department of raw materials and products, for instance, prizes will be awarded upon a consideration of the value and importance of the article, and the superior excellence of the particular specimens exhibited; and in the case of prepared materials, coming under this head of the Exhibition, the juries will take into account the novelty and importance of any improved product, and the skill and ingenuity manifested in the process of preparation.

In the department of machinery, the prizes will be given with reference to novelty in the invention, utility in the construction, and increased efficiency or increased economy in the use of the article exhibited. The importance, in a social or other point of view, of the purposes to which the article is to be applied, will also be taken into consideration, as will also the amount of the difficulties overcome in bringing the invention to perfection.

In the department of manufactures, those articles will be rewarded which fulfil in the highest degree the conditions specified in the sectional list already published; viz.—

Increased usefulness, such as permanency to dyes, improved forms and arrangements in articles of utility, &c. Superior quality or superior skill in workmanship. New use of known materials. Use of new materials. New combinations of materials, as in metal and pottery. Beauty of design in form, or colour, or both, with reference to utility. Cheapness, relatively to excellence of production.

In the department of sculpture, models, and the plastic art, the rewards will have reference to the beauty and originality of the specimens exhibited, to improvements in the processes of production, to the application of new manufactures, and, in the case of models, to the interest attaching to the subject they represent.

These general indications are sufficient to show that it is the wish of the Commissioners, as far as possible, to reward all articles in any department of the Exhibition which may appear to competent judges to possess any decided superiority, of whatever nature that superiority may be, in their own kinds. In selecting the juries the utmost care will be guided them in making their award, the Commissioners will take the greatest pains to secure the services of men of known ability to form a judgment, above the suspicion of either national or individual partiality (for instance, in the case of the Exhibition of parts of England and partly of foreigners); and who may be expected to recognise and appreciate merit wherever it may be found, and in whatever way it may show itself. The names of persons selected to act on these juries will be published when decided upon.

A question having been put to the Commissioners as to the parties who will be allowed to exhibit, and whether it will be necessary for them, as exhibitors, they avail themselves of this opportunity to state that all persons, whether being the designers or inventors, the manufacturers or proprietors, of any articles, will be allowed to exhibit such articles, with the essential condition that they assist the barrister in which they do so. In awarding the prizes, however, it will be for the juries to consider in each individual case how far the various elements of merit should be recognised, and to decide whether the prize should be awarded to the exhibitor without previous inquiry as to the character in which he exhibits.

Lastly, the Commissioners have to state that, in announcing their intention of giving medal prizes, they do not propose altogether to exclude pecuniary grants, either as prizes for successful competition or as awards under special circumstances, accompanying and in addition to the honorary distinction of the medal. There may be cases in which, on account of the condition of life of the successful competitor (as, for instance, in the case of workmen), the grant of a sum of money may be he most appropriate reward of superior excellence, and there may be other cases of a special and exceptional nature, in which, from a consideration of the expense incurred in the preparation or transmission of a particular article entitled to a prize, combined with a due regard to the condition and pecuniary circumstances of the party exhibiting, a special grant may with propriety be added to the honorary distinction. The Commissioners are not prepared, for the present at least, to establish any regulations on these heads. They consider it probable that a wide discretion must be left to the juries to be hereafter appointed fu re-pect to the award of money prizes, or the grant of money in aid of honorary distinctions; it being understood that such discretion is to be exercised under the superintendence and control of the commission.

The Commissioners will resume the consideration of this subject as soon as they shall be able to calculate the cost of the dies and the execution of the medals on the preparation of which they have decided.

The Queen's Commissioners for Promoting the Works of Industry of all Nations hereby give notice—

That it is their intention to give medals as rewards in the forthcoming Exhibition; and they therefore invite the artists of all countries to enter into competition for the production of such medals, subject to the following conditions:—

1. It is intended to strike three bronze medals of different sizes and different designs.

2. The obverses of these medals, for which no designs are required, will contain portraits of her Majesty, and of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and will be executed in this country.

3. Three prizes of £50 each will be given for the three designs for the reverses which may appear the most meritorious, and most suitable to the purposes of the Commissioners

4. Three prizes of £50 each will be given for the three best designs which are not accepted.

5. The reverses should be illustrative of the objects of the exhibition, or appropriate as the rewards of successful competition.

6. The designs are to be sent to the secretaries of the Commission on or before the 1st of June, 1850. They must be nine inches in diameter, executed in bas-relievo in plaster of Paris.

7. A space must be reserved for a short inscription.

8. The same artist may compete for all the three medals.

9. The name of the designer is to be sent in a sealed paper attached to the design. This paper will not be opened till the Commissioners have decided to whom the prize should be awarded.

10. The Commissioners postpone consideration of the execution of the dies, reserving to themselves the right to reject all the designs sent in, and to make other arrangements for executing the successful designs as may appear to them to be the best.

The Lord Mayor has had the high gratification to receive a communication from Prince Albert, of which the following is a copy.—

Buckingham Palace, March 23, 1850.

My dear Lord,—His Royal Highness cannot allow the medals struck under his auspices by your Lordship on Thursday last to be passed over without endeavouring to express the gratification which he derived from it. He commands me to thank you very much for the kindness of the whole proceeding, and to say that the entertainment could not have been more magnificent. your Lordship on the complex success which bids fair to attend this endeavour to unite all the varieties and classes throughout the British Empire in the work of the Exhibition of 1851.

For himself, his Royal Highness desires me to add that he shall ever look back with true pleasure on an evening which was to him, personally, one of unmixed satisfaction and gratification. (Signed) C. GREY.

Hereford Cathedral, which has been closed for a long period of time for restoration, under the guidance of the late Mr. Cottingham, was opened in part a few days ago for Divine service. The nave is completed, and here the temporary arrangements have been made for service, a screen having been erected at the junction with the transept. The lower part of the nave is Norman (the work of Bishop Robert of Lorrain, commenced 1097, and finished 1115), and the upper part is Early English (1250). The restoration of this portion has been made perfect, much of it being entirely new. The nave is paved with back and red tiles in patterns; and the vaulting, which is of plaster, has been decorated with colour, in a manner not soon encountered with the greatness of the work in hand. This decoration consists of brown scroll-work, with medallions. The vaulting of the aisles is also painted, and with better effect. The ceiling under the tower, at the cross, not included in the part opened, is decorated in blue and gold. The trumpets and choir are in a ruinous state, and give some notion of the extent of the work which must have been done in the nave. The exquisitely beautiful Lady Chapel and parts about it have been thoroughly restored externally. The new gable crosses here are over large.

St. Mary's Church, Atherstone, which has just been erected by Messrs. Broadbent and Hawley, was last week consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Worcester. His Lordship preached on occasion preached in the morning, and the Rev. R. C. Savage, Hon. rary Canon of Worcester, Rural Dean of Atherstone, and Vicar of Nuneaton, in the afternoon.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Comparative cessation of business, with a gradual decline in the French rentes the latter arising from the unsatisfactory position of financial affairs—has had a depressing influence upon the English funds and shares. Consols opened on Monday at a decline on Saturday last's price, quoting 95¾ ⅞; and after touching 95⅝, again receded to the earlier quotation. Intelligence of a fall of two per cent. in Rentes having been received on Tuesday, the weakness in the market was increased, and bargains were done at 95⅜; a rally towards the close of business making the last price 95¾ to ⅞. On Wednesday there was more buoyancy, it having been the depression of Tuesday was the cause of temporary assistance by sales made to settle a large bull account. This improved tone continued on Thursday, and Consols advanced to 96, with a firm market at the close. Exchequer Bills have been in request again this week, showing a preference on the part of capitalists for temporary investments. Good Friday was, as usual, a close holiday at the Stock Exchange and all the public offices. The closing quotations of the Stocks were are, for Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 96 ⅞; India Bonds, under £1000, 98 p.; Consols for Account, 96; Exchequer Bills, £1000 June, 66 p.

The Foreign Market has been heavy during the week, and, although the settlement passed off with a greater facility than was expected, prices have not since betrayed any increased buoyancy. Danish Scrip became flat towards the close of the week, after having advanced to 2¾ to 3 pm. Russian Scrip is also heavy. It appears that a feeler is put forth, with regard to another conversion of Mexican Stock. The last proposal is to appropriate four millions of the American Indemnity money, and give a Three per Cent. Stock. Those who believed in the paying a Five per Cent. dividend, with any thing approaching punctuality, must have been very sanguine persons indeed. Three per Cent. is somewhat nearer probability, but still not near enough to be remunerative to them. The prices of the shares are scarcely varied in anything, it is a point flatter. The market at the close of the week was dull, at the following prices:—Brazilian Bonds, 89; Buenos Ayres Bonds, Six per Cent., 80; Chilian Bonds, Five per Cent., 93; Ditto, Scrip, 2¾ pm. Equadorian Bonds, 8¾; Mexican, Five per Cent., Account, 29¼; Ditto, Account, 29¼; Peruvian Bonds, Four per Cent., 72¼; Ditto, Account, 72¼; Ditto, Deferred, 27¼; Portuguese, Four per Cent., Account, 39; Russian Scrip, 1¾ p; Spanish, Five per Cents., Account, 16¼; Ditto, Passive, 3¼; Ditto, Deferred, 1¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., Account, 35¾; French Rentes, Five per Cent., 90f. 50c.; Exchange, 25f. 80c.; Belgian, Four-and-a-half per Cent., 98¾; Dutch, Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 61¼; Ditto, Four per Cent., Certificates, 96¼.

Shares have been and continue depressed, no signs of increased confidence being perceptible. The meeting of the proprietors of the Caledonian Railway on Thursday, has not given the stock any impetus, it being evident that neither the Guarantees and Preference Stocks must yield to terms. This is calculated to impair the feeling in favour of Preference Stocks generally, a belief having hitherto existed that, in the event of a compromise, all classes of the shareholders were safe. It may, however, be hoped that this line will prove a solitary instance of the contrary, although we fear it will not. The closing prices are:—Aberdeen, Preferences, ¼ dis.; Buckinghamshire, 17; Caledonian, 8¾; Ditto, New, £10 Shares, 2¼; Chester and Holyhead, 8⅝; Ditto, Preference, 7⅜; Eastern Counties, 7⅛; Ditto, Extension, Five per Cents., No. 2, £6, ¾ p.; East Lincolnshire, Guaran. Six per Cent., 2⅜; Edinb. and Glasgow, 26, Great Northern, 7½; Ditto, Five per Cent. Obscure

NEW BOOKS, &c.

Price 5s. 6d., Dedicated to the Welsh Nation, the New Poem written in Rhymes, without accent, on the Welsh system of Alliteration,

THE PENSIVE WANDERER. In Four Cantos. With Notes and the Effect of Rome, an Ode, and other Poems By CAMBRIA'S BARD —Sold for the Author by W. THOMAS, pub isher, 21, Catherine street.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
Now ready, at all the Libraries in 3 vols.

MR. WARBURTON'S NEW ROMANCE.
REGINALD HASTINGS:
A Tale of the Troubles in 16—.

II
DIARY of a LADY'S TRAVELS in BARBARY. 2 vols. 21s bound.

III
THE NEW NOVEL, PRIDE and IRRESOLUTION. By the Author of "The Discipline of Life." 3 vols.

"I envy I merely is a searcher of the human race—sea of the human heart. It is long since we read a work with so much pleasure."—Morning Post.

IV
AN EASTER OFFERING. By FREDERIKA BREMER. Translated by MARY HOWITT, from the unpublished Swedish Manuscript. 1 vol. elegantly bound, 5s. (immediately.)

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

NEW ENTERTAINING PERIODICAL.
Now ready, No 1., price 6d., of

THE TOWN AND COUNTRY MISCELLANY; a Monthly Journal of Light and Entertaining Literature Edited by ALBERT SMITH.

DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street; and all Booksellers in Town and Country.

OLD LONDON ILLUSTRATED.
Now ready, in 1 vol. 8vo, cloth gilt, price 12s. 6d.

VESTIGES OF OLD LONDON: A Series of finished Etchings from Original Drawings, with Descriptions, Historical Illustrations, and Critical Observations. By WYKEHAM ARCHER. Price 6s., India Proofs, 10s 6d.; coloured after the Original Drawings 15s.

DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street

On the 1st of April, price One Shilling, No. 2 of

THE LADY'S LIBRARY; entitled, the Book of Beauty and Fashion. With numerous Illustrations.

London: DARTON and Co., Holborn-hill, and Sold by all Booksellers and Station ers, and at all Railway Book and Print Repositories

Complete in One Vo ume, price 10s. cloth gilt,

FRANK FAIRLEGH; or, Scenes from the Life of a Private Pupil. With Thirty Illustrations by George Cruikshank. Forming the First Volume of Engravings, now, for the first time, offered to the Public in a Complete Form, and the Original Drawings for the Circulating Library, Bookhouse m and Book Club.—London: A. HALL, VIRTUE, and Co., 3, Paternoster-row.

Now Ready, Price Two Shillings,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON READING BOOK.

Companion to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK containing a Series of Lessons on the most amusing and instructive subjects, selected with great care from the best English Authors, in Prose and Verse. The whole Illustrated with about TWO HUNDRED and FIFTY ENGRAVINGS.

Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON News, 198, Strand, London; and sold by all Booksellers.

BOHN'S CLASSICAL LIBRARY.—VIRGIL, literally translated by Davidson, careful y revised, with additional Notes by Thomson and Beasley, B.A. of Christ Church. The previous volumes are Euripides, 1 vy, Aristotle, Æschy us, Sophocles, Plato, Thucydides, and Herodotus. With or without Notes.

London: H. G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden

BOHN'S SHILLING SERIES.—PEOPLE I HAVE MET, by N. P. WILLIS A double volume, price 1s. 6d. The Life of Mahomet, with a History of the Saracens, by Abdallah. Irving's Life of Mohammed and Emerson's Representative Men

HENRY G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden.

Also now ready, in one or two volumes,

BOHN'S ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY.—
I. LODGE'S PORTRAITS OF ILLUSTRIOUS PERSONAGES of GREAT BRITAIN, with Memoirs and Illustrations, 240 Portraits beautifully engraved on steel Vol. 6. The re ma ning volumes will appear punctually until the last volume is complete, after which will follow other works of the same high character.

HENRY G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden.

Price in cloth gilt, or cloth gilt, 1s 6d.

POPULAR LIBRARY.—NEW VOLUMES.
By HERMANN MELVILLE
TYPEE; or a Residence in the Marquesas Islands.
OMOO; or, Adventures in th South Seas
Price 1s each.
1 Oliver Goldsmith. By Washington Irving.
2 Representative Men By R. W Emerson.
3 Mahomet (Life of). By Washington Irving.
London: GEO ROUTLEDGE and Co., Soho-square, and all booksellers, newsmen, and railway stations.

THE ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY VOLUME,
Part 1., Price 0. 6 shillings, contains Views along the River Euphrates, Paradise, Babel, the Confusion of tongues, Bibl Nimrud, the Tower of Babel, the Ministers of Israel, Rebecca, Babylon, the Hanging Gardens, the Palace, the Court, Daniel, the Great Image, the Burning fiery Furnace, Belshazzar, the Writing on the Wall, Cyrus, the Annals Nagni of Babylon, &c &c., with many beautiful Illustrations.
S. COX, 12, King William-street, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers

SECOND EDITION.
THE GUIDE to WATER-COLOUR PAINTING. By H. P. ROBLE.
With an Illustration in Colours.
Price 1s 6d stitched, or 2s bound in cloth; post free, 6d extra.

GUIDE to OIL PAINTING.
By J. S. TEMPLETON.
Price One Shilling, or, post free, 1s 6d.

THE FINE ARTS ALMANACK, or, ARTISTS' REMEMBRANCER of 1850.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s 6d,
Containing 176 closely printed pages of valuable information connected with the Fine Arts not to be met with in any other publication.
London: GEO. ROUTLEDGE and Co., Soho-square, London

Just Published, 2 vo umes imperial 8vo, with 36 plates, handsomely bound in cloth, 42 s 6d.

WANDERINGS of a PILGRIM in search of the PICTURESQUE, during Four-and Twenty Years in the EAST; with REVELATIONS of LIFE in the ZENANA.

By فانی پارکس

Illustrated with sketches from Nature.
PELHAM RICHARDSON, 23, Cornhill.

Just published, 8vo, 10s 6d.

REVELATIONS of EGYPTIAN MYSTERIES, from the Papyri, Hieroglyphs, Cylinders, Tablets, and Recollections of an Initiated Priest. Translated from the Original Manuscript, and illustrated with Fac-similes of the Mystical Papyri and Hieroglyphs. By Miss MEE, Author of "Child of the Sea," &c. "Miss Mee's revelations, according to her own account, are of a most startling character."—Morning Herald. "Miss Mee has, according to her own account, had the most extraordinary opportunities of becoming acquainted with them, and has been recommended to archæological writers; but it is necessary to search through many volumes to find even a limited number of facts, and the present work will undoubtedly save a great variety in the arrangement, at the same time, a peculiar charm is given to the narrative, which renders it a book of great curiosity and interest. To the historian and Antiquary the proposed work will be of great importance, as it will illustrate the character of the people; to the lover of ancient Art, for the beauty of most of the objects represented; and to the student in the general reader are the remaining of the stories which abound where so ever the theme of history and romance To the Artist these illustrations will be of essential imp rtance and to the manufacturer of scarce any less value, as the Re-hus the se we are in most cases, richer of exquisite beauty of form or string and abstract orna ic style, and, by furnishing data, will enable him to carry out designs in the style peculiar to all periods.
It is proposed to publish the Work in Monthly Parts, containing three Plates drawn with the most scrupulous fidelity, and illustrative Vignettes beautifully engraved on Wood The Public will be enabled, and the aim of the Work be impartially ensured, and the latter letters sent to the Author will be greatly aided by communications respecting Relics of Historic Interest being forwarded to 199, Strand.
Price 3s 6d each Part, to be completed in Ten Parts.
Edition, 199, Strand

INFLUENCE OF WOMAN IN FRANCE.
Just published, in 2 vols, post 8vo, with Eight Portraits of remarkable French Women, price 24s., carefully bound in embossed cloth, WOMAN in FRANCE DURING the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY By JULIA KAVANAGH.

"Whilst admiring we will be ever tired of reading about the Women of France? especially when they are marshalled so agreeably and discreetly as in the pages before us."—Athenæum.

"It is delicate handled with much tact and taste; and the book shows often an original line of remark, and always a graceful and flowing style."—Spectator.

"Delightful volumes, not only of immense interest, but of permanent value."—Britannia.

"An attractive and pleasant book on an important subject, teaching history in a delightful manner."—Morning Post.

London: SMITH, ELDER and Co. 65, Cornhill.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.
LE PROPHETE.—The PIANISTA. No. 117 and 118 (now ready), 2s each, contains the grand opera Les Huguenots, Roberto, Der Freischutz, Crown Diamonds, and 40 other Operas, 2s each. Any three Nos., 5s 6d, post free. Val d'Andorra (French and English words), 2s.—Pianista Oldies, 16s, Argyll-street, Oxford-street, and 67, Paternoster-row.—Catalogues, two stamps

NEW SONG.—"ONE CARELESS WORD," the words by MARY HOWITT, the music by J. BARNETT. This is one of the happiest efforts of the celebrated composer: the words, of a novel and pleasing character, have evidently inspired him to compose a song which will rank with his publish estimation his favourite ballads, "The Soldier's Tear," "I will be true to thee," "The Rover's Bride," "The Gondolier," &c. It is in the range of most voices, the highest note being F.

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street

"LET US BE JOYOUS;" "Peace to Thee;" "Bee-ah thy Casement;" "Gay Lark!" "Adieu ye Woods!" "No form but Thine."—The six highly successful songs, price 2s each, composed by FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, and sung in WALLACE LUNN'S Library and Musical Evening

"We were delighted with 'Bessie's Casement' and 'Let us be joyous, which last was cuddy encored."—Daily News.

ADDISON and Co., 210, Regent-street.

THE STANDARD LYRIC DRAMA.—A Series of Complete FOREIGN OPERAS, with the Original Text, and an English Version (the Most Complete and Cheapest Edition ever published), in Half-crown Monthly Parts, and in Volumes.

Edited, with a Dual version of English Words, by
J. WIREY MOULD,
Revised from the Original Scores, &c. &c., by
W. S. ROCKSTRO,
(Pupil of Dr. FELIX MENDELSSOHN-Bartholdy)

Vol I. Figaro ... ... (6 Pts.) Mozart. 16s. 6d. boards.
Vol II. Semira ... ... (4 Pts.) Rodini. 12s. 6d. boards
Vol III. Il Seviglere ... ... (6 Pts.) Rossini. 16s. 6d. boards
Vol IV. La Sonn ambu a ... (5 Pts.) Bellini. 12s. 6d. boards.
Vol V. Le Pirate ... ... (5 Pts.) Wbid. 12s. 6d. boards.
Vol. VI. Don Juan ... ... (7 Pts.) Mozart. Now publishing.

J. E. BOOSEY and Co., Holles-street

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN.
LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, and WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITS for HOME, INDIA, and the COLONIES, are supplied by JOHN CAPPER and SON, 68, Gracechurch-street, LONDON, under competent, female superintendence. The prices are economical, and the workmanship excellent.
BABY LINEN, of superior work, decidedly CHEAP.
Parcels of 25 pounds throughout the Kingdom free of all railway carriage.
SAMPLES, which may be returned, SENT for inspection on receipt of a London reference or money-order.
LISTS, with PRICES sent POST-PAID

NOTTINGHAM.—PARISIAN MILLINERY.—To Cash Purchasers wishing to avoid the charges of private Millinery. Compare the following Prices:—Fronts Satin or Glacie Hats Bounets, all colours Cap, &c., complete, 12s 9d to 16s 9d. Morning Satin, or Fancy Straw Bonnets, Crape, 10s 6d to 14s 6d; Widows Bonnets, with Double Crape Veil, 14s 6d to 16s 6d; White or Black Lace, elegantly finished, 15s to 18s 6d. Bonnets Shape, all colours, drawn or Paris net shapes, 1s 6d to 1s 9d; Paris ! hips for Brides, Our Guinea cash; Fine Sewn Chips, 8s 6 d to 10s; White Bonnets Chips, 2s 6d to 3s 6d; Bonnable White Straws, the new shape, 2s 11d to 3s 11d; Fine Hats Straws, 3s 11d to 5s 11d, Leghorn Hats, Fancy Straws, 4s 11d to 6s 11d; Bonnets Shapes, all colours, drawn or Paris net shapes, 1s 6d to 1s 9d; Paris ! hips for Brides, Our Guinea cash; Fine Sewn Chips, 8s 6 d to 10s; White Bonnable which is the case frequently when angling with the gorge or snap, to the distance of eight or ten miles up a river and back again, trolling forwards and backwards." We are, however, inclined to think that it is merely a corruption of trailing; and that it relates to the angler's mode of trailing the bait through the water—in contradistinction to his keeping it stationary as in float-fishing—and not to his own motion, strolling backward and forward on the banks of the stream.

TROLLING FOR JACK.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

TROLLING FOR JACK.

(Continued from page 222.)

In trolling, a rod about fourteen feet long is commonly used, with a stouter top-piece than is employed in fly-fishing, and provided with rings for the line to run through. A winch is necessary; and the line should be a strong one, of silk, or silk and hair, and not less than forty yards long. Any small fish, such as roach, dace, trout, par, gudgeon, or bleak, may serve for bait; but generally, for all seasons and all weathers, roach is the best. The hook used ought to be a double one, of the kind known as eel hooks: the shank is fastened to a piece of twisted brass wire, about two or three inches long; and this is covered with lead from within an inch of the eye at its top to half-way down the shank of the hook. About nine inches of strong gimp is made fast to the eye in the brass wire, and then attached by a loop to the line. In baiting this hook, a baiting needle is used, sharp at one end, and having the other turned into a small hook. The baiting needle being hooked to the loop of the gimp, is passed through the body of the fish intended or bait, entering it at the mouth and bringing it out at the tail; and the gimp is drawn through till the hooks lie on each side of the mouth. To prevent the bait slipping down the hook when trolling, the tail ought to be tied to the gimp with a piece of white silk or thread. When all is ready, the bait is cast gently into the water near to where Jack are likely to lie; and the troller, as he draws it towards him, athwart and up stream, should allow it to alternately sink and rise a little. As the Jack does not swallow the bait directly he seizes it, but makes off to some distance to pouch it, he should be allowed line freely. At the end of about eight or ten minutes, when the troller may conceive that the bait has been pouched, let him strike; and if he succeeds in hooking the fish, land his prey in the best manner he can—a matter of no very great difficulty, if his tackle be good, and the water free from stumps and weeds. A large bait is most tempting to large pike; but Jack are most likely to be hooked with a comparatively small one, say from five to seven inches long. In March and April the best time of the day for trolling for Jack is from about nine in the morning to three in the afternoon: at this season they take the bait freely in weather when scarcely any other fish will bite—for instance, in a bright day with a cold and blustering wind.

MADRAS TESTIMONIAL TO MAJOR-GENERAL SIR ROBERT DICK.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE LATE SIR ROBERT DICK.

Two sculptured memorials had already been erected to the memory of the brave Major-General Sir Robert Dick, who so gallantly fell at Sobraon, when Mr. Richardson, the sculptor, of Malbury-terrace, Marylebone, received his commission for the "Madras Testimonial." The first of these memorials was executed by Lough, for Tullymet, N.B., and was engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for June 10, 1848. The second tribute has just been placed by the 42nd Regiment in Edinburgh; and the third, here engraved, is to be erected in the Cathedral at Madras.

Mr. Richardson was commissioned to execute a testimonial emblematic of Sir Robert Dick's distinguished services, bearing in mind Quatre Bras, Waterloo, and the termination of the Major-General's glorious military career at Sobraon. The sculptor has personified by the figure of a veteran Royal Highlander, in whose 42d Regiment Sir Robert rose to the highest honours, while quite a youth commanding them at Waterloo. The models were executed from picked men at the depôt, through the kindness of Captain Macpherson, commanding. The attitude is easy, natural, and picturesque. The veteran rests on his firelock, and at his feet are a Highland shield and Sikh helmet.

Beneath the composition is a tablet bearing the following inscription:—

Sacred to the Memory of Major-Genl. Sir Robert Hy. Dick, of Tullymet, N.B., K.C.H., K.C.H., &c., who, after a brilliant military career in H.M.S 42d Royal Highlanders, and holding for some time the Chief Military Command in the Presidency of Madras, subsequently fell while gallantly leading on his division at Sobraon, Feb. 10th, 1846. Raised in grateful admiration by the public of the Presidency o Madras

It is stated by those who were intimate with Sir Robert, that, had he been consulted on the subject of his own testimonial, the one selected would have been his choice, so endeared was he to his gallant 42d. This meritorious work will, with another to the late Major Broadfoot, likewise for Madras, be on view at the artist's residence as above, during the months of May and June.

PRESENTATION OF PLATE

TO THE EX-MAYOR OF SWANSEA.

THE inhabitants of Swansea, impressed with the efficient services of their excellent late Mayor, M. J. Michael, Esq., determined, at the expiration of his year of office, to present him with a lasting testimonial of their sense of the manner in which he had executed his municipal functions. A committee was formed to carry out the general wish; and it augurs much for the estimation in which Mr. Michael is held in his native town, that, although the subscriptions were expressly limited to so small an amount as five shillings, the numbers were sufficiently large to enable the committee to select the elegant and substantial piece of Plate which we have engraved.

On Wednesday last, agreeably to an appointment, the committee waited on the worthy ex-Mayor, and, in the name of the subscribers, presented him with a Loving Cup, of silver-gilt, and a massive silver Salver. The former is an elegant vase, standing 20 inches high, bearing on the centre panel a basso-relievo of the "Visitation of the Sick;" while the reverse contains the following inscription:—

Presented to MICHAEL JOHN MICHAEL, Esq., by a large number of his fellow Townsmen, as a Testimonial of their esteem and respect for his assiduous and impartial services as a Borough Magistrate during the year of his Mayoralty, and especially for his indefatigable and fearless conduct in promoting and personally superintending those sanitary precautions which so materially tended to protect the Town of Swansea from the fatal Pestilence which it pleased Providence to inflict on neighbouring communities during the autumn of the year 1849.

A shield under the rim bears a Goat statant, and a garter with "Per Vias Rectas," the crest and motto of Mr Michael. The Cover is surmounted by a figure of Benevolence, giving the whole a light and classic finish.

The Salver has an appropriate design engraved thereon, viz. Within an oak wreath the arms of the Borough of Swansea, supported by the corporate maces, to which are attached ribbons, with the date of Mr. Michael's mayoralty; and the crest, motto, and initials are so arranged as to perfect this really elegant piece of plate. It was supplied by Mr. Hennessey, of Swansea, from the well-known manufactures, Messrs. Barnard and Sons, of London, and does them, as well as the committee of selection, very great credit.

In conclusion, we have to remark that the Corporation of Swansea having unanimously recommended Mr. Michael to the Lord Chancellor as a proper person to be added to the commission of the peace, his Lordship has complied with the request; and we sincerely hope the worthy magistrate may long continue to enjoy his well-earned honours.

PLATE PRESENTED TO THE EX-MAYOR OF SWANSEA.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1850.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 420.—Vol. xvi.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1850. [Sixpence.

OUR CRIMINAL POPULATION.

The fifteenth annual report of the Inspectors of Prisons has just been published. The document affords matter for serious study, not only to statesmen and politicians, but to all who take an interest in the good government of the country, and the welfare of the people. Whether the great question of crime and the treatment of criminals be considered under its higher aspect as it affects morality and religion, or under its lower aspect as one that simply touches the pockets of a tax-ridden community, it is one of the highest importance. The reports of Mr. Frederick Hill, the Inspector of the Northern and Eastern Districts, to which the present document more especially refers, invariably contain matter which, when viewed under either of these heads, suggests anxious reflections upon our present and future prospects as a nation. What are we to do with our criminals? is the question of one class of thinking men. Why should we have such large numbers of criminals? is the question of another; while a third raise the still more pregnant question—Is it not almost entirely our own fault that we have any criminals at all?

As regards the present generation of men, who live amidst the increasing crime, which is the most unhappy fact and the most disgraceful feature of our civilisation—the opinions of the best informed are greatly divided. One class, with the eccentric Mr. Carlyle at their head, would deal with criminals upon the old system: they would flog, starve, chain, hang, behead, or quarter them—do anything, in fact, to extirpate them from the land as fast as they sprout up amongst us, like noxious and over-prolific weeds. As for trying to reform them, that is out of the question. Criminals may be men, but they are not the brothers of the disciples of this school. "Brothers!" says Mr. Carlyle, "how can they be our brothers? They are our enemies." How he would treat them all appears from his address to an imaginary criminal—the type of the whole class—whom he thus apostrophizes, in his pamphlet entitled "Model Prisons:"—"Caitiff!" exclaims this wrathful prophet of the latter days, "we hate thee! We—not to be partakers in thy destructive adventure of defying God and all the Universe—dare not allow thee to continue any longer amongst us. As a palpable deserter from the ranks where all men, at their eternal peril, are bound to be—palpable deserter, taken with the red hand, fighting thus against the whole Universe and its laws, we send thee back into the whole Universe; solemnly expel thee from our community; and will, in the name of God—not with joy and exultation, but with sorrow stern as thy own—hang thee on Wednesday next, and so end." "Hopeless for ever," he continues, "is the method of love with criminals. These abject, ape, wolf, ox, imp, and other diabolic animal specimens of humanity, who of the very Gods could ever have commanded them by love? A collar round the neck, and a cart-whip flourished over the back—these, in a just and steady human hand, were what the Gods would have appointed them." It is not many men who speak like this Habakkuk of the Gentiles, but there is a good sprinkling of people who think this trenchant mode of undoing the knotty question is the only proper one, and that all mercy is misplaced which is shown to criminals.

Another class would run to the opposite extreme, and lodge the delinquents in the model-prisons which so powerfully raise the bile of the philosopher just quoted, and give them, to use his words, "light work—picking oakum and the like—in airy apartments, with glass roofs, of agreeable temperature and perfect ventilation;" and feed them on "bread, cocoa, soup, meat and other kinds of food—all of excellence superlative." Mr. Frederick Hill, in his valuable report, points out the abuses of this misplaced tenderness and indulgence—abuses which lead large numbers of people to look upon the prison as a resource in their distress; a place of warmth, comfort, and plenty, to which they may betake themselves when duly qualified by the commission of a crime. "The prisoners," says he, "pass a great deal too much time in bed—in mid-winter not less than fourteen hours out of the twenty-four; a practice which must tend to enfeeble both the mind and the body, and to create habits of sloth, which are inconsistent with the power of earning an honest livelihood." The average cost per head of the prisoners throughout the northern and eastern districts of England is £22 per annum, exclusive of any charges for rent or repairs of prisons—a sum exceeding the wages of an agricultural labourer employed all the year round, which few of them are, at the rate of eight shillings a week. Many hundreds and thousands of honest men in our large towns, as well as in the rural districts, would think themselves happy if they could earn steadily every year such a sum as this. To the tens of thousands of needlewomen in London and Liverpool, £22 per annum would be a fortune. Sixpence per day for twelve or fourteen hours close labour, or three shillings per week, is the average reward of the needlewomen; so that a person who commits an offence against life or property costs the country three times as much as an honest needlewomen can earn. In other words, society bestows upon one thief as much money—to say nothing of the care, supervision, the ventilation, the sanitary arrangements, and the house-room—as would feed, clothe, and lodge, according to the present scale of miserable discomfort and squalor, three struggling and honest shirt-makers.

In the south of Ireland, the unhappy rate-payer—the man only a shade above pauperism himself—is clad in "windowed raggedness," lives upon potatoes and Indian meal, and tastes animal food but once in a twelvemonth; but in the beautiful and well-conducted convict establishment of Spike Island, in the Cove of Cork, the convict has warm clothing and a generous diet, including meat once, or even twice a week! Well may the remonstrances of the Inspectors of Prisons be raised against such a system as this; and well may the wrathful denunciations of Mr. Carlyle be heard against this "rose-water method" and this pampering of criminality.

THE "ROYAL ADELAIDE," STEAM-SHIP, ON HER PASSAGE FROM CORK TO LONDON—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Society is utterly puzzled what to do. It cannot be ferocious, as Mr. Carlyle would recommend; neither can it continue, without the most imminent and deadly peril, to make the condition of the felon preferable to that of the honest labourer. It therefore tries a third system of repression. Sometimes it endeavours to work upon the feelings of the prisoner, by shutting him up in dreadful and intolerable solitary confinement, forbidding him to open his mouth to his fellow-creatures; this system, however, produces insanity, and we then become burdened with the permanent support of a lunatic. This will evidently not answer as a financial speculation, even if the community could reconcile itself to the odious cruelty of it. There is, therefore, but one other plan, which is to set the prisoners to work, under proper guidance, and compel them to earn their own livelihood. But, here again, we are met, as in the other two cases of severity and of indulgence, by weighty and well-founded objections. If we employ prisoners in this manner, we transform our prisons into huge establishments—national workshops—to bring down the price of labour, and to reduce the honest labourers outside of their walls into a state of pauperism. Clearly this is a wrong system. It is full of injustice and cruelty, and sacrifices the honest man upon the altar of knavery. The state and the people are both at their wits' end upon this troublesome, this ever-recurring nuisance and abomination. We can neither take vengeance on our criminals nor show mercy to them; nor confine them separately, for fear of madness; nor in numbers for fear of utter contamination; nor keep them idle, nor employ them, without doing mischief. Turn which way we will, a huge difficulty confronts us, from which the weak-minded and careless, or those who are anxious to escape the perpetual annoyance of its presence, rush into Mr. Carlyle's remedy, and call out for the hangman as the sole reformer that can save society from its own wicked children.

Society is rightly served. It has sown criminals, and it must reap them. It has itself to blame or to praise for the ever-abundant crop. There the result is—and it must be dealt with somehow, at whatever cost and trouble, or still worse evils will befall us.

But there is one plan which has never been tried yet, and which, after all, is the only plan likely to be of any service. That plan is to forbear from sowing criminals. Instead of cutting off the supply of the next generation, if we can do nothing effectual with the adults and youths of the present race. The sources of crime are poverty and ignorance. As long as these are increased by our selfish and bad laws on the one hand, and by our immoral and irreligious neglect on the other, so long must we expect to have a copious supply of criminals. The one evil begets the other; and their mutual brood is indeed "LEGION." Every step we take to free industry from its shackles, to extend trade, and to increase the productive employment of the masses, is a step towards the diminution of crime; and every effort we make towards establishing a complete and efficient system of education for the whole people, to which the humblest shall have a legal right, an education physical, intellectual, and religious—not one, but all of these three—will be a step towards its extirpation. A well-employed, a temperate, a cleanly, a well-lodged, and a decently-clad population will supply but few criminals; and the few that may arise will not be felons, but lunatics. Until we employ both these remedial agencies, we must expect to be "pestered," as Mr. Carlyle phrases it, with thieves and felons, with huge prisons, and an enormous taxation.

WRECK OF THE "ROYAL ADELAIDE" STEAMER, AND FEARFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

THE City of Dublin Steam-Packet Company's ship, Royal Adelaide, Capt. John Batty, plying between the ports of Cork and London, left the former city on the afternoon of Wednesday week, with a full cargo of goods and about 250 passengers; touched off Plymouth on Thursday evening; left that port for London on Friday morning at 8 o'clock, and was totally lost on the Tongue Sand, off Margate, at 11 o'clock on Saturday night, when there is too much reason to fear every soul on board perished.

The Royal Adelaide was due at the Dublin, Belfast, and Cork steam-wharf, Lower East Smithfield, on Saturday evening; but, as a strong head wind prevailed against all vessels coming up Channel, no apprehensions were entertained little anxiety; but the misgivings that arose on her non-appearance the following morning were fearfully realised in the afternoon, when, at four o'clock, the first intimation of this terrible catastrophe was received by the bearer of the melancholy intelligence was William Coe, a river pilot, in the serv ce of the company, who was in waiting at Gravesend to take charge of the Royal Adelaide from that place to the Pool. About two o'clock on Sunday, one Charles G Iman, a Deal pilot, who had that morning brought a large bargeon Channel, which was then lying at anchor off Gravesend, saw Coe and informed him that on Saturday evening, shortly after he had taken charge of the barque, which he had just brought up the river, a large black steamer, without figure-head, and having a great many passengers on deck, passed his ship steaming up Channel The sea was running very high, a d he could not make out the name on the steamer, but she bore every resemblance to the boats of the Dublin Company. G Iman also stated that at eleven o'clock the same night, shortly after having passed the Tongue light-ship, when about 15 miles from the coast of Margate, his barque passed a large steamer about three-quarters of a mile distant, from which signals or distress were fired in rapid succession. The steamer, from her position, was evidently on the sand, but as the wind blew a perfect gale G Iman said it was quite impossible to render any assistance They threw up rockets in reply to the signals, in the hope that they might be seen from the shore; but the night was coming on thick at the time, and he believed there was too much reason to fear they had never been seen. The description of the vessel given by G Iman corresponding exactly with that of the Royal Adelaide, especially the absence of any figure-head to the ship, a peculiarity which marks nearly the whole fleet of steamers belonging to this company, Coe satisfied that the worst apprehensions were realised, and that the unfortunate ship wrecked on the sand was no other than that for which he had been so long and so anxiously looking. He immediately came on to London with Gilman, and communicated the sad intelligence to the company's manager, Mr. Lee.

Mr. Manning, master of the Malcolm Brown screw-steamer, which arrived on Sunday night from Guernsey, reports as follows:—

"About nine o'clock on Sunday morning, when off the North Foreland, we discovered the wreck of a large steamer, on the Tongue Sand, ten miles off the shore, and between two and three miles of the Tongue light-ship As far as the weather would permit us, which was very stormy, the wind blowing almost a gale from the S.S.W., we got within three-quarters of a mile of the spot where she lay, and perceived her stern was apparently gone; also her masts, funnel, and everything swept clean off, and not a soul was to be seen on board. We endeavoured to find out her name, but could not; and it was evident she was fast breaking up. The framework of her two paddle boxes was standing, and the stanchions of the bulwarks, but the boards were gone. There was no vessel near, except a coal brig, under sail, some miles to the eastward of the Girdler The appearance of the broken off stumps of the mast, is quite new, showing clearly that the occurrence must have taken place recently. It had blown a heavy gale the night previous, and there was a tremendous sea running. It was probable she struck on the sands about midnight, and everything being swept away, even to her masts, leaves very little doubt of all on board having met with a watery grave. A dreadful sea always rushes during a gale in the portion of the Prince's Channel, and on Sunday morning it was sweeping over the wreck terrifically. Although it lies within ten miles of the North Foreland, it does not seem likely of being discovered from the land, on account of its being very low, and partly under the sands. The steamer was a long, running S.E. by S. and W.N.W. On the Saturday evening Captain Manning, when his vessel was off Beachey Head, saw the smoke of a steamer to the eastward. He suspected it was that of the unfortunate vessel.

The master of the Cornwall (Dublin steamer), Higgins, reports passing the wreck, on the Tongue Sand, at eight o'clock on Monday morning. She had broken up, and the framework of her machinery was the only portion visible above water.

The master of the Roscommon (steamer), arrived in the river from Holland, also reports having passed a large quantity of the wreck of a steamer on the Tongue Sand, and several articles bearing the private marks of the company to which the Royal Adelaide belonged. The Roscommon, having cattle on board, was obliged to continue her voyage, to save the cattle.

The Royal Adelaide was between 400 and 500 tons burthen, and had two engines of 140-horse power each. She was commanded by Captain John Batty, of Cork, who had been in the service of the Dublin Steam-Packet Company upwards of twenty years. The crew, in addition to the Captain, consisted of three mates, one carpenter, two engineers, two coal-trimmers, six firemen, six men before the mast, a steward and stewardess, and a cook. At Plymouth she landed five horses, 26 head of cattle, three calves, nine pigs, some cheese, butter, &c. She brought about six cabin, and say 150 deck passengers, from Ireland, and embarked six cabin and six deck passengers at Plymouth. Of these, Mr. Payne was a surgeon, and had resided for some time past at Albany-place, Pentonville, where some of his family were left to follow by another entry Mrs. Mary Ann Hurst was the wife of a coachman in a gentleman's family residing on the Surrey side of the river, about twelve miles from the city. She was married only at Christmas, and had been on a visit to her relations at her native place. Lostwithiel, whence she took with her a sister, Miss Jane Watter, as a companion to London. Ann Welsh, 35, of No. 16, Mulberry-street, Deptford, had three children, 14, 9, and 6, with her, and left behind a fourth, a son, aged 17, employed at the ship-building yard of Mr. Banks, Frank's-quarry, Mount Edgcumbe. Ann Welsh took her furniture, and was going to join her husband, John Welsh, a boatswain on board of a man-of-war, at Woolwich.

It was for a time hoped that intelligence might be received from the French ports of a portion of the passengers and crew of the ill-fated steamer having been picked up alive. This was thought probable, as there have been frequent instances of vessels going into land on the Goodwin and Margate Sands, and the crews rescued by the French luggers. No such preservation do the unhappy creatures on board of the Royal Adelaide appear to have met with, and no doubt now exists that every soul was lost.

Only two bodies have been as yet recovered, and they were picked up in the neighbourhood of the wreck. Neither of the poor fellows appears to have died from drowning. They seem to have perished in the water. Both of these bodies were provided with life-preservers in the shape of large corks tied round the chest and back, the one having ten and the other five, each about as large as a brick. There was nothing found on either of their persons leading to positive identification, but, from some letters found upon the one, and the name of "Coe" written inside the boot of the other, there does not appear to be much doubt on the subject. The one, from his dress, would appear to have been the mate of the vessel. He wore blue trousers, a black frock-coat, a pilot over-coat, and a southwester. In his pockets were found three letters and a memorandum, but no money or other property of any description. One of the letters is written by a gentleman named Rowley, at Dublin, and is dated from Great Horner-street, Liverpool. It is addressed to Mr William Gowler, chief mate of the Leeds steamer (this vessel belongs to the Dublin Company), and communicates the death of Gowler's wife. It is dated as far back as February last. Another letter is written by Mr. P. Howell, and dated from the Dublin Steam Packet Company's Offices, Eden-quay, Dublin. It complains of some irregularities on board the company's boats, and would appear to have been handed to the deceased by a Mr. Lane, to whom he is addressed. From this it might be inferred that the unfortunate man was an officer on board the Leeds steamer, but a memorandum found in his waistcoat pocket seems to show that, at any rate, on the present voyage, he was one of the crew of the Royal Adelaide.

Two shillings and a fourpenny-piece were found upon the other deceased, and his pockets were completely full of sand, showing that he must have driven about on the bank for some time. It may be mentioned, also, that, when found, his neck was dislocated. From his dress, he appears to have been a stoker or fireman. The letters and memorandum have been handed over to Mr. Marshant, the superintendent of the Margate police.

The high winds which prevailed on Wednesday night and Thursday have destroyed almost all hopes of recovering any valuable portion of the wreck.

The spot where this melancholy event took place is one of the most dangerous in the British Channel It was within a few cables' length that a German emigrant ship went to pieces in October last, when nearly 200 lives were lost.

On the night of the disaster, the violence of the gale for the season it lasted has not been equalled for some years, that is the opinion of the oldest boatmen on this part of the coast. Numerous losses have been reported on all points of the Channel, and the Freemasons Lodge, Captain Tooker, which has arrived in the river from Cork, announces the night to have been boisterous and peculiarly dark. The vessel brought over nearly 300 deck passengers—men, women, and children; and, in order to screen them as much as possible from the surf, which was making way over the craft, and killed about a dozen beasts, the commander very humanely had as many as possible of the children taken down into the engine-room, where they procured warmth and shelter. This may convey some idea of the wrecked sufferings of those on board the Royal Adelaide previously to their de-truction.

The accounts received at Lloyd's from their respective agents on the east coast communicate the finding of more pieces of wreck and wearing-apparel belonging to the sufferers. Much of it has been found in the Swin, and the several luggers that went out to the wreck on Sunday have picked up a considerable quantity, but from its shattered state it is doubtful whether it can be brought into use.

OFFICIAL RETURN OF THE CREW DROWNED

From the owners' report of the loss of the Royal Adelaide, it appears that [illegible] William Gowler, chief mate; George North, second mate; William Scott, third mate; William Bell, chief engineer; Thomas Cook, second engineer; Charles Cook and a man John Delaney, do. Thomas Williams, do., John Doyle, do. William Bellis, do. James Moore, do. Patrick Carey, coal trimmer. Mr Isaac Wolfe, do. Mr Seagrue, saloon steward. Mr John Stamper, do. Robert Tozer, do. Joseph Morgan, do. Ambrose Turner, carpenter, Thomas Butler, boy. B Hilliard, steward. Sarah Garrity, stewardess.

Yesterday (Friday) morning, Mr. Hartley, the manager of the City of Dublin Steam Navigation Company, received from the agent at Cork an accurate list of the passengers who were shipped on board the ill-fated steamer on her leaving that port for London. They are as follows:—

WAY BILL OF THE STEAM-PACKET "ROYAL ADELAIDE," FROM CORK TO LONDON, 8TH MARCH

Ally Hicks, and N Leary Natterer, P and Sullivan Larys, wife and child; C Keane, P Delane and boy, K Reily, C Hamilton, M Creer, J Keefe E Wals and wife, C Devane, D Daly, Rowley and Collins, M. Dey, one child; C Buckley, Mary Rocks, B Murphy, E Sullivan, N Sullivan, J Fahy, P Sweet, D Young, J Higgins, wife and two children; Biddy Hoke and two children; Hurt Sullivan and two chil dren; Judy Barrett, T Murphy, J Murphy, wife, and three children, one named Margaret Hackett, Mary Richard Collins, Ellen Reardes, J Ahern, Jude Kelly, one party; Jerry Dowling, M O'Brien, D Fagan, J Cunningham, one gentleman, one servant and daughter, N Lordan, Ellen Leary, Undergar — Walsh, rogan, and Hayes, E and M Hennyson, Boyle and sister, Abraham Boyle, W Boyle, one party E Sullivan, D Cronin, Ellen Cronin, Ellen Cronin, Ellen Cronin, wife Jane Hurley, Ellen Daly, C Cronin, one party; E Crowley, M M'Carthy, S Sweeney and child, Hannah Lahive, S Shea and — Kelly M Brien, J Hogan, J Harrington, Mary Fuller, Ma y D bnell, Mary Crowley, and three sea i children, one party; four adults (no names given), J Fitzpatrick, Mary Picken and child C Sullivan, booked but did not go), Mary Flanagan (booked to —), Mary Sullivan (booked but did not go), D Regan, — Regan, J Mahony, M Shaughnessy, D Sheban (one party); — Kault, i Kault, — Quick (one party) — Cushin, C Fitzgerald, — Sweet, — Magarik, J Green, M Hennessy, — Sullivan and Wa — T Buckley, Sally Fannon, — Dwyer, M Corbet, — Noonan Mary Leary, — Fahy, D Egan, one child, soldier and servant, Sullivan, M Dennehy, — Sullivan, — Barry, Hearn and Howgan, — Murphy — Co lan, — Hingey, — Flannagan, two Sullivans, — Coughlan — Reardon, — M'Carthy, — Mellish, F Glynn, — Twomey, Ian, T Shaughnessy — Mahan, — Sullivan, and three boys (no names), — Hickey, three adults (no name)

The only cabin passenger for London was Mr. O'Callaghan, who said he might get out at Plymouth

It has been erroneously stated that the vessel was insured at Lloyd's for her full value. The only insurance effected was with the Dublin Marine Society, an association of Irish underwriters, who insured the Royal Adelaide for £8000, one-half of her estimated value.

THE RECENT STORM.—NUMEROUS SHIPWRECKS.

The fearful gale of wind on Saturday last will long be borne in melancholy recollection, not only as regards the sad fate of the Royal Adelaide steamer, but for the very great loss of property and destruction of life which it caused. In numerous instances a lamentable loss of life accompanied the casualties. The losses on the Irish coast were very heavy and calamitous.

A fine ship, named the Howard, of nearly 1000 tons burthen, was lost near Liverpool. She was bound from Mobile to Liverpool with a cargo of cotton and mahogany, valued at between £15,000 and £20,000. At daybreak on Sunday morning the crew were seen clinging to the rigging, and the life-boat stationed at Southport immediately proceeded to their assistance. The vessel struck on the sands ashore in a very exhausted condition, and one of them, John Smith, who had been previously ill, sank under his intense suffering. Their case has excited much commiseration.

Along the Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, and Northumbrian coast, casualties almost innumerable are reported. Between thirty and forty coasting vessels were driven ashore, and the bulk of them totally wrecked. Off the Humber, it was calculated, three hundred sail were lying in the Bay, Humber, and Roads, waiting for an opportune and favourable wind to make the harbour. On the evening of Saturday the wind chopped round to the S.E., but blew a heavy gale, throwing up a formidable sea. The effect of this was disastrous. Many of vessels parted, and the indication of severe weather seen coming on, the whole fleet was in the greatest confusion, making all haste to the harbour for shelter. The somewhat narrow limits of the entrance (Bunuel, and the manœuvring of the many craft to pass through it almost at the same moment, led to collisions and great destruction of spars, bulwarks, and cutwaters. Unfortunately a considerable number of vessels were driven ashore on the iron-bound rocks beneath Tynemouth Castle, and others on the sands. In number there could not have been less than thirty, and those which struck on the rocks became total wrecks. At Sunderland nearly a similar scene was witnessed. As many as 300 sail of light colliers were running for the harbour at the same moment, and at the entrance of the Tyne there were numerous collisions, and the havoc amongst even those that had got inside was very great.

At Kirkwall, on Saturday, a large barque was lost near the island of North Rona dsbay, and every soul belonging to her perished. The number cannot at present be satisfactorily ascertained, but the loss of life is very serious. Three of the bodies have been washed on shore, but nothing has transpired likely to lead to the identity of the ill-fated ship.

At Beaumaris and other places along the Welsh and western coasts, much damage was done, but the loss of life was trifling. The brig Ann was the scene of a melancholy loss of life. Nearly all the vessels in the harbour of Beaumaris were driven ashore, and sustained more or less injury, and all of them will have to be unloaded before they can be got off. The loss is greater than was ever known under similar circumstances. A beautiful pleasure yacht, the property of Robert M'Andrew, Esq., of Liverpool, which had just been fitted for the summer season, was driven against the sea wall, and totally destroyed. The crew landed with difficulty, and had a narrow escape of their lives. The smack Brothers, Barnet, from Liverpool, was wrecked near Penmon, and one of the hands, with the captain and his wife, was drowned. The bodies were found on Saturday morning, on the beach, the captain and his wife being clasped in each other's arms. Most of the crew got ashore in the small boat belonging to the vessel. The Mary, from Chester, laden with 16 sacks of flour, for Carnarvon, was much damaged, and filled with water. The Alert, and the John and William, of Port Madoc, with slates and wood, were wrecked. The crews were saved by means of ropes from the shore. The beach is covered with property, and fragments of small boats belonging to the poor, who had no other means of getting a living.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Accounts, both from Paris and the provinces, represent the opposition to the proposed restrictive laws on the press as daily increasing; and it is fully expected that Government will be obliged to abandon the bill, or at least to modify it considerably. The committee, to whom the bill has been referred, have resolved that the deposit money shall not be augmented. The bill respecting electoral meetings, also, is much objected to; and, if it should pass, it will not be by a great majority.

It is generally understood that Ministers intend to propose a duty on paper upon its removal from the manufactory. In the Legislative Assembly they have met with some difficulty on items of the budget. On Wednesday the estimates of the department of the Interior, amounting to 129,558,000f., came under consideration. M. Baroche said he had consented to various reductions suggested by the committee, but there was one to which he could not agree. He had proposed 700,000f. for the central administration, without which the public business could not be adequately discharged; but the committee had reduced the sum by 35,000f., which would compel him, if adopted, to get rid of fourteen employés. On hearing this from the tribune, the opinion of the committee was carried by a great majority. M. Baroche then said, that to discharge such a number of persons all at once, would disorganise the public service; and therefore he submitted that the reduction be made progressively, viz. one-fourth in 1851, one half in 1852, and the remaining fourth in 1853. After some discussion, the proposition was referred to the committee. M. Jules Favre then rose and made a severe attack upon the conduct pursued by M Carlier, the Pre-et of Police, for having caused the introduction into office denounced the Socialists, and urged all honest citizens to form a league against them. The Right beeches hereupon expressed their disapprobation, which was met in a contrary spirit by those on the Left; and a scene of noise and confusion arose, which did not subside for some time.

As M. Vidal, the late successful Socialist candidate at the Paris elections, has elected to sit for the Bas Rhin, for which he was also returned, there will be another election at Paris shortly, at which it will be seen whether the Socialists have such a stronghold in Paris as is alleged.

A number of Socialists were arrested on Saturday while holding a secret meeting in the Rue Soufflot, which led to the discovery of important papers, arms, and revolutionary emblems.

The troops at Vincennes were reviewed by the President of the Republic on Monday, who was accompanied by General Changarnier. The President afterwards inspected the fortress.

The new monthly publication, entitled La Voix du Peuple, et du Peuple Sensé, was seized on Tuesday for an article headed "A bas la Republique!"

The accounts from the provinces are not at all of a satisfactory kind. The Socialists are doing all they can to render the people discontented, in order to further their insurrectionary designs.

The tribunal of correctional police of Lyons, a few days since, condemned different persons to fines amounting to 24,575 francs, for having sent the prices of the Paris Funds and foreign securities from Paris to Lyons by pigeons, so as to anticipate the mail, and enable certain individuals to make speculations on the Stock Exchange of Lyons.

ITALIAN STATES.

From the Peninsula there is little more than rumour.

In the Austrian provinces the authorities have revoked the prohibition of exporting from Italy to Hungary scythes and other agricultural implements, which might be used as weapons of offence.

From Rome some doubts are again thrown over the Pope's return.

At Florence there has been published a decree of the Tuscan Government, by which the 1st of October of every year is fixed as the day on which the shares of the Tuscan loan to be paid off are to be drawn by lot.

GERMAN STATES

The known dissatisfaction which exists on the part of Austria, and some other of the German states, at the ill-concealed designs of Prussia to place herself at the head of a great German Confederation—a position in some respects analogous to that occupied in the last century by Austria—and at the efforts of Prussia to reduce her designs to practice, by means of the Confederate Parliament which he has caused to be assembled at Erfurt, is likely, if we are to believe accounts received out Paris, to terminate in a collision between those great powers. Matters, however, we cannot think will ever be pushed so far, whatever may be the menacing and hostile character of the language at present used by the representatives of those powers in reference to the subject; and we must wait for something more definite than mere rumour, before we can attach credence to the various reports afloat on this question.

RUSSIA.

The official journal of the 24th ult., at St. Petersburgh, publishes the programme of the baptism of the infant Prince Nikolai Konstantinowitsch, son of the Grand Duke Constantine, which is to take place with the usual solemnities in the Winter Palace. Immediately after the baptism, the Grand Chancellor will present on a golden dish the imperial order of "St. Andrew the First Called," with which his Majesty will be graciously pleased to invest the new-born Prince.

UNITED STATES.

The arrivals from New York this week are dated the 20th ult.

The discussion upon slavery in the Senate had not terminated. Since the speech of Mr. Calhoun, the Senate had been addressed by Mr. Webster and Mr. Seward, presenting an elaborate and powerful statement of the widely-differing views entertained by the two great parties—and arguing the whole question of slavery and the territories in the various aspects of which the complicated and exciting subject is susceptible.

Mr. Calhoun's health has been ill-health for some time past, appears to be the present death. He has been gradually sinking since the excitement of his late address to the Senate.

The trial of Professor Webster for the murder of Dr. George Parkman had commenced in Boston. Between fifty and sixty witnesses on each side were in attendance, and the court-room was thronged with an immense crowd of spectators. No disclosures had yet been made to the public, to relieve the subject from its original dismal obscurity.

The expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, which has been started by private subscription in New York, is to consist of two or three schooners suitable for the navigation of the Arctic Seas, of from seventy to eighty tons burthen. Lieutenant de Haven, who was attached to the expedition, has accepted the command of the enterprise, and will sail with his company from New York about the 1st of May.

A large meeting had been held in the Broadway Tabernacle, at New York, for the adoption of measures with reference to the permanent relief of the Hungarian refugees. His Honour Mayor Woodhull presided at the meeting, and a committee was appointed to receive subscriptions in aid of the refugees. It is proposed to raise a sum of at least 10 000 dols., and apply it to the purchase of lands in the West, with agricultural implements, seeds, animals, and supplies, sufficient for the establishment of the exiles on their farms, where they may be joined by their families, unless recalled to Europe by political changes.

The race for emigration to California seemed to have obtained a fresh impetus, and the numbers departing by every vessel bound for the gold regions were more numerous than ever.

The news from Texas is to the 1st ult. The Indians continued their aggressions on the settlements, and the Legislature had recently adjourned. It had passed an act for the great Pacific Railroad, granting the right of way to the Government, and giving to the builder every alternate section of the public land on which the road may pass within a distance of fifty miles on each side. It had also been passed extending the time for filing claims against the late Republic to September, 1851, and barring all claims not filed by that time.

CANADA.

There is no political news of any moment from Canada.

A disastrous fire occurred at Buffalo on the 19th ult., destroying several public buildings and 15 or 20 private houses and stores, making a total loss of 300,000 dollars. The property destroyed was in the most beautiful part of the city.

The Annexation scheme, which but a few months ago was the general topic, is now scarcely mentioned. At the recent election in Sherbrooke district, the Annexation candidate was elected; but that is attributed to the fact that the district joins the State of New Hampshire, and is mostly peopled by Americans, or those whose predilections are favourable to the United States Government

The reciprocal navigation measures, which the Hon. Malcolm Cameron visited Washington a short time since to press upon the United States Government, is most avarently desired by the people of Canada West, who look upon it as a measure of vital importance to their interests.

The winter has been unusually mild.

INDIA.

Advices in anticipation of the Overland Mail reached town during the week, dated respectively Bombay, March 2, and Calcutta, Feb. 22. We learn by this arrival that some of the Afreedie tribes, locating in the district of Kohat, had murdered a small party of our Sappers, and afterwards carried away their implements of labour, and whatever else lay within their reach. An expedition was, therefore, at once fitted out under Colonel Bradshaw, 60th Rifles, which started against the assailants on the 8th of February, accompanied by Sir C. Napier and Brigadier Sir C. Campbell, as amateurs. A good deal of skirmishing occurred on the 10th and 11th between Muttunee and Kohat, and again on the 13th, on the way back of the expedition through the passes. In those affairs Ensign W. H. Sitwell, of the 31st N.I., was literally cut to pieces; and Lieut. F. H. Hilliard, 23rd N.I., and three or four European soldiers, were severely wounded. Coke's Punjaub Infantry suffered greatly. Six of the enemy's villages were destroyed, and the expedition appears to have been completely successful. The troops returned to Peshawur on the 14th, leaving a detachment to guard the pass near Muttunee. Sir C. Napier and staff were to commence their return march to Lahore about the 17th.

The Punjaub generally is in a disturbed state. Murder and robbery are common at Peshawur. Two artillerymen were set upon and killed on the night of the 6th of February, about 500 or 600 yards outside the fort.

At Wusseerabad and Umritsar, and in other localities, scenes of violence have occurred, and are expected from hatred of our rule. A gunpowder plot is said to have been discovered at Lahore, and attempts to assassinate the Deputy-Collector of Deena Nuggar, and Mr Blythe, Assistant Commissioner at Buttala, are mentioned. Both gentlemen were wounded, and some of the attendants of the first killed.

The Sikkim Rajah had fled to the mountains, and, therefore, the expeditionary troops sent to chastise him return ed to Darjeeling. The whole of his possessions on the further side of the Great Runjeet River had been seized by the British Authorities, and his treachery had been amply punished.

The mutineers of the 66th Bengal Native Infantry had been tried. The less guilty were dismissed the service, while the others were condemned to various terms of hard labour.

There has been a serious disturbance in the northern provinces of the Nizam's dominions, in which the town of Mulkapore and the neighbouring villages have been burnt to the ground.

The Government of India have at length resolved on adopting a comprehensive scheme of national education.

The Governor-General reached Point-de-Galle on the 7th of February, and started for Singapore on the 8th.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest accounts from the Cape are to the 17th of January, at which period the long-expected final decree of Earl Grey had not arrived out. In the meantime the colonists continued to manifest a quiet, uniform, but firm and resolute determination to resist the former order of his Lordship by every legitimate means within their power. The trade of the colony had much suffered in consequence of the agitation and suspense arising out of the protracted uncertainty by which the commercial mission was involved.

On the 15th of January (says the Cape Town Commercial Advertiser) the Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court were opened by his Honor the Chief Justice, in the absence of his Excellency the Governor, and the Queen's Jubilee took occasion to deliver some admirable observations on the value of that institution, to which all hearts warmly responded. It had nearly been lost. But for the sudden disappearance of the Legislative Council and prorogation there would have been abolished some months ago. For this change many apparently conclusive arguments had been adduced, but that which weighed most with some was the reparation from the petty juries in this small community of a class of men who could fill be spared. This evil, however, is finding its remedy in the diffusion of education and intel-igence in all ranks, and recent events have convinced the public mind, in a manner of safety unequalled, that the principle of trial by jury will be cherished and maintained as one of the noble breakwaters between despotic power and popular excitement.

The calendar was heavy, and an offence, new at the Cape, under the designation of "public violence," was charged against two parties, Mr. Mocke and Mr. Thorne. The grand jury ignored the bill, and thus (say the local journals) saved the country! Had that charge been entertained, there was an end, for a time, to all freedom of speech and action.

THE SHROVE-TIDE CARNIVAL AT ST. PETERSBURG, MARCH, 1850.

(From our own Correspondent.)

While the first Carnival raged in all its methodical madness, I took care to see whatever it might interest an Englishman to read—for more I do not care. I say the first Carnival, for there is one at Shrovetide (which, this year, did not begin in Russia till the 11th of March), and another at Easter. The Russians lay in a good provision of frolic for their ascetic caravan across the desert of Lent, and, at the end of the passage, indemnify themselves for its fatigues by another bout of riotous merrymaking.

The stranger is surprised to see the great Admiralty-place, which adjoins the still greater Isaac Place (the finest square that ever found room for a city), half filled with structures that have arisen like magic. I passed there the other night: all was empty, and vast, and silent. Now you have to thread your way through a labyrinth of passages between tall and fantastic edifices, of various shapes, of a fanciful and grotesque appearance, and made of wood. The largest of these is a sort of theatre, destined for a national pantomime, which is more portentous than Punch, more exhilarating than the Pantocon, and which, after the grand operas and spectacles and plays have sated the more elevated classes with their scenes, is to summon the mass of the population to a more congenial show. They flock in dense audences to witness it with a shout, and a prodigious zest, an exquisite enjoyment, of which ennagious not to be somewhat shared by their betters, and too fruitful of beneficial results not to be supported, as it is from the highest quarters, with the most unequivocal marks of favour and approval. Of course, intended for fe tivities of a kindred kind, and as booths and accommodations of all descriptions.

Through the midst of the multitude of extempore buildings wind all sorts of little lanes for foot passengers; around them is left a broad carriage-way. Here, in one unbroken stream, roll the equipages of fashion and wealth, with a foam of jewels and plumes, and a flash of liveries, that dazzles the eye, and confounds and unlike it enough also. Instead of the stately trees and the great expanse of grass that there refresh the eye, and all the sights and the sounds of a sweet English summer, there is the dust and the glare, and the roar of a city that has for furnishing within its circuit. You have several lines of trees, indeed, all along the Admiralty side or the Admiralty-square; but they stretch forth the mockery of their bare arms leaded with icy brilliants, which, were they diamond brilliants, would be the most unfortunate fruits ever produced by the frosty tree of buds and blossoms, and all the charms and smiles of a living landscape. But of course this is to be dispensed with now; and London has its sere and withered trees as well as Petersburgh. In summer there are fair and blooming gardens there. It was but the fanciful association suggested by the ring of brilliant equipages that reminded me of a parallel unfair in its very conditions.

In one place you see a pagoda, or wooden pavilion, under the awning of which a whirligig of successive steamers, yachts, barges, and all descriptions of boats, filled with passengers to their imaginary destinations, is spinning madly; while within, in the midst of the machinery, are the musicians who discourse the waltz the wild airs of Sclavonia. Another pagoda, but without a roof, contains another whirligig—but of carved war-horses, bestridden by boys, followed alternately by the prancing steeds themselves—these stedes fi ed with girls. In another structure of a similar kind are swing-oaths, suspended from the ends of transverse beams, projecting from a massive and lofty post, round the top of which, as round an axis, the beams rapidly revolve, whirling the swing-chairs and their occupants with a dizzy motion all round the world and back again.

At another platform-fronted structure similar sports are primitively pursued, while a rude kind of recital is performed by Thespian orators on the platform. Mummers and tumblers play their tricks and antics elsewhere. Merry-andrews are in their glory And in one place a gesticulatory drama, just before the windows of the Winter Palace, represents the enlistment and drilling of a recruit, his clumsiness, his blunders, his tricks, his refractoriness, the punishment which involves him in punishment, and the cunning and nimbleness which effect his final escape, to the delight of an audience never tired of watching the same acted and re-enacted for hours together. Some forty or fifty larger and more pretentious buildings, reserved for theatres, stand here and there among the smaller structures. Finally, two showy turrets face each other, looking down upon the two converse roads that surround the carnival; and all day long the rapid sledge is rushing silently down their respective declivities, with such occupants as choose to pay a few kopeks for the seemingly break-neck drive. Everywhere the outside of these wooden edifices is painted with scenes, and coloured gaudily, while the evergreen boughs of the fir, temper the too icy spectacle. Booths, and stalls, and stands, offer all sorts of rude delicacies to the common people; and everywhere, on these temporary tables, the national "samovar" hisses forth its grateful invitation to quaff the delicious tea that has come overland from China. A spirit of primitive and childlike glee pervades the whole population; nor does that fashionable throng of equipages which circulates round the skirts of the scene quite escape the merry infection. The occupants of an elegant carriage were amused, and took no pains to hide their amusement, at seeing themselves honoured by a serious notice of a novel appearance. This was a lad, who, on a petticoated horse, prance suddenly to the side of the vehicle, caracoled alo g with it, and offered so capital a travesty of a gallant cavalier, as to excite lond, long, and general laughter.

After nothing all these things sufficiently, I entered the principal wooden theatre. The crevices in the rude walls admitted a piercing air; and fires in each places are strictly forbidden by the Emperor since a melancholy conflagration, in which hundreds were burned some years ago. Here I found an exceedingly spacious house, a perfectly-appointed stage, and no incompetent orchestra. The scene was wonderfully in a representation intended only for the uncritical multitude. The properties were ample, the decoration really pretty, and I witnessed a most excellent pantomime. The piece opened with a scene, bearing a striking impress of reality miners at work in the bowels of the earth. Here, his darkness, his hardness, his trickiness, the cunning miser is found in a capital where wondrous models (contained in the corps des mines), daily conversation, and occasional experience familiarize all the inhabitants with the immense ability of these subterranean labours. Pierrots and Columbines, Clowns and Pantaloon, with the usual and universal tricks of those renowned personages, brought the career of one who, in the mine, had sold himself to the devil for gold, to a satisfactory conclusion. And then, as I had with difficulty forced my way, with an immense crowd, into the theatre, so with the same crowd I forced my way out, to make room for a new audience, equally large, equally curious, and equally contented. It was at two o'clock in the day that I entered the place, which was darkened for the purposes of representation. The performance lasted about three-quarters of an hour, and was to be immediately renewed, and repeated till nightfall. So in the other wooden theatres, only with various pieces, respectively.

As I have not described the Ice-hills, I will endeavour to do so Well, the manner of the thing is this: on a bitterly cold night you proceed to the scene of the meeting, where you find several gentlemen and ladies equally bent on desperate courses. You sip some sherbets, or a glass of wine, or a sherry-cobbler; perhaps smoke a cigar. (In St. Petersburg gentlemen smoke in the presence of ladies, and even in the very drawing-rooms of many houses, by no means to be classed as obscure or undistinguished.) After this you begin to ascend a very long and steep staircase, which leads you to the top of a tower, where you find yourself in a capacious room, with some chairs and benches. Certain little cushion-like things are lying about. They are sledges: the cushion on a board; beneath the board two steel runs, like those of a skate, fastened along its whole length. Opposite the door by which you have entered is another door, broad and high. These two openings admit the light of the sun or stars; for it is as often by night as by day that the ice-hills are frequented. You must take care how you walk in the middle of the room, for there a black and shiny layer of ice extends from that door by which you have not made your entrance, but by which, alas! you will assuredly make a memorable exit. That layer of ice is the tail of the huge snake on whose back you are to take a flight of more than railroad, more than magic, speed; the summit, in fact, of the ice hill. The little harmless-looking layer extends, as I say, from about the middle of the room, where it is highest, by a gradual and insensible declension to the fatal door, where it makes a fearful bend downwards and is lost to view. While engaged in these observations, you see a gentleman seat himself on one of the little sledges, and beckon to some lady, who either kneels behind him and grasps his shoulders, or sits between his knees in front His hands are armed with enormous mufflers, protected from the sharp edges of the ice-road, and thus steer the sledge, which obeys the slightest motion—the slightest touch of these gloves on the ground swaying its head towards the same side, just as a ship bends its prow on the side on which the blade of the rudder is turned to catch the waters. False or unskilful steerage on the ice-hills is inevitably followed by a jar against the snow-walls that line the way, a tremendous upset, and an icy bath. Beyond, in unknown regions at the end of the Ice-hills, is a canal frozen at a great depth, but half filled with soft snow. Into this darts the sledge, if the malicious steersman does not choose to stop it in time. Imagine the somersault! Only imaginary I hope it always is when ladies are on the sledge.

But to return to the room. You have seen, we suppose, a party disappear over the edge. If you have, at the moment afterwards, you will see them tooling up the staircase behind, a servant carrying the vehicle. They have received by a parallel ice-road from an opposite tower, and have travelled about a quarter of a mile. You are invited by some gentleman who has no lady to take, to sit on his sledge. You do so; he works it towards the edge. You think it not so swift after all. Some one says "Bon voyage" to you. Instead of saying "Merci," you utter a violent "Oh!" Have you ever been thrown out of a garret window? If not, do not think that you can figure to yourself what it is to sit on that sledge at the moment when, having paused and hung for an instant on the edge of the declivity, your vehicle precipitates itself downwards. Your breath is gone, you feel as if you were empty inside; and while the "Oh!" is still lingering on your lips, you are at the end of the journey. It is no joke at first, and a capital joke afterwards. But of all bodily sports, it most partakes of the nature of inanimation.

There is something in all these things that is good, and something far from unwise in the encouragement of them. All the Russians feel at such times that they make but one great family. It is not a private or selfish merrymaking, but, in their simple hearts, a pleasant tie the more to their common country.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Preferments and Appointments.—Rev. S. G. Joyce, to Burford V., Oxford; value, £294, with residence; patron, Bishop of Oxford. Rev. J. H. Wyther, to Madeley V., Salop; value, £241, with residence; patron, Rev. H. A. Gwyther. Rev. J. S. Moore, to Stoke-Edith R. w. West Hide P. C., Herefordshire; value, £170, with residence; patron, E. T. Foley, Esq. Rev. T. F. Layne, to Holmer V. w. Huntington P. C., Hereford; value, £300, with residence; patron, D. and C. of Hereford. Rev. W. M. Rennard, V. of Bishop's Castle, to be a Surrogate, dio. Hereford. Rev. J. L. Sheppard, to Alberbury C., Salop. Rev. E. Thompson, D.D., to Kington V. v. Brilley V., Huntingdon R. w. Michael-Church R., Herefordshire; value, £960, with residence; patron, Bishop of Hereford. Rea. T. Williams, of Aberpergwm, to be Chaplain to the Sheriff of Breconshire. Rev. G. H. Arkwright, to be Chaplain to the Sheriff of Derbyshire. Rev. E. Pengelley, to Gilston C., Northumberland. Rev. J. Jones, to be Chaplain to the Sheriff of Carnarvonshire. Rev. W. W. Williams, to be Chaplain to the Sheriff of Anglesey. Rev. W. B. Lawrence, to be Chaplain to Lawford's Gate Houses of Correction, Bristol.

Vacancies.—Edingthorpe R., Norfolk, diocese of Norwich; value £20, with residence; patron, Duchy of Lancaster; Rev. R. Adams, deceased Lyon Beach, All Saints R., w. St. Margaret, w. St. Nicholas P. C., Norfolk, diocese of Norwich; patrons, D. and C. of Norwich; Rev. R. Hutchinson, resigned. Swindals P. C., Shap, Westmoreland, diocese of Carlisle; value, £66; patron, Vicar of Shap; Rev. W. Wa.ker, deceased. The Mastership of Brewood Grammar School, Staffordshire; salary, £270, with residence; testimonials before April 11. Burgh R., Suffolk, diocese of Norwich; value, £247, with residence; patron, M. Barre, Esq.; Rev. G. F. Barlow, deceased. East Dereham V., w. Hoel, Norfolk, diocese of Norwich; value, £478; patrons, the Representatives of the late Vicar; Rev. C. H. Wollaston, deceased. Newchurch-in-Rossendale P. C., Whalley, Lancashire, diocese of Manchester; value, £240; patron, Vicar of Whalley; Rev. E. Burrows, deceased. All Saints' R., St. John's-wood, London; patron, Col. Eyre; Rev. E. Thompson, D.D., promoted.

Testimonials.—The following clergymen have recently been presented with testimonials of esteem and affection: The Rev Thomas Davies, late Curate of Hoyland, from the parishioners; the Rev. Thomas Rees, Curate of the parishioners of Lympstone; the Rev. Henry Walker, late Curate of Prescot parish church, Cheshire, by the parishioners; the Rev. George Coles, Perpetual Curate of St. James, Croydon, from his congregation; the Rev. R. Stephenson, by the inhabitants of the hamlet of Lower Mitton, Stourport; the Rev. G. S Bull, Rector of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, from the poorer portion of his flock; the Rev. Wm Mackay, by the parishioners of Sevenoaks; the Rev. J. Jones, of Huntington, late Curate of St. Stephen's, Salford, from the members of the congregation, and the teachers and scholars of the schools attached to the church.

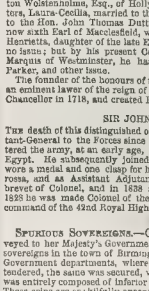
Llandaff Episcopal Palace.—The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have made arrangements for the house and demesne at Llandaff Court, with which the diocese will now have a resident bishop, after a lapse of upwards of 400 years, the last bishop's residence, then called the Bishop's Castle, having been destroyed by Owen Glendower. The non-residence of the bishop for so long a period has been mainly attributable to the practice of holding the bishoprick of Llandaff with the rich deanery of St. Paul's

St. John's Church, Woolwich.—At the Vestry Meeting held on Easter Tuesday, Rev. J. W. Downes, M.A., the minister, in the chair, the social thanks of the meeting were presented to Mrs. Washington, and other ladies, for their munificent gift of a handsome embroidered crimson velvet covering for the Holy Table in this church. This handsome gift was given, the table was seen on the table, for the first time, on Easter Sunday afternoon. In the centre is the cross beautifully embroidered in gold and purple; on each side of it is the Sacred Monogram, on a raised escutcheon, bordered also in gold. The accessories are stars, Fleur-de-lis, and fringes, all rich in colours, and harmonizing admirably with the fine triple-lancet painted window above. Two very noble oak chancel chairs had already been presented by some ladies of the congregation, about three months ago

The memorial of Professor Hussey to the heads of houses in the University of Oxford, in favour of Ecclesiastical Synods, has been rejected by the Board.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THOMAS, EARL OF MACCLESFIELD.



He married first, March 16, 1795, Miss Edwards, eldest daughter of Lewis Edwards, Esq., of Rhual, Flintshire; he had four daughters by her, widow of William Montgomery, Esq., of Grey Abbey, county Down; Matilda Anne, wife of Archur Hill Montgomery, Esq., of Tyrella; Ellen Katherine, who married the Hon. Thomas Pelham Pelham-Clinton, Esq., M.P.; Eliza Catherine, who married Sir William Heathcote, Bart. Early in life he held a commission in the Foot Guards, and subsequently in the Cheshire Militia. He was a respected private gentleman, he endeared himself to all who knew him, by his amiable family circle will long lament his loss. He did not obtain the Earl's coronet until far advanced in years, and he has had the dignity for only eight years.

This venerable nobleman, father of the peerage of England, died at Encham Hall, in Oxfordshire, on Easter Sunday, aged eighty-six. His wife, daughter of Sir William Heathcote, Bart. Early

He married first, March 16, 1795, Miss Edwards, eldest daughter of Lewis Edwards, Esq., of Rhual, Flintshire; he had four daughters by her, widow of William Montgomery, Esq., of Grey Abbey, county Down; Matilda Anne, wife of Archur Hill Montgomery, Esq., of Tyrella; Ellen Katherine, who married the Hon. Thomas Pelham Pelham-Clinton, Esq., M.P.; Eliza Catherine, who married Sir William Heathcote, Bart. Early in life he held a commission in the Foot Guards, and subsequently in the Cheshire Militia. He was a respected private gentleman, he endeared himself to all who knew him, by his amiable family circle will long lament his loss. He did not obtain the Earl's coronet until far advanced in years, and he has had the dignity for only eight years.

He married first, March 16, 1795, Miss Edwards, eldest daughter of Lewis Edwards, Esq., of Rhual, Flintshire; he had four daughters by her, widow of William Montgomery, Esq., of Grey Abbey, county Down; Matilda Anne, wife of Archur Hill Montgomery, Esq., of Tyrella; Ellen Katherine, who married the Hon. Thomas Pelham Pelham-Clinton, Esq., M.P.; Eliza Catherine, who married Sir William Heathcote, Bart. Early in life he held a commission in the Foot Guards, and subsequently in the Cheshire Militia. He was a respected private gentleman, he endeared himself to all who knew him, by his amiable family circle will long lament his loss. He did not obtain the Earl's coronet until far advanced in years, and he has had the dignity for only eight years.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD, G.C.B.

The death of this distinguished officer, who held the important office of Adjutant-General to the Forces since 1830, occurred on the 26th ult. Sir John entered the army at an early age, in 1795, and served the campaign of 1801 in Egypt. He subsequently joined the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula, and wore a medal and one clasp for his services as Deputy Adjutant-General. at Badajoz, and as Assistant Adjutant-General at Nive. In 1837 he attained the brevet of Colonel, and in 1838 attained the rank of Lieutenant-General. In 1828 he was made Colonel of the 67th Regiment, and in 1844 changed to the command of the 42nd Royal Highlanders.

Spurious Sovereigns.—On Saturday certain information was conveyed to her Majesty's Government of the discovery of an illicit manufacture of sovereigns in the town of Birmingham. It was first ascertained in one of the Government departments, where, some suspicion being entertained as to a coin tendered, the same was secured, which resulted in the discovery that the centre was entirely composed of inferior metal enclosed within a shell of standard gold. These coins are so skilfully executed that they defy the test of weight, sound, or aquafortis; a slight imperfection, however, exists in the milled edging, which should be closely observed to discover the imperfection.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Great Meeting on Secular Education.—On Monday a "town's meeting" was held in Manchester, at the Town-hall. It was called by John Potter, Esq., the Mayor, upon a requisition from a large body of respectable inhabitants, "to consider the propriety of petitioning Parliament in favour of the establishment of a general system of secular education in this country, to be supported by local rates, and managed by local authorities, specially elected by the ratepayers for that purpose." The desire manifested to be present at the meeting was very great, so much so, that a crowd of people almost sufficient to fill the hall had taken up a position in front of the entrance as early as nine o'clock. The doors were opened at half-past ten, and the rush was tremendous; in less than ten minutes the hall was crowded almost to suffocation with the friends and opponents of the Lancashire public school system. The Mayor presided, and on the platform were—Sir E Armitage, John Shuttleworth, Esq., (alderman of the borough), Peter Rylands, Esq. (Warrington), Rev. W. M'Kerrow, Rev. Dr Davidson, Alderman Bradford, Councillors Heywood, Fothergill, James Gaskell, Esq. (Patricroft), Rev. Hugh Stowell, Rev. John Bywater, Absalom Watkin, Esq., Alderman Hopkins, Rev. Dr Beard, Dr. John Watts, F. Wrigley, Esq., E. R. Lemare, Esq., Dr. Johns, and W. M'Call, Esq. Some thousands of people who could not gain admission when the hall was full remained in the open air, and were addressed in favour of the scheme by Dr. Watts and other persons. The Mayor opened the business of the day at eleven o'clock; and upwards of an hour having been spent amidst indescribable uproar and confusion, the Rev. Canon Tucker proposed the adoption of a petition in favour of a national secular system of education. The Rev. J. J. Taylor seconded the proposition. The Rev. Canon Stowell moved an amendment in favour of the introduction of the religious element; but, after a long and very stormy meeting, the petition was carried. It is as follows:—

This petition humbly sheweth,

That the large amount of intemperance, vice, and crime, which exists in England and Wales is, in a great extent, owing to prevalent ignorance, and to the main cause of that ignorance, namely, an insufficient and defective provision for popular education

That, as her Majesty's subjects have long enjoyed the benefits of a large share of self-government, their rights and their liberties alike require that parents should have a direct share in the origination, the maintenance, and the direction of public schools

That, inasmuch as various forms of opinion in regard to religion prevail in the country, and large numbers of persons stand aloof from existing religious communities, freedom from sectarian and denominational peculiarities ought to characterize any new educational enactments.

Your petitioners, in view of these facts and convictions, earnestly entreat your honourable House to establish by law a system of education which, excluding all theological doctrines and sectarian influences, supported by local rates assessed on the basis of property, and managed by local authorities specially elected for that purpose by the ratepayers, may afford to all, especially to the unthought and neglected, opportunities free of charge for a thorough training in useful knowledge, good principles, and virtuous habits.

And your petitioners &c

Tuesday Election.—On Saturday, the election caused by the appointment of Lord Seymour to the Chief Commissionership of Woods and Forests took place. There was not the slightest opposition, although it was hinted by the extreme Radical party that Mr. Edward Miall, of Anti-state-Church notoriety, would be brought forward. The preliminary form having been gone through, Lord Seymour was then nominated by Mr. Cary, the representative of an ancient Roman Catholic family, long resident in the neighbourhood, seconded by Mr. Luscombe, one of the borough magistrates, and no opponent appearing, was declared to be duly elected. Lord Seymour returned by the mail-train to London the same afternoon.

Movement against the Truck System.—The agitation which has recently sprung up against the "truck" or "tommy system," so extensively practised in Staffordshire, gains ground rapidly; associations are in course of formation in all parts of the district; and on Monday a large meeting for the purpose was held at Dudley, in the open country, the Mayor in the chair. His worship convened the meeting on the requisition of nearly two hundred of the most respectable persons in the parish, and there were present deputations from Bilston and other towns. The Mayor, in opening the business, expressed his regret at the necessity that existed for their moving in this matter, especially as many of the parties who carried on their business under the truck system were gentlemen of high standing and excellent character; it was, however, a system that could not be longer endured: it oppressed the poor, and was unfair to the money-paying tradesman. He hoped that a vigorous effort would be made to put the axe at the root of the evil. The meeting was ably addressed several influential gentlemen, and resolutions passed strongly condemnatory of the oppressive and unjust system. It appears that the ironmasters who pay in truck get a profit of five shillings per week on the wages they pay in money.

The Water Supply to Liverpool.—Robert Stephenson, Esq., M.P., to whom it was referred to determine with respect to the various plans of supplying water to Liverpool, has reported against the local supply, and recommends that the Rivington Pikes scheme should be carried out. This report caused quite a ferment in Liverpool. Mr. Stephenson enters most minutely into all the various questions submitted to him. He contends that Liverpool cannot purify the river upon a sufficient supply by deepening the existing reservoir—that the reservoir of water under Liverpool has become, to some extent, deteriorated by continued and extensive pumping, and so much has been expended on the Rivington project, and the contracts are so entered into, that Mr. Stephenson says, the water from the sandstone is preferred for drinking, whilst that from Rivington, from its softness, is better for almost every other purpose; the former may be said to be the most palatable, and the latter the most useful.

Singular Case.—A Sheriff's Court was held in the grand jury room, on Monday last, before Mr. Acton, barrister, for the purpose of assessing damages to be awarded to Messrs. Rathbone Brothers by John Miklejohn, their warehouseman and confidential clerk, who had embezzled a number of sums and a fine of £200. He was possessed of property to the value of upwards of £3000, though he had but a paltry salary; and, as this property was supposed to belong of right to the late convict, the action was brought. The jury awarded £2065 15s. 11d.—Liverpool Courier.

Storm at Sunderland.—On Saturday afternoon, during a heavy gale from the south-east, a large fleet of light colliers arrived in the northern coal ports, the consequences of the gale and tremendous sea which ensued was done to the shipping. At about five P.M., a brig was driven broad-side against the pier by a sea; she lost both her masts, and drove ashore—making the fifth wreck that has been ashore. Other vessels lost their masts, bowsprits, &c.; and seldom has so much damage been done in ore tide.

Daring Highway Robbery in Cheltenham.—It appears that Mr. Luke Smith, of 16, Lansdown-terrace, left his own house on Monday night to post a letter at the branch post-office, Montpellier. Returning over Bay's-hill, about a quarter of an hour afterwards, just as night was closing in, he was suddenly stopped by a man who threw a handkerchief over his eyes, and pulled him to the ground Here he was held down and severely kicked by two persons, who, without delay, pulled his watch from his guard-chain, and rifled his pockets of their contents, with which they made off. The attack was so sudden, and so little time was lost by the ruffians, that Mr. Smith says he had no opportunity of identifying them. He was so much hurt by their kicks, that some time elapsed before he had sufficiently recovered himself to walk home, and when he arrived there surgical aid had to be called in. The watch was marked with the maker's name, "Tomkins, Bath." This fact may lead to the apprehension of the ruffians.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Arctic Expedition.—The utmost exertions are being used, night and day, at Woolwich, to complete the Arctic expedition by the 24th of April, relays of workmen being employed upon the two steam-vessels, which are progressing very fast. Two of the steam-tugs connected with the port also employ a large number of ship-wrights, riggers, caulkers, and others, and labourers to Black-wall every morning, to complete the Resolute and Assistance, sailing vessels, in dock at Messrs. Green and Wigram's yard. It is confidently expected that the whole will clear the Sandwich Islands by the first week in May. A sleigh, convertible into a punt, was brought to Woolwich on Tuesday afternoon, for trial. It consists of a frame like the frame of a sofa without a back, and rests on the keel of the woodwork, for being used on the ice or snow, with a narrow bar of iron. The mode of converting it into a punt for rowing in the water is very simple, being effected by taking out the gutta percha lining with which it is supplied when used as a sleigh on the ice or snow, and replacing it on the outside. The sheets of gutta percha are not very thick, which makes them as elastic as cushions when used on the ice, and the material is admirably adapted to preserving the officers and crews dry when rowing in boats during the night, although they are so close to the ground. The dimensions of the sleigh are 15 feet 6 inches long, by 3 feet broad, and 1 foot 3 inches deep, and the whole is remarkably light, although sufficiently strong for the purpose for which it is intended

Scurvy on Board of Temperance Vessels.—Important Medical Testimony. Naval Department, Aden, Feb. 26, 1850. Sir,—I take the liberty of enclosing you the copy of a letter from Dr. Vaughan, who has medical charge of the naval hospital at Aden. Since the letter was written, two more ships under temperance rules have entered the port with their crews suffering severely from scurvy. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

Political Agent. To Captain G. A. Haisted, R.N., Secretary, Lloyd's: —

Sir,—I am desirous of giving publicity to the fact that during the past twelve months I have had occasion to treat more cases of scurvy amongst the crews of vessels visiting this port than during any of the preceding five years that I have conducted the medical duties of the station.

Scurvy is almost exclusively confined to vessels coal-laden from England; and, as you are well aware, several ships have almost been disabled by it, from both officers and men being attacked almost invariably to the same extent, and in as short a space as hours of sprue.

I would, therefore, most earnestly suggest to charterers and owners of vessels the propriety of allowing a portion of spirits daily, and that the quality of the provisions supplied to the ship be strictly attended to; as that the staleness of pease and clothes be strictly enforced. I have the honour to be, &c. (Signed) J. A. VAUGHAN.

To Captain S. B. Haines, Political Agent, Aden.

It is stated that the projected submarine telegraph between Dover and Calais, conceded to Messrs. Brett and Co. by the French Government, is approaching completion. The tower for the battery, offices, and genera. works at Dover are nearly erected, and the insulated wires are in a forward state of progress, and are expected to be sunk across the Channel in the course of the next month.

American Silver-Lake Ice.—Her Majesty has graciously been pleased to accept from the Directors of the American Company one case containing a specimen of Silver-Lake Ice, which has been much admired both by the Queen and Prince Albert.

MAHOGANY TREES IN THE WEST INDIES.

THE MAHOGANY TRADE.

SALE OF A MONSTER LOG AT BIRKENHEAD.

On Thursday week (the 28th ult.), an interesting sale by auction of Honduras mahogany took place in the sheds at Birkenhead Dock, by Messrs. Holmes, Slater, and Crook, brokers. There was a company of about 160 at the sale, which commenced with American woods, a great quantity being disposed of. The sale of the Honduras mahogany, which consisted of about 650 logs, was very spirited, and brought good prices. For the monster log there was great competition; and eventually it sold at 1s. 10½d. per foot, the purchase-money amounting to £316 17s. 6d.

The tree that this log was manufactured from grew in the Mosquito territory of Honduras. The length of the trunk, clear of branch, was 72 feet; its circumference, where it was cut (twelve feet above the ground), was 30 feet; and the entire tree turned out 17,000 feet of sound wood: say, three logs 30 feet long each from the trunk, and some very large logs from the branches. It was cut on the works of Messrs. Carmichael and Co.; and two of the logs were shipped on board their vessel the Atlantic; the large one, together with the log cut off the end of it, which measures 20 feet long, 4 feet 11 inches deep, 3 feet 8 inches thick, containing 4395 feet. The logs were landed at the Morpeth Dock, Birkenhead, on the 1st of February. The weight of both is 16 tons 13 cwt. 1 quarter 23 lb. The remaining piece is nearly as large, having the curl attached.

Mahogany, although now in such general use as a furniture wood, was not introduced into England till 1724, but it was used in repairing some of Sir Walter Raleigh's ships at Trinidad, in 1597.

Mahogany is the wood of a tree of Swietenia, of the natural family Cedrelaceæ, named by Jacquin in honour of J. Van Swieten. It grows in the West Indies and Central America: there are two other species found in the East Indies, but they are not much known in England.

The mahogany is one of the most majestic and beautiful of trees, with a large spreading head, and pinnate shining leaves. Its trunk is often forty feet in length, and six feet in diameter, and is divided into many massive arms, and throws the shade of its shining green leaves over a vast extent of surface. It is abundant in Cuba and Hayti, and it used to be plentiful in Jamaica; but, in the latter island, most of the trees, at least in accessible situations, have been cut down.

The principal importations into Great Britain are made from Honduras and Campeachy. That which is imported from the Islands is called "Spanish Mahogany:" it is not so large as that from Honduras, being generally in logs from 20 to 26 inches square, and 10 feet long; while the latter is usually from 3 to 4 feet square, and 12 or 14 feet long, but some logs are much larger.

Like the pine tribe, the mahogany timber is best on dry rocky soils or in exposed situations. That which is most accessible at Honduras grows upon moist low land, and is, generally speaking, inferior to that brought from Cuba and Hayti. Honduras mahogany has, however the advantage of holding glue admirably well, and is, for this reason, frequently used as a ground on which to lay veneers of the finer sorts.

The cutting of mahogany at Honduras takes place at two different seasons—after Christmas and towards Midsummer. The negroes employed in felling the trees are divided into groups of from 10 to 50. The trees are cut about 12 feet from the ground, and are floated down the rivers.

The Illustration above shows a party of negroes conveying away Spanish wood

The best qualities of mahogany, such as the finest Spanish, bring a very high price. Some years since, Messrs. Broadwood, the pianoforte manufacturers, gave the large sum of £3000 for three logs of mahogany! These logs, the produce of a single tree, were each about 15 feet long and 38 inches square; they were cut into veneers of eight to an inch. The wood was particularly beautiful, capable of receiving the highest polish; and, when polished, reflecting the light in the most varied manner, like the surface of a crystal; and, from the wavy form of the pores, offering a different figure in whatever direction it was viewed. Dealers in mahogany generally introduce an auger before buying a lot; but they are seldom able to decide with much precision as to the quality of the wood, so that there is a good deal of lottery in the trade. The logs for which Messrs. Broadwood gave so high a price, were brought to this country with a full knowledge of their superior worth.

New Provision in the Law of Bankruptcy.—The following provision in the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act (12 and 13 Vict., cap. 106) will take effect from and after Thursday, the 11th inst.:—"That if any bankrupt shall be taken in execution after the refusal of protection, or after the refusal or suspension of his certificate, he shall not be discharged from such execution until he shall have been in prison for the full period of one year, except by order of the court; provided always that this enactment shall not take effect until after the expiration of six months from the commencement of this act, and then only against such persons as shall have been judged bankrupt under this act, and for offences committed after the commencement of this act." The act came into operation on the 11th October, and the six months will consequently expire on Thursday week. The power given by the new provision is a somewhat extraordinary one; and as creditors who have proved may be considered by a certificate as "judgment creditors," they may take their debtor in execution who has been refused protection by the Court of Bankruptcy.

Post-Office Notice.—On the 1st of April the following offices were opened as minor money order offices:—Aberayron, Cardiganshire; Albrighton, Shropshire; Axbridge, Somersetshire; Barton-under-Needwood, Staffordshire; Chipping Sodbury, Gloucestershire; Dedham, Essex; Debenham, Suffolk; Darwen, Lancashire; Dolgelly, Merionethshire; Haslingden, Lancashire; Harling, Norfolk; Hawkhurst, Kent; Henley-in-Arden, Warwickshire, Market Bosworth, Leicestershire; Newent, Gloucestershire; Northiam, Sussex; Potton, Bedfordshire; Sowerby Bridge, Yorkshire; Staindrop, Durham; Stotley Bridge, Northumberland; Ticehurst, Sussex; Wrington, Somersetshire; Wadhurst Sussex.

LARGE LOG OF HONDURAS MAHOGANY, SOLD AT BIRKENHEAD.

DINNER AT THE MANSION-HOUSE.

The Lord Mayor gave the usual Easter entertainment at the Mansion-house, on Monday evening. The Egyptian-hall was decorated in the same style as on the occasion of the Exhibition banquet a week or two back, and the scene was very grand and imposing. Miss Dolby, Miss Birch, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Machin, and Mr. Young lent the effective aid of their vocal powers to the pleasures of the evening, which were also enhanced by the performances of the band of the Coldstream Guards, who were stationed in the gallery. Covers were laid for 400, and amongst the guests were the following:—

The French Ambassador, the American Minister, the Bishop of St. Asaph; Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P.; the Bolivian Minister, the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the East India Company, the Deputy Governor of the Bank of England; Major-General Delamaine, C.B.; Mr. Thornton, Deputy Commissioner of Inland Revenue; Col. Williams; Sir W. Molesworth, Bart., M.P.; the Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair; Mr. Mitchell, M.P.; Mr. French, M.P.; Mr Curteis, M.P.; Sir Seymour Sadlier, Sir Hamilton Seymour, Captain Sir E. Belcher, Lieutenant-General Sir James Hamilton, Sir Philip Lee, Mr. Merrivale, Alderman Sir F. Laurie, Mr. Alderman Farebrother, Mr. Alderman Wilson; Mr. Alderman Humphrey, M.P.; Alderman Sir W. Magnay, Sir George Carroll, the Sheriffs of London, &c.

"Non nobis Domine" having been sung, and the loving cup having been passed around, the usual toasts of loyalty were duly honoured, after which the Lord Mayor proposed the health of the Foreign Ministers.

The French Ambassador, in returning thanks, observed that under no circumstances was the foreigner more vividly impressed with the grandeur and magnificence of London than when he was permitted to partake of the splendid hospitality of its chief magistrate. For himself, he acknowledged with pleasure and gratitude, that so frequently had he been a guest at the Civic board, that he now considered himself quite at home at the Mansion House. (Loud cheers.) He was proud of the welcome he had uniformly received, but his gratification did not arise from feelings of selfish vanity, or of mere personal gratitude. He was sensible that their kindness bore in view the country he had the honour to represent; and, viewed in this light, the value of the compliment was immensely enhanced. (Cheers.) He was fully convinced that nothing could be more conducive to the welfare of France and England than the continuance of a friendly understanding between both nations. (Vehement applause.)

The American Minister, in acknowledging the compliment, said that he was there as the representative of a nation speaking the same language, governed by the same laws, and professing the same religion as England. In fact, he looked on himself as a cousin of theirs, for he regarded the countries as cousins; and on the part of the great nation he had the honour to represent he returned his most cordial thanks for the handsome manner in which they had received the toast. He was then in the old city of London, which was associated in his mind with his earliest affections and his happiest reminiscences. He could not forget that the first book he had ever read in was published in St. Paul's Churchyard. (Hear.) He was not an old man, but he had lived long enough to see a mighty nation arise at the other side of the Atlantic from a very small number of the Anglo-Saxon race. The company he had the honour of addressing were that night seated in the midst of the richest, the most powerful, the most city on the face of the earth—the greatest city that had ever existed. It had become so through the instrumentality of commerce, which was in every land the great pioneer of civilisation. (Hear.) He looked upon the loving-cup which had passed round as symbolical of a generous anxiety on the part of both countries to entertain feelings of mutual good-will, and to stand by one another. In that sense he had sipped it on behalf of twenty-two millions of people, all of whom he would have around him that night if it were possible; and he had, therefore, great pleasure in proposing the sentiment of "Health and prosperity to the city of London, illustrious from immemorial time for its commerce, its hospitality, its charities, but above all for its devotion to the cause of civil and religious liberty."

The toast was honoured most enthusiastically.

The following toasts were then given, in the order of succession in which they are enumerated:—"The Bishop of St. Asaph and the Clergy." "The health of the Lord Mayor" (by the French Ambassador), "The House of Commons and Lord Dudley Stuart." "The East India Company and the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman." "The Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England," "The Magistrates of the City of London," "The health of the Lady Mayoress" (by Sir Peter Laurie.)

At half-past ten o'clock the Lady Mayoress retired, and the company broke up shortly afterwards. Her Ladyship had a ball the same evening, which was brilliantly attended.

Roman Remains.—A correspondent of Galignani, at Pau, gives the following description of an interesting discovery made in that town:—"About fifteen years since, while some agricultural labours were being carried on in a field belonging to a M. Mouret, situated between the river Nez and the road from Pau to Oloron, the farmer discovered some masses at a short depth below the surface. Among the residents here this year is a young Englishman of sixteen years of age, Mr. Baring Gould, who, having a taste for archæology, obtained permission from the proprietor, and made an arrangement with the farmer to prosecute further search. The result of this has been the discovery of a Roman villa. The whole length of the building is between eighty and ninety feet, running north and south. The whole has not been completely excavated; but, as far as it has been cleared of earth, it appears that, on the extreme north, there are two chambers, one twenty-five, the other twenty-four feet English by twenty, each of these being beautifully floored and bordered with mosaic pavement of a great variety of colours and design; next comes the court, surrounded by a passage, into which opens a large semicircular chamber; and on the south are also other chambers, all paved in like manner, but differing in patterns, which all consist of flowers and garlands, figures of fishes, vases, and various weapons. It is to be regretted that the proprietor has imposed a condition, which renders the exploration much more costly and slow than it would otherwise have been: he requires that all the parts discovered in the course of the day shall be covered up with earth at night, in order to prevent their being damaged by the frost. Two other English gentlemen, Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Hodgson, have joined in the work. The whole, when exposed to view, will be a valuable addition to the attractions of Pau, being the completest thing of its kind found in the neighbourhood, perhaps in France, or even in Italy. It is to be hoped that the authorities of Pau, or of the department, will take care to preserve so valuable a relic of antiquity."

According to a recent Parliamentary paper, there were, in the year 1849, 42,798 acres of land in Great Britain under the cultivation of hops. The duty on hops in the year amounted to £145,698 4s. 9½d.

CAPE WAGGON.

SKETCHES AT THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The increased and still increasing interest attached to the subject of Emigration, renders peculiarly interesting authentic Sketches of the characteristics of the natives of the British colonies. Of this attractive class are the Illustrations here presented to the reader. Each is from a coloured drawing, neatly executed at the Cape; and, altogether, they present accurate portraits of the people and certain of their customs.

In the first Picture we have the noted Waggon of the Cape, described by all travellers, from Burchell and Barrow to those of the present day. Drawn by almost a dozen of oxen, and driven by a carter with a whip of unwieldy length, the team reminds one of the slowness with which the Dutch farmers—generally the possessors of these waggons—have ever adopted improvements.

The Waggon Driver beneath is a grotesque fellow, worthy of the team; he is taking snuff in the native fashion—by rubbing it on his teeth!

The Kaffir Woman to the left carries on her head a water-melon, which grows in the colony to a luxuriant size. Numbers of Kaffirs are employed as labourers; though the woman here portrayed is in her native district—the well-known kraal being shown in the distance.

The Kaffir women are more domesticated than the men, and in the planting season busy themselves in their gardens; at other times they find employment in making skin cloaks or karosses, mats, baskets, &c. The girls and young women generally remain, during the day, with their mothers, whilst the male portion of the family are absent from the kraal. Of late years, the chiefs and their wives, as well as those of superior grade, have imitated the English costume by piecemeal, and many of them cut a very grotesque appearance. The ladies wear a shabby, gaudy-tinted petticoat, a shawl of doe-kin, and a coloured handkerchief bound round their woolly pates similar to the Hottentot women, and which never comes off until it falls off by age and dirt; ablution being never resorted to by these races. The girls, however, no matter of what rank, wear no other habiliment than a sheep-skin kaross, bound round them a little below the waist, and the woolly part turned inwards. The men, as well as the women, wear some kind of necklace and earrings, composed of glass beads. The arms are decorated, also, with massive brass rings.

KAFFIR WOMAN.

CAPE WAGGONER TAKING SNUFF.

The Fingoe Woman from Algoa Bay was sketched at Port Elizabeth, where a large portion of this tribe is located along the coast as far as Sunday's River. These women are very robust and useful; they are in the habit of carrying passengers on their backs from the surf-boats to the shore. Their vest is composed entirely of sheepskins, sewn together with the woolly part next the skin: the bag behind is used for the purpose of carrying their children in. They invariably wear a necklace composed of bits of wood, metal, beads, &c., tied to a string, which are supposed by these uncnlightened people to possess a particular charm. The head-dress they wear is merely composed of a piece of cotton handkerchief. Their feet are uncovered.

The Amakosa Fingoe Man belongs to a tribe rescued by the British troops from the bondage of the Kaffirs, in the war of 1834-35. They have ever since enjoyed perfect tranquility and freedom, in districts allotted to them, within the pale of British dominion. The history and condition of this people excited very great interest. It appears that "Fingoe" is not their natural appellation, but a reproachful epithet, denoting extreme poverty and misery—a person having no claim to justice, mercy, or even life. They are the remnants of eight powerful nations, which have been destroyed or driven out of their country by the destructive wars carried on amongst the natives of the interior. Five of these nations were destroyed by the cruel Matiwana, and the rest by the notorious Zoolu chief Chaka, or some of the tribes tributary to him. The names of these nations were:—

1. Amahlubi, signifying, in the native dialect, a people who tear or pull off
2. Amangwani, or people who bring. These people are the remains of a very powerful nation which 26 or 27 years ago inhabited the country on the N.E. of Port Natal
3. Amabele, or people of mercy
4. Amangubencolo, or axe benders.
5. Amabobanene, or right-handed people
6. Amatembukazi, or people whose things are their own
7. Amarelelwana. There appears to be no definite meaning for this appellative.
8. Abashanaqo, or people that revile or reproach.

FINGOE WOMAN.

These nations being broken up and dispersed in the surrounding country, many of the people who escaped fled from time to time to the westward, and thus came into collision with the Amakosa Kaffirs, but principally with the tribes of Hintza.

AMAKOSA FINGOE MAN.

BECHUANA WAGGON LEADER.

Here they were received by that chief as entirely dependent on his mercy and generosity, and were suffered to exist on the tenure of the most abject slavery. The state of bondage had at last become utterly intolerable, and its victims embraced the opportunity afforded them by the British invasion of Kaffirland to throw off the yoke and seek protection from us. This persecuted tribe have demonstrated their gratitude to the British Government for taking them under their protection in every possible manner. Crime is scarcely ever heard of among them; the men make excellent herdsmen, and the women good house-servants and nurses; they are alike active, willing, and faithful. Their costume is similar to that of the Kaffirs. The necklace worn by some of the men (as in the annexed Sketch) is nothing more than a dried snake-skin. The dark marks on the skin are intended to represent drops of blood. So inefficient are these people to cleanliness, that immediately on the skin being strip from the animal, it is taken into wear, without the slightest attempt being made to cleanse it.

The Fetcheuna Waggon-builder is of a tribe, the remnant of what was once a very powerful and warlike nation, similar to the Fingoes, bordering upon Natal; but, consequent upon internal wars and intrigues of neighbouring clans, were almost decimated; the few that remain have chiefly taken up their abode in the Colony. The men, as well as the women, are employed as waggon-leaders (foreloopers), herds, and in other menial occupations. Their inanity of character, simplicity of manners, and inoffensive career place them in the scale of commiseration amongst the Fingoes. They proved themselves faithful and valiant soldiers during the last war, and worthy of the trust imposed upon them. Their clothing, like that of the Fingoes, consists of a sheepskin kaross, and a red woollen nightcap, procured from a trader for a few horns or a hide. Their only offensive weapon is a knob kerrie, or stick with a round knob at one end, which they can hurl with great precision, and bring a rider to the ground whilst galloping away.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 7.—Low Sunday.
MONDAY, 8.—Fire Insurance due.
TUESDAY, 9.—Sun rises 5h. 32m., sets 6h. 46m.
WEDNESDAY, 10.—Oxford and Cambridge Term begins.
THURSDAY, 11.—Length of day 13h. 31m.
FRIDAY, 12. Henry VI. married Margaret of Anjou, 1445.
SATURDAY, 13.—Handel died, 1759. Dr. Burney died, 1814.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 13, 1850.

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m	h	m
10	10	10	45	11	25	*		No	0	25	0	59	1
Tide								Tide
0	1	1	36	2	16	2	56	3	45	4	31	5	12
37	2	39	2	40	2	40	2	37	2	32	2	25	2

* At Midnight.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Grand Extra Night.—The Nobility, Patrons of the Opera, and the Public, are respectfully informed that a GRAND EXTRA NIGHT will be given on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, when will be presented (with New Scenery, Dresses, and Decorations) Mozart's celebrated Opera DON GIOVANNI. The Scenery by Mr. Charles Marshall. The Overture, by Collett, Dorville, Sig. Calzolari, Masetto, Sig. F Lablache, Leporello, Sig. Lablache; Donna Anna, Mdlle Parodi., Donna Elvira, Mdme Grisi,last; and Zerlina, Mdme. Ventur. In the Ball Room will be danced, by Mdlle Car ota Grisi and Mdlle. Marie Taglioni (who will appear as a Spanish Cavalier) Mazurka Incidental Minuet in G, and also Mozart's celebrated Zarabanda in A Minor. First time with the present scenes at the Royal Opera, Berlin. Between the Acts, a DIVERTISSEMENT, in which Mdlle Amalia Ferraris will appear. To conclude with the highly successful New and Original Comic Ballet, by M. Paul Taglioni, entitled LES MEAMORPHOSES in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Marie Taglioni, M Charles, and M Paul Taglioni, will appear. Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre. Doors open at Seven, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'Clock.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8 will be produced LE PROXI DE MARIAGE and LE DOUBLE DES VIAILLARDS, in both of which Mdlle Dunois and M Samson will perform. Vari us attractive Novel ve are in preparation Subscriptions for the remainder of the season to be arranged at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, and at the Box-office.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr W BATTY.—Fireball's new and Magnificent Spectacle Triumphantly Successful.—Second week of Easter Holiday Entertainments, unequalled for novelty and attraction—That Wonder of the World, young Hernando, having been received with unbounded enthusiasm, will have the honour of appearing for the last time previous to his departure for Paris on MONDAY, APRIL 8th, the performance will commence at Seven o'clock, with Fireball's new Grand Spectacle of Romantic interest, entitled the FOUR SONS OF AYMON; or the Days of Charlemagne, produced with great Splendour, and introducing the beautiful Steeds of Horses having Cascade of Water, Ashes, and all the vast resources of the establishment. To be succeeded by unequalled FEATS IN THE ARENA. To conclude with a Laughable Farce. Ladies and Gentlemen taught the polite art of Riding. Horses broke for Field or Road, by Mr. R Smith.—Box-office open from Eleven to Four.—Stage Manager Mr W Wo.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed, that the FIRST CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 8th, at Eight o'Clock precisely. Grand Symphony in E flat Mozart No. 3 Septet Concerto, Violin, Mr. H. U Cooper Recitative Mendelssohn Bartholdy—Overture, "The Ruler of the Spirits" Weber—Scena "Ah perfido" Beethoven—Duet "Deh Conte Barbara" Rossini—Miss Dolby and Miss Carlos. Rizz Vocal Performers: Miss Lucombe, Mr Benson, and Mr Frank Bodda. Conductor, Mr C ta—Leader, Mr Sainton—with Stalls and Tickets (admitting a gentleman and two ladies) £1 .0s; Triple Tickets (admitting three gentlemen) £2 2s, to be obtained of Messrs ADDISON, 210, Regent-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—SECOND MATINEE, on APRIL 9th, at Half-past Three o'clock Quartett, E minor Op. 44, wi h Andante and Scherzo, Posthumous Quartett, Op. 81. Mendelssohn; Sonata in G, Piano and Violin, Beethoven; Quartet, No. 10 E flat, Beethoven. Artists: Miss Dolby, Ms. and Pantti Pianist Mr. Benedict. Members are requested to pay their subscriptions to Cramer and Co.'s, Regent-street, before, half-a-guinea each, on the morning of performance, and not to admit visitors—no payment at the door

MR HENRY WYLDE'S MATINEES MUSICALES.—The FIRST will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St. James's, on MONDAY MORNING, APRIL 15th, when will be performed, by M Ernst and Mr Henry Wylde (Wylde's Duet Concertante, for pianoforte and violoncello, composed expressly for Mr Lidel mann (violonc. i) and Mr Hill (viola), Mozart's Quartett in F Minor, and Beethoven's Trio in C Minor Mr. Benedict Herman will play a Sonata by Henry Wylde, in E Major. The vocal music will be sung by Mdlle Schloss Tickets, reserved seats 10s. 6d.; unreserved seats, 7s.; to be had of Mr. MILLS, 140, New Bond-street, and of Messrs CRAMER and Co., Regent street.

MR. JOHN PARRY'S ENTERTAINMENT.—MR. JOHN PARRY will give One Performance of his ENTERTAINMENT at CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 22nd.—Tickets and Programmes to be had of Messrs OLLIVIER, Bond-street; Messrs. KEITH and PROWSE, Cheapside; and of the principal Music-sellers. The last Performances of the present Entertainment in London will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St. James's, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 9th.

DISTINS' CONCERTS.—M. DISTIN and SONS will perform on the SAX HORNS at the following Towns:—Bradford, April 8th; Wakefield, 9th; Rotherham, 10th; Hull, 11th; Hull, 12th. Mr. J. WILLY
DISTIN'S AMATEUR CORNET CLASSES, for the practice of Quartetts, assemble nightly at DISTIN'S CORNET AND SAX HORN DEPOT, 31, Cranbourn-street, Leicester-square.

CROSBY HALL, BISHOPGATE-STREET.—Mr. JOHN PARRY will give his ENTERTAINMENT for ONE NIGHT ONLY, at the above Hall, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, Commencing at Half-past Eight. Tickets, 5s., to be had of Keith and Prowse, Messrs. Olliver, and the principal Music-sellers.—The Last Performance of the present Entertainment will take place at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Monday Evening, April 9th.

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND Illustrated by a Grand Moving Diorama, with some of the most charming scenery in that country, including the lovely lakes of Killarney, by Mr. P. Phillips, now open at the Chinese Gallery, Hyde Park Corner. Open as a Evening at 8. Admission 1s., Reserved Seats, 2s. An interesting historical record of the event may be had at the Gallery.

WILL CLOSE ON THE 18TH.
EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.—BANVARD'S New Grand Moving Panorama of the OHIO RIVER, and Western Banks of the Mississipi, showing Cincinnati, the Queen City of the West, and extending through the Prairie Land to the City of New Orleans.—The Public are respectfully informed, that, in order to give all classes an opportunity of witnessing this Extraordinary Exhibition, the PRICES of ILLUMINATION on and after MONDAY, Feb. 25, will be REDUCED as follows:—Reserved Seats, 2s; Back Seats, 1s; Gallery, 6d. Painting will, as usual, be exhibited every Morning, Half-past Ten; Evening, Half-past Seven.

SOUTHAMPTON, BAY of BISCAY, the TAGUS, CAPE ST VINCENT, CAPE TRAFALGAR, GIBRALTAR, ALGIERS, MALTA, ALEXANDRIA, CAIRO, ENCAMPMENT by NIGHT, CROSSING the DESERT, the RED SEA where the Israelites crossed, MOCHA, and CALCUTTA, are all INCLUDED in the GRAND MOVING DIORAMA, portraying the entire route of the OVERLAND MAIL to INDIA, from Southampton to Calcutta, as exhibited by the ROYAL ALLBERT ILLUMINATION, No. 14, REGENT STREET, WATERLOO-PLACE, Morning, at Half-past Two; Evening, at Eight o'clock. Admission, 1s. Reserved Seats, 2s 6d. Descriptive Catalogues may be obtained at the Gallery.

NEW PICTORIAL EXHIBITION, 309, REGENT-STREET, adjoining the Royal Polytechnic Institution.—The BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE, on a Grand Scale, with VIEWS of MOLYNEUX VIADUCT, CONWAY, BIRMINGHAM, CHESTER, the VICTORIA TUBULAR BRIDGE over the CONWAY, &c.; to which has been added SNOWDON from CAPEL CARIG. Painted by J. W. ALLEN, Esq. A Description by JOHN CLARKE, Esq. During the Holidays this Exhibition on will open at Eleven o'Clock, Quarter-past Twelve, Half-past One, Quarter to Three, Four o'Clock and Evening at Seven and a Quarter past Eight. Admission, 1s.; Schools and Children, Half-price Doors open a quarter of an hour before each Exhibition.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Dr. Bachhoffner's SECOND LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY of SCIENTIFIC RECREATIONS—OPTICAL EFFECTS, Daily at Two, and every Evening, except Saturday, at Eight o'Clock. Third Lecture by J. H. Pepper, Esq on the CHEMISTRY of the METALS—with brilliant Experiments. Daily and in the Evenings, Quarterly NEW SERIES OF DISSOLVING VIEWS, exhibiting SCENES in CEYLON, from Sketches taken on the spot by A. Nicolas, Esq., painted on Glass by Mr Clare. Also a Series of Views of the ARCTIC REGIONS, with an interesting Description, Daily at Half-past Four, and in the Evening The VIEWS of LONDON in the Sixteenth Century, and as it now is are shown at One o'Clock. Experiments with the DIVER and the DIVING-BELL, &c.—Admission, 1s. Schools, Half-price

EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—Incorporated by ROYAL CHARTER.—The TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this SOCIETY is NOW OPEN. Admittance One Shilling.
Suffolk-street, Pall-mall East. April, 1850. J. W. ALLEN, Secretary.

GREAT EXHIBITION of the WORKS of INDUSTRY of all NATIONS, 1851.—NOTICE TO INTENDING EXHIBITORS.
In pursuance of the directions of Her Majesty's Commissioners, the Westminster Committee request that all persons resident in the City and Liberties of Westminster desirous of becoming exhibitors will, on or before the first day of May next, make known to the Secretary of the Committee, Mr G. B. DREW, 29 Parliament-street, a no tice of their intention, with a general description of the object to be exhibited, and the space required for its exhibition.
Printed forms for the return may be obtained on application to the Secretary, and any further information, from the Local Commissioners

Mr. J Brown, 256 Regent-street.	Mr. T J. Miller, 7, Millbank-street.
Mr J. G. Crace, 4, Wigmore street.	Mr. W. G Rogers, 10, Carlisle street, Soho.
Mr P. Graham, 13, Regent-street.	Mr. E. Snell, 27, Albemarle-street.
Mr Stephen Lewis, 163, Regent-street.

April 2, 1850.

THE CANTERBURY ASSOCIATION for FOUNDING a SETTLEMENT in NEW ZEALAND.
Incorporated by Royal Charter.
Dated 13th November, 1849
The ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY—President
JOHN HUTT, Esq., Chairman of the Committee of Management.

COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT.

The Bishop of Norwich	Hon H Cavendish	John Hutt, Esq
Lord Lyttelton	Hon F Charteris, M P	Samuel Lucas, Esq
Lord Brooke, M P	T Somes Cocks, Esq, M P	F A M'Geachy, Esq
Lord Courtney	Hare R Coleridge	G K Richards, Esq
Sir Walter Farquhar, Bart	W Forsyth, Esq	J Simeon, Esq, M P
C B Adderly, Esq, M P	Rev G R Gleig	Charles G Wynne, Esq
Hon Francis Baring, M P	Edmund Halswell, Esq	Rev Cecil Wray
	Rev E. Hawkins

Resident Chief Agent in New Zealand—J. R. GODLEY, Esq.

Information respecting the plans and progress of the Association may be obtained on application to the Secretary, at the Office of the Association, No. 11, Charing-cross

Gentlemen intending to emigrate, and who propose forming the first body of colonists must ideally, land, Eleven (11) Pres, at Port Nicholson, Cook's Straits, New Zealand, Esq., Adelphi-terrace, Strand, and are ready to give every information, either personally or by letter, to parties desirous of proceeding to the Settlement. By order, 4th March, 1850. H. F. ALSTON, Secretary.

SOLICITORS' and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, CHANCERY-LANE, London.
DIRECTORS

Church, John Thomas, Esq	Maynard, Jones Allcyne, Esq	Symons, Jellinger Cookson, Esq
Cox, Edward William, Esq	Morris, John Michael, Esq	Tyrrell, John Conyers, Esq
Deane, Samuel Worthington, Esq	Monckton, Joseph Nokes, Esq	Tyrr, John Smale, Esq
Foulkes, John S. M., Esq	Murray,	Withall, William, Esq
Jones, William, Esq	Murray, William, Esq	Wordsworth, Charles, Esq

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured.—
1st. The security of a large subscribed Capital.
2nd. Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
3rd. Tables of Premiums, calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and adapting the payment of the Premiums to every case.
4th. Participating and Non-participating Tables of Premiums. In the former, the Assured are entitled to Four-fifths of the Profits, or FOUR-TWENTIETHS of the Profits persel ally contributed, for each rem-ining full year of existence (if any), either by way of addition to the sum Assured, or Premium Reduced, at the option of the Assured.
5th. Policies Indisputable, except in case of fraud.
6th. This Society gives a much larger share of Profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium, than the generality of other Life Offices.
7th. Parties wishing to secure their Lives without participating in the Profits, can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.
Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by application to THOMAS CHURCH, Actuary.

N.B Diseased Lives Assured at adequate Premiums.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E H W, Kettering.—So the "Continental Railway Guide"
FISHER, perhaps, refers to the attached and the lantern fly
PA RENS.—[See M. W. Kew, had better address their recommendations to the Committee
H W C Apply to any bookseller. Folio may be had at 2d, strand
LOLA.—The last-named person is of the Society of Friends
A CONSTANT READER. The Savings-Banks is safe. We cannot speak as to the other
A Z—We cannot advise as to insurance contributions
JUVENIS.—The well may be seen at the Geological Office, Knightrider-street, Doctors' Commons. The expense will be 2s
W. L. LINGTON—We cannot vouch for the validity of statements in other Journals than our own
T W P, Owl Road-street.—Our Journal may be had in fifteen volumes, 18s each, except Vol 1, which is 21s
P Q, Stroud, is thanked, though we had not room for the Sketch
DELTA.—The question is too nice a point for any but a professional man to answer fully IVES.—No reward has been offered for a Queen Anne's farthing. (See "Popular Errors Explained and Illustrated.")
A GLASGOW READER.—Apply to Highley and Son, publishers, Fleet-street
A VERY OLD SUBSCRIBER.—Apply to the Secretary of his Club
A SUBSCRIBER Rilhamy.—We cannot trace the report in question to any authentic source
A M. S. Marsden may be correct, but we have not room for the question. See pipe-clay
CAPPA.—Your's is not a clash. (See page 183 of the present volume)
MIDDLESEX.—Letters in the Times newspaper, signed with initials and numbers stated
C B, Hampstead-road, is thanked, but we have not room for the subject
PHILOMATH.—Send us the details of the case, and we will look them over LOUISA.—The arms of Woodward are "Arg. two bars az., over all three bucks' heads cabossed or."
L. L.—The arms of Truscott are "Arg. three chevrons gu. a chief chequy of the first and second"
A. ——HOEBER, Gosport.—The crest of Bradshaw is "A stag at gaze under a vine tree fructed ppr."
A. L.—The arms of Turnbull are "Arg. a bull's head erased sa. Crest: A rabbit arm erect, ppr. holding in the mouth an ear of rye, ppr., by a ribband gu." Motto: "Ne te retro." A head erased sa."
DOUGLAS.—Very few of the delegates to judicial authority to that portion of its members which formerly Join ed Commissions
SUCH TAPSUN—Duffus is the name of the Barony whence the family of Sutherland took their title, on being elevated to the Peerage, in 1650, in the person of Alexander Sutherland, of Duffus. The name of Sutherland is derived from the Norse words, signifying "The arms of the family of Duff are "Vert a fesse dancette erm. between a hart's head caboshed in chief, and two escal ops in base or"
THOMAS.—A man must be a Bachelor of Arts before you can take a Master's degree.
DUKE.—Dykefield is in the barony of Bargh, Cumberland, a few miles from Carlisle
LEGATUS.—We cannot discover any arms belonging to the family of Hammens, of Sussex, one of whom, Mary Hammons, married Thomas Hongwood, of Horsham, born to 1699
F F A.—There are many families of arms attached to the name of Woodcock. What is the quality of the family whose bearings W F A requires?
I. L.—The arms of the ancient and respectable family of Hatch of Devon were "Gu. two ch vrons or, between three [illegible] and a crescent arg."
ION.—Lodge are no arms registered or recorded to the name in question. Is it not likely to be a corruption of the name of Lodge, which is well known in Lancashire heraldry? The Braggs, of Sudborough, in that county, bore for arms: "Arg. a chev. vert, between three bugle passant gu. Crest: A lion rampant arg. gorged with a collar, or, and az"
W N—General Sir Charles Napier was born at Whitehall
SARA.—The Knights of Dunes is elder son and heir apparent of the Duke of Wellington, by his deceased wife, Catherine, third daughter of Edward Michael second Lord Longford
CYRUS.—Lord Hill wrote Viscount Hill, and Sir Henry was styled "General Commanding-in-Chief" The Duke of Wellington is "Commander-in-Chief"
ALEX. MACKINNON.—The crest of Bullen is "A bull's head couped sa. armed or."
GLADTONBURY.—Grief or any boundary
J W H.—We cannot inform you
A SUBSCRIBER, Wisbeach.—Thanked
R H. Woolwich.—Ineligible
DANIEL S. STUART, J. B. S E R, A SUBSCRIBER, Lasmington; FURRIER, F, Woolwich; A F R, Lines on a Shipwreck

TRITON, Edinburgh.—Yes
L L is thanked

* * Replies to several Correspondents are unavoidably deferred.

BOOKS, &c RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Railway Economy. By Dr. Lardner.——Thompson on Building Societies.——Davidson's Shilling Volume of Plays.
MUSIC.—Songs without Words.—Macbeth.——Marche pour le Piano.——Une Reverie.——Le Nuit.——Remember Thee.——Absent Friends.——O Saviour of the World.——Sacred Songs and Anthems. The Harp.——Language of Flowers.——Song of the Alpine Storms.——Davidson's Instrumental Gems.

ROME.

On MAY 4th will be Presented, to all Regular Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, a

SPLENDID VIEW OF ROME,

Engraved in the Best Manner, from an Original Drawing made during the Late Siege. On which occasion a DOUBLE NUMBER of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be published, price ONE SH.LLING The Two Numbers with the large View of Rome Gratis, intended to form the Frontispiece to Vol. XVI. of this Journal.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1850.

THE Overland Mail of the 2nd of March brings intelligence which is ominous of future troubles in the Punjaub. It would seem to be our unhappy destiny to be compelled to extend our empire against our wishes, and to be forced into wars of conquest by chiefs upon whom leniency is thrown away—who break their engagements, meet our indulgence with treachery, and aim at nothing less than our expulsion from India. There is as yet nothing very positive in the news; but, as the weather-wise can foretel a storm by very small preliminary indications, so those who pay attention to Indian affairs can see the tempests while they are yet far off. There has been a mutiny at Umritsur, in the 66th Regiment of Bengal Native Infantry, and no less than 170 men have been arrested. A portion of them have been tried by court-martial, and it is probable, considering the circumstances of the Punjaub, that a severe example will be made of the ringleaders: Sir Charles Napier has shown that he will not be trifled with. There are rumours, also, of the discovery of a plot, on the part of the Sikh chieftains, to undermine the fortress of Lahore, and blow the British into the air. These reports, however, have not yet assumed any definite shape, and may possibly be exaggerated. The most serious part of the business is an expedition against the Affreedies, in which our arms, if not altogether unsuccessful, have not obtained such a triumph as will supersede the necessity of still greater exertions to quell the insurrection.

The province of Peshawur has many troublesome and savage neighbours, and it is amongst one of these tribes that we have found a new enemy. The original cause of quarrel was a provocation on the part of the Affreedies, who attacked and robbed a party of Sappers employed in the construction of a road through the Kohat Hills. These mountaineers, like the old Highlanders of Scotland after the Rebellion of 1745, have a shrewd suspicion that a good road will put an end to the security of their native fastnesses, and a natural dislike to the means by which this result is to be brought about. In the attack upon the Sappers, several of our men lost their lives; and an expedition, under the command of Colonel Bradshaw, comprising several companies of infantry and cavalry, and a corps of artillery—all provided with abundance of ammunition and provisions for fourteen days—was despatched from Peshawur to Kohat, to punish the aggression; Sir Charles Napier and Sir Colin Campbell accompanied the expedition—as amateurs. The result, as first stated, was, that the expedition was "completely successful;" but later intelligence leads us to doubt its complete success, when it adds that one officer, Ensign Sitwell, was cut to pieces, and his arm affixed to a spear-head as a trophy; that another, Lieutenant Hilliard, was fatally wounded by a shot through the lungs; and that many men were killed and wounded. The Affreedies were repulsed; but, as "operations on a large scale against them are to be immediately resumed," we may well doubt the complete success of the battle of Kohat. This mail also conveys the intelligence of a small piece of annexation. The Rajah of Sikkim, about two months since, detained and imprisoned two English botanists, Drs. Campbell and Hooker, who were traversing his country for purposes purely scientific. This small potentate was in receipt of an annual subsidy of £600 per annum from our Government, and drew from our treasury the revenue of £1600 per annum. His pension has been stopped and his country has been annexed, so that his interference with the men of science has cost him dear. The next annexation, we suppose, will be that of the mountains of Kohat and the whole country of the Affreedies. In this manner our empire grows.

THE Erfurt Parliament has assembled, and a new move has been made in the cunning and complicated game which the King of Prussia is playing for the Emperorship of Germany. The original enthusiasm of the German people for the more complete union of the various petty states of the "Confederation," seems to have died away, or, at least, to have very considerably cooled down. It does not even appear that the King of Prussia is very warmly supported by his own subjects in his attempt to annex Hanover, Saxony, Wurtemburg, Bavaria, Hesse, and the various Duchies and Grand Duchies of Germany to the dominions of the House of Hohenzollern, and to make the Kings and Dukes his Peers and Senators. However, he has entered upon his career; he has pledged his word to go on, and he has already proceeded too far to draw back with credit. What the result can be, unless it be civil war, it is difficult to imagine. The "four Kings," namely, those of Hanover, Saxony, Wurtemburg, and Bavaria, have joined the Emperor of Austria in resistance to his project, which they consider to be one intended for the aggrandisement of Prussia, and having no other object. Their resistance, which is at present confined to words, will very likely take another shape as soon as the Erfurt Parliament shall give the signal by any attack on their individual rights as independent Sovereigns. Austria once threatened, that she would treat the mere assembling of this Parliament as a casus belli. She has, since that period, consented to lower her tone in some degree; but she is evidently determined, at the proper moment, to oppose herself, with her whole strength, and that of the four Kings, her allies, to the scheme of the House of Hohenzollern. Whatever may be the ultimate result as regards the interesting question of the unity of Germany, the chances of the King of Prussia's success to attain the object of his ambition do not appear very brilliant.

THE REVENUE.

The Revenue accounts for the past year to the quarter ending the 5th inst., were made up last night.

The returns for the quarter show a decrease as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1849, under the head of Customs, but an increase on Excise, Property-Tax, and Assessed Taxes. On the whole year the returns show a considerable increase as compared with the returns for 1849.

The following are the chief items:—

	For the Quarter.	For the Year ending April 5, 1850
Customs	£4,432,584	£18,535,352
Excise	£1,899,473	£12,792,713
Stamps	£1,531,125	£6,354,429
Taxes	£177,731	£4,332,979
Property-Tax . .	£3,009,608	£5,466,248

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

The Easter holidays have been passed in comparative retirement by the Court at Windsor Castle

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and his Grace the Duke of Wellington have been almost the only notable visitors sharing the Royal hospitality at the Castle.

On Good Friday the Queen and the Prince attended Divine service in the private chapel, and were recipients of the Holy Communion.

On Easter-day her Majesty and the Prince Consort again attended the service. The Duchess of Kent was also present.

On Monday the Queen and the Prince took their usual early morning walk in the grounds around the Castle. The Royal dinner party in the evening included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Lady Fanny Howard, Baroness de Speth, Lady Vernon and the Hon. Miss Vernon, Rev. F. and the Hon. Mrs. F. Anson, and Sir George Couper.

On Tuesday there was no addition to the Royal circle.

On Wednesday the Prince Consort took equestrian exercise, attended by Lieut.-Colonel F. Seymour. In the evening, the Duke of Wellington arrived at the Castle, on a visit to her Majesty and the Prince, and, with the Duchess of Kent, joined the Royal dinner party.

On Thursday, the Queen and the Prince Consort took their usual early walk on the Slopes. The Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Wellington were again, the evening, guests at the Royal table.

Lord Elphinstone has relieved the Earl of Morley in his duties as Lord in Waiting to the Queen; and Col. Berkeley Drummond has relieved Mr. R. Ormsby Gore in his duty as Groom in Waiting to her Majesty. Lord Charles Fitzroy has relieved Major-Gen. Wemyss in his duty as Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty, and Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour has relieved Col. Bouverie in his duty as Equerry in Waiting to Prince Albert.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge honoured the Royal Society of Arts with a visit on Thursday. The Royal Duke also visited the Duchess of Gloucester on Thursday, at Gloucester House.

The Princess Napoleon Bacciocchi and suite have arrived at Fenton's Hotel, from Paris

The Duke of Wellington is surrounded by a select family circle at Strathfieldsaye.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, with the Lady Adelaide and Lord Ernest Vane, left Holdernesse House on Monday, travelled wit the South-Eastern Railway to Dover, and sailed thence, with Captain Smidtsit, for Calais, en route for Paris, where the noble Marquis and Marchioness will sojourn for some weeks, on a visit to the President of the Republic.

The Marquis of Lansdowne has been passing the recess at Brighton.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE ORPHAN WORKING-SCHOOL.—The Queen has been pleased to present to the above institution, as nominee in right of her Majesty's munificent donation of 230 guineas, Joseph Parrett, one of seven children of the Rev. C. E. Parrett, Independent minister of Mevagissey, Cornwall. His wife died of cholera last year, and his income arising from all sources is under £70 a year.

EXTENSIVE EMBEZZLEMENT.—On Thursday information was received at the Head Police-office, Scotland-yard, that one of the clerks in the Suffolk Improved Building and Investment-Yard, had absconded from Ipswich, taking with him £1800 in cash, the property of the shareholders.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The only feature to be noticed in the Paris news of yesterday (Friday), is the expulsion from the capital of several hundreds of vagrants, who were without any wilful employment or fixed residence, who had their haunts in the low parts of the city, and there formed a hive of discontent and crime, ever on the watch, and ready to hoist the native agitator as an ameute, assuming their warmth as a shelter under the mask of patriotism and ultra-democratism. There were no less than 1500 of them expelled on Wednesday afternoon.

The cause of this summary measure is mentioned in another column as having originated in the Legislative Assembly on Wednesday, was caused by M. FAVIE's amendment for reducing the funds allowed to the Minister of the Interior. Ultimately it was rejected by 440 to 175. During the uproar the majority and minority exchanged very foul epithets, and a member of the Montagnards even shook his fist at the majority. One of the Montagnards had a vote of censure passed upon him by an immense majority. General Cavaignac was one of the first to vote for the censure.

WEST INDIES.

Yesterday (Friday) the Trent arrived with the West India Mail, bringing dates from Jamaica of March 10, and Barbadoes of March 12. Of political intelligence there is none of the least interest. The Hon. J. T. Barnard, chairman of the Jamaica Quarter Sessions, died on the 3rd of March. In several of the islands the crops were suffering for want of rain.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ROYAL HOSPITALS OF THE CITY.

On Monday the annual reports were made to the Lord Mayor, from the several Royal Hospitals of the city of London. The following is an abstract:—

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.—Children put forth apprentices and discharged from Christ's Hospital this year last past, 199; ten of whom, being instructed in mathematics and navigation, were placed forth apprentices to commanders of ships, out of the mathematical school founded by his late Majesty King Charles II. Children deceased the year last past, 10. Children now under the care and charge of the hospital in London and at Hertford, 1402. To be admitted on presentations granted to this time, 198.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.—Patients admitted, cured, and discharged, during the last year, 6146 (including 1 case of cholera) in-patients; and 71,564 medical and surgical out-patients, including casualties, most of whom were poor, sick, and lame persons; and many of them being destitute, have been supplied with money, clothes, and other necessaries, to enable them to return to their habitations. Died from cholera, 198; from other causes, 432: remaining under care, in-patients, 532; out-patients, 2340. All fees on the admission of patients have been abolished, and the accommodation of the in-patients extended as to admit 880, while their diet and general comforts have been materially improved. The expense attendant upon the reception of cholera cases during the past year has been great, and great indeed have been the benefits conferred upon the public by their free admission.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—There have been admitted, cured, and discharged, during the last year, of sick, wounded, maimed, and diseased persons, 4737 in-patients; and 59,109 medical and surgical out-patients, including casualties, most of whom have been relieved with money and necessaries at their departure, to accommodate and support them in their journies to their several habitations. Died, after much change in their sickness, 301; remaining under care—in-patients, 417; out-patients, 3831. So that more have been, during the last year, under the care of the said hospital, in all, 63,995.

BARTHOLOMEW HOSPITAL.—Received into the hospital during the last year, under the commitments by the Lord Mayor and the Aldermen of this city, as criminal or disorderly persons, who have been kept to hard labour or received correction, 812. Apprentices sent by the Chamberlain for confinement, 25. Received into this hospital during the same period sundry poor persons who had been found wandering abroad and begging in the city of London, 287. The House of Occupation at Bridewell Hospital: received into the house as Discharmes, 1848—males, 86; females, 102. Admitted in 1849 males, 80; females, 30.

BETHLEM HOSPITAL.—Admitted during the year, 150 males, 194 females. Discharged cured: 70 males, 106 females.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION OF 1851.—At a preliminary meeting of the inhabitants of Lambeth, held on Tuesday, at the Hawkstone Hall, Waterloo-road, J. Field, Esq., of the firm of Maudsley and Field, in the chair, a resolution favourable of this Exhibition were unanimously passed, and other arrangements are making for a general meeting of the inhabitants being forthwith called.

MR. SHAW AND TENANT RIGHT.—On Monday, at the monthly meeting of the Central Farmers' Club, held at the Crab-tree, Fulham, the subject of tenant right was introduced by Mr. Shaw, and discussed at considerable length. At the close of the discussion the following resolution was agreed to unanimously:—"That all valuations between the landlord, or the incoming tenant, and the outgoing tenant, justice to the parties may be amply secured by defining in the agreement the period over which the claim for compensation should extend, the operations or articles for which the tenant should be entitled to claim, and as far as possible the mode in which the sum which should be furnished to the valuers in case of reference or arbitration." A service of plate, subscribed for by tenant-farmers, was then presented to Mr. Shaw by Mr. Hughes, on behalf of the club, in an address highly eulogistic of his able, consistent, and persevering advocacy of tenant right during the last seven years. On a silver there was the following inscription: "Tenant right.—To William Shaw, Esq., as a mark of esteem and admiration for the manner in which he has so long and ably advocated the tenant-farmer's rights, this token is offered by some of those friends who appreciate the conduct of the man and the justice of the cause." In reply, Mr. Shaw stated that, highly as he appreciated this testimonial of respect, he felt that the best reward of his exertions would be the establishment of tenant right throughout the country.

LLOYD'S.—At a special general meeting of the members, held on Wednesday, Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P., was unanimously elected a member of the committee for managing the affairs of Lloyd's, previous to his taking the chair, in the room of G. R. Robinson, Esq., M.P., resigned. The following votes were proposed and unanimously adopted:—£50 in aid of the fund in behalf of the widows and children of the pilots drowned by the capsizing of the South Shields life-boat, on the 4th December last, in proceeding to the rescue of the crew of the brig Betsey, of Little Harbour, on the Middle Sand; £10 to six coast guardsmen belonging to the No 2 Battery and Great Stone Station, for their praiseworthy conduct in saving the lives of the crew of the Margaretta Retsena, wrecked on the night of the 28th ult., on Romney Sand; £5 5s. to the widow of Thomas Bennet and John Baxter, pilots for Larne Lough, who were drowned in the schooner Water Nymph, wrecked during a gale on the Scotch Coast, on the 6th February, having previously volunteered to go on board, at the risk of their lives, in order to assist in getting the vessel into the Lough; the honorary bronze medal to Mr. M'Farren, master of the schooner Eagle, of Liverpool, to mark the sense entertained of his humane and praiseworthy conduct towards eleven Mosleems whom she met with in an open boat at sea, their vessel having foundered twelve days previously.

SELF-SUPPORTING DISPENSARIES.—A highly respectable meeting of members of the medical profession, and other gentlemen, was held on Tuesday, at No. 33, Edward-street, Portman-square—Dr. Daniell in the chair—when it was resolved to establish a central association, under the title of "The London Society," for the purpose of circulating information, and facilitating the establishment of self-supporting dispensaries throughout the United Kingdom, on the principles advocated by Mr. Smith, of Waltham, whose philanthropic and unwearied endeavours in the cause of these institutions were warmly and deservedly lauded. Amongst those present were Dr. Forbes, Dr. Moore, Dr. Cormack, Dr. Sir James Anderson, James Yearsley, Esq., G. Alford, Esq., &c. Letters of approbation and support were also read from Dr. Connolly, Dr. W. Stroud, Dr. Charles Hare, the Rev. Henry Berkeley, the Rev. Canon Dale, &c.

BREWERS' AND DISTILLERS' CLERKS' ANNUITY FUND SOCIETY.—On Tuesday evening, a meeting of the members and committee of management of this institution, formed in 1840, for granting annuities to a limited number of members, was held at the New Corn Exchange Coffee-house, Mark-lane, City, for the transaction of general business; Mr. F. Earle, president, in the chair. The annual report was a most satisfactory character, the applicants at present on the funds consisting of eight widows and twelve children; the capital of the society invested with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, being £4347 9*l*., in the hands of Messrs. Barclay, Perkins, and Co., £500; and Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Co., £500. The balance-sheet figured the receipts from all sources, including last year's balance of £98 5s. 7d., as £212 16s. 11*d*. The expenditure, including £196 7s. 6*d*. paid to annuitants, left a balance in hand of £233 8s 9*d*.

CITY OF LONDON GENERAL PENSION SOCIETY.—On Monday afternoon a general meeting of the governors of this charity, established in 1818, for affording relief to decayed tradesmen and tradeswomen over sixty years of age, was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of electing four additional pensioners from a list of thirty-one candidates; Luke Hansard, Esq., in the chair. The report stated that the society was at present all riding relief to thirty-three men and twenty-five women, making fifty-eight aged persons who are receiving pecuniary assistance, the men 27s. and the women 18s. per month. The income of the charity for 1849, from all sources, including a balance in hand of £167 7s. 7*d*., amounted to £2120 3s. 9*d*.; while the expenditure for the same period had fallen short of that amount by £454 8s. 1*d*., which remained as a balance in favour of the society. This report was received and adopted, and the meeting proceeded to the election of four candidates, two men and two women; at the conclusion of which the meeting separated, with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—At the monthly meeting of this society, held on Monday, Mr. Westwood exh bited a new Coleopterous insect (Cholcoscera Maderæ), remarkable for having the usual faceted eyes replaced by ocelli, a peculiarity not hitherto observed in any metamorphotic winged insect. Mr. Douglas exhibited a new Tinea (Elachista occultella), and read brief descriptions of it, and of the Tortrix (Graphiolitha Westwoodiana) he had exhibited in January. Mr Stainton exhibited a mining larva in the leaves of Helianthemum vulgare A paper, by Mr. S. S. Saunders, was read on two new Strepsipterous insects from Ahmedabad, parasitic on the genus Hylæus, with some extremely interesting remarks on their habits and metamorphoses.

LONDON JOINT STOCK BANK.—A special meeting of this company was held on Thursday, at which Francis Bennett Goldney, Esq., was elected a director, in the room of Sir Felix Booth, one of the earliest promoters of the company, deceased

TOWER HAMLETS SANITARY REFORM ASSOCIATION.—A public meeting of this society was held at Cosby Hall, Bishopsgate-street, on Thursday, the Rev. R. Lee, Rector of Stepney, in the chair, when a series of resolutions, and a petition to the Legislature, was adopted, praying that immediate steps should be taken to give to the inhabitants of the metropolis a good supply of water on the high-pressure principle—good and efficient drainage—laws to ensure the healthiness of the houses of the poor being attended to—and to abolish intramural burials.

METROPOLITAN PUBLIC CARRIAGES OFFICE.—A notice has been issued to the public, and to proprietors, drivers, conductors, and watermen, stating that the business of this office will close on the 6th inst. (this day), and, under the provisions of the Act of the 13th of Victoria, cap. 7, the duties will, in future, be carried on at the office of the commissioners of police of the metropolis, in Great Scotland Yard; but, in consequence of the time that will be required for the removal and arrangement of the books and papers, &c., no business can be transacted until the 10th inst.

EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT AMONGST THE DISSENTERS.—In consequence of its having been determined to consolidate the three colleges in connexion with the Independent Dissenters now existing in London, into one great college, to be erected at St. John's Wood, a movement has recently been commenced amongst the members of that body, to educate their teachers, and the children of the poor, on a different plan from that pursued by the Committee of Council on Education. It was suggested that the building known as Homerton College, should be purchased for their normal schools; and on Wednesday evening an important meeting was held upon the subject at the Congregational Library, Blomfield-street, Finsbury-pavement. Samuel Morley, Esq., presided, and was supported by a large number of influential and opulent Dissenters resident in the metropolis. Resolutions were adopted, approving of the arrangements effected by the Board of Education for the purchase of Homerton College and grounds, and recommending that a subscription should be at once commenced to defray the expenses of their purchase and adaptation to the purposes of the board. At the close of the proceedings it was announced that the sums contributed at the meeting amounted in the aggregate to £2407 17*s*.

CITY OF LONDON HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—Her most gracious Majesty having been pleased to order her annual donation to the above institution, since the forwarding of her Majesty's contribution to the funds every effort is being made to promote the speedy erection of the intended new hospital for in-patients at Victoria Park. From the evident necessity that exists for the asylum, and the many exalted names already placed on the list of patrons, it is to be hoped that the co operation of the affluent will not be wanting to effect the early completion of the much desired edifice.

PAINTED GLASS.—The east window of St. Paul's Church, Bermondsey, which consists of three lights and tracery, has been filled with stained and painted glass, from the manufactory of Messrs. James Powell and Sons, of Whitefriars, and was completed a few days since. The subjects chosen for the window are executed by Mr. Francis Barrand, have been selected in commemoration of God's great mercy in removing the cholera in 1849, and are designed to illustrate from Holy Scripture Christ cleansing the ten lepers—one returning to give glory to God; Aaron staying the plague; and the Good Samaritan. Two small heraldic oponings in the appar part of the windows: the Hebrew Jehovah, surrounded by scrolls bearing the text, "Hear, O Israel! the Lord they God is our Lord," and in Hebrew, is introduced in the tracery the arms and initials of the Incumbent, and the general groundwork of the window consists of rich geometrical patterns copied from York Minster. The incumbent, churchwardens, and parishioners, were present, and are much pleased with the window.

NEW POSTAL CONVENTION WITH FRANCE.—The visit of the Right Honourable the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Postmaster-General, to Paris, our readers are aware, is for the purpose of carrying into effect the new arrangement with the French Government for the reduction of the postage on letters between the two countries. At present, the British and foreign postage on letters to France is tenpence under a quarter of an ounce, which is an extremely high rate, but, by the new arrangement, which will take effect, it is to be reduced to sixpence, the same as on letters to Belgium, and the weight to be extended to half an ounce, the same as in England, as great inconvenience is experienced by having a different rate to the two countries. Letters to Belgium are also to be extended from a quarter to half an ounce, as well as the whole of the Continent, so as to have a uniform weight. This reduction in the postage will be the means of materially increasing our correspondence between the two countries, which will simply repay the Post-Office

EASTER TERM.—On Wednesday, on the opening of the law offices after the holidays, the lists of arrears of the common law courts for the ensuing Easter Term, commencing on Monday next, were published. There is a marked improvement in the lists, and Lord Denman will have the satisfaction of leaving from the Chief Justiceship of the Court of Queen's Bench with but comparatively few arrears, and in a very different state to what he found them. The Queen's Bench there are of special cases and demurrers only on for judgment and fifty for argument. In the New Trial paper there is only one for judgment and seventy-four for argument. In the Court of Common Pleas there are only a few enlarged rules in the remanet paper, nine rules nisi in the New Trial paper, three matters standing for the judgment of the Court, and sixteen demurrers. In the Court of Exchequer there are four rules in the paper for judgment, and cases and motions for judgment, nine special cases for argument, and twenty-one rules in the New Trial paper. The whole arrears of the three courts, exclusive of Crown cases, in the Queen's Bench, the arrears are 230 in the Court of Queen's Bench, 31 in the Court of Common Pleas, and 43 in the Court of Exchequer

IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE DAIRY.—On Monday there was exhibited before the Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and several of their friends, in the justice-room, the American churn, which in ten minutes produced four pounds of butter from five quarts of cream. One of its recommendations is its great simplicity. The mechanical action of the air, which is mingled with the cream in such a manner that a thorough separation of the particles of butter prevents the cream from frothing on the surface, and does its work with astonishing rapidity and in the most complete manner. The butter was washed in the churn by pouring of the milk, putting in cold water, and pressing the butter against the sides of the churn, moving the dasher backwards and forwards, and changing the water until it remained clear SERIOUS RIOT AT GREENWICH FAIR.—On Wednesday night, a large body of military, composed of men belonging to the Royal Artillery and to the Royal Marines, commenced an attack upon the travelling theatre of Mr. Nelson Lee. The populace took part with the heroes of the baskin; but the soldiers speedily stormed the edifice, and destroyed themselves all the records and plots, and anything which might be used as a weapon upon which they could seize. The police were called in, and were defeated; a stronger force was then mustered, but they too had to retire from the field, and it was not till a party of soldiers from Woolwich, the police, led by their inspectors on horseback, charged the rebels in grand military style. From the somewhat incoherent account which has reached us, it appears that the fight lasted about two hours and a-half, and that the servants of the proprietor were packing up some of the works of art. Immediately after the noise ceased, a cab was heard to drive away from the door. The value of the property destroyed is estimated by Mr. Conroy at nearly £1000. No clue has yet been discovered to lead to the apprehension of the rioters.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, March 30, 1850:—Males, 711; females, 703; total, 1414. Average of the same period—Males, 690; females, 667: total, 1167. In the ten corresponding weeks, namely, the thirteenth in each of the years 1840-49, the average number of deaths was 1094, or, correcting for increase of population, was 1150: there is therefore, an apparent excess of mortality in last week above the average, but it amounts only to 17. This weekly number of deaths has continuously increased during the last month, as the returns ending with Saturday the 9th, 16th, 23rd, and 30th week of March, will show: the deaths were successively 975, 1057, 1095, and 1167. Part of the great increase in the last return is due to the augmented mortality of diseases that affect the organs of respiration, for in this class the deaths registered last week are 232 (namely, from bronchitis, 118; from pneumonia, 88; from asthma, 29; from laryngitis, pleurisy, and other diseases of the respiratory organs, 26). This class numbered in the previous week 231; and in both weeks the numbers are much above the average, which is not more than 184. The extraordinary coldness of the weather serves to explain this result. From consumption there were in the previous week 135, in the last 115; in both there were considerably less than the corrected average, which is about 150. In the epidemic class, small pox and scarlatina are still less fatal than usual, especially the latter; measles, hooping-cough, and typhus, from which there were last week 19, 44, and 39 respectively, show about the ordinary amount of fatality: 7 persons died of influenza, being an increase; 18 of diarrhœa and dysentery, which is less than in the previous week but more than the average. But the excess in the last return over the week immediately preceding is only to a small extent caused by an increased rate of mortality; coroners' cases, many of which were not duly registered during the quarter as they occurred, but were kept in reserve till the end of it, swell the account. These chiefly consist of deaths from fractures, wounds, burns, and scalds, hanging, drowning, and poison, amounting in the present case to 91, of which only 10 occurred in the week, and of 52 "sudden" deaths, of which the causes have not been sufficiently ascertained, or are imperfectly returned, and of which only six occurred in the week. Amongst others are 5 children suffocated in bed, or on the mother's breast, 3 persons who died of intemperance, and a man from exposure to cold. The following is an analysis of the week's returns:—

Deaths certified by written statements of qualified practitioners	961
Deaths not certified by medical attendants, or not reported as certified	24
Deaths not certified, because the deceased had no medical attendance	13
Deaths returned by coroners	169
Total	1167

From this table it appears that deaths registered in London, with the signatures of coroners, and fatal diseases registered under the authority of medical certificates, are to the whole number in the proportion of nearly 97 per cent.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean daily reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on Friday; the mean of the week was 29 746. The mean temperature of the week was 35 9 degrees, and was throughout lower than the average of the same week in seven years; from Sunday to Thursday inclusive this decrease on the average fluctuated between 9 and 13 degrees. Taking the corresponding week of ten previous years (1840-49), it appears that it was never lower than 40·9 degrees (in 1849); that it fluctuated between that and 51·2 degrees (in 1843); and that the mean was 45·3 degrees, or about 10 degrees higher than the mean of last week. The temperature was lowest on Tuesday, when the mean was 31·2 degrees; and on the same day the highest temperature of the water of the Thames was 39·3 degrees, and the lowest 35 9 degrees.

EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

(Continued from page 217.)

THE truly unique character of the collection now on view at the Society of Arts enables us to present to our readers another engraved selection from these artistic treasures, promising in such that is interesting to the antiquary with much that is of actual value to the utilitarian. Each of these specimens claims attention, as indicative of the state of art, the manners, customs, or manufactures of the particular age in which it was produced.

We endeavored to show, in a former (the 4th) part of this Journal, how the various branches of ancient art were subject to the influences of the period at which they flourished, and more especially to that of religion; thus, whilst we are indebted to the Greek or Roman sculptor for the beautiful examples of statuary required by mythology, for the adornment of their temples, or for the Lares and Penates of their private dwellings, at a subsequent period, and under a different form of worship (the Christian religion indeed, but not less calculated to awaken the genius of the artist), we are presented with a great variety of works of art of an emblematic character. These, however rude and unskilled at first, became ultimately conductive to the perfection at which many of these arts subsequently arrived; and thus it is that whilst at one end of the room the visitor may inspect the graceful statuettes of Juno and Polyhymnia of the classic ages, the progenitors of Sir John Boileau, Bart, at the other he may witness the enamelled triptych of the 13th century, belonging to the Earl of Shrewsbury, or a "tournay" mantel of the sixteenth. It is to this peculiar adaptability to the imagination or faculties of each individual (for example he must have been fastidious or ignorant indeed who could not find some attraction in a scene calculated to recall so many historical recollections). That this Exhibition must owe much of its present popularity is said, as we have even several examples of the works of Cellini, Michael Angelo, and other great masters, we now proceed to illustrate an object which ought to excite the highest interest in the mind of every Englishman, being no less than the Book of Prayers which was presented to Queen Elizabeth by MRS. Tyrwhit. This curious relic is bound in a massive gold cover, having a small clasp and chain by which it depended from the girdle, so as to afford to the fashion with ladies of those times, from an examination of the portrait of Queen Mary, by Sir Antonio More, which has been hung up in an adjacent spot for the purpose of comparison. On one side of the cover of this book is represented in enamel the subject of the lifting up of the serpent by Moses in the wilderness, having the following text inlaid around the edges:—

MAKE THE A FYRYSE SERPENT AN. SETT IT VP. FOR. A SYGNE. THAT. AS MANY AS ARE SMYTE. LOKE VPON IT. AN LYVE.

And on the other side is the "Judgment of Solomon," with this legend:—

THEN THE KYNG. ANSWERED. AN SAYD GYVE HR THE. LYVYNGE CHILD. AN. S.LAYE T. NOT. FOR SHE IS THE. MOTHER THEROF

It will be remarked that both these verses differ slightly from the present version of the Bible. As it is actually on record that this or a similar volume was presented to the Lady Elizabeth by her preceptress, MRS. Tyrwhit, precisely such a book having been described by Anthony à Wood as having belonged to the queen; and as we know that Mrs. Tyrwhit was an ardent supporter of, and for her adoption of the tenets of the Reformation, it is not unreasonable to ascribe a historical value to this "Book of Private Prayers" far beyond its intrinsic worth; indeed, we may say what influence this book may have exercised, if any, not only in fixing the religious principles of the Virgin Queen, but even on the future destinies of Protestant England. It formerly belonged to Sir John Cullum, but is now the property of Mr. Farrer, and was first publicly exhibited by him at the meeting of the Archæological Institute, at Salisbury, last year

And here we present our readers with an Engraving of another record of Royalty, being the Cup or Hanap presented to King Charles I. by the Corporation of Oxford. In the elaborate enamelled ornaments of silver much of the affection which characterises the goldsmith's work of this period; but there is an interest attached to anything connected with the life of the unfortunate Monarch to whom it was given, the many names and records of whose wrongs, in every kind of form or design It is a matter of surprise, however, that such a quantity of precious metal escaped the rapacity of the Parliamentary Commissioners.

In the same groups of objects, all the property of her Majesty the Queen, is the celebrated ivory or Diana Cup, as it is called, the work of a Norwegian artist, named Magnus Berger, who flourished about the year 1720, and which, for delicacy of execution, may serve as an example of carving in this substance. Albeit, we are somewhat slow in recognising a work of this class to be the production of a Hyperborean artist, and, but for positive evidence to the contrary, we should have deemed it the offspring of some more southern imagination. It is difficult, however, to convey an impression by words of such rare merit as this; so much depends upon the just appreciation by each individual of the great skill and labour demanded for its execution, and where each little symbol of the chase and its accessories, even to the minutest concentration of the hunting hounds, have been carefully attended to, the toute ensemble can hardly fail to arrest the attention of even the most casual observer. The bowl is supported by figures of Diana, Actæon, and Cupid, and surmounted by a statue of Diana, as a huntress; and in the absence of more authentic information, it may be conjectured that this cup was the premium for some successful feat of venery, even as her Majesty's rewards for the encouragement of the "noble science."

The Mother of Pearl Cup represented in this groupe, also the property of her Majesty, is a fine example of workmanship of the seventeenth century. The perforated silver-gilt stem and cover harmonise well with the fragile substance of which the bowl is composed.

The next illustration we have been enabled to give is from that class of subjects which are supposed to derive their claim to notice rather to some circumstance connected with their history than to any merit they possess as real works of art. There is nothing, for instance, particularly remarkable in the form or design of the "Poison Cup," of which we are now speaking, and which is formed of green glass like European ware with an outer case of silver gilt. The object is a cup for, if by a crystal gem, which was considered to be a charm against treachery; "for if the draught contained in the cup were poisoned, the gem would infallibly have broken or burst." This is the tradition, at all events, which attaches to the name, and which its present proprietor, the Master of Clare Hall, Cambridge, is of course, in duty bound, to hand down unquestioned to his successor, though we opine that this cup has been emptied many a time and oft with no small relish, and gather to its own valuable properties or to the prescriptions of the learned physician, William Butler, by whom it was presented to the Hall in the reign of King James I.

Amongst the numerous objects which have materially enriched this collection since it was first opened to the public, we observe the Cup and two Salcellars given to Gonville's College, Cambridge, by its founders, Margaret of Beaufort, mother of King Henry VII. These are all (especially the Cup) profusely enriched with the family badge of the rose and portcullis. In former times, when it was the custom for a baron and his retainers to dine at the same board, there were distinctive observances to mark the various distinctions of rank, and the different gradations in degree were not less rigidly (and must have been far more offensively) observed than than in the present day: thus we find that a salt was placed at the right hand of the host, in front, and at the head of the table, and his more honoured guests partook; others were placed as landmarks, denoting the boundaries of gentility, and hence the phrase "to be below the salt" or above the salt, which has survived the customs so frequently made use of even now as descriptive of persons of inferior degree.

We notice, also, a most gorgeous Vase of Oriental workmanship, encrusted with mother-of-pearl; all its interstices are filled with seed pearls, and it literally sparkles with rubies, agates, turquoise, lapis-lazuli, and other precious stones. To what end such an elaborate piece of jewellery as this could have been invented, unless for the purpose of attempting to make some Arabian-Night description, it is difficult to conceive. It is the property of Mr. Ayshford and Lady Sanford.

The bronze Icknield, of which we subjoin a representation, is of Italian workmanship of the sixteenth century; it is triangular, and enriched with dolphins and demi-eagles, and is altogether a choice specimen of the rather questionable good taste in ornamentation which marks the style of the réinaissance; it is exhibited by Mr. Brunel, and would, we think, be viewed to greater advantage if not placed in such close propinquity to the highly-finished case of Mathematical Instruments, damascened with gold and silver, which was formerly in the Stowe collection, but is now the property of Mr. Drake. There is another Inkstand in the same style, exhibited by the Duke of Buccleuch; but there are some antique Bronzes, shewn by Lord de Mauley, Hon. W. Temple, and Mr. Auldjo, which may well stand comparison with any of those of more modern manufacture.

THE EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

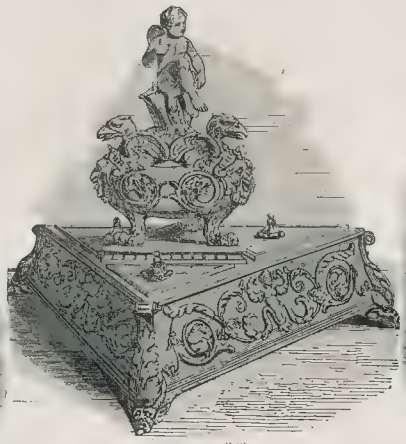
The curious little silver-gilt Clock, of which we give an Engraving, is another specimen of the style of the réinaissance, belonging to Mr. Baring Wall, M.P. It is surmounted by a figure of Cupid; and, as there is no accounting for the vagaries of the artists of this period we are not particularly called upon to animadvert on the length of the arrow with which the mischievous little god is pointing to the hours—perhaps as a hint to all tardy lovers.

Our Initial Letter represents the Handle of a Spoon, carved in ivory—an exquisite work of the sixteenth century. A Knife and a Fork belong to the set, the handles to which have similar beautiful terminations. They are the property of Mr. Tite.

POISON CUP.—16TH CENTURY.

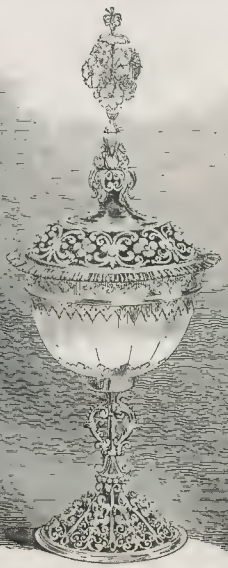


BRONZE INKSTAND.—16TH CENTURY.

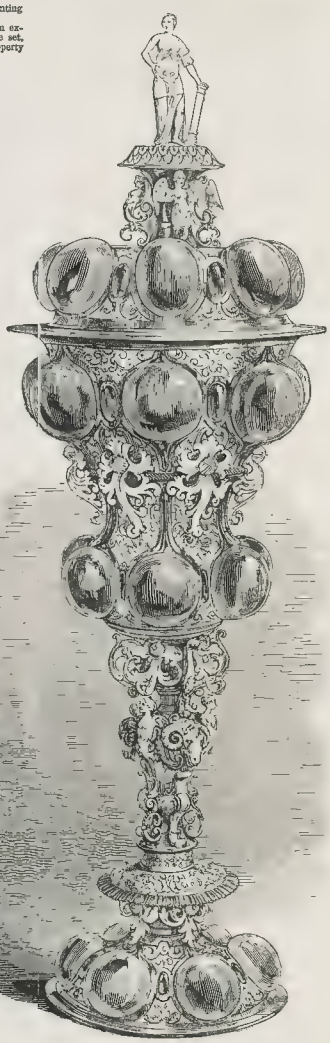
SILVER-GILT CLOCK.—RENAISSANCE.

QUEEN ELIZABETH'S BOOK OF PRAYERS.—16TH CENTURY

IVORY CUP.—18TH CENTURY



PEARL SHELL CUP.—17TH CENTURY.



SILVER-GILT HANAP.—TEMP. CHARLES I

GROUPE OF PLATE, THE PROPERTY OF HER MAJESTY.

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS NEWSPAPER

BURNING OF ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, LIMEHOUSE, ON GOOD FRIDAY MORNING.

DESTRUCTION OF LIMEHOUSE CHURCH BY FIRE.

On the morning of Good Friday, at half-past eight o'clock, the inhabitants of the district in which is situated the Church of St. Anne, at Limehouse, were greatly alarmed by the loud and irregular ringing of the Church bells. As the people flocked to the spot, they soon perceived the cause of the alarm. The roof of the church was on fire, and the entire building enveloped in smoke; and such was the rapidity of the flames, that before a single fire-engine could be got to work the roof had fallen in; and in a very short time the interior was consumed to the bare walls of the body of the church; the tower at the west end remaining, though it had been injured internally. The circumstances attending the outbreak were as follows:

At seven o'clock on Friday morning, a man named William Rumbold, accustomed to light the stove fires, and attend to the heating of the church, entered the edifice and proceeded with his duties. He had lighted both the stoves, when, at half-past eight o'clock, he perceived a strong smell of burning wood, and shortly afterwards saw a quantity of smoke issue from the roof. He at once ran off to the residence of Mr. George Coningham, the beadle and engine-keeper of the parish, who resides in Church-lane, about 180 yards from the church. Coningham instantly returned with Rumbold to the church, giving the alarm as he proceeded, and bespeaking the assistance of the fire-brigade and all the engines in the neighbourhood. On reaching the church, Coningham ascended the belfry, and immediately opened a door over the organ-loft, leading into the vast space between the flat ceiling and the outer roof. Both persons were driven back, and nearly suffocated by the smoke which burst forth; whilst the north-west corner of the roof was in flames, and the fire was making fearful progress. It was at this moment that Coningham and Rumbold, with a view of rousing the neighbourhood, rang the bells in the manner described. An immense concourse of the inhabitants speedily assembled in the churchyard. As yet there was no engine on the spot, and but a very scanty supply of water flowed from the street plugs. In this dilemma, it was thought best at once to save the parochial muniments and records, and such other movables as the body of the church contained. The Rev George Roberts, curate of the parish, who had by this time arrived, headed a party of gentlemen engaged for this purpose, and by their exertions all the registers and other parochial documents have been saved. This was a work of great risk; indeed, the central chandelier had only been removed a few minutes when the whole body of the roof fell in, the body of the church being fortunately cleared of persons. Several engines had now arrived, and a good supply of water was obtained; but, from the great difficulty of getting at the spot where the fire raged, the efforts of the firemen were comparatively fruitless, and Mr. Braidwood, the leader of the force, at once pronounced that any hope of saving the interior of the Church was out of the question.

Nothing could be more complete than the destruction of the interior fittings of the church. The oak pews and gallery were entirely consumed; the organ stood for some time, until the pipes were gradually melted by the intense heat. The altar windows, of painted glass, representing the Sermon on the Mount, was soon destroyed; as were all the monuments and hatchments upon the walls, except a tablet to the memory of a lady named Blyth: this memorial, to the left of the altar, was but slightly injured. When the body of the Church took fire, the flames speedily communicated through the organ loft with the belfry; the wood-work in which having been consumed, the bells, one of which is of very large size, fell through, and was only prevented from reaching the ground by a very strong stone arch beneath the bell-tower. The flag-staff, ornamenting the summit of the steeple, fell at a quarter-past nine o'clock; at which moment, varying only a few seconds in each case, the four dials of the turret clock ceased to act.

The fire continued to rage fully two hours after this time, and only ceased when it had burnt itself out.

One of our Illustrations shows the conflagration at its full height. The second represents the devastation of the interior, seen from the altar end of the Church. The galleries are destroyed, scarcely a mark of their former existence being discernible; and, notwithstanding the remains of the roof, galleries, and pews are all contained within the four walls, the mass of rubbish scarcely rises a couple of feet above the floor of the Church. The two beams forming the support of the pulpit are almost the only pieces of timber left in an erect position, and these are so charred by the fire that a touch would crumble them. The six magnificent pillars supporting the roof—three on each side—are reduced to shapeless masses of calcined stone. In several places, the iron girders forming the roof have broken through the brick arches on which the floor of the Church rests, and penetrated the vaults.

On Sunday morning, the inhabitants of Limehouse, to the number of nearly 1000 persons, assembled at divine service in the National School-rooms, Feather-stone-street, Commercial-road.

In consequence of an injunction from the Bishop of London, addressed to the Rev. George Roberts, advising him of the necessity of continuing the observance of the church within the ruins of the sacred edifice, the vestry, the only portion which escaped with partial destruction, has been fitted up temporarily for the solemnization of marriages, christenings, &c.; and after the service at the school-rooms on Sunday, three couples were married therein by Mr. Roberts.

From an inspection made on Saturday by the authorities, in conjunction with Mr. Cubitt, M.P., and other scientific gentlemen, it appears that the steeple and stone-work generally of the edifice are not so much injured as was at first anticipated, and hopes are entertained that the walls may be brought into use in the re-erection of the church. The cost of re-building is estimated at about £5000.

Upon closer examination it appeared that the end of one of the cross-beams supporting the roof actually entered the flue at the north-west corner of the Church. Shavings were set on light at the bottom of this flue in order to clear it of damp air, and these ascended rapidly, and set fire to the end of the cross-beam, already dried almost to touchwood.

The Church was insured by the following singular means. Limehouse is a parish in which party spirit runs high, and the Dissenting body outnumbering the Church party, Dissenters are frequently appointed to the parochial offices. One of the churchwardens for the present year (Mr. Joseph Adams) is a Dissenter, but having been elected to the office, he consented to act; and most fortunately for the parish was it that he did so. Shortly after coming into office, on finding that the Church was not insured, he urged the prudence and necessity of the parish availing itself of this safeguard. The proposition was treated very lightly by his fellow-parishioners, and it was only in January last that he overcame the scruples of the majority of the vestry; and, having done so, paid into the Imperial Fire-office the small premium of £13 4s. 8d., for which that office will now have to hand over to the parish of Limehouse the sum of £6000.

While the fire was raging on Friday, a funeral took place in the churchyard.

We have received from Mr. Gellaly, the vestry-clerk of St. Anne's, Limehouse, a printed copy of the following official report, made with a view of correcting certain erroneous statements which have been published respecting the origin of the late disastrous fire:—

"The committee (appointed by the general meeting of the parishioners on Friday) deny that any description of 'iron tube has been substituted for the brick-work flue previously existing;' or that Messrs. Blyth advised any alteration in the flues connected with the heating apparatus; or that any alteration whatever was either effected or contemplated. The only 'increased draught' (if any) that could have arisen must have been the natural result of the ordinary cleaning and repairing of the flues, which necessary operation was performed in December last.

"The committee desire it to be distinctly understood, that the casing in which the air is heated surrounding the stoves was formerly supplied with impure air from the vaults; but, with a view of obtaining air of a salubrious quality for the warming of the Church, air drains were laid from two of the original ventilating apertures in the main wall; by which pure air was obtained from the parapet of the Church, at a considerable distance from the fire flues. The furnaces of the stoves derive their supply of air from the vaults, as before, without any alteration. This addition was made by an experienced builder, under the able superintendence of Mr. Morris, the architect and surveyor to the parish.

"The committee are also anxious to add that the stoker, Rumbold, having been examined by them, expressly states that he has not observed any alteration in the force of the draught in the fire flues for the last three years; the only change he has noticed, is, that the heated air has ascended more rapidly into the body of the Church since the salubrious air from the top of the Church has been substituted for the impure air of the vaults."

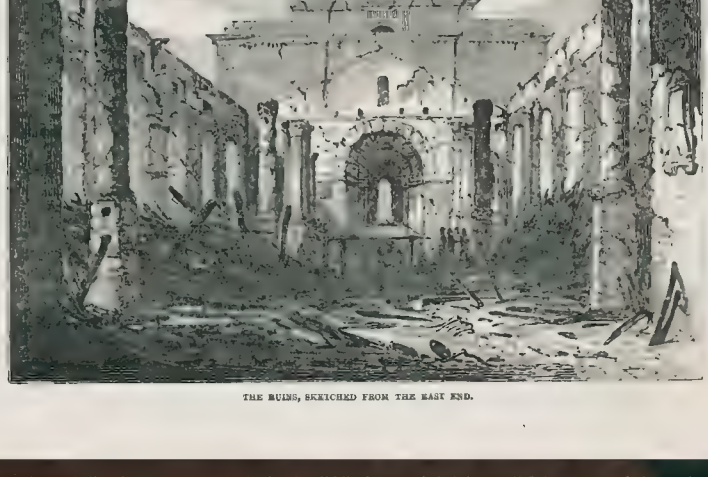
St. Anne's was one of the fifty churches ordered to be built in the reign of Queen Anne. The first stone was laid in the year 1712, and the building was completed in 1724, at a cost of £35,000. The architect was Nicholas Hawksmoor a pupil of Sir Christopher Wren. Though inferior to St. George's, Bloomsbury Hawksmoor's finest work, St. Anne's deserved more praise than has fallen to its share. "With much that is incorrect," says a judicious critic, "and very little that is positively beautiful, its ensemble has an air of grandeur very frequently missed where it seems to have been more studiously aimed at." The main feature of the design is the fine tower, which terminates in four angular turrets, with a more lofty one in the centre. These, and portions of the belfry, are original and picturesquely effective. At a height of 130 feet is placed the clock, being the highest in or near the metropolis, not excepting St. Paul's. It was put up by Messrs. Moore, in 1839; it is a splendid piece of mechanism with four faces, each thirteen feet in diameter. The hours were struck on the great bell (36 cwt.), which bears the following inscription:—

> At proper times, my voice I'll raise,
> And sound to my subscribers' praise.

It is satisfactory to add that the tower was saved from the recent fire.

The Church had a fine interior. The organ, a very fine one, was built by Richard Bridge, in 1741. The painted window was by Backler.

In the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for Feb. 21, 1846, was given an Engraving of the tower and western end of this fine Church.



THE RUINS, SKETCHED FROM THE EAST END.

TOWN TALK AND TABLE TALK.

It is Easter-tide, and one way or another all the world is amusing itself—the magnates of the land in their castles and ancestral halls, far away from the noise and smoke of London; the humble Cockney race of traders and tollers, in suburban fairs and cheap excursions, and the smothering pits and galleries of the play houses. To the lower classes of Londoners the present season forms the great holiday of the year. Christmas, as a time of enjoyment and cessation from labour, sinks before Easter; and Whitsuntide is but a great an occasion as the first joyous Monday after Lent. And how resolutely and systematically does your London tradesman or artisan set about his annual holiday-making. You never catch him without his business under his arm, with his business coat. He sets to work holidaying with precise y the same conscientious energy he displays over his counter or his work-bench. How many cheap or gratis London sights are there, on which the most hard-worked of us all could, now and then, even in the ordinary days, afford to spend the fag-end of an afternoon! Yet your London mechanic or artisan shall saunter a dozen times past the British Museum or the National Gallery, without the idea of entering once rising into his head. "It is not a holiday. What has he to do inside?" But then, in its turn comes Easter Monday; and lo! as though it were a religious duty appertaining to the season, our friend rises betimes, and plunges from exhibition to exhibition, and sight to sight, from breakfast until supper time, going home at last tired out with as hard a day's work as he has ever achieved. There must be a great portion of the population of London who associate the National Gallery, the British Museum, Greenwich Hospita., and so forth, entirely with Easter Monday. Upon any other day in the year the never dream of visiting such places; and they do it at Easter-tide, not apparently from any particular desire to do it, but because it is a holiday, and because it forms a part of the sights in question, but because the day is a holiday, and ought to be treated as such.

The Easter productions in the theatrical world have been lively and varied, and, as usual at this season, all the elves and gnomes of fairyland are busy upon the stage. To what base uses dramatic works sometimes come! Some half-dozen years ago I was present at the production of a sparkling new opera, by Balfe, at the Opéra Comique. Scribe, I should add, wrote the poem and libretto of "Les Quatre Fils d'Aymon." The other day, I recognised my old friend turned into an Easter vehicle for the display of all Mr. Batty's stud at Astley's. I do not know whether the 3 angouring Lancelot Lake, or the Fair Maid of Astolat, or the Knights with the historic truth of the time of Charlemagne, but I do happen to know, that in an equestrian drama, produced the other day at the Cirque in Paris, some very queer views appeared upon the positive manners and dates in the history of England. Ecwine, &c. The play represents the life of Napoleon. In the earlier scenes, Talma is introduced as the patronising friend of the young Corsican lieutenant of artillery. Napoleon pays a very low visit to Talma, in pecuniary purposes to refill it. The lieutenant of artillery is grateful, but hesitates. "Take the money, young sir," says the tragedian, "and think no shame about the matter. The greatest actor of England gave assistance to a youth who turned out to be the greatest General of England (the Duke of Marlborough, I suppose), and Frederick the Great of Prussia (Frederick, I believe), hesitated not to accept the frankly-offered generosity of David Garrick!"

Without trenching on another department, I may remark, as a bit of the table-talk of the week, the musical triumph which Ireland has just achieved. "Now then," whispered an enthusiastic Hibernian amateur to me in the pit of Her Majesty's Theatre, on Tuesday last, "was ever such a conjunction seen in an Italian opera before? two Irishmen and an Irish woman occupying the very foremost places in the representation of an Italian lyric drama?" My friend, of course, alluded to Mr Balfe, Miss Catherine Hayes, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Apropos of the two vocal artists, there was something odd in the fact that each of them, on the nights of his or her début—Mr. Sims Reeves as Ernanus, and Miss Hayes in the Lucia—flung themselves upon the stage one in the dying, the other in the fainting sense—so near the foot-lights as to leave their legs projecting beyond the line formed by the curtain in its descent, and to necessitate the prompt aid of the bystanders to rescue the hero and heroine from an unpleasant tumup from the curtain roller. In the case of Mr. Reeves, indeed, there was a good deal of laughing at the unceremonious style in which one of the surrounding spanish nobility tucked our great tenor's legs under the curtain. But the most exquisitely delicious contretemps of this nature I ever remember to have seen, occurred in the Olympic Theatre one night, when Mr. G. Bolton thought fit to amuse the town by playing Hamlet. The tragedy was almost over—the King and Queen lay dead at the back of the stage, and Laertes near the foot-lights. Horatio then, as usual, seized the poisoned cup, which the Hamlet of the night, of course, wrested from his hands, and flung violently away. Most unhappily the heavy wooden goblet alighted precisely upon the nose of the dead Gertrude, who suddenly and instinctively jerked himself into a sitting posture, emitted a sneeze which echoed through the theatre, and then suddenly remembering the impropriety of such demonstrations of life when upon the stage as part of a play, fell ridgidly back upon the stage, trying to look as if nothing particular had happened. Oh! to hear again the perfect scream of laughter which hailed this smashing stroke of the performance!

A few weeks ago, I directed attention to the vast crop of cheap literary periodicals, principally of the hearth and home class, which is now "all a blowing—all a-growing." A twin phenomenon, which forms a decided feature in our present list of town amusements, is the multiplication of panoramic, panoramic, and diorama, and many other "amic" representations of foreign lands, foreign rivers, and foreign seas, which the Londoner may now gaze upon within a cannon-shot of his own pensates. Never were larger and more brilliant supplies provided for. Do you wish to bound over the Arctic circle, and catch a glimpse of the dreary fastnesses within the ice-ribbed bounds of which poor Sir John Franklin and his hapless marines still linger on, as we trust, truly, without hope of one day leaving these awful regions of iceberg and ghastly aurors? the wand-like pencil can place the scene before you. But does a panorama of the Desert give you the yellow sand and cloudless skies of the desert—the waving palms and the glittering minar-ts of Orient cities? so! they also spread forth their bright enchantments seen beneath the murky canopy of London smoke. You may sail along the Nile and see civilisation in ruins, far-under over the fronts of the temples, and see civilisation in its earliest dawn. You may leap from London to the myrtle shores of Cashmere, and from Cashmere to the cocoa-nut woods and the coral reefs of New Zealand. You may, at the present, in fancy go through catastrophe which engulphed Lisbon, or you may sail with the Queen in her last year's trip along the green shores and bold headlands of the Emerald Isle. And all the varied features of all these varied scenes you may study under every variety of artistic device for imparting the actual semblance of nature to mimetic art. In a, never were the features of all the round world so completely brought into one artistic focus before.

On Wednesday last I witnessed a sadly interesting scene, the embarkation of upwards of thirty young girls, sent forth by the Female Emigration Society to seek for a helpier lot than they found in England, among the distant shores of the great continent of the southern hemisphere. They departed with many tears, yet full of hope and the joy of trusting and determined hearts. Of the thirty almost all had been poor needlewomen, taking menial places in humble families when such could be procured, but the frequent alternative was a back view of the tender mercies of the slop-maker. One of the girls had managed to raise a small pittance, by the help of which she had contrived to obtain a passage for a little brother—a fine manly-looking child, dressed in miniature sailor's costume. A few, and only a few of the thirty, were prepossessing-looking girls. The great majority had the worn features and wasted forms which continued anxiety, hard work, and scanty food too soon exhibit upon young persons. There were miserable partings upon the pier at Blackwall and on board the ship, but only in a comparatively small number of instances. A great portion of the girls were, in the common acceptation of the term, friendless orphans and manufacturers, who had been strug gling through a hard and pinching life with hardly a relation to cheer or help them. Still, when the returning steamer which brought them down bore away from the Thames the female committee by which had accompanied them on board, there was an universal and painful outburst of feeling, as with one impulse the girls clambered in a group upon the summits of the lofty bulwarks, and—woman's way of hurrahing—continued to wave, as long as they could be distinguished, a fluttering display of handkerchiefs.

What a strange, sad place is the tween decks of an emigrant ship preparing to start. I lingered long on Wednesday last in those of the Tory. A great number of the emigrants were west-country folks, going to be dropped up in the bush of Australia the homely patois of "Zummerset-shire." How the very counties of England will be perpetuated in the provinces she founds upon the farther side of ocean. There are districts of Canada where the particular accent of the northern and western counties of Scot-and may be heard, it is said, almost in greater perfection than at home; and, doubtless, the future etymologist, studying and tracing out some of the languages spoken in other states of which are yet swamps and deserts, will be puzzled by many a word and phrase, derived from the local customs or the local peculiarities of many an obscure country parish, far away in the most remote districts of England. When I was on board the Tory, all was bustle and excitement, preparing for the voyage. Troops of joyful children, delighted with the novelty, tumbled about the decks; hard-w rking, care-worn looking men laboured to stow away their little stores of household stuff, destined, in the expected cottage in an Australian clearing; and it is melancholy, in some of the rude side-berths, to see women with babies in their arms, sitting upon a chest or case, with a look of despair upon their features, upon the unwonted beams and bulkheads, and taer minds obviously far far away in what was once home, and which will be talked of as home for many a long year to come. But when they are aroused, they spoke cheerily, and took the unpleasure that they hoped for better times than ever they saw in the country which bare them. They were going where men and women, in the struggle for life, had no need to snatch the bread from each other's mouths, and where, upon the boundless plains of Australia, there was room and refuge for all the toiling and suffering millions of the crowded, panting, over-worked Old World. A. B. R.

NORWEGIAN ICE.—The vessel Flora, which has arrived in the river from Lacpaborg, has brought 400 tons weight of ice, consigned to order. This is the third or fourth arrival of a similar nature which has taken place during the past week from Norway.

PEANYOM PLANT.—The Spiræa Ariæfolia (Beam-tree-leaved Spiræa) forms a spreading, round bush, from six to eight feet high, when covered with its light and airy flowers, backed by the darker foliage of evergreens, becomes a striking object in the imagery of a mass of shrubs, a fleecy pale cloud with the deep colouring of a thunder-storm in the background. No delineation, however graphic, can convey a just idea of the plant—its like masses of blossoms.—Maund's "Botanic Garden and Fruitist"—a highly useful and interesting work.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CUBIC K.—It is ingenious, and shall have a place among our enigmas

BRUTUS.—Surely an obvious mate in three moves. 1. Q to her 7th; 2. Q to Q Kt 5th; 3. Q takes Q—Mate

WESTWOOD is thanked for the position, which shall be given shortly

CHESS IN THE EAST.—Like most of your productions, it would be better if divested of some la.-Soiree redundant rans

W. R. Glasgow.—You have quite overlooked, at the very outset, that if White, at his 3d move, play Kt to K B 6th (ch), as you propose, Black simply takes it with his Rook

B. B. W. The game is smart, but the defence is so feeble that there is little or no interest in it.—Victory

W. A. Whitington Club; J. A. W. Hunslet; A Sheffield Grinder; J. B. Worcester.—You are correct as to the principle upon which No 331 is solved; but you have not yet fairly worked it out. Look at the position once more

R. D. M.—Black can easily avert the mate if White play as you suggest in No 331

K. F. (?).—We wish we could increase upon correspondents the importance, when addressing a public journal, of writing legibly. There are at least half a dozen communications before us at this moment, the signatures to which would puzzle even the "Blind Clerk" of the Post-Office

J. G.—We know nothing of "four-handed Chess;" you may obtain the laws from Lonchars, of Piccadilly

H. B. Woolwich.—A very little examination of our Solution of Problem No 329, will show you the correctness. At his 3rd move, Black may undoubtedly do any one of the three things you suggest; but do what he will, mate follows next move. Your attempt to solve No 331 is quite a failure

C. R. W. The solution of Enigma No 053 is effected thus :—1. Q to Q B 3rd (ch). 2 Q to Q B 6th (ch). 3 Kt from Kt 3rd to K B 5th. 4 Kt, or Q, mates, according to Black's p ay

LOPEZ.—We have just been favoured with a sight of the "Staunton Chess-Men of the large Club size in ivory and must confess that, high as our opinion of these beautiful pieces was, their manifest superiority to all others in use never struck us so forcibly before. A very limited number of these choice sets will be executed at first; but, as they are the most appropriate thing in the world for a prize in Chess tourney, or a matter of correspondence, or a present to a Chess-loving friend, we shall not be surprised to find them greatly in demand

BLAUDD.—The solution of the famous Problem No 281 will be withheld another week

S. A. Newcastle; PROFESSOR S., Alcoa; H. W., Isle of Wight; MAJOR B., Exeter; W. G. York; REV. M. S., R.A.; C. H. S., New York Repl ed to by Post

A. WHITEHOUSE ROGER.—You have not yet hit upon the key to the already celebrated "Stuttgard Sphynx!"

✠—Captain M. has certainly no title to the honour of inventing the very charming problem you have forwarded. It may be found in the scarce collection of stratagems called "Trevagasdeshyra Shastree," which were extracted from the Sanscrit, and published in India many years ago

W. J. B.—The celebrated "Indian Problem" is that which graces the wrapper of every month.y number of the Chess Player's Chronicle

J. R. E.—An acceptable addition to our stock

C. F. S and H. E. S.—All duly received, and now under consideration

A VICTIM.—If we are rightly informed, your case is far from singular. The only effectual remedy for the pernicious system is for amateurs to abscain from frequenting public rooms where a stake is played for

LANCASTERIAN.—The Yorkshire Chess Association will this year hold its great festival at Leeds. The day of meeting has not yet been announced

R. V.—Much too obvious, we are sorry to say | M. C. Cuddashall.—Ingenious, but too obvious
C. S.—We do not understand the game | R. G. Halifax.—Received with thanks

SOLUTIONS of Problem No. 331, by H. S. Brighton; PATIENCE, P. G. RAINGER, DERBYTON, are correct. All other answers incorrect.

SOLUTIONS of No 324, by P. H. E. X., Liverpool; J. A. W., R. D. M., BRUTUS, LILY, J. P. Hythe; BELLART, M. P. G., Oxford; S. P. Q. R., Rugby; F. N. S. VER-NON, ETONIENSIS, J. T. REV C. L., BATH UNIT, M. E. K. CHESALING, I. B. N., W. J. B., are correct. All the others are erroneous

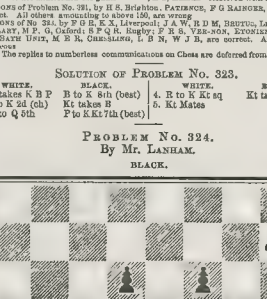
* * The replies to numberless communications on Chess are deferred from want of room.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 323.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt takes K B P	B to Q 8th (best)	4. R to K sq	Kt takes R
2. B to K 2d (ch)	Kt takes B	5. Kt Mates
3. Kt to Q 5th	P to K Kt 7th (best)

PROBLEM No. 324.
By Mr. LANHAM.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN THE UNITED STATES.

CONTINUATION OF THE GAMES IN THE LATE GREAT MATCH AT WASHINGTON.

(King's Bishop Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. C. H. S.)	BLACK (Mr. J. H.)	WHITE (Mr. C. H. S.)	BLACK (Mr. J. H.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	14. Castles	P to Q B 3d
2. K B to Q B 4th	K Kt to B 3d	15. K B to Q B 2d	Q R to Q sq
3. Q Kt to B 3d	K B to Q B 4th	16. Q to Q 3d	Q R to Q 2d
4. P to Q 3d	P to Q 3d	17. Q Kt to K B 5th	Q B takes Kt
5. K Kt to B 3d	P to K R 3d	18. K P takes B	P to K 4th (c)
6. P to K R 3d	K B to Q Kt 3d	19. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to K 2d
7. Q Kt to K 2d	Q B to K 3d	20. Kt to Kt 4th	K Kt takes Kt
8. K B to Q Kt 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	21. K R P takes Kt	P to Q 4th
9. Q Kt to K Kt 3d	Q to her 3d	22. P to K 5th	Q to K 2d
10. P to Q B 3d	Q Kt to K 2d	23. P to K B 6th (d)	Kt to K Kt 3d
11. P to Q 4th	Q Kt to K Kt 3d	24. K B takes Kt	P takes B
12. P to K R 3d (a)	K to K 2d	25. R takes P
13. K B to Q R 4th (ch)	K to B sq (b)

And in a few moves Black struck his flag.

(a) Threatening to win a piece next move.

(b) If he had interposed the Kt, White would have won the Q's Bishop. If he had played the B to Q 3d, White would have played Kt Q Kt at his 20 move, with a fine attacking position; and if lastly he had played P to Q B 3d, White, by advancing the P to Q 4th, must have gained an advantage in situation immediately

(c) This is bad enough but it is hard to find him a better resource.

(d) The terminating moves are capitally played by Mr. Stanley.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,
BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS-CLUBS.

WHITE (London).	BLACK (Amsterdam).
	2. P to K 3d
3. P to Q Kt 3d	3. P to Q B 3d

London to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 553.—By AN AMATEUR.

White: K at Q B 2d, R at K B 3d, B at K Kt 6th; P s at K R 5th, K Kt 4th, K 2d, Q B 3d, and Q R 4th.

Black: K at Q B 5th, Kt at K B 5th; P s at K Kt 4th, K 6th, and Q B 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 554.—By C. S. G., of the Brighton Club.

White: K at K B 5th, Q at her 2d, R at Q 7th, B at K 8th, Kt at Q 5th, P at Q B 2d.

Black: K at Q B 3d, Q at K Kt sq, Kt at Q B 2d; P s at K 2d, Q B 4th and 5th, and Q Kt 3d.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 555.—By F. A. M. M., of Mhow, India.

White: K at Q B sq, Bs at Q 5th and Q B 3d, Kts at K Kt 3d and Q R 8th; P s at K B 2d, K 2d and 5th.

Black: K at his 5th, Bs at Q B sq and Q Kt 5th, Kts at K B sq and Q B 3d; P s at Q 2d and 3d, and Q B 4th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 556.—Instructive End-game by Mr. KLING.

White: K at K Kt 6th, Q at her B 8th, P at K Kt 2d.

Black: K at K Kt 6th

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 557.—By Mr. LANHAM.

White: K at his Q 2d, Q at her 8th, Kt at Q B sq, P at Q 3d.

Black: K at Q 5th, Rs at K B 3d and K 4th; P s at K B 4th, Q 4th, Q B 7th, Q Kt 4th, and Q R 5th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

No. 558.—By Mr. R. B. WORMALD, of Oxford.

White: K at his B 2d, B at Q Kt 4th, Kt at Q 3d, P at K B 2d.

Black: K at K B 6th, P s at K B 7th and Q 5th.

White, playing first, to mate in four moves.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

Notwithstanding the attractions of spectacle and burlesque at the Theatres during the Easter week, the number of musical entertainments has been large.

On Monday, Mr. Henry Phillips commenced, at St. Martin's Hall, a series of Monday concerts, at which he will give, in succession, his various lectures and narratives, introducing the melod.es of every country. He is an agreeable exponent of his musical themes: his singing of the airs of Charles Dibdin, and of the melodies of Ireland, has always been expressive and spirited.——Miss L. Stuart gave a concert on Monday evening, at Sussex Hall.——On the same evening, the fourth Rigbuny Subscription Glee concert took place.

On Wednesday, Herr Molique, the composer and violinist, had his third and last chamber concert at the Hanover Rooms. The quartets were Mendelssohn in E minor, Op. 44, and Molique's Op. 18: Spohr's duo, for two violins, Op. 67: Bach's "Chaconne," and Beethoven's sonata in F minor, Op. 57, were also included in the scheme, the performers being the Misses A. and M. Williams, Mdlle. Grausmann, Mdlle. Molique, Messrs. Molique, Carradus, A. Mellon, and Hausmann.——The third of Mr. Lucas's Musical Evenings was held on Wednesday in Berners-street. The programme comprised Beethoven's quintet No. 5; Hummel's trio, Op 83; Quintets in G, Spohr, and E flat, Mozart. The executants were Miss Woolf, Messrs Sainton, Blagrove, Hill, R. Blagrove, and Lucas.——The sixth of his London Wednesday Concerts, on the 3rd, at Exeter Hall, introduced the clever pianist, M. Alexandre Billet, and the accomplished violoncellist, Signor Piatti, with Herr Formes, Herr Sperling, Messrs Frodsham, Land, Drayton, Mori, Schinz, Messrs. Ransford and Lazarus, as vocalists.

On Thursday, a concert was given at the Sussex Hall, M. Maurice Davies, conductor, with Misses Liscombe, Dolby, Eyles, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Charlesron, Miss Woolf, &c.——On the same evening, Mr. Templeton delivered a musical lecture at the Whittington Club.

On Friday evening there was a concert at the Beaumont Institution, Mile-end, with Misses Poole, S. and C. Cole, Messrs. Percy, Griffin, H. Smith, and Sims Reeves: at St. Martin's Hall, the third and last pianoforte soirée of M. Billet assisted by Piatti, Sainton, and the Misses Cole; and the performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, with Miss Catherine Hayes, Dolby, A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Lockey, A Novello, and Herr Formes as principal singers.

At a matinée musicale last Saturday, we heard Miss Goddard, of whom there has been considerable talk in musical circles. From a pianists of fourteen years of age, the performance of a Bach or Beyel are not to be expected; but, if Miss Goddard, with increased strength, continues to progress, she will rival any living pianiste. She has remarkable facility with both hands: indeed, her execution is marvellous, and her musicianship equally evidently acute. She performs in all schools—the elaborations of a Bach fugue, the intricate combinations of themes by popular composers, the reveries of David in his "Deserts," the melodious passages of Mendelssohn, and the inspirations of Beethoven, are as familiar to her as "household words."

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The Hungarian Vocalists have been giving concerts this week at Bath and Bristol. The third Philharmonic Concert will take place next Monday. Mr. Cooper will play Mendelssohn's violin concerto; the symphonies are Spohr's No. 3, in C minor, and Beethoven's No. 4, B flat; the overtures are Ries's "Don Carlos" and Weber's "Ruler of the Spirits;" the vocalists will be the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Benson and Bodda.——The second meeting of the Musical Union will take place next Tuesday.——On Wednesday, Mr. Frank's annual benefit will be given at the St. James's Theatre; he will present a series of varied entertainments, amongst which will be a concert conducted by Benedict. Carlotta Grisi, the most poetic of danseuses, will perform a pas. ——Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean and Mr. Benjamin Webster appear in "King René's Daughter." Mdlle. Cruvelli, Mdlle. Sannion, of the French troupe, will act; and Mr. Bunn himself will deliver the first part of his amusing monologue. Such a combination of talent at playhouse prices will be very attractive.——The anniversary festival of the Western Madrigal Society will be celebrated next Saturday, at the Freemasons' Hall.——Mr. Osborne, the pianist and composer, will commence a series of classical concerts next Wednesday.——Dreyschock, the pianist, will be in town this season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The prosperous run of Meyerbeer's "Prophète" terminated last Monday night for the present. Madame Viardot having taken her departure for Berlin, where the composer has been superintending the rehearsals of the German version of his great work. After playing in the Prussian capital to the end of May, Madame Viardot will depart for London, and will return to Paris in October, to appear in a new opera, now composing for her by a young musician as yet unknown to fame, but from whom great things are anticipated. There is yet a chance of Auber's "Enfant Prodigue" being produced before the summer is over, as Roger's congé of two months has been purchased by the management of the Grand Opera, for 50,000 francs (£2000). A new overture to five parts, called the "Redemption," the poem by M. Emile Deschamps, the translator of Shakspeare, and M. Emalien Pacini, and the music by M. Giulio Alari, a professor of surgery, well known in the fashionable circles of Paris and London, will be produced next Monday, at the Théâtre Italien, the solos to be sung by MM. Barbot, C. Ponchard, Bassine, Arnoldi, Mdmes. de Ruppiin, Dauvry, and Séguin. M. Lacombe's grand dramatic symphony, in four parts, "Arva, or the Hungarians," poem by M. de Châteun-Renaud, was performed at the Salle of the Conservatoire. The story is a mere melodramatic incident of the loves of Arva and Ludorgy, one of the drawing of the latter for the conscription—of his departure for the army—of her despair—of Arva being fascinated by a gipsy whom she had consulted to tell her fortune—of the happy return of Ludorgy at the head of his regiment, just in time to rescue his lady-love. The chief interest of the music is in the Hungarian colouring; a march in the second part is very animated, and was encored; a chorus, "La Rêve," is also powerful. The term "choral and orchestral symphony" is rather misapplied: it is simply an opera with elaborate accompaniments: but the music is not sufficiently written for the voices, for the soprano and tenor are much distressed to reach the high notes. Like M. Lacombe's former work, "Manfred," there is no lack of fancy and imagination, but his writing is not sufficiently practical.

At the sixth "Conservatoire" concert, Beethoven's choral symphony No. 9 was executed, and Weber's "Euryanthe" overture. Alard performed on the violin Beethoven's romance in G, which was encored, as intense was the impassioned feeling of this great player. Let me say a word also of a clever novelty by Mdme. Farrenc, who has distinguished herself as a writer of symphonies; the scherzi is very picturesque. Joachim played at this concert Bach's "Chaconne" with infinite skill.

The German papers give a very favourable notice of the production of an opera in three acts, entitled "The Faithful Brothers," at Brunswick, composed by Mr. Mitchell, the blind professor of music, some of whose compositions were heard at the Hanover-square Rooms, some seasons since. Mr. Mitchell was to produce this opera also at Hamburgh. The "Prophète" was performed at Leipzic on the 23rd ult., with a cast similar to that at Berlin, Dresden, Hamburgh, &c. The portrait of the composer, in default of his actual presence, was saluted with showers of flower at the end of the opera. The "Prophète" is to be mounted at Lisbon, in April.

MR. PLATT'S FAREWELL CONCERT.—A general meeting of the committee took place last Wednesday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, Sir George Smart in the chair. It was announced that the following vocalists had already pledged themselves to sing on the occasion:—Miss Rainforth, Miss Birch, Miss Eliza Birch, Miss Ellen Lyon, Miss Dolby, Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Louisa Pyne, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lockey, Benson, Machin, and Signor F. Lablache. Mrs. Anderson, pianiste to her Majesty, and instructress of the Princess Royal, will perform a pianoforte solo. Taking advantage of the splendid orchestra, of upwards of one hundred eminent performers, who have tendered their aid to their respected colleague, Mr. Platt, it has been resolved that some of the first symphonies and overtures of the great masters shall be played under the magic wand of Costa. The result of an application to the principal Italian singers will be made known at next Wednesday's meeting of the committee. The concert is to be the great feature of the season, and will take place on Wednesday morning, the 24th instant.

CASTS OF CHARACTER.—Half a dozen clever miniature busts of clever actors, in favourite parts, have just been issued, under the above designation, by Mr. Sams, of St. James-street. Each bust is about four inches high, and has been modelled with great spirit and characteristic likeness, by M. Tétard, of the French company now performing at the St. James's Theatre. The artistes represented are Messrs. Farren, Hartley, Keeley, Wright, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam, in their most admired characters; to which is added M. Jullien. The petit gallery will, doubtless, be attractive; and it is proposed to extend the Portraiture to other celebrities.

NEW PROCESS FOR SILVERING, ILLUMINATING, AND DECORATING GLASS. We have inspected some specimens of ornamentally engraved glass, by Mr. Kidd, of Poland-street, Oxford-street, which are deserving of specific attention. The process is a modified matter to many patterns of glass, and the difficulty of impressing the mercury employed in the silvering, has hitherto been found impossible. But to the inventive, as to the courageous mind, nothing is truly impossible; and Mr. Kidd has contrived, by a mixture of wax composed of quicksilver and platinum, by which an engraving on glass is thrown out in bold relief. This amalgam can be applied either to level or indented surfaces. It is now, therefore, in the power of Mr. Kidd, by the specimens, has made it an actual fact) to have all girandoles, cheval looking-glasses, mir.ors, and other surfaces in glass, in an ornamented and decorated condition, instead of remaining in a perfectly plain state, as has been hitherto the case. Some examples which we have witnessed are exceedingly beautiful, particularly those which are presented as specimens of embroidery on glass. Clusters of straw-berries, cherries, vine leaves, bunches of grapes, cornucopiæ rich with fruitage, and vases with flowers, are all accomplished on all manner of articles made of glass, with the finest effect, and sharp as in the most successful engraving.

THE ENGINE DRIVERS ON THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN AND NORTH BRITISH.—No terms having been come to between the directors of the North British and the engine drivers and stokers, nearly 100 of them have struck, and their places are being supplied by mechanics from the company's workshops. The engine drivers of the London and North Western intend waiting on the superintendent of the locomotive department for redress of alleged grievances, and, amongst other things, to inquire into the delay that has taken place in payment of the premiums they are entitled to for good conduct.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Addresses have been presented during the week by the Town Councils of Manchester and Salford to Lord John Russell, who is at present on a visit to Sir Benjamin Heywood, Bart., at Claremont, in the immediate vicinity of those towns.

The Right Honourable the Earl of Derby is now engaged in draining nearly the whole of his extensive estates in the townships of Sir Howard, Eccleston, Knowsley, Bickerstaff, and other places. We believe his Lordship is determined to complete the task in a thorough and workmanlike manner, which will be a lasting and permanent improvement.

Among the effects sold last week at the Queen's-house, Lyndhurst, "the celebrated coat worn by the late Duke of York at the visit of the Allied Sovereigns to England, and said to have cost £450, and presented by his Royal Highness to the late Thomas White, Esq.," was bought in at £85.

The Duke of Cambridge, as warden of the New Forest, has appointed Major Stephens, equerry for many years to the Royal Duke, steward of that Royal demesne, and the Major will shortly take possession of the Queen's-house, at Lyndhurst.

The Duke of Portland has lent the church wardens of Worksop £1000 to pay off the debt incurred in the restoration of the church, without any levy on the rate.

The Earl of Lonsdale has given £50 towards the liquidation of the debt upon the new church in Preston-street, Whitehaven.

The Duke of Newcastle is gradually regaining his health, and it is expected will be able to attend in the House of Lords soon after the re-assembling of Parliament.

The Spital sermons, preached annually before the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, &c., of London, at Christchurch, Newgate-street, on Easter Monday and Tuesday, were this year preached the first by the Bishop of St. Asaph, and the second by the Rev. C. Marshall, M.A., chaplain to the Lord Mayor.

The public baptism of a young lady, aged 17, was celebrated during the morning service on Good Friday, at Christ Church, Cotton. The Rev. C. Marshall performed the ceremony.

The Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods and Forests took possession, on the part of the Crown, of Marlborough House on Monday last, from the officers of the late Queen Dowager's household. The commissioners have, it is understood, arranged that soon after Easter the Vernon Collection of Pictures shall be removed from the National Gallery to Marlborough House, which, in addition to two suites of rooms on the ground and first floors, contains a very fine grand hall.

There is at present residing in Southampton an old man, named Wade, the last survivor of Captain Cook's companions in his voyages round the world. He is now in possession of a cask, said to be upwards of 50 years of his age. He was present at Captain Cook's death, and himself received a spear-wound from one of the islanders.

The Journals de Rome of the 21st ult. contains a full account of the restoration of the Austrian arms to their former position on the Palazzo di Venezia, together with all the diplomatic and judicial proceedings which ensued upon that forcible deposit, on the 15th of March, 1848.

A public reception was given on Monday to Lord Gough, at Bath, upon the occasion of the presentation of an address to him by the corporation of the city. The ceremonial was gone through in the Guildhall, in the presence of a large assemblage, by whom his Lordship was enthusiastically received. A dinner was given to his Lordship on Wednesday, at the Guildhall.

On Thursday, March 14th, the Bishop of Salisbury consecrated the new church that has been erected in the extensive parish of Wantsmeh Canonicorum. It is built and finished, and calculated to hold about 200 persons. The district for which the church is intended, is formed of part of the parishes of Whitchurch Canon-corum, Dorset, and Uplyme, Devon.

Professor Bain having resigned the Assistant-Secretaryship to the Board of Health, is succeeded in that office by Tom Taylor, Esq., barrister-at-law. Sir John Mirley Doyle is appointed Vice-Consul at Santa-Martha; James Davy, Esq., is appointed Colonial Surgeon at the Gold Coast; and David Jardine and Joseph Prod. Edger, Esqrs., are appointed members of the Legislative Council at Hong Kong.

Last week, in the Crown Court, at Wolverhampton, a juryman, on the case being submitted, addressing the counsel, said, "Speak up, I cannot hear what you say." Baron Alderson: "Stop; are you deaf?' Juror: "Yes, of one ear." The learned judge: "Then you had better leave that box, for it is necessary that juryman should hear both sides."

The late Lincolnshire gibbet posts was blown down by the late gale. It was that on which, forty years ago, the notorious malefactor, Tom Otter, was hung in chains for the murder, near the spot, of a young woman that he married in order to possess himself of her property.

A pleasant anecdote is afloat respecting an apology from a provincial Mayor for not accepting the invitation to the Mansion-house. He vote to be excused because he lived a good way off, and was "on the wrong side of 70!"

Where credit is due for the following epiphanies, the city of the most recent reports of the Bible Society acknowledges contributions from Mynydd-ysyn and Rosllanerchrugog.

Dates from the city of Mexico to the 19th ult. state that there was a prospect of peace between the Indians and Yucatecos. General Mejia had been obliged by ill health to resign his post of Commandant-General of Durango.

On Tuesday a labourer, who was trespassing on the South-Western Railway, near the Wraysbury station, had his brains dashed out by the 25 minutes past 2 P.M. up train from Windsor.

A melancholy accident occurred to M. Roche, the sérronant, last week, at Saintes, in Saintonge. He was engaged in which he made an ascent came in contact with a chimney. He fell into the street, and had both his thighs and one of his arms broken.

An eminent firm in Southampton have announced that they will not sell coals to brewers or maltsters. Thus a teetotalism with a vengeance

Price of gas varies considerably in different towns in America. In Halifax, the price is 8s. per 1 feet; St. John, 12s. 7d.; Quebec, 20s.; Montreal, 12s. 6d.; Toronto, 20s.; Boston, 20s.; New York, 30s. and 35s.; Philadelphia (owned by the city), 16s.

Mr. Thomas Haines, of Cheltenham, some time ago obtained the contract for erecting a very large building in the neighbourhood of Worcester, and it is calculated in its erection about four millions of bricks will be used. As he has up to the present time only made about one-tenth of that number, the removal of the duty will save him, in this building alone, between £800 and £1000

The steamer Sir Edward Banks, from Ostend, has brought as a portion of her cargo, consigned to order, 40 bales of hops the growth and production of Belgium

On Saturday morning last, during the time that Mr. Chew, the constable of Mosley, Yorkshire, was snug in bed, his premises was entered by a daring set of burglars, who contrived most adroitly to abstract therefrom a quantity of cash, as well as some pieces of black and blue cloth.

Letters from Stockholm announce that, by a general order, the Swedish navy is put on a footing of war. The object of the measure is not known, but it is generally believed to be merely precautionary against all the eventualities which are now agitating Europe. Holland, 1846; 28 ships.

In the Art Journal for April is published the following curious statement of the number of pictures imported into the United Kingdom in the year 1849:—From France, 1,000; Belgium, 1,000; Holland, 1846; 28 ships. Germany, 3498; Spain and Portugal, 326; Italy, 1723; other countries, 1678: total, 12,691.

On Saturday evening, Mr. Kemp, aged 83, residing in Hoxton Old Town, while sitting before the fire, was seized with a fit (it is supposed), and fell on to the fire-grate. When he was discovered the left side of his face was completely burnt off. There was no one present at the time.

Manchester is quiet, still wearing a very serious aspect among the colliers out on strike at Aberdare. A large meeting was held on Wednesday, and a reinforcement of police was sent over from Merthyr, and a company of infantry from Dowlais. Since then numerous of disturbances have been current, but we believe they are unfounded.

The schoolmaster and mistress of the Bridgewater Union, named Fenley, by the death of a distant relation, will ultimately succeed to a large property. He had left them by his will £2000 to be paid on the twelvemonth; and at the death of a lady, aged 76, upwards of £700 per annum.

The Town Council of Cupar have resolved to petition both Houses of Parliament for the removal of tests in the Scottish Universities.

Mr. Edmund is having constructed a great iron bridge, to be thrown over the river Wye, at Chepstow, six hundred feet in length, with four arches, one of three hundred feet, and three of one hundred feet each, so as not to interfere with the navigation.

Mr. Scarlett (Lord Montes) arrived in Paris last week from Boulogne, and on Monday left the Hôtel Victoria, where she had been stay ng, until the Château Beaujon, in the Champs Elysé s, which has been taken by Mr. Heald, and is prepared for her reception. Mr. Heald was to arrive at the Château Beaujon on Monday.

Large quantities of fish are now despatched from Plymouth, by rail, for the London market, and also to a number of populous towns, such as Bath, Bristol, Bath, and Wolverhampton. Recently, some forty tons have been daily sent by rail.

The Mayor of Southampton has refused to sign about 40 summonses of persons who have been drunk and disorderly in the town. The Mayor also presided at an anti-state-church meeting held last week in Southampton.

Last week a fire broke out in the village of Crinkle, in the King's County, which consumed twenty-two cottages before it was mas ered.

The armed convict ship Baretto, Jun., Captain Huggins, is appointed to sail from Woolwich, on the 8th of the present month, with 400 convicts, for Hobart Town and Port Jackson. On Tuesday, 100 convicts arrived at Southampton by the Dorchester mail train from Portland, and were put on board the Sprightly. A vessel is waiting in the Cowes Roads to receive them. The remainder is believed to be Austria

Thomas Emmerson, a police constable, committed suicide on Wednesday, by hanging himself near Richmond Bridge. He had been sixteen years in the force.

IRELAND.

Mr. Alexander Robert Stewart, for many years representative of the county of Londonderry in Parliament, died last week at Rockhill, Letterkenny, the residence of his brother.

TENANT RIGHT.—The tenant right movement has extended itself into the county of Londonderry, thus contradicting the statement that, so far as the north of Ireland was concerned, the agitation was confined to the county of Down. Antrim and Derry are now combined with Down, and a meeting held at Garvagh, in the county of Derry last week, was one of the most influential that have yet been got up in Ulster for the purpose of expressing popular opinion on the subject.

EMIGRATION.—A Derry paper states that there has been an increase of 1539 in the number of emigrants who left that port during the quarter ending in March in the present year, as compared with the numbers leaving in the corresponding quarter last year, the numbers being respectively 354 and 1893. Fifty young females from Newcastle and Limerick workhouses sailed from Limerick on Friday, per steamer for Plymouth, to embark for Australia; and the Westmeath Independent states that, on the same day, twenty-eight orphan girls left the Mullingar workhouse for the same destination. It is added that the assistant master and matron of the Mullingar workhouse have received the appointment of master and matron on board ship during the passage.

THE CHOLERA.—The cholera has been committing ravages in the remote part of Kerry without the public having received any notice. The following return in the Cork Reporter, from Cahriveen, shows the extent to which the epidemic has prevailed there:—"The total number of cases of cholera treated in the hospital at Cahriveen, up to the 26th, 42; new cases since, 5—total, 47; cured, 15; died, 22; remaining under treatment, 5. Cahriveen—total number treated for cholera in hospital since the 16th Jan., 168. Discharged cured, 74; died, 77; under treatment, 17.

Several gentlemen who received their education at the Stockwell Proprietary Grammar School during the Mastership of the Rev. J. C. Bentley, have availed themselves of the occasion of his recent appointment to the Mastership of King Edward the Sixth's School, Lichfield, to testify their sense of his services, by presenting him, as they did yesterday, with a silver salver, executed expressly by Messrs. Barnard and Sons, of London, and bearing the following inscription:—

> Viro Reverendo Johanni Carolo Bentleio, M.A.,
> Optime de pueris Stockwell emeritis merito,
> Gratiarum atque amoris documentum,
> Discipuli grati dederunt.
> Diutius a pueris obstitum, summo omnium consensu
> Jam vix demum salvunt. IV. Non. Apr. MDCCCL.

ASPHALTIC MANURE.—At a weekly council of the Royal Agricultural Society, held on Wednesday, astatement was read from Earl Grey, showing the satisfactory results obtained by Vice-Admiral the Earl of Dundonald, in command of her Majesty's steam-frigate Imaum, from manure prepared from the asphaltum of the great pitch lake in the island of Trinidad, and trad in the Government gardens at Bermuda. His Lordship further stated in the council that Lord Grey had requested the Admiralty Colonial office a box containing three specimens of the manure in question, and which would be forwarded to the society for the inspection of its members. The council ordered that box thanks to be transmitted to Earl Grey for his favour. The consultation, and gave directions that the specimens referred to by his Lordship should, on their arrival, be placed in the hands of Professor Way, the consulting chemist of the society, with a request that he would make a chemical examination of the new manure, and report to the council his opinion of its value in an agricultural point of view.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Sunday afternoon, a man named Edward Ball, a driver of one of Glover's omnibuses, was proceeding from Hampton to Twickenham on a pleasure excursion. Having agreed to bring the same party back again, Ball put up his horse and cab at Mr. Carter's yard, Isleworth, and afterwards went, as was imagined, to take a walk by the river. Some time after hour, however, elapsed without Ball making his appearance, and inquiry was made for him throughout the neighbourhood, but not the least tidings of him could be gleaned during the whole of Sunday night. On Monday morning, however, his lifeless body was found a short distance from the Isleworth station, on the rail, dreadfully mangled. None of the engine-drivers or guards saw the accident, and no one can form any opinion as to what object the deceased had in trespassing upon the railway. The unfortunate deceased has left a widow and six children, now entirely unprovided for.

FIRES.—Two dwellings were destroyed on Tuesday morning, about one o'clock, one, the residence of Mrs. Griffin, 101, Castle-street, Leicester-square, and the other, the premises of Messrs. Levy and Lewis, 60, Mansel-street, Goodman's-fields. The property consumed was considerable in both cases; in the latter, the parties were insured. On Tuesday night, about seven o'clock, the house of Mrs. Murray, 17, Laurie-terrace, St. George's-road, was accidentally set on fire, and completely gutted before the flames could be mastered. In addition to the furniture, £50 worth of bank notes were consumed, the numbers of which being unknown, they will prove a total loss to the unfortunate occupant.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There have been some fluctuations in the price of the Funds during the week, arising, however, solely from circumstances within the walls of the Stock Exchange, and consequently quite unconnected with any public feeling, relating to political or social events. On Monday, an improvement to 96¼ ⅜ was registered, Consols closing at 96¼ to ⅜, after having touched ⅝; and on Tuesday, the opening price was at the improved quotation of 96⅜. The market, however, afterwards became dull, and a reaction to 96 occurred, the closing price being 96 to ⅛, which was followed on Wednesday by a further decline to 95⅞, buyers. This sudden depression naturally excited enquiry, when it transpired that some extensive sales to close a large Bull account had been effected, not only cause. Consequently, on Thursday, an improved tone prevailed, the market opening with Consols at 95⅞, and gradually growing firmer, until the closing quotation became 95⅞ to ⅞. The Unfunded Stocks were very stationary; but a slight tendency to rigidity is perceptible in India Bonds, as the period for commencing tne reduced rate of interest approaches. The dividends on New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, and Reduced, &c., are payable on Saturday next.

At the close of the week prices stood—for Three per Cent. Consols, 95⅞; Annuities to expire Jan. 5, 1860, 8 5-16; India Bonds, under £1000, 90 p; Consols for Account, 96⅛; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 68 p; £500, June, 68 p; Small Ditto, 68 p.

Mexican Stock has been heavy during the week, at declining prices, in consequence of large sales. The hope of another dividend is doubtless too remote for speculators to await, hence the decline. Peruvian Bonds are flat; while Buenos Ayres has been done at all prices, from 50⅞ to 55⅞, the announcement that the half dividend left unpaid on a former occasion will be now met, causing some excitement among the uninformed public. The quotations at the close of the week the market was generally depressed at the following prices —

Brazilian Bonds, New, 1829 and 1839, 86¾; Buenos Ayres Bonds, Six per Cent., Account, 54; Danish Bonds, 1825, Three per Cents., 70 ex div.; Dutch Scrip, 2½ pm.; Mexican Five per Cent., 1846, ex Jan. Coupons, Account, 28½; Peruvian Bonds, Four per Cent., Account, 67¾ ex div.; Ditto Deferred, 27; Portuguese Four per Cents., Account, 37; Russian Bonds, 1064; Ditto, Interest-Half per Cent., 74¾; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, 17; Ditto, Account, 17¼; Ditto, Passive, 3¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., 37; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents., 90; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 1944; Ditto, Account for Ditto, Four per Cent. Certificates, 9⅞ ex div.; Ditto Bonds, 83; Austrian, 77¼; Ditto, Passive, 3¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., 37; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents., 90; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 194; Ditto, 5½;

BRITISH INSTITUTION EXHIBITION.—NO. 317.—"THE DEPARTURE OF THE CHEVALIER BAYARD FROM BRESCIA."—PAINTED BY J. C. HOOK.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

Of Mr. Hook's single contribution to the Exhibition—"The Departure of the Chevalier Bayard from Brescia"—we spoke in highly commendatory terms in our first notice of the collection. The picture hangs in the South Room; its dimensions are three feet two inches in height, by two feet seven inches in width. We repeat the epigraph, to remind the reader how admirably the painter has succeeded in representing the words of the biographer:—

"As he quitted his chamber to take horse, the two fair damsels met him, each bearing a little offering which she had worked during his sickness. Greatly did the brave knight thank them for this last courtesy, saying that such presents from so lovely hands were worth ten thousand crowns. Then gallantly fastening the bracelets on his arm, and the purse on his sleeve, he vowed to wear them both for the honour of their fair donors while his life endured."—Life of the Chevalier Bayard.

STOCKPORT SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

At a time when the important subject of the Education of the People so forcibly occupies the attention of the public and the Legislature, the following account of the commemoration of one of the early successes of the Sunday-School system may be acceptable to our readers. The scene of this interesting event was the large manufacturing town of Stockport, where a Sunday-School was established about the year 1784, or four years after the first institution of the system. The cotton trade was then in its infancy, and the population comparatively small. Ill-ventilated and inconvenient rooms were at first made use of as Sunday-Schools, and paid teachers employed under the direction of a committee composed both of Churchmen and Dissenters, the expenses being defrayed by sermons and collections at the various places of worship in the town, and by donations. About the year 1804, the number of scholars having greatly increased, and the rents of the schools being felt very onerous, the managers of the Institution conceived the plan of erecting one large Sunday-School for the religious education of the children of the operative classes of Stockport and its vicinity, without any distinction of sect or party. A subscription was accordingly entered into, and land purchased for the purpose on Sandy Brow; and, in 1806, the structure which we have engraved, was opened to the public.

The building was originally forty-four yards in length, four stories high, and nineteen yards in width; it contained fifty-eight teaching-rooms, besides the large room, which takes up the whole of the third story, and ranges the entire length of the building. This room is fitted up with a handsome pulpit, seats for the committee, an orchestra for 100 performers, besides two galleries for 500 children; the whole being capable of seating comfortably about 3000 children. In 1810, a large and excellent organ, built by Elliott, of the value of 500 guineas, was presented to the committee by Robert Parker, Esq., of Heaton Mersey, and placed in the orchestra. In this large room the scholars are assembled on quarter-days and other occasions. Monthly lectures are delivered on Sunday evenings, and an annual sermon preached is for the benefit of the Institution by some eminent minister, when a selection of sacred music is performed; by the proceeds of which, and an annual subscription from the inhabitants of the town, the Institution has been supported since its commencement. The School was originally vested in about forty trustees, the survivors of whom conveyed it in a renewed deed to about thirty new trustees; all of whom, agreeably to the provisions of the original trust deed, have subscribed £20 each, or more considerable sums, to the funds of the Institution. It is managed by a committee, chosen annually, in the month of June, from amongst the principal subscribers, and generally consists of about twenty-five individuals.

From the opening of the School, in 1806, the Bible, without the Apocrypha or any comment, has been the only class-book, and the children have attended the parish church and other places of worship in the town in regular rotation. Writing and accounts have also been taught the more advanced scholars of both sexes; three libraries have been provided for the use of the teachers and scholars, containing about 4000 volumes of standard moral and religious works; upwards of 1000 copies of the Scriptures furnished, for the purpose at low prices by the British and Foreign Bible Society and Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and about 45,000 religious tracts and other publications of the Religious Tract Society, are annually purchased by them.

Since 1806, the committee have found it expedient to erect, at different extremities of the town, or in its immediate vicinity, four large auxiliary Schools at Heaton Mersey, Brinkaway, Lancashire Hill, and Heavley; and in 1835, an additional wing was added to the large School, at a cost of £2500. The total expense of erecting the parent institution, and its auxiliaries, was about £20,000, raised entirely by voluntary subscription. Upon an average of the last forty-four years, it appears that the annual sermons have produced £314 per annum, and the annual subscriptions an average of about £210 per annum; so that, with the produce of a few legacies which have been funded, the gross annual income of the School may be estimated at between £500 and £600 per annum. The large School, with the new wing, now contains eighty-three teaching-rooms; and, by the last Report of the committee, published in 1849, it appears that the total number of children now educating in the parent institution and its auxiliary schools is 5400, of whom 3538 are girls, and 2662 boys; who are under the superintendence of 197 female, and 256 male teachers, making a total of 453 teachers, who all render their services gratuitously; and that no less than 63,370 children have been admitted into this School.

Stockport also contains about twenty other Sunday-Schools, belonging to the various denominations of Christians, by whom they have been erected; in which, it is supposed, about 6000 children are now educating; or, including those in this School, altogether about 12,000 under instruction on Sabbath-days.

The commemoration, to which we have already referred, took place on the evening of Good Friday, in the large room of the Institution, when a handsomely-bound Bible and a superb Silver Salver were presented to Mr. Turner, the general inspector of the School. Mr. Mayer, one of the founders of the Institution, was called to preside, and Mr. Swan was appointed to the vice-chair. About 800 persons, consisting chiefly of the trustees, committee, visitors, and teachers, assisted at the presentation. The room had been elegantly and even gorgeously decorated for the occasion; fifty banners and union-jacks were arranged around the vast apartment, and garlands of flowers were festooned from side to side. In the centre of the apartment, depending from the ceiling, a wreath of flowers encircled the inscription, "John Turner, Esq., General Inspector 36 years;" and among the mottos that garnished the walls were "Work while it is day, for the night cometh," "For the soul to be without knowledge it is not good," "Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times," &c.

Several persons from a distance were present to witness the proceedings; and among the number we noticed Mr. M. Burgess, Mrs. Burgess, Miss Burgess, and Mr. Hill, from the Macclesfield Sunday-school. We also observed among the company, the Rev. H. K. Pugsley, Messrs Bayles, John Andrew, James Lomax, Mrs. Kenyon, Mrs. Alderman Wilkinson, Mrs. Lomax, Mrs. Bayley, and Miss Andrew.

The Chairman opened the business of the evening in a very able speech, full of incidents connected with the history of the school, and containing an exposition of the principles on which it is based, and concluded by presenting the Bible and Salver to Mr. Turner, in the following words:—"It is now my duty to present to you, in the name of the parties referred to in the address, these tokens of their esteem and regard. I lay my hand upon this Bible, and I wish you many long years in which it may be your study and your consolation: and when you see this salver upon your sideboard, it will remind you of friends here; and when you are disposed to grow discouraged, look upon it, and you will be cheered and admonished that you must go on."

Mr. Turner responded in very fitting terms; after which the meeting was addressed by Messrs. Alderman Wilkinson, James Leech, Swan, Oldfield, J. L. Cheetham, S. Walker, Williams, S. W. Wilkinson, Henry Turner, W. Williamson, and Dr. Turner. Several hymns were sung in the course of the evening, and the assembly broke up about eleven o'clock.

THE STOCKPORT SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

THE SWINEY BEQUEST CUP, AT THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.

In the lower or large Model-Room of the Society's House, in the Adelphi, is now exhibiting an interesting assemblage of Specimens of Recent British Manufactures, received in competition for the Society's Special Prizes. There are about 300 specimens, of which 127 are chiefly fabrics. Among these, a sixty-inch Silk Brocatelle, Gothic pattern, manufactured by Keith and Co., for Mr. John Webb, is a fine production of Spitalfields manufacture. For their Damask Brocatelles Messrs. Keith and Co. have received the Isis Gold Medal. The Society have likewise awarded their Isis Gold Medal to Messrs. Reckless and Hickling, of Nottingham, for the best machine-made Lace. Their black Silk Lacquard Berthe is the first instance in which the manufacturer has succeeded in producing, on a large scale, a shaped article by the application of the Jacquard loom. The Silver Medal has been awarded to Miss Stanley, for the specimens of lace exhibited by her, and made by the children of her school, at Norwich.

Of glass and metals there are several specimens, distinguished by their novelty and elegance. Some inlaid tables of woods from New Zealand, by J. McLevein, are beautifully manufactured; and Messrs. Jennens and Bettridge's papier-maché ornamental furniture, richly dight with mother-o'-pearl and gold, present ingenious and effective specimens of their novel style of decorative art. Among the enamelling and painting on glass are some picture copies of high excellence

One of the most attractive articles in the room is the Swiney Bequest Cup, the history of which is somewhat curious:—Some twenty years ago, during the secretaryship of Arthur Aikin, Esq., an old gentleman entered the Secretary's office at the Society of Arts, with a small parcel, which (as we are informed) he requested permission to leave for the Society, at the same time stating that it was not to be opened till the Secretary should be addressed relative to it. Time rolled on—the parcel remained unopened; and, previous to Mr. Aikin retiring from office, a committee was appointed to consider what should be done with the mysterious present. At length the parcel was opened, and was then found to contain a copy of the will of Dr. George Swiney, by which will the sum of £2000 was left to the Society, conditionally that, once in five years, a goblet, value £100, with one hundred sovereigns in it, be awarded for the best essay on "Improvements in Agriculture." The sum of £1000 was also left by Dr. Swiney to the Trustees of the British Museum, for the purpose of establishing a course of lectures on geology. These facts having been ascertained, steps were taken to ascertain whether Dr. Swiney was still living; but all attempts to gain the required information failed, and, eventually, the subject dropped. In 1844, however, a letter was received, addressed to the Secretary, announcing the death of Dr. George Swiney; and the Society's solicitor was directed to examine into the matter, and, having done so, he ascertained that, by a codicil to Dr. Swiney's will, the subject for which the prize was to be awarded was altered, and the Society was directed to give a similar prize to the author of the best published work on "Medical Jurisprudence;" but the award was required to be made by the members of the Society of Arts jointly with the members of the College of Physicians. The prize was to be awarded every fifth year from the date of Dr. Swiney's death; and the first fifth year having been completed in February, 1849, the prize was adjudged as directed to Drs. Paris and J. M. Fonblanque, as the joint authors of the best published work on "Medical Jurisprudence."

THE SWINEY BEQUEST SILVER CUP, DESIGNED BY D. MACLISE, R.A.

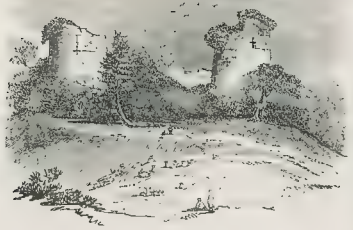
The Prize Cup, of which we annex an Engraving, has been ably designed by Mr Maclise, R.A.; modelled by Mr. W. F. Spencer; and manufactured in silver by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket. The cover is surmounted by a figure of Justice, with Vengeance and Mercy on either side; in the centre is a medio, representing a Hall of Justice; and on the foot are four kneeling figures, as slaves.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

REMAINS OF CHARTLEY CASTLE, STAFFORDSHIRE.

The beautiful estate of Chartley is situated upon an eminence, which rises from a wide and fertile plain, environed with some of the finest scenery in the county of Stafford. The property lies about six miles south-east of Stafford, and about two miles east of the direct London and Liverpool road, between Rugby and Stone; and, upon a clear day, may be seen by the traveller from Stone to Colwich, on the North Staffordshire Railway, the remains of the castle which has conferred celebrity upon Chartley for six centuries past.



RUINS OF CHARTLEY CASTLE.

At the Domesday survey, Chartley was in the hands of the Conqueror, who se successor, William Rufus, gave it to Hugh Earl of Chester. In this family the estate continued for several successions; and Ranulph Earl of Chester built the Castle in 1220, or before our castles began to assume the plan of mansions. In other words, the fortress at Chartley was built in the fourth year of the reign of Henry III., and its defensive strength was severely tested in those turbulent times. After the death of Ranulph, the founder, the Castle at Chartley, with his other estates, devolved on William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, and was then attached to the Royal forest of Needwood and the honour of Tutbury. But the Earl's grandson having joined the rebellious Barons against Henry III., and been defeated at Burton Bridge, this Earl's immense possessions, now forming part of the Duchy of Lancaster, were forfeited to the Crown. The Earl, however, again possessed himself of the Castle by force; when, by command of his brother, the King, it was besieged by the Earl of Lancaster, who took the fortress after an obstinate resistance. Ferrers was, however, subsequently pardoned; and, though deprived of his Earldom of Derby, was allowed possession of his Castle.

The Chartley estate remained in this family until the time of Henry VI., when, being settled in dower, Agnes, heiress of William Lord Ferrers, carried it, by marriage, to Walter Devereux, Earl of Essex; and remained in this line until the death of Robert Earl of Essex, the Parliamentary General, who closed his life at the palace of Eltham, in Kent, Sept. 14, 1646. Thus, it is certain that Chartley was in the possession of Robert Earl of Essex in the reign of Elizabeth; and it was, probably, the place of his retirement when he was liberated from his first imprisonment, at the end of August, 1600; and, perhaps, where he planned his plot, for which he was tried Feb. 19, 1601, and executed on the 25th of the same month, being Ash Wednesday. In 1677, Sir Robert Shirley (who was son of Dorothy, sister of the last Earl of Essex) was declared Lord Ferrers of Chartley. This nobleman was afterwards created Viscount Tamworth and Earl Ferrers, from whom the property has descended to the present Earl of that name.

The Castle appears to have been in ruins for many years. It is recorded that Queen Elizabeth visited her favourite, the Earl of Essex, here, in August, 1572, and was entertained by him in an ancient half-wood house, which formerly stood near the Castle, but since destroyed by fire. A question arises, whether Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned in this house, or in a portion of the old Castle? Certain, however, it is that this unfortunate Queen was brought to Chartley from Tutbury, on Christmas Day, 1585. On the 8th of August, 1586, she was taken from Chartley to Tixhall, distant about three miles, and brought back on the 30th. She found on her return that her cabinet had been broken open, her papers carried off by Commissioners, and her two secretaries, Nane and Curle, taken into custody. The exact date at which Mary Queen of Scots left Chartley is not certain; but it appears she was removed thence under a plea of taking an airing without the bounds of the Castle. She was conducted by daily stages from the house of one gentleman to another, under pretence of doing her honour, without her having the remotest idea of her destination, until she found herself, on the 26th of September, within the fatal walls of Fotheringay Castle.

The present remains of Chartley Castle chiefly consist of the fragments of two round towers, and a part of a wall, which measures 12 feet in thickness: the loop-holes are so constructed as to allow arrows to be shot in the ditch in a horizontal direction, or under the towers. The keep appears to have been circular, and 30 feet in diameter.

A bed, wrought by Mary Queen of Scots during her imprisonment, is shewn at Chartley.

The Park is famous for its red and fallow deer; and remarkable for containing the indigenous Staffordshire cow, with which is associated a superstition that the birth of a parti-coloured calf is an omen of death within the same year to a member of the Ferrers family.

THE THEATRES.

DRURY-LANE.

The reception given to the tragedy of "Jane Shore," on Monday, was such as ought to convince managements that even a holyday audience is, in these days, too well educated to endure with patience a dull and dreary domestic drama, seldom or never ventured at more critical periods. That the opposition was due to the dulness of the play, was clear from the circumstance that the fifth act of it, in which the interest rises, the scene becomes picturesque and the passion forcible, was received with attention and applause, remarkably in contrast with the noise and sibilation that accompanied the first four acts throughout.

After the tragedy came the "new fairy spectacle," called "The Devil's Ring," and attributed to Mr. Rodwell. Judging from the introduction of four live horses in the final tableau, neither the composer nor manager was disposed to sacrifice to legitimacy the chance of a melodramatic "hit." The boards of old Drury have thus again, we regret to record, been desecrated with the hoofs of quadrupeds. The spectacle itself is in three acts. There is a comic character named Franco (Mr. Artaud), the brother of the hero, Herbert (Miss Huddart), who does his best practically to make fun. Miss Huddart, however, has been better cared for, having, in her assumed character of minstrel, been provided with several airs which she executes with vocal abilities of no ordinary calibre. The plot is conducted with an undue degree of elaboration. The young lover is taken through the perils of the four elements, in order to disenchant his mistress, and deliver her from the power of the magician Go-tah. This part was seized with much spirit and humour by Mr. C. Fisher. The moral of the piece is unexceptional; the hero being indebted for his success to love and honour. His competitors fall for want of their fidelity. The scenery is of the most ambitious order; presenting celebrated subjects painted on a magnificent scale, but not always with the sense of illusion. Particularly deficient in this attribute were the Falls of Niagara; the Sicilian scene of the harbour of Catania, with a distant view of the smoking Etna, was better. The mere extravaganza scenes were striking, particularly the ascent through the burning mountain and the staircase from the Gnome Palace and Diamond Caves to the upper world. The corps de ballet exerted themselves with effect, and Miss Nelson, as the enchanted Princess, Eveline, with the fairies Zoe, Zola, and Zoa, sing-ing, both acted and sang very nicely. Mr. Seymour, as Whirlibury, an active sprite, was sufficiently grotesque and energetic. More point and elegance, however, are required, to make the ensemble thoroughly attractive. We have engraved the scene of the re-capture of the Princess, and her descent over the Niagara Fall into the City of Fountains.]

SCENE FROM THE "DEVIL'S RING," AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "IVANHOE," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

SCENE FROM "CYMON AND IPHIGENIA," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

HER MAJESTY'S.

It will be remembered that Her Majesty's Theatre was originally established as a school of lyrical art, to bear towards the musical world in London the same relation the collection of the Italian masters in the National Gallery does toward the follow-ers of pictorial art. The appearance of two English artists, Catherine Hayes and Sims Reeves, on Tuesday, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," may fairly be considered as a sample of the fruits of the first institution of an Italian opera in England. It is a very important feature, because it is a novel result, at least, as regards two English singers of confirmed reputation. Every other attempt of English artists on the Italian lyrical stage has ultimately proved a failure, save and except Miss Billington, forty years ago; whilst in other countries, Jenny Lind, Malibran, and Sontag are examples of vocalists who were not "to the manner born," and have even eclipsed the Italians themselves. Miss Catherine Hayes and Mr. Reeves were received on Tuesday, no doubt, with a sentiment of triumph on the part of the audience itself, at beholding two of their own country justly asserting their right to a place on the greatest of all lyrical stages. Their reception was not only cordial, but enthusiastic. Of course the Queen's Opera does not profess that there is still some deficiency of fulness of utterance and quality of tone, and too much of apparent imitation and study, in these two performers, young in their career, and scarcely more than débutantes in the Italian style. Miss Hayes's Lucia presented a most fascinating and highly artistic picture, and she sang with taste and refinement. As to Mr. Reeves, if he will attend to the full articulation of the noble language he now employs, banish the occasional vulgarity of his gestures and movements, and his arbitrary rendering of the forte and the pianos—the latter of which are sometimes as inaudible as the former are boisterous his new career will be the most enviable possible, apart from all national predilections.

A most marked reaction has taken place in favour of choregraphic amusements. It was begun by Carlotta Grisi in the "Metamorphoses"—certainly a ballet worthy of such a dancer. Mario and Tagliafico alone, the public could scout; and Amalia Ferraris sub-sequently, by her unexpec ed éclat, wound up the revived taste to the utmost pitch. The success of the ballet and divertissement this week has left nothing for the dancers to envy the singers. Ferraris has received more applause and more bouquets every night.

However, the great event of the week has been the re-appearance of Madame Sontag. The great vocalist has returned with the entire possession of all the severest musical critics in Europe—those of the French capital. In Paris the resistance to the great songstress before she appeared was highly amusing. She was pre-judged with laudable hostility. The last leading question, the last pusillanimity of enthusiasm and of euphuism that followed, were more readily comprehended, for Madame Sontag was there not merely what we saw her at the end of last season, in London (when she had just returned from a life of leisure to a career of exceeding exertion), but what she is now when repeated practice has restored to her all her pristine strength. Appearing on Thursday for the first time in Norina, a part so peculiarly adapted to her style and to that in such an opera buffa as Don Pasquale at Lab ache, it need scarcely be added that the attraction was intense. Every place in the house, we believe, was already secured on the previous day; and we have only time and space to say that the whole of the performance—in which Calzolari and Belletti were likewise engaged—fulfilled the most sanguine expectat on.

The Norina of Madame Sontag—such as she portrayed the character on Thursday night does not merely excite applause at the moment of its execution: the more reflection, the more it astonishes those who are accustomed to the means by which most vocalists attempt to astonish. Nothing of all these poverty stricken modern times of vocal art. The sparkling brilliancy, the thri ling notes of the singer are tempered by the fine taste of the actress and scientific musician. Far from resorting to violent contrasts, the predominating intention is evidently to harmonise every passage and every phrase of the music with the situation, and make every detail, vocal and dramatic, consistent with the character, and apposite to the moment. The trants are so delicate, the flood of embellishments is so chaste as well as so rich, that, at first, they express the hearer rather by their general charm than by their detached effect. There are moments, however—and these are neither few nor far between—when the great vocalist introduces cromatic passages so peculiar, so thoroughly brilliant, and flights of voice so marvellous, that they irradiate all the previous execution, however subdued, and the earnest judge is made to feel that he has before him one of the greatest models of lyrical art. Received at her first appearance with the profoundest respect, and accompanied and terminated by the most protracted bursts of laughter and applause attended every word he uttered and every note he sang. Beletti did the greatest justice to his very small part; whilst the young tenor, Calzolari, loudly applauded and encored, displayed all the progress he has made since his first became a favourite on the boards of Her Majesty's Theatre.

Looking at the performances announced for the ensuing Thursday, it will be manifest that the direction has succeeded in promoting an ensemble that exceeds all previous efforts. The masterpiece of Mozart will be illustrated by Sontag, Parodi, Gulliani, Colletti, Calzolari, F. Lablache, and the great Lablache. In the famous ball-room scene, the "Zarabanda" will be danced by Carlotta Grisi and Mario Taglioni; in a divertissement, the pupil-dancer of Carlotta, Amalia Ferraris will appear in a new pas; and, to crown the whole, there will be presented the charming ballet of "Les Metamorphoses," in which the sprite Carlotta will repeat her graceful witcheries.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Grisi, Mdlle. de Meric, Mario, Tagliafico, and Tamburini have arrived safely from St. Petersburgh, after a rough journey, owing to the heavy fall of snow in Russia. Next Tuesday these artistes will appear in Donizetti's "Favorita," and on Thursday in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," with Herr Formes as Marcel.

On Thursday night the theatre re-opened after the Easter recess, with Auber's masterpiece, "Masaniello." This magnificent opera has not been performed for many last season, and was universally recognised as one of the grandest musical performances ever known in this country, equally distinguished as it was for a gorgeous and picturesque scenic spectacle. The grand tableau at the end of each act—the animated groupings—the beautiful dances—the brilliant execution of the overture, marches, and accompaniments—and the choral singing, particularly in the celebrated prayer in the market-place, were unanimible sentiment. In all these points the revival was quite equal to the original performance. In the cast of the principal parts there have been many changes. Mario and Salvi last year appeared in succession as Masaniello. On Thursday night, a tenor quite new to this country, but of great Continental fame, Signor Tamberlik, sustained this arduous character. Madame Castellan was the Zerira, in place of Madame Doras Gras; Mdme. Bellini played the dumb girl, Fenella, instead of Madame Fanlini; and Signor Mendame Cotti (Emma) succeeds Madame Bellini, and Signor Gregorio (Selva) follows Signor Ri Massol, Mdl. Rache, and Romani retain their or ginal parts.

The great event was the re-appearance by the new tenor, Tamberlik, who is one of the most accomolished singers we have ever heard. He reminds us at once of Duprez and Rubini—the former in respect to splendid declamation in the recitatives and in the quality of the organ—the latter with regard to exquisite finish and perfection of phrasing. In his opening barcarolle, "Amici," there was a strong tremulousness evinced, but this greatly disappeared in the encore which was so earnestly bestowed, and, as his progressed, little traces of this tremolo were perceptible. Masaniello is the greatest part of an actor as well as of a singer; but Tamberlik proved that his dramatic power was as great as his vocal ability. He is what is designated by the Italians a tenore robusto, of rather than sympathetic quality of charm. The air with the cabaletta so rapturously re-demanded—he attached the high notes from his chest with remarkable purity of tone and certainty of intonation. In the cantabile of the fourth act (the air of sleep) the expression of delicious repose united to power of tone could not be. He is about the middle height, stoutly formed, with a fine head In his scenes with Fenella there was a graceful tenderness; and in Masaniello's revolutionary scenes he fell fire into the proper position. At the end of the second act, in which Masaniello first appears, Tamberlik had secured the suffrages of his auditory, and received a special ovation, and also at the end of the opera. The overture and "Prayer" were, as usual, encored. The opera went off superbly, with the exception of the first act, which was quite ruined by Mel's Alphonso.

LYCEUM.

Of "Cymon and Iphigenia," and the sources of its incidents and story, we have already spoken. Mr. Planché, in his adaptations, generally follows his original with remarkable fidelity, and in the present has not departed much from Garrick or Dryden. But he commences it with an allegorical proem, compiled of these like-minded persons—Spring (Miss Martindale), March (Mr. Oxle), and April the First, King of Tomfoolery (Mr. C. Mathews). The piece itself has its supernatural characters, taken, names and all, from Garrick—Merlin (Mr. F Cooke), and Urganda (Miss Isabel Dickinson)—with a pentad of Fusolos, Rosetta, Jealousy, Hatred, Despair, and Love, whose representatives have need not be named, with certain nymphs, who, in the stage-costume of the 18th centu ry, are with a whoop, and come with a call." The piece was well supported. Cymon, as acted by Miss Cushman, is a character of a rich and elevated intel.igence of character as well as much stage experience. Iphigenia, or Sylvia, was represented by a debutante, Miss Manners, whose appearance is suggestive of promise which we hope to see fulfilled. Mr. Frank Matthews, as her old guardian, Dorcas, was full of his usual drollery, and illustrated deafness to admiration. The scenery and all the appointments of the stage were exquisitely elegant and effective. The dialogue of the piece was wittily pointed at the follies of the time, the application of which was aided by a chorus in the person of Mr. Mathews, armed with innumerable jests and a sufficient commodity of comic songs. This kind of burlesque, which, by the bye, is the very best, may readily be admitted within the range of poetic art, and constitutes an intellectual treat, to be distinguished from those merely got up by the scene-painter and machinist. (We have engraved the scene in which Iphigenia is discovered in a bower asleep by Cymon, who falls in love with her, April standing by, and watching the youthful pair.)

HAYMARKET.

The Brothers Brough have exceeded their former efforts in this year's Easter production, which partakes of the excellence both of the drama and the burlesque. It is in two acts, and follows the order of the usual melodramatic adaptations of Sir Walter Scott's romances by Mr. Yearnoe.] In the play-bills it is humorously described as "the last edition of 'Ivanhoe,' with all the newest improvements." The dialogue of the piece is first-rate, and the hits, puns, allusions, and parodies are of unexceptionable quality. They irresistibly excite laughter. Nothing, indeed, can be more clever than the adaptation of the subject to modern times. Cedric, the Saxon, is a fine old Englishman, full of obsolete prejudices, an enemy to French manners and modern inventions. He is gloriously impersonated by Mr. Selby. Cedric does the honours of his manor-hall with riotous hospitality. Brian de Bois Guilbert is a Templar and Parisian of the new school. "La Jeune France" is his motto; and he is indeed graphically represented, in a full-length" portrait, by Mr. Charles Selby, with a dash and extravagance superbly ridiculous. Mrs. Keeley, as the Palmer, was rich in humour, the dupe of cheap armour bought at the mart of "Isaacs and Sons," and worsted accordingly. Of all the characters in the piece, however, the most comically rendered by the Black Knight. The principal partner in this nefarious firm is Isaac of York (Mr. Keeley), whose slumbers are visited by the ghosts of needlewomen, and others, the poor victims of the "Slash" and Dash" system of his upper-hall with riotous hospitality. Brian de Bois Guilbert is a Templar and Parisian of the new school. "La Jeune France" is his motto; and he is indeed graphically represented, in a "full-length"

NEW BOOKS, &c.

NEW WORKS TO BE PUBLISHED IN THE COURSE OF THIS MONTH.

A MONTH AT CONSTANTINOPLE. By ALBERT SMITH. With Illustrations. Post 8vo.

THE FOURTH ESTATE; a HISTORY of the NEWSPAPER PRESS. By F. KNIGHT HUNT. 2 vols. post 8vo.

THE STORY of a BUCCANEER. Edited by ANGUS B REACH. 2 vols post 8vo

A NEW VOLUME of POEMS. By CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D. With Portrait of the Author. Fcp 8vo.

DAVID BOUR, Fleet-street

MR J. D. HARDING'S NEW WORKS ON DRAWING.

I.

LESSONS on TREES, in Progressive Series. 20 plates, imperial quarto. 31s in Parts, 35s cloth (just ready)

II

LESSONS on ART: a Course of Progressive Studies in Drawing for Landscapists. Imperial 4to. 8ls Far 3, 3 4, cloth, 42s.

III

ELEMENTARY ART; or, the Use of the Chalk and Lead Pencil Explained. Third Edition. Numerous Plates. Imperial 4to cloth, 42s.

IV.

LITHOGRAPHIC DRAWING-BOOK. Six Numbers, 5s; cloth, 10s 6d.—JOHN BOURNE, Fleet-street

SECOND EDITION IN

THE GUIDE to WATER-COLOUR PAINTING. By R. P. NOBLE

With 20 Illustrations in Colours.

Price 1s 6d stitched, or 2s bound in cloth, post free, 6d extra.

SAMUEL CHADWICK, 5, Ave Maria-lane.

GUIDE to OIL PAINTING.

By J. S. TEMPLETON.

Price One Shilling, or post free, 1s 6d

THE FINE ARTS ALMANACK,

OR, ARTIST'S REMEMBRANCER for 1850.

Price One Shilling; post free, 1s. 6d.

Containing 176 closely printed pages of valuable information connected with the Fine Arts, to be met with in any other publication

LEO BOWNET and Co. 31, Rathbone place, London

Just Published, 2 vo umes imperial 8vo, with 50 plates, handsomely bound in cloth, £2 12s 6d,

WANDERINGS of a PILGRIM in search of the PICTURESQUE, during Four-and-Twenty Years in the EAST; with REVELATIONS of LIFE in the ZENANA.

By فانی فارکس

Illustrated with Sketches from Nature.

FELIX RICHARDSON, 33, Cornhill

Now Ready, Two Shillings

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON READING BOOK.

Companion to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK

Containing a Series of Lessons on the most amusing and instructive subjects, selected with great care from the best English Authors, in Prose and Verse. The whole beautifully illustrated with above TWO HUNDRED and FIFTY ENGRAVINGS

Printed at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London; and sold by all Bookseller

NEW ENTERTAINING PERIODICAL

On the 1st of MAY next will be published, PART I. of

HISTORIC RELIQUES;

A Series of Representations of

ARMS, JEWELLERY, GOLD AND SILVER PLATE, FURNITURE, ARMOUR, &c.,

In Royal and Noble Collections, Colleges and Public Institutions, &c.,

Chiefly Unique and Unpublished

FORMERLY BELONGED TO INDIVIDUALS EMINENT IN HISTORY.

DRAWN FROM THE ORIGINALS AND ETCHED BY JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS

Relics of antiquity, which possess the most inter esting and instructive, become doubly so when they have belonged to individuals whose deeds are chronicled in History. Who is there, "of dull forgetfulness a prey," who does not look with intense interest on objects connected with the "mighty victor, mighty lord," Edward the Third the Black Prince, Henry VIII.; the imperious Elizabeth, the ill-fated Mary of Scotland, or the unhappy Charles I.? Not only of kings, but of their favorites, and of the many others who have held great sway in the various epochs of history, are the reliquæ most instructive and important. The aim of the present publication is to illustrate, by a series of original Drawings, the various relics which have historical interest, such as Armour, Dresses, Jewellery, Gold and Silver Plate, Furniture, &c., formerly belonging to persons celebrated in history, and which are at present in the possession of the Sovereign, or in various collections of nobility and gentry, in colleges, halls, public museums, &c.

Some few of the relics of the past, having historical associations connected with them, have been preserved in archæological works, but it is necessary to search through many volumes to find even a limited number of them. The present work will embrace a great variety hitherto unrepresented; and, at the same time, is a peculiar feature of their early publication

THE WHITE DRAWINGROOM, WINDSOR CASTLE.

THE WHITE DRAWINGROOM, WINDSOR CASTLE.

(Continued from page 238.)

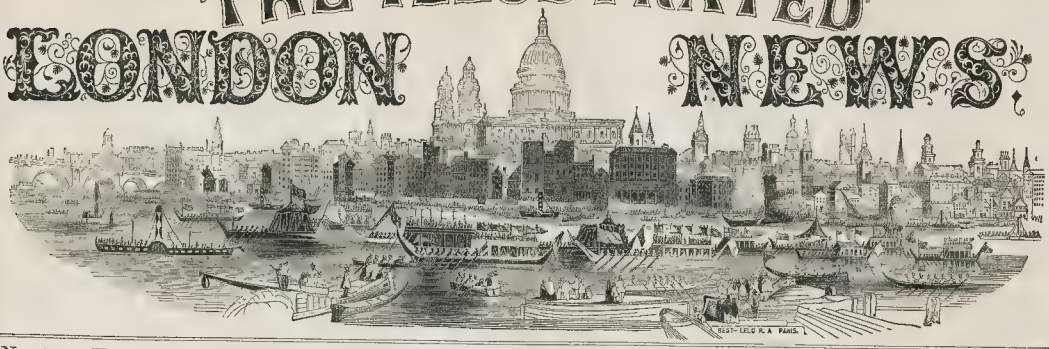
George III. in their juvenile days. The mantel-piece is of black marble, having sunken panels, within which are groups of vine leaves, with the thyrsus of Bacchus most exquisitely chased in or-moulu. The draperies to the window are of crimson satin damask; and the chairs, &c. are in the stiff heavy style of the Empire, and richly gilded. In the bay of the window, on a tall pedestal of black marble of classic design, is an elegant vase of malachite, mounted in or-moln; and immediately in front of the pedestal is a table of most beautiful workmanship, presented to her Majesty by the Emperor Nicholas. The table is supported on three legs of tasteful character, rising from a base elaborately ornamented, and between the legs are festoons of flowers with Cupids seated amongst them. The table top has, within a mosaic border, a group of fruit and flowers of lapidaries' work, in relief, of exquisite finish, and a charming effect is given by a little piece of crystal set as a dew drop on a flower leaf, the light striking through which produces an effect of reality absolutely marvellous. The chandelier is a massive and somewhat heavy-looking one, for forty lights. The different articles of verte, the clock, the cabinets, &c., are all of beautiful and palatial character, and add their various forms to make this room a scene of great richness and gaiety of effect.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.—(SEE PAGE 238.)

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1850.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.



No. 421.—Vol. xvi.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1850. [Sixpence.

THE LAST FRENCH "CRISIS."

The usual rumbling that precedes political earthquakes in France is distinctly audible at the present time. The combatants in the great struggle that has been going on since 1789, seem as if they were about once more to measure their strength with one another, and to prepare for a final tussle. We are much mistaken if the events of the next few months do not prove quite as remarkable as any of those which have occurred since February, 1848. In short the affairs of the French Republic are in the position commonly denominated a "crisis," and one or other of the opposing parties must make a move, the success or failure of which will give an impetus to events that cannot fall in either case to be of the highest importance.

The two parties that are actually in the field, no matter by what names they may call themselves, are the foes and the friends of the revolution of February, 1848. In the armies of the first are the Legitimists, the Orleanists, and, strangely enough, the Bonapartists; who, if they do not detest the revolution as a fact, have a very cordial abhorrence of the principles in the name of which it was brought about. In the ranks of the second are the sincere and moderate Republicans, the Democratic and Ultra-Republicans, and the Socialists and Communists, composed of all the heterogenous and conflicting theorists to whom those names are given hap-hazard. The Revolution was commenced, and the Republic was proclaimed, in the names of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity. The result up to the present time has been that Liberty has been ignominously thrust from the soil of France as an alien and an interloper; and that a grinding and intolerable tyranny, worse than any ever inflicted by Louis Philippe or the elder Bourbons, has been enthroned in her stead. Equality may be said to exist in France; but it looks more like an equality of misery and discontent, than any thing else. As for Fraternity, there is no such thing in France. It is an idle dream, and the sad reality is a compound of hatred and all uncharitableness, of bitter animosities, and of mutual revilings and distrust. The Revolution has, in fact, been an utter failure in every respect; it has driven France back instead of urging her forward; and has inflicted all the mischief at a fearful cost of human life, of public happiness, and of the hard-won treasure of the toiling millions of her population.

We shall state no more than the truth of the various parties whom we rank under the one title of enemies of the Revolution, that, however much they may disagree about men, they have little disagreement about measures. Some would like Henry V. to be the master; some would prefer the Count de Paris; and others, again, would infinitely rather choose the actual President, to be the tyrant of France. In the name of "Order," each and all of these parties would destroy Liberty. In fact, by their union—uncertain, mistrustful, and ill-natured as it has been—they have succeeded to this extent; and Frenchmen have lost even those vestiges of rational freedom which were left them by the tender mercies of their last Monarch. They can neither write nor speak their thoughts, nor meet in public, without being fined and imprisoned. They endure at this moment an amount of oppression—volatile, impulsive, and hasty as they are—which soberer and more reflective Englishmen have never been subjected to, and which it is pretty certain they would not tolerate, if they were.

The friends of the Revolution, dispirited as they have been, and engaged in fierce polemics and hostilities with one another, have suddenly gained a victory over the Government. The Socialist and Ultra-democratic candidates at the recent elections have carried the day in the stronghold of power, in the city of Paris itself, and have been equally successful in several of the departments. In consequence of a double return, in which the favoured candidate has chosen to sit for the department rather than for the capital, a new election is about to take place for Paris. Another victory like the last, and the Ultra-Republicans will be in a position to beard the Government. Hence the present struggle, and the alarm and uneasiness that now prevail throughout France, and which give warning of an approaching tempest. One of the most remarkable symptoms of the crisis is the fact that the Ultra-Democrats have once for all broken with the President. His name is no longer a tower of strength; his popularity is gone; and he has been grossly insulted in the streets by large crowds of holyday-makers that gathered round his coach on Easter Monday, on his road to Vincennes. So low is he fallen that even the Legitimists take him under their patronage, and talk with insolent kindness about him as a man whom they would liberally and brilliantly reward if he would but consent to act the part of General Monk for them. He, in the meantime, sees no hope but in physical force. He stifles opinion; enacts the most stringent laws against the promulgation of all opinions but such as are in accordance with his plans for retaining the Presidency, and surrounds Paris with strong armies, commanded by Algerian generals, schooled in razzias, and who possess all the soldierly virtues except mercy. Nothing would better serve his purposes, and, indeed, the purposes of all parties opposed to the Republic, than a fight at the present moment. The original chiefs of the "Mountain" are in exile, and the result of a street insurrection would be to send the remaining leaders after them, to decimate the rank and file, and give the present retrogressive and incongruous system another breathing-time of a twelvemonth.

This is but a melancholy prospect for one of the three great nations of the world; but there is nothing new in it. It is the old story. It cannot be very different in a country where there is neither loyalty nor stability, nor any faith upon which the mind can rest. The loyalty of the Legitimists is but loyalty to a shadow. The loyalty of the Orleanists is more vulgar, and lacks the poetical element altogether. "Our tills were full of cash under Louis Philippe," say his friends; "let us have his family back again, that we may revel among the flesh-pots, and sing "Fi de la liberté!" The loyalty of the Bonapartists is somewhat nobler-looking, but it is a loyalty to the dying halo of a dead system of military aggrandizement which can never be revived. None of these parties have faith in any mortal or immortal thing, except the sword. That is their deity—to coerce the turbulent, to procure repose in which trade may flourish, or to dazzle the nations by the flimsy and transitory splendours of French glory.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.—SKETCH ON THE DOWNS.—PREPARING TO START FOR THE GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Amid these parties, the Republicans have, at least, the merit of having faith in something. They believe in the Republic, and avow loyalty to its principles. It is for this reason, that, sooner or later, they will try their chance in open conflict, and that we foresee long and unhappy troubles for France. They love liberty with a sentimental enthusiasm, without knowing what it means; and would fight to the death for the shadow of it, when the substance might be slipping from their grasp. In its name they would inaugurate a tyranny, and wonder that the people were not happy. The Socialists are equally zealous, equally sincere, and equally tyrannical. They would, if they had the power, endeavour to cram their crude theories down the throats of the public at the point of the bayonet. Look where we will, we find that there is no such thing as toleration in the whole country. Every political party is a despot, and would make every other party its slave. Every man understands freedom for himself, but not for his neighbour. The whole people requires education; and, what is more, it requires common-sense. It is said that calamity is the greatest teacher of this essential acquirement. We think, considering all the present circumstances of the country, that France bids fair to have before long a little schooling from this hard-hearted, but most valuable preceptor.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Two meetings of very inferior interest—one at Long Sutton, on Monday, and the other at Rochford Hundred, on the following day—will bring a moderately successful steeple-chase season to a close. Coursing finished in April; good sportsmen think it ought not to have gone beyond March.

The racing circles congregate next week at Newmarket, with the prospect of a fair average meeting; it will commence on Monday and terminate on Friday; its most important features being the Newmarket Handicap on Tuesday, the Column Stakes on Wednesday, and the Port on Friday. This will be the only meeting of the week.

As yet the cricket and aquatic calendars are "blank" as regards fixtures, but, from all that we can hear, there is plenty of work cut out in both departments. The Marylebone Club will have to work hard to get through heir engagements.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.

This Meeting commenced on Thursday. The morning was showery; but, towards the hour for the sport, the weather cleared up, and the sun shone with more than April splendour. The company on the Downs was more numerous than hitherto at the Spring Meeting. The racing was excellent, and appeared to give great satisfaction to all assembled to witness it. In "the Great Metropolitan" race, Mr. Gratwicke's Cheerful, the favourite, who was expected to win easily, came in an indifferent third; Colonel Anson's Backbiter coming in the winner, and Major Pitt's Mounseer, second.

During the Metropolitan we regret to state, that the large Stand, between the Grand Stand and the winning-post, broke down with a sudden crash carrying with it all the spectators, between 400 and 500 in number. Several persons were severely injured, but, we believe, no actual loss of life occurred. All possible assistance was rendered to the persons injured, who were conveyed into Epsom for surgical aid.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING. THURSDAY.

The TRIAL PLATE of 50 sovs —Bushranger, 1. Knight of Gwynne, 2.
TWO-YEAR-OLD STAKES of 10 sovs each. Buckhound, 1. Catalpa, 2.

The GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES.

Backbiter	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Mounseer	..	..	..	..	..	..	2
Cheerful	..	..	..	..	..	..	3

The RAILWAY STAKES of 5 sovs each, with 2½ added.—Sir G. Heathcote's c by Gladiator (Sheerwood), 1. Sir Tatton Sykes's (Hay) 2.

The SURREY HUNT STAKES of 3 sovs each, with 20 added.—Mr. Cassidy's Diligence (Hiett), 1. Mr. H. Drew's Master Murray (Ware), 2

FRIDAY.

The SURREY HUNT STEEPLE-CHASE.—The Hero, 1. Grimaldi, 2.

The GREAT METROPOLITAN STEEPLE-CHASE.

Fugitive	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Maria Day	..	..	..	..	..	..	2
Rachel	..	..	..	..	..	..	3

The ARISTOCRATIC STAKES.—Johnny Oaks, 1. Laurel gelding, 2.

CROXTON-PARK RACES.—TUESDAY.

The FARMERS' PLATE of £50, and £10 for the second.—Mr. A. N. Larratt's Granby (Mafrey), 1. Mr. Go dsen's Miss Whitefoot, 2.

The BELVOIR CASTLE STAKES of 18 sovs each.—Lord Chesterfield nd. Penang (Bartholomew), 1. Mr. H. Robinson's Cindilara (A. Day), 2.

The SCURRY STAKES of 10 sovs each —Lord Howth's The Fiddler (Mr. White), 1. Mr. Geary's Lucy Neale (Mr Clarke), 2.

The GRANBY HANDICAP of 20 sovs each.—Lord Wilton nd. Backbiter (Mr. Clarke), 1. Lord Darnley nd. Cottisford Lass (Capt. Little), 2.

WEDNESDAY.

The FARMERS' HANDICAP of 50 sovs.—Mr Godson's Whitefoot (Mr. Elwes), 1. Mr. T. Hatton's Midnight (Mr. White), 2.

The BILLESDON COPLOW STAKES of 18 sovs each. 20 added. Mr. Atkinson nd b g by Sleight-of-Hand (Mr. Clark), 1. Mr. W. D. Bromley's King James (Owner). 2.

The GOLD CUP, added to a Handicap of 20 sovs each.—Mrs. Taft, 1. Lady Hylda, 2

The MELTON PLATE was won by Chorister.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY. The two most noticeable fluctuations in the betting were the advance of Baby to 9 to 1 for the Metropolitan Handicap (somewhat to the prejudice of Chevertoy), and of Mavors to 9 to 1 for the Derby, the former in consequence of his running at Catterick, and the latter owing to a trial in which he is alleged —with what truth we learn not to determine—to have performed very creditably with The Knight of Avenel and "The Dutchman."

GRAND HANDICAP.

3 to 1 agst Backbiter	6 to 1 agst Gardener 6 to 1 agst Mrs Taft

BELVOIR CASTLE STAKES.—Even on Penang.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

5 to 2 agst Chesnful	10 to 1 agst Ada Mary 16 to 1 agst Black Eagle
8 to 1 — Baby	12 to 1 — Mountseer 20 to 1 — Sir Gilbert
	30 to 1 agst Valentine

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES. 2 to 1 agst The Hunter.

CHESTER CUP.

13 to 1 agst Miss Ann	20 to 1 agst Roland (t)	2.	1 agst Whim colt
13 to 1 — Cossack	20 to 1 — Ribchair	30	1 — John Cosser
	50 to 1 agst Vesta.

DERBY.

11 to 8 agst Bellegrboke (t)	9 to 1 agst Mavors (t)	20t.	agst Mildew
7 to 1 — Oblille Callum	16 to 1 — Knight of Avenel	66to	— Compeas (t)

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL.—Major-General George Brown, C.B. K.H., Deputy Adjutant-General on the staff at head-quarters, has been selected by the Duke of Wellington to succeed the late Lieutenant-General Sir J. Macdonald, K.C.B., as Adjutant-General; and Colonel G. A. Wetherell, C.B., K.H., unattached Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, and Deputy Adjutant-General in Canada, has been appointed Deputy Adjutant General at head quarters, vice Brown. Major-General Brown commanded the Rifle Brigade for upwards of 17 years, and has seen much service, having served at the capture of Copenhagen, in the Peninsula, the battle of Vimeira, passage of the Douro, capture of Oporto, battle of Talavera (where he was wounded through both thighs), at the Bridge of Almeida, Busaco, Sabugal, Fuentes d'Onor, St. Sebastian, Nivelle, Nive, and Bayonne, battle of Bladensburg, and capture of Washington, and was wounded in the head and groin at Bladensburg, &c.

CAPTAIN AUSTIN'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—The four ships forming Captain Austin's Arctic squadron, fitting at Woolwich, are expected to be ready for sea by Saturday, the 27th instant.

SIR JOHN ROSS'S EXPEDITION.—The Felix, belonging to the Northern Yacht Club, has been appropriated for the service of Captain Sir John Ross.

REDUCTIONS IN THE COAST GUARD.—It is estimated that the reductions which have recently taken place in the coast-guard service amount in value to about £46,000 per annum. The principal reduction has been effected in the diminution of the number of revenue cruisers. There are now only forty-eight remaining in commission. The next great item of reduction has been in the mounted preventive men, and in the reformation of the Irish branch of the Irish coast-guard service. About £1200 a year has been saved in office salaries, &c.

Lord Viscount Gough, a few days since, paid a visit to the Gallery of Mr. Clandet, when this eminent paiotographer had the honour of taking a da guerré type portrait of the gallant and dlating disbed veteran in full uniform.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The chief feature in the intelligence of the week from Paris, is to be found in the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly, where the discussions and divisions which have taken place on the Paris and Avignon Railway Bill appear to have established—at all events, have recognised the principle that the formation of railways should be the work of private companies, and not made compulsory on the Government. The discussion was distinguished by a very able and brilliant speech from M. Lamartine, in support of the bill, on Tuesday. A division then took place on M. Gravy's amendment, which proposed that the railway in question should be executed by the State. The amendment was lost by 445 to 205.

M. Darbiay then moved, as an amendment, that 50,000f. be granted to the Government to enable them to continue the works to Chalons, which led to a long discussion, and ended by being likewise rejected by a majority of 44.

On Monday the President of the Republic opened the session of the Council-General of Agriculture, Commerce, and Manufactures, which is holding its sittings in the Palace of the Luxembourg. The President went in an open carriage, having on his right the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and in front the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and of the Interior. The other Ministers followed in separate carriages, and the last was occupied by the orderly officers and aides-de-camp. The Prefect of Police also accompanied the President. The usual escort of dragoons completed the cortège. On the President entering the court of the Luxembourg, the band of the 61st regiment of the line struck up the well-known air composed by his mother, Queen Hortense, "Partant pour la Syrie." The President, who was pretty well received, opened the proceedings by a speech on the advantages of the studies to which the Council was about to dedicate itself.

With respect to the election for a member of the Legislative Assembly for Paris, in the room of M. Vidal, who has taken his seat for the Bas Rhin, M. de Girardin receives little support from the Red Republicans in his candidature They prefer M. Dupont (de l'Eure), the President of the Provisional Government, whom it is expected they will nominate.

A riot took place at Rouen on Monday night. The local authorities having forbidden the representation of the "Juif Errant," which was announced by the manager of the theatre for that evening, and the pieces substituted offering no attraction, the auditors caused themselves by making the most discordant noises, which induced the Commissary of Police to clear the theatre. The confusion and tumult increased outside, and suddenly appeared among the multitude some well-known persons, who shouted "Vive la République!" From the balcony of a café voices were heard exciting the crowd below to go on with its manifestation, and the police found it no easy matter to have the balcony evacuated and silenced. The military were called out, several arrests were made, and quiet was restored.

Some alarm was created at Limoux, Aude, on Saturday evening, by a disorderly mob marching through the streets singing songs of a revolutionary nature. Upon the troops making their appearance the rioters fled, and the town soon resumed its former state of tranquility

The Moniteur Algerien of the 5th instant states, that the tribes of Mandid and those of the Ouled-Aissiche, who had taken part in the revolt of Zaatcha, had again committed acts of hostility. A detachment of men belonging to the 38th Regiment had been attacked on their march by a body of foot and horsemen, when a severe combat took place, but which ended in the defeat of the Arabs. Captain Dubousset was killed, and Lieutenant Mangot severely wounded. Several of the Arabs were killed and wounded. General de Barral had sent a strong detachment among the revolted tribes

A new work, called "Les Montagnards de 1848," has been published by Chenu, containing some curious disclosures of the Revolutionists of February.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid state that the good offices of the King of the Belgians have succeeded in effecting a diplomatic reconciliation between the Governments of Spain and England.

AUSTRIA.

The official Gazette of Vienna, published, on the 5th instant, a long list of officers in the Imperial Russian service on whom various orders are given duty free by the Emperor of Austria, in acknowledgment of their services during last year's campaign in Hungary and Transylvania.

By the journals of the same date we learn that there had been an extremely interesting meeting held in Vienna, at which the Minister of Trade presided, of the committee appointed to correspond with the London committee for the Exhibition of 1851. It is estimated that the expenses attending the transmission of the goods, &c., will amount to 40,000 gulden.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME The latest accounts from Rome state that the Pope left Portici (Naples) for Caserta, in the afternoon of the 4th inst., on his returnto Rome. A Religious mass was to be celebrated in Terracina, Velletri, and Albano, on his stages to the capital of his dominions. The Osservatore Romano gives the following as the pr gramme of the solemnities which are to take place on the entrance of his Holiness into Rome:—"The moment the Pope shall enter the territory of the Commission, the very eminent the Vicar, the Arch-priest of St. John's, and the clergy will receive his Holiness at the Pavilion before the Basilica of St. John of Lateran, in the presence of the diplomatic body, which will meet his Holiness under the portico of the Basilica. As soon as Divine service shall have been performed, his Holiness will return to his carriage, and, accompanied by the whole cortège and the troops, proceed to St. Peter's, where he will be received by the Sacred College. A "Te Deum" will then be sung, and the Pope will be re-conducted in procession to his apartments."

The ecclesiastic, Gazzola, who had been sentenced to confinement in a monastery for his writings against the Inquisition and the Holy See, as also for conduct subversive of ecclesiastical discipline, has escaped from the Castle of St. Angelo, where he was temporarily imprisoned.

TUSCANY.—The Senate of Tuscany, on the 5th inst., commenced the discussion on the law for the abolition of ecclesiastical privileges. Ten members spoke in favour of the law, and three against it. The debate was adjourned.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens of the 29th ult. state that the adjustment of the English claims have proceeded so as to warrant the conclusion that the affair will soon be settled. All the claims will, it seems, be recognised, wi h the exception of that put forward by M. Pacifico, which the French plenipotentiary does not consider valid. It was stated in the latest previous accounts from Athens, that Baron Gros had had an interview with Mr. Wyse on board the French steamer La Vistule. M Gros objected from the first, it seems, to M. Pacifico's claims. These refer to plate and jewels alleged to have been lost on the day that a mob entered his (M. Pacifico's) house. But it is known that this gentleman had borrowed money from the Athens Bank on the security of certain articles of silver, and has never since redeemed his pledge Then, as to the sum of twenty-one pounds alleged to have been burned, it was ascertained that recovery might easily be obtained at Lisbon. Mr. Wyse did not, it seems, deny the exorbitance of M. Pacifico's claims, and if any indemnity is granted in this case, it must be a small one.

Another meeting between M. Gros and Mr. Wyse was to have taken place on the 26th, when a definitive arrangement was to take place; respecting which it may be stated, that it was rumoured in Paris, on Monday, that the details of the arrangement had already been received there.

TURKEY.

The most recent news from Constantinople is to the 25th of March. General Dembinski, who was among the Poles on board of the ship that carried some eighty Polish refugees to Malta, would not abandon his friends in distress, but took ship for Brousse, whence he went of his own free will to join Kossuth and all his friends in misfortune who have been sent into the interior. There were still six hundred Polish refugees at Schumla. They had been divided into classes, comprising severally those who have consented to serve in the Christian battalions so as to be forwarded to Turkey, those willing to serve in the civil administration, and those who desire to stay in Turkey and support themselves. The latter will receive passports for whatever place they may wish to go to. MM. Chandor, Teleki, and Count Batthiani, who had succeeded in making their escape from Arad, had passed through Constantinople

Major Nicholson, aide-de camp to the Governor-General of India, had left Constantinople, in company with Gen. Guyon, formerly in the Hungarian service, for Brousa.

The Turkish steamer Ferik-bat had left for Gallipoli, to embark two hundred and fifty Italian refugees for Genoa. Her Majesty's steamer Foreigner had also arrived from the fleet, with despatches. Immediately after receiving them, the English ambassador had an interview with the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The official relations of Austria and Turkey had not been resumed.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The ship Karl of Balcarras has brought papers from the Cape of the 16th of February, from which we learn that the Glenlanner vessel, which left England on the 12th of December last, arrived in Table Bay on the 12th of February, with the welcome peace message from Earl Grey that he had revoked his former decree consigning convicts to that colony, and that orders would be immediately given for the removal of the Neptune to Van Diemen's Land. The military convicts which might arrive there were to be sent to England, if the colonists opposed their landing. This happy intelligence soon spread far and wide, and a special meeting of the Anti-Convict Association was held in the Town Hall on the 14th of February, when resolutions were passed expressive of gratitude to Almighty God for the "happy deliverance of the colony from the convict scourge;" that the usual intercourse with the Government departments should be at once resumed; and that all signs of mourning in the shops and stores should henceforth cease.

It was also resolved that a general illumination and a dinner amongst the members of the association should take place upon the day when the Neptune should take its departure.

A subscription was opened at the close of the meeting, for the purpose of supplying the convicts with some luxuries for the approaching voyage.

The different religious bodies had also appointed days for public praise and thanksgiving.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House re-assembled, for the first time after the Easter recess.

OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. DISRAELI gave notice, that, on Lord J. Russell's motion for a committee on public salaries, he should move, by way of amendment, "That this House is in possession of all the information requisite to revise the salaries of public functionaries, that committees of inquiry would only lead to delay, and that it is the duty of the Government to take their own responsibility, forthwith to introduce the measures necessary to effect every reduction in the establishments of the country consistent with the efficient discharge of the public service."

Mr HOSKINS gave notice, that, if the motion passed, he should move that the committee extend its inquiries to the instances of ecclesiastical dignitaries. (Hear, hear.)

AUSTRALIAN GOVERNMENT BILL.

Sir W. MOLESWORTH asked if it were true that the Governor of South Australia had directed the publication, in an official way, of certain resolutions proposed to the Legislative Council, to the effect—first, that the colonial legislature should have complete control over subjects of a local character; second, that it should be composed of two chambers; third, that all bills passed by both chambers and assented to by the governor should become law; fourth, that the colonial minister should not have the power of disallowing bills on colonial subjects; fifth, that there should be "responsible" government; sixth, that the governor should be dismissed on the address of both houses of the colonial legislature; seventh, that the colonial government should have full control over the waste lands; eighth, that there should be no federal assembly. He also asked whether the governor's dispatch on the subject would be produced before the debate on the subject.

Mr. HAWES said the dispatch had just arrived, and there would be no objection to produce it; but the hon. Baronet attached too much importance to the resolutions referred to, which were only to be proposed in a future council, and by a private member; and how it was that they had been published in an apparently official form, he could not say. He supposed there had been some inadvertence.

On the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply,

NAVY SURGEONS.

Captain BOLDERO brought forward the case of the navy assistant-surgeons, first presenting a number of petitions in their favour (including several from the medical colleges and the London hospitals), praying that these officers might be removed from the cock-pit of the ship—be permitted to mess with the other officers, and placed upon the same footing as surgeons in the army. The question deeply interested the medical men, and the young men in training for the medical profession. That profession felt that it was in too many instances treated with heedless injustice. Twelve years ago, the Lords of the Admiralty had received that the navy surgeons should be placed on the same footing as the army surgeons, but no steps had been taken to carry out that recommendation down to 1839, when a commission had issued a similar recommendation, which had been similarly disregarded. The hon. member moved, "That the accommodation provided for the assistant-surgeons on board her Majesty's ships of war is inadequate and insufficient for securing the full benefit of their professional advice."

Admiral DUNDAS denied that there was any deficiency in candidates for the office, or any difficulty in obtaining qualified persons. He disbelieved that there was any general complaint on the subject, and saw no necessity for altering the system, especially as every care had been taken, where there was space enough, to offer the surgeons every convenience; but, generally, there was no room to give them a separate cabin.

Mr. HUME supported the motion.

The House then divided

For going into committee of supply	..	..	40
Against it	..	..	48
Majority against the Government	..	..	—8

Captain BOLDERO'S resolution having been put from the chair as a main question, Captain BERKELEY expressed his regret at the result of the division, which he considered was one of the greatest blows ever aimed at the naval service.

Sir F BARING also deplored the division, though he was not prepared to ask the House to take it again on the resolution which now stood before them as the main question. He thought it, however, most unfortunate that the House should have, by a resolution, held out expectations that he was afraid the Admiralty would be unable to satisfy, on account of the practical difficulties that stood in the way of the arrangements contemplated.

Captain BOLDERO'S resolution was then agreed to.

On the question that the Speaker do leave the chair,

THE LAW OF REPRISALS—GREECE.

Mr. ANSTEY called attention to the illegality of reprisals when made by officers of her Majesty's navy without the authority of an order in council. The hon. and learned member contended that there was but one authority for making reprisal her Majesty in council; and he was glad it as his legal opinion that the Greek merchants whose vessels had been taken by Admiral Parker would be able to maintain actions and recover damages from that gallant officer and his assistants, unless the matter were speedily settled by an order in council. He did not charge Lord Palmerston with originating the practice of ordering reprisals without authority of an order in council, for Lord Aberdeen had done so in the case of the Tavignano; but he trusted that the constitutional course and law was, that reprisals could only be made under the authority of her Majesty in council. The hon. and learned member disclaimed all intention of questioning the justice of the reprisals made in Greece, by the diplomatic body, which he considered that there never was a clearer case in favour of the enforcement of our claims.

Lord PALMERSTON could only say that he had been advised, by those by whose legal opinions it was his duty to be guided, that no order in council was necessary or proper for the detention of vessels as pledges. Should it be requisite to go a step further, and to confiscate the vessels de rived, then, indeed, it would be necessary to have an order in council for the establishment of a commission to condemn and sell the vessels With respect to the hon. and learned member's opinion that the Greek merchants would have good grounds for taking legal proceedings against Sir Wm. Parker and his officers, he (Lord Palmerston) could only say that he was satisfied that Sir William Parker, and all officers of the Crown, naval and military, would be fully justified, as was established in the case of Captain Denman, in executing the orders of the Crown. The noble Foreign Secretary added, that, when the last accounts left Athens, Baron Gros, the French Envoy, was there, engaged in investigating the matters in dispute.

SUPPLY.—ORDNANCE AND NAVY ESTIMATES.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, when

Colonel ANSON moved the Ordnance Estimates. The hon. and gallant officer said that, in 1848, the estimates amounted to £2,992,143; in 1849, they had been reduced to £2,639,601. This year the estimates had been still further reduced to £2,434,417. These, compared with the year 1848, the estimates of the current year showed a diminution of £557,726; and, compared with 1849, a diminution of £195,184. The hon. and gallant gentleman went seriatim through the items of the estimates, and explained the recommendations of the committee of last year, and detailed what had been determined by the Government in pursuance of these recommendations.

After some discussion, several ordnance votes were agreed to, when the committee proceeded with the naval estimates.

On the vote of £.37,190 for the salaries of officers, &c. of the Admiralty,

Colonel SIBTHORP proposed a reduction in the salaries of the principal functionaries to the amount of £7,000. He considered that, as the landed gentlemen of the country had been compe led to submit to a reduction of income, varying from 25 to 30 per cent., the high-paid functionaries in the various public departments ought also to be made to submit to a like reduction. The gallant member proposed to reduce the First Lord's salary from £4500 to £3000, the next two Lords from £1200 to £1000 each, the next Lord from £.000 to £800, and to strike off the salaries of the Lords altogether, and to leave the board to the number of four instead of six Lords. He also proposed to reduce the salaries of the secretaries and other principal officers.

After a short discussion, Colonel SIBTHORP said he would be content to take the sense of the committee on a reduction of £2000 in the salaries of the two Lords.

The committee divided—

For the amendment	..	..	33
Against it	..	..	110
Majority against the amendment	..	..	77

Several naval votes were agreed to, and the chairman reported progress.

The Brick Duties Bill was amended, and the third reading was fixed for this day.

The Stamp Duties Bill was read a second time pro forma, on the motion of the SOLICITOR-GENERAL, who gave notice of his intention to make some alterations before going into Committee.

The Rules of Religious Congregations Bill passed through committee.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE obtained leave to bring in a Bill to Promote the Public Health in Ireland

Mr. C. LEWIS obtained leave to bring in a Bill to Amend the Laws relating to Parochial Assessment in England.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Mr. THORNELY, on the part of Mr. EWART, postponed to the 7th of May his motion for the Repeal of the Duties on Advertisements.

REPEAL OF THE WINDOW TAX.

Lord DUNCAN submitted to the House the following resolution:—"Whereas the present mode of assessing, levying, and collecting taxes on air and light in England and Scotland interferes most prejudicially with the health and sanitary condition of the inhabitants of Great Britain; therefore it is expedient that the window-taxes should be repealed." The noble Lord, in a speech of considerable length, contended that the window duties were most unequal and partial in their assessment, and were in their operation highly detrimental to the public health. He thought that, at least, the exemption should be extended to houses having less than twelve windows.

Sir DE LACY EVANS seconded the motion.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER felt bound to resist the proposal of any reduction of the window duties at present, because, having already made all the reductions that the finances of the country justified him in proposing, he could not go further this year. When it was considered that there were three million houses in this country, and that only half a million paid the duty, it was pretty evident that the poorer classes were exempt from this taxation. At all events, he could not think of giving up duties that produced £1,800,000 a year, without having a substitute.

Lord Dudley Stuart, Sir G. Pechell, Sir B. Hall, Mr. Hume, and Lord R. Grosvenor supported the motion.

The House then divided.

For Lord Duncan's motion	.. ..	77
Against it	.. ..	60
Majority against the motion	.. .. ..	3

The result of this division, giving so small a majority to Ministers, was hailed with loud cheers by Lord Duncan and his supporters.

ENCUMBERED ESTATES (IRELAND).

The Solicitor-General renewed his motion for leave to bring in a bill to provide more ample and effectual securities for advances to purchasers of encumbered estates in Ireland. The hon. and learned gentleman explained his measure in detail than on the occasion he was originated out. The object of the bill was to induce English capitalists to lend their money to Irish purchasers of Irish estates, on the parliamentary security of the land itself. Should this measure fail, it would do no harm, for it would in that case be simply a dead letter. but sh uld it be success-ful, as he believed it would be, it would be productive of great benefit to Ireland. Since he had first developed his plan, he had received numerous communications from Ireland, all favourable to the general principle and scope of the measure, though some of them did convey important suggestions and modifications in the details As the bill had been framed with the view of benefiting Irish proprietors, it would not be pressed against the general opinion of Irish representatives, should they determine, after examining its details, to oppose it.

Colonel Dunne was glad to hear that the measure was designed to benefit Irish proprietors, because he had concluded, from the statement made by the Solicit r-General on a former night, that it was framed to benefit speculators. The honourable and gallant gentleman pointed out a variety of objections to the bill, though he admitted that, should it be made unexceptionable in its operation, and should its benefit be extended to the present possessors of the land, he might be induced to regard it with more favour.

Sir G. O'Brien, Mr. F. French, Mr. Napier, Mr. Sadleir, and Mr. A. Stafford made a few critical remarks on the measure, after which leave was given to bring in the bill.

The Brick Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

COUNTY COURTS EXTENSION

The second reading of the County Courts Extension Bill—the principle of which is to extend the jurisdiction to £50—was moved by Mr. Fitzroy.

Sir G. Grey moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months. He considered that a measure which would change the whole character of the County Courts should be approached with the utmost caution. Should this bill pass, the County Courts would no longer be regarded by the public as small debts courts, and the public expenditure would be increased by the additional salaries proposed to be given to the judges and clerks of the courts. He was, therefore, obliged to oppose it.

Mr. Evans advocated the bill as a judicious extension of the system, which had been found to work well.

Mr. Martin opposed it, because he looked on it as the first step towards the abolition of trial by jury.

Mr. Pemberton supported the principle of the bill, though he thought it might be amended in committee. It would not interfere with trial by jury, because parties who wished it might have a jury in the County Courts.

Mr. B. Denison said the House appeared to him to be making very rapid strides in hasty legislation. The country had not yet had sufficient experience of the County Courts to warrant the extension of their jurisdiction. In his opinion, a bill of such importance should, at least, be introduced on the responsibility of the Government.

Mr. Hebbert opposed the bill, which he believed would destroy the existing County Courts.

The Attorney-General also opposed the bill. He felt certain that it would, if passed into a law, excite a general outcry throughout the country against the County Courts. He believed that the agitation in favour of the bill had been got up by the clerks in the County Courts, who were interested in the increase of the jurisdiction of the courts.

Mr. Cockburn, Mr. Aglionby, Mr. Hume, Mr. Mullings, Mr. Mitchell, Colonel Thompson, and Mr. Bright spoke in favour of the bill.

The House then divided

For the second reading	.. ..	144
Against it	.. ..	77
Majority for the bill and against the Government	..	67

This division was hailed with loud cheers by the majority.

Mr. Hume immediately called on Sir G. Grey to state whether or not he would persist in his opposition after the decided expression of the House.

Sir G. Grey said he should certainly oppose the increase of salaries to the judges and clerks of the County Courts proposed by the bill, though he would not persevere in further opposing its progress

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Mr. Ewart moved the committee on the Public Libraries and Museums Bill, and stated that he proposed to introduce a clause requiring the assent of two-thirds of the ratepayers before the town councils could levy a rate for the building of libraries and museums.

Mr. Bernal Osborne opposed the principle of the measure, and moved as an amendment that the bill be committed that day six months.

Mr. Bernal and Mr. Anstey had been opposed to the second reading of the bill, though with the consent of the inhabitants of boroughs without their consent; but sufficient concessions had since been made to overcome their objections, and therefore they were willing to go into committee and consider the details of the bill.

Mr. Law and Mr. Buck opposed the bill; Mr. Brotherton supported it.

Lord J. Manners reminded the House that, by this measure, libraries and museums would be placed in a more favourable position than churches, schools, and all kinds of charitable institutions.

Mr. Oswald should vote against going into committee, unless Scotland should be specially excepted from its operation.

Colonel Chatterton should also vote against going into committee, unless Ireland should be excepted from it.

Mr. Newdegate, Mr. Spooner, and Mr. R. Palmer opposed the bill; Mr. Fox, Mr. Mantz, and Mr. Hume supported it.

The House divided :—

For going into committee	.. ..	99
Against it	.. ..	84
Majority	.. ..	15

The House went into committee on the bill, and a discussion on the way in which the assent or dissent of the rated inhabitants of the boroughs should be ascertained continued up to near six o'clock, when progress was reported.

The Parish Constables Bill was read a second time.—Adjourned.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS.

The Solicitor-General moved the second reading of the Charitable Trusts Bill

Mr. Goulburn feared that this bill would have the effect of hiding from public view the powers of the Court of Chancery, and would prevent the carrying out of the principle adopted of late years, of making the Court of Chancery available to all, and at a small cost. He objected to the transfer of small trusts to the County Court judges.

Mr. Hume said the bill proposed to deal with 24,000 charities of amounts at and under £100 a year, producing an aggregate annual income of £1,000,000, the objects of these charities being as various as it was possible to conceive; and the charities between £100 and £30 were to be submitted absolutely to a Master, and those from £30 downwards were to be transferred to the jurisdiction of the County Courts. He objected to these tribunals, and thought that a judge of the Court of Chancery sitting in chambers, or the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, would be a better medium of jurisdiction than either of those proposed by the bill. The true remedy for the evils sought to be cured would be in a thorough reform of the Court of Chancery.

The Solicitor-General would not deny that the best remedy would be a thorough reform of the Court of Chancery; but that desirable consummation was, he feared, distant, and in the meantime, he thought something should be done to have these small charitable trusts cheaply and properly administered.

After a few observations from Mr. S. Palmer and Mr. Aglionby, the bill was read a second time.—Adjourned at a quarter to twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS. -Thursday.

Their Lordships reassembled for the first time after the Easter recess, and sat about half an hour.

Earl Grey presented the report of the Commission on the Fine Arts, by command of her Majesty.

Several noble Lords presented petitions against Post-Office labour on Sunday.

Earl Grey postponed the third reading of the Convict Prisons Bill, in consequence of the absence of a noble Lord who was desirous, as he understood, of making some observations on the subject.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Lord J. Russell moved the second reading of the measure for transferring town out by Mr. Monsell and Mr. French for clustering some boroughs together. There were two ways in which this might be done—one, by congregating all the large towns in each county, and adding them to the existing parliamentary boroughs; and to this plan he could not assent, because it would entirely separate the county and town constituencies, and make the trading interest distinct from the agricultural. The other way would be by adding contiguous towns to very small parliamentary boroughs; and to this plan he had not insuperable objections, but he was not prepared to advise the House to adopt it in the present measure

All the clauses of the bill were agreed to, after much discussion, and the bill, with amendments, was reported to the House

DISTRESSED UNIONS (IR LAND).

Lord J. Russell moved the second reading of the Distressed Unions Advances and Repayment of Advances (Ireland) Bill.

Col. Bisthorpe was decidedly opposed to further grants, because he believed they would be no benefit to Ireland, and because this bill had been brought forward in a way no minister should attempt, in a thin house, at 12 o'clock at night. The hon. and gallant member moved the adjournment of the House.

After a short conversation, Lord J. Manners recommended Colonel Sibthorp to withdraw his amendment, provided the Government would give a pledge to bring on the bill on its future stages at an early period of the evening, and give it precedence over other bills of less importance.

Lord J. Russell declined to give the required pledge.

The House divided :—

For the adjournment	.. .. ..	20
Against it	.. .. ..	171
Majority against adjournment	.. ..	151

Colonel Sibthorp's amendment was then negatived without a division, and the bill was read a second time.

The other orders were disposed of, and the House adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

East India House.—On Wednesday, a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of Directors, in the room of John Loch, Esq., John Loch, Esq., Charles Mills, Esq., William Henry Chicheley Plowden, Esq., M.P., Henry Shank, Esq., and Henry St. George Tucker, Esq., who go out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on Lieut-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., George Lyall, Esq., Elliot Macnaghten, Esq., John Petty Muspratt, Esq., Martin Tucker Smith, Esq., M.P., and William Wigram, Esq. A Court of Directors was also held at the East India House, when the following resolution was unanimously proposed :

That this Court have received with deep concern the intimation of the decease of their chairman, Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B. That although deprived by that lamented event of the gratification which they would have had in expressing to Sir Archibald Galloway that acknowledgment of his meritorious services and active desire to promote the interests of the company which have characterised his services in the important office he has filled; yet they feel it to be their duty to record that he was justly entitled to their thanks for his great application and attention to the affairs of the company during the past year. That a copy of this resolution be communicated to the family of the late Sir Archibald Galloway, accompanied by an expression of the Court's sympathy and condolence in their afflicting loss.

The Court were at the same time unanimously voted to John Shepherd, Esq., Deputy Chairman, for his great application and attention to the affairs of the company during the past year. Major-General Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert, G.C.B., has been appointed a provisional member of the Council of India.

Dinner to Alderman Sir John Key.—A grand banquet was given on Monday evening at the London Tavern, by the inhabitants of Langbourn Ward, to Sir John Key, Bart., on the occasion of the 37th anniversary of his election to fi.. the office of alderman of the ward. The chair was filled by Mr. G. Moffatt, M.P., and covers were laid for 120.

Royal Mail Steam-Packet Company.—The annual meeting of this company took place on Thursday, at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, Sir John Key, Bart., in the chair. The report stated, that, although the receipts of the last year showed a considerable falling off in passage in.ney, yet, owing to the increase in the freight, the total amount exceeded that of 1848 by £7843 13s. 3d. The company's agent at Corunna, and was kept up with great spirit, to the music of Tinney's quadrille band, until some time after midnight, when an excellent supper was served in the lower hall-room. The festivities were subsequently resumed, and not till four o'clock before the party broke up. The Bienheim-street Dispensary is supported by voluntary contributions; and, during the past year, 6078 patients have been added on the books of the institution, while no less than 30,000 persons have been prescribed for.

Royal Sea-Bathing Infirmary.—A general meeting of this institution took place at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill, on Thursday last, Mr. Alderman Gibbons in the chair. It appeared from the report, that the number of patients relieved during the past year had amounted to 676, besides a considerable number of out-door patients, who had been visited. Their receipts had amounted to £1401, and their expenses to £2137. The debt on the building fund year had caused the present depressed state of their affairs. The retiring directors and auditors were then re elected, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

Metropolitan Free Hospital.—On Tuesday, the anniversary festival of this institution took place at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate street, Sir Benjamin Hawes, Esq (in the absence of Lord Ebrington, M.P.), in the chair. In proposing the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Metropolitan Free Hospital," the chairman observed that he regretted that the noble Lord who had been expected to preside on the occasion had been prevented from being present by public duties of an urgent and important nature. He then went on to state, that, although the Institution had only been in existence fourteen years, it had been the means of relieving 120,000 persons; and he hoped that so valuable an establishment would receive a more liberal support than it had yet received from the public. It appeared from the report read by the secretary that the committee had thought it necessary to erect a building in Devonshire-square, Bishopsgate-street, for the purposes of the charity. The number of the poor relieved from the regulations of the hospital was made manifest by the numbers that flocked to it for relief. Since its establishment in the year 1836, upwards of 120,000 persons had been admitted as patients, and the annual average of this number was greatly on the increase. It was thus fact, in conjunction with other circumstances, which had induced the committee to extend their operations, and they trusted that they had acted wisely in securing for this purpose a building contiguous to the poor and densely-populated districts of the metropolis. These districts had hitherto been somewhat inadequately supplied with the means of affording gratuitous medical relief. The annual expenditure, it appeared, amounted between £600 and £700 a year, to meet which, the present annual subscriptions were insufficient, and the committee called upon all those who took an interest in the charity to exert themselves towards increasing its funds. About 100 gentlemen sat down to dinner, and in the course of the evening subscriptions were announced amounting to upwards of £900.

Homœopathy.—On Wednesday, a public dinner, in aid of the funds to be provided for the erection of a homœopathic institution, called the Hahnemann Hospital, took place at the London Tavern, Lord Ashburton in the chair. After the usual loyal toasts, the chairman proposed "The memory of the illustrious Hahnemann." This sentiment having been drunk in solemn silence, the chairman next proposed "Success to the Hahnemann Hospital and the medical school, and the health of the homœopathic medical profession." Lord Robert Grosvenor hoped that every exertion would be made towards the establishment of the hospital now contemplated. The hospital in which, in his opinion, was absolutely necessary in order to show the full value of the homœopathic system of medical treatment. Subscriptions were announced amounting to about £1000. A second public dinner took place also on Wednesday, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, at which the Earl of Essex presided, and was supported by Lord Francis Gordon, Lord Maldon, and Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P. Early in March, the committee had received a grant for obtaining the opening of a Homœopathic Hospital, at No. 32, Golden-square. About 130 gentlemen were present, and it was announced that the Duchess of Cambridge had signified her desire to contribute 50 guineas annually. The committee had forwarded a subscription of ten guineas in aid of its funds. The total amount of donations and subscriptions announced amounted to £1160.

Fistula Infirmary, Charterhouse-square.—A meeting of the governors of the above institution took place on Wednesday, at the London Tavern—Lieutenant-General Sir James Law Lushington, G.C.B., in the chair. The chairman said, they had been called together for the purpose of considering the resolutions passed at the special meeting of the 17th of September last, relating to the grant of a piece of land by Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P., on which to build a hospital for the charity. The secretary then read the report of the committee, which stated that during the past year the public had been indebted to Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P., for the offer of a valuable piece of ground, ample in its extent, chargeable only with the yearly payment of 5s. in perpetuity. The committee felt constrained, from the various grave requirements which it had seemed prudent to the donor of the boon to exact, not to best ate in expressing their settled conviction that these conditions could not be accepted without, not merely the peril, but the imminent probability of their not being eventually complied with. The chairman thought the meeting would hardly feel it advisable to apply to Mr. Cabbell's solicitor for any modification, the gift could not be a free one under the present conditions. If Mr. Cabbell were to die before the completion of the building, his executors might claim the ground, and the institution might lose all they should have expended. He felt satisfied that the report would convince them that they ought to decline Mr. Cabbell's offer on the terms laid down by the solicitor. The motion for the adoption of the report of the committee and the medical report was then carried unanimously. After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

Workmen's Schools of Design.—The public opening of the North London School of Drawing and Modelling took place on Tuesday evening, at the St. Pancras Nations. School-room, Euston-square, where 500 or 600 persons assembled Mr. S. C. Hall presiding. The chairman in opening the meeting, said that the schools of design at Somerset House and Spitalfields were too far removed from a large number of those engaged in the casting and chasing of metals, masonry, carving, plastering, &c., to prove of the benefit intended; and, moreover, these schools he understood to be so crowded that no one could be admitted for two or three months after application had been made. It was therefore intended to institute local artisan schools, the first of which he had the honour that evening of opening. The fees were exceedingly low, yet there had secured the services of Mr. Cave Thomas as one of the teachers, and, by the aid of subscriptions, they had been enabled to pay in advance the first half-year's rent of a room capable of accommodating about 200 persons. Lord Viscount Compton moved the first resolution, which was seconded by Professor Donaldson, and unanimously carried. It was to the effect that instructive occupation promoted happiness and comfort, influenced the manufactures and commerce of the empire, and essentially contributed to the public good. The second resolution, moved by Mr. Latham, and seconded by Mr. Fenton, considered the workmen of this country to be as capable of achieving superiority in the execution of ornamental design as in works of mechanical sk ll; and the third resolution attributed the alleged inferiority of English workmen to works of design and consequent to the absence of means of education in the principles of art. The fourth and fifth resolutions approved of the establishment of artisan schools of design in the metropolis, and especially of the North London School of Drawing and Modelling. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings of the evening.

Post-Office Notice.—The United States Government having established mail-packets between New York and Chagres, in connexion with a line of packets proceeding at regular intervals from Panama to San Francisco, the public may avail themselves of this line of communication for their correspondence to California and Oregon, by specially addressing "ed New York," or "ed the United States," any letters or newspapers they may desire to be so forwarded. The combined British and United States postage upon letters for California and Oregon sent by this route, must be prepaid; and will be, upon a letter not exceeding half an ounce in weight, 2s. 8½d; exceeding half an ounce, and not exceeding one ounce, 5s. 11d.; and so on, according to the scale in operation for charging inland letters. The postage will be the same whether the letters be conveyed from this country by British or by United States packets. Newspapers will be liable to a combined British and United States postage of 2d. each.

The New Postal Convention with France.—The visit of the Right Hon. the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Postmaster General, to Paris, for the purpose of entering into a new postal treaty with the French Government, for the reduction of the postage on letters between the United Kingdom and France from 10d. to 6d., and a reduction of the weight from under a quarter of an ounce to not exceeding half an ounce, as on inland letters in England, to the British colonies, the United States, Portugal, Spain, the Mediterranean, Egypt, India, Ilion -Kong, and China (by the monthly mails to Southampton), Holland, Hamburg, &c., has been most successful. This important arrangement is not confined to letters between the two countries, but is to be extended to all letters passing through France from Great Britain to other parts of the Continent. The high postage on letters to the Mediterranean, Egypt, Aden, Ceylon, India, &c. (1s. 10d. per quarter of an ounce, and on newspapers 3d.) by the forthnight's overland mails through France, will, for delivery. Peckham, it seems, this morning had a very large number; and while he was in the act of dividing one of the bundles, he put the bag upon the floor, near the shop door. Just at this juncture three men rushed up to the doorway, and, almost momentarily, the bag and the remaining bundles of letters were gone, which, amongst others, contained letters from the Australian colonies for the merchants of that district of the metropolis. Instantaneously the fellows escaped with their booty, leaving the postman perfectly bewildered. The matter has caused the greatest sensation throughout the City, and the authorities are the Post-office are now actively engaged in making the necessary inquiries for the purpose of detecting the high crimes. Unfortunately, at present no clue has been obtained respecting the thieves.

Births and Deaths.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, April 6, Males, 697; females, 646: total, 1343. Deaths during the same period—Males, 490; females, 564: total, 1154. This return shows only a small decrease on the return of deaths of the previous week, though the latter was unduly swelled by an extraordinary influx of coroner's cases. In corresponding weeks of the previous years (1840-49), the average number of deaths was 918, which, if corrected for increase of population, becomes 1001; the excess in last week amounts, therefore, to 123 The following series exhibits the deaths registered weekly since the beginning of March; they were 870, 861, 1026, 1117, and in the last week, 1154. The present return, as compared with that of the preceding week, shows a decrease in the epidemic class of diseases, an increase in the zymotic, and in that of diseases of the brain and nervous system; but, in complaints affecting the resp ratory organs, the two returns are almost the same. As compared with the corrected average of ten corresponding weeks, the present return shows a decrease in epidemic diseases, but a considerable excess in diseases of the respiratory organs. Bronchitis was fatal last week to 119 persons; pneumonia to 86; asthma to 23; laryngitis, pleurisy, and other complaints of the same class, to 21: the deaths in the aggregate from these causing 283, whereas the corrected average is only 166. Consumption destroyed 124 persons, nearly the average number. Two boys and three girls died of laryngismus stridulus. In the epidemic class, small-pox was fatal to 10 persons, measles to 16, scarlet na to 8, hooping-cough to 11, croup to 5, influenza to 8, diarrhœa to 15, erysipelas to 13, typhus to 34; the mortality being less than usual from all those causes, except typhus, which is nearly twice the average. Cholera and diarrhœa, which within the last week A death from cholera occurred on the 31st of March, at 4, Phœnix-street North, St. Giles-in-the-Fields. The deceased was the daughter of a beershop keeper, of sixty-eight years, and died from English cholera, after seven hours' illness. Mr. Simpson, the reg strar, mentions that "the medical attendant, before certifying the cause of death, called on him to explain, that, if the late epidemic had been called cholera, he should have considered it right to certify the case as Asiatic cholera. The disease commenced wi h excessive sickness and diarrhœa, and the latter speedily assumed the appearance of rice-water purging. The friends have since died of the child died of Asiatic cholera during the late visitation. No other person is now ill in the house" Two persons are reported this week as having died of intemperance, or of disease engendered by it. On the 5th of March, at Bethnal-green workhouse, a female servant died, at twenty eight years of age, of "delirium cholera (after an illness of two days)." The daughter of a weaver, aged fourteen years, died at 9, Rose-street, Bethnal-green, of cholera. A child of twenty-two days, on whom an inquest was held, died in Farringdon-street, of "inflammation of the peritoneum from exposure to cold." Four children were accidentally suffocated in bed.

Meteorological Observations.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean height of the barometer in the week was 29.361 in. The mean temperature was 49 6, higher by 4°5 than the average of the same week in seven years, and no less than 13·7 higher than in the week immediately preceding. On Monday and Tuesday it was respectively 6 and 7 higher than the average.

HER MAJESTY'S SHIP "SAPPHO."

(From a Correspondent.)

On the morning of the 9th of December last, H.M.S. Sappho struck on the Main Reef, off the coast of Honduras. She is the only vessel ever saved from total shipwreck off that reef, which is one of the most dangerous in the world; and as the saving of her is an instance of what English sailors can do by exertion and perseverence, in the midst of difficulties and distressing circumstances, we subjoin a short narrative of her miraculous escape.

The Sappho sailed from Belize on the 3rd of December, with a great deal of sickness and fever on board, their cases being reported by the surgeon to be on the short space of three weeks. After her sailing the weather set in with a dark, gomy, and threatening appearance; the rain began to fall in torrents—not like heavy rain in temperate regions, but as if a flood-gate were opened in the clouds, from whence it descended like a vast sheet of water—it blowing strong, with violent squalls. This bad weather lasted three days, during which time the skies were perfectly overcast, and no observation could be obtained to ascertain the ship's position. She was accordingly swept by the currents (which run with great velocity, and are constantly changing in their direction), on the morning of the 6th, on the reefs.

As daylight broke, weak and disabled as we were from sickness, we discovered our awful position—a wild reef, extending around us for miles, with the seas breaking over it in small low islands in the far distance, and still further, and still more terrible, what seemed to be the main-land. Anchors were had out, masts and yards struck, her water started, her guns and heavy articles thrown overboard, &c.; and, after thirty hours, the officers and ship's company succeeded in hauling her off into deep water, with the loss of her rudder, false keel, and part of her cutwater. The sick men had at first been sent to one of the small islands, and placed under canvas, with the surgeon to provide for their safety.

She was now perfectly unmanageable, but anchored in the open ocean rolling in on her, without a rudder. Her position was one of such peril, that, had her cables parted, she must have gone on the rocks, broken up in a hundred pieces, and probably her whole crew would have perished.

At day it came on to blow very hard in the first part of the night, and continued until daylight; the ship pitching her bows and stern under, and straining herself in every part. The anchors came gradually home. As the day broke, we discovered we had drifted very much; the reef, and the breakers beating furiously over them, was not more than twenty or thirty yards from our stern, and we probably struck the ground as we surged. Our only chance of safety now was in getting the ship farther out, which, by the perseverance and good conduct of all, in the face of an open sea, we succeeded in doing towards the forenoon, and then slipped our in-shore anchors. We had got our rudder on board, and repaired it, and succeeded, during a lull, in shipping it just at the moment; for, had it been delayed an hour, we should have been lost. Next morning, at daylight, it came on to blow again very hard, with a tremendous swell and sea from the ocean. We employed ourselves in securing and getting everything ready to slip our cables, and make sail. At 8 AM, we were all in a state of anxiety, riding with a hempen cable ahead, and a chain, on one of which one anchors were backed. In a few moments, the hempen cable parted, the ship was drifting fast on the rocks, bringing home the other, and certain destruction awaiting her, and perhaps all on board, when Commander

H. M. S. "SAPPHO," ON THE MAIN REEF AT HONDURAS.

Michell called every one on deck to "save ship." In this last extremity, all exerted themselves: a spring was got on the remaining cable, the foretopsail loosed and sheeted home, jib ready to hoist, men ready to cut away the gaskets of foresail and maintopsail, &c. The chain-cable was slipped, and, providentially, the ship casted the right way; sail was got on, and she weathered the reef and rocks by about half a cable's length, the ship's company giving three cheers. It came on to blow a gale in the afternoon, but we ran to the southward, and secured the vessel in a safe anchorage: afterwards, we recovered everything that had been hove overboard, including guns, anchors, cables, &c.

On this iron-bound shore, visited so often by gales, and where such rapid and dangerous currents exist, the fragments of shipwreck, of boats, and spars washed around, bespeak to the advancing sailor former disasters. Hardly a year pas-es that some vessel is not lost. From the testimony of all sea-faring people on that coast, her Majesty's ship Sappho is the only one ever saved. Her preservation is attributable to the perseverance, discipline, and exertions of all under trying circumstances.

(It is stated in the Times of Monday last, that a court-martial is expected to be held on Commander Michell, for having got the Sappho ashore, as stated in the above communication. Our Sketch shows the Sappho ashore on the morning of December 9th, with her anchors laid out astern. Small low islands are seen in the distance, and in the foreground are low rocks, with seas breaking over.)

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN TRINIDAD.

THE town of Port-of-Spain has just been the scene of a more destructive fire than has occurred in the island since the memorable conflagration of 1808. The fire broke out on the night of Thursday, March 7, at half-past eleven o'clock, in that portion of the extensive premises which fronted the west side of Marine-square, and lay between the stores of Messrs. Wainwright and Co. and Mr. R. S. Darling. The premises consumed consisted of a long one-storied building rented by shopkeepers, one portion being occupied as a grog-shop. In some section of these tenements the fire originated, it is supposed in the rear of the kitchen of Mr. Craddock's hotel. Some passers-by were attracted to the spot by a blaze, and gave the first alarm; the inmates of the hotel had retired to rest, and so rapidly did the flames extend, that Mrs. Craddock and her family found their retreat cut off by the staircase being in flames, and had to be lowered from the front gallery in a sheet. Ere this, however, the alarm bells of Trinity Church and the Roman Catholic Cathedral had been sounded, and the engines of the Town Council had arrived and were set to work; as also the Ordnance engine, and the garrison engine, with a large number of the 72nd Regiment, under the command of Colonel Murray, who did great service by the systematic way in which they set to work in arresting the flames. The 2nd West India were also in attendance, forming a strong guard, to protect the property from plunder. The police had previously arrived; Mr. Stipendiary Magistrate Cadiz was also early on the spot, as were Mr. Johnston, the Colonial Secretary; Mr. C. W. Warner, the Attorney-General; Mr. J. Cockerton, the Clerk and Treasurer of the Town Council, &c.

It soon became evident that Messrs. Wainwright's store, with 1000 barrels of flour, and the premises immediately adjoining, would be destroyed; and great exertions were made to prevent the flames reaching the stores of Mr. Kavanagh and Mr. R. S. Darling, which were filled with combustibles. By almost superhuman efforts the fire was stopped in these two directions, and limited to the premises we have described, which were reduced to a mass of smouldering ruins: for, at the moment we write, says the Port of Spain Gazette, the fire is not yet extinct; the engines still continue to pour in floods of sea-water from the wharf hard by, and the crews of some of the vessels in the harbour are pulling down the walls of the upper story of the building still standing—the lintels of the windows being yet on fire, and giving cause of apprehension that a spark carried by the wind into some of the adjacent lumber-yards might occasion yet further destruction. The danger seemed so imminent to the whole block of buildings, which included, amongst others, the premises occupied by the Ordnance Department, in which were a large quantity of shells, loaded for use, and other Ordnance stores —and the premises of Messrs. Wood and Campbell, which contained a quantity of turpentine and several hogsheads of lucifer matches—that the shells were taken into Marine Square for removal, if necessary; and the area soon presented an extraordinary assemblage of mercantile and warlike stores, household furniture, trunks of apparel, &c., guarded by sentries from the 2nd West India Regiment. The Government Bonding warehouse, in the next block of buildings, was opened, and the rum, amounting to eighty puncheons, rolled to the quay, to be plunged into the sea, if requisite. The conduct of the lower orders exceeds all praise; nearly all the puncheons of rum were rolled away by women, and they performed at least an equal half of the duty in supplying the engines; and the next day scarcely an article was missing. The 'swell mob' were fortunately 'out of town,' angling down the coast."

The loss sustained cannot be estimated at less than £12,000 sterling. It is divided between Doctor Garcia (the owner of the whole of the buildings consumed), Messrs. J. P. Wainwright and Co., Mr. Craddock (proprietor of the Crown and Anchor Hotel), Mr. N. Garcia, Mr. Carrera (owner of the groz-shop), and Miss Parker, and other owners of the retail shops. Mr. Craddock is stated to be utterly ruined—a few articles of merchandise being all of his property saved.

Had the northerly wind, which blew so hard for several nights previously been blowing at the time of the fire, no human effort could have saved the whole block of buildings—perhaps the whole range intersected by the Promenade from west to east side of Marine-square. There was no fresh water to be got, except from a well or two, which soon pumped dry; and, but for the contiguity of the salt-water of the Guelph, the engines would have been utterly useless. The masters and "jack tars" of the merchant vessels in the harbour landed immediately that the disaster was visible from the shipping, and rendered most essential assistance.

Our Illustration is from a Sketch obligingly forwarded from Port of Spain by Mr. M. J. Cazalon.

GREAT FIRE AT PORT-OF-SPAIN, TRINIDAD.

MONUMENT TO MAJOR ELDRED POTTINGER, C.B.,

IN BOMBAY CATHEDRAL.

THIS very interesting memorial, from the chisel of Mr. Baily, R.A., has just been placed in Bombay Cathedral. We give a copy of the inscription, which is a simple and graceful record of Major Pottinger's eminent services at a critical period of our Indian history:—

MONUMENT TO THE LATE MAJOR ELDRED POTTINGER, C.B., BY BAILY

This Monument, erected by Public Subscription, to the Memory of MAJOR ELDRED POTTINGER, C.B., of the Bombay Regiment of Artillery, is placed in the Cathedral Church of Bombay,
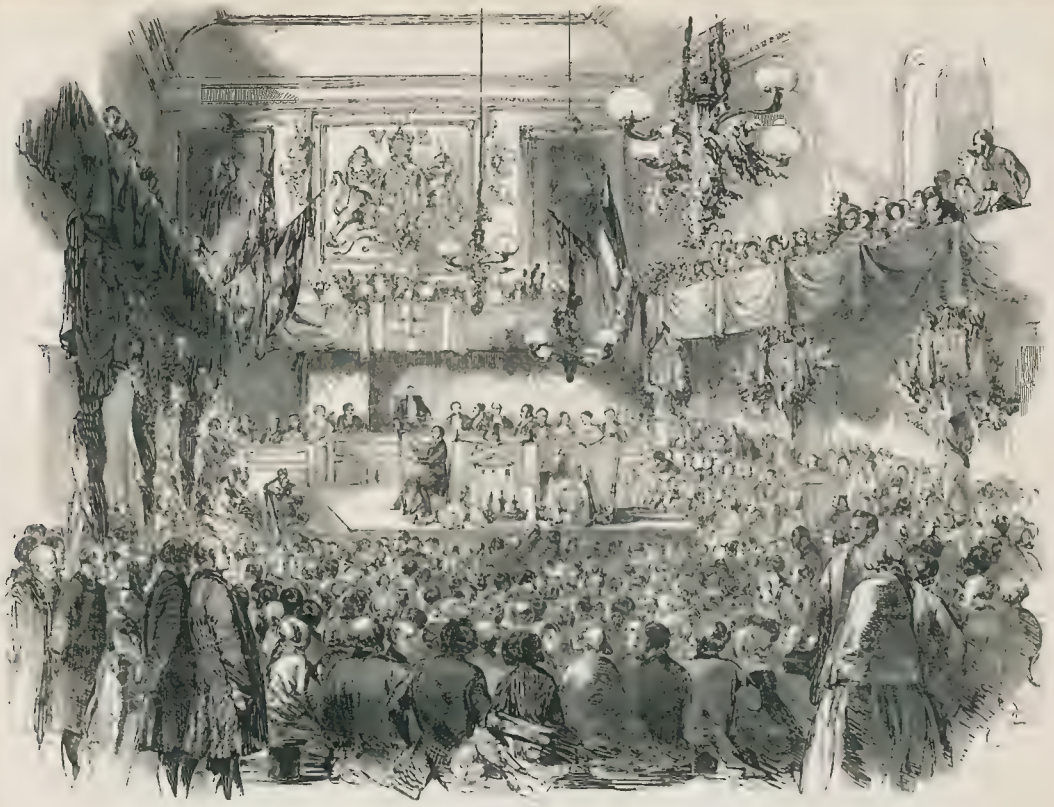
In token of the admiration and respect in which his character as a soldier, and conduct as a man, are held by his friends in the Presidency.

Major Pottinger's successful defence of Herat, his gallant bearing and judicious counsel, throughout the eventful period of the British reverses in Affghanistan, are recorded in the annals of his country, and need no eulogium here. The proclamation of these services must add to the regret universally felt that one whose early career gave such promise of future eminence and distinction, should have found a premature grave. Compelled by long exertion, anxiety, and fatigue in the discharge of his public duties, to seek a change of climate for the recovery of his health, Major Pottinger was returning to England, via China, when he was attacked by a malignant fever at Hong-Kong, where he died on the 18th of November 1843 aged 32 years.

SIR JOHN ROSS' EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN, BY PUBLIC SUBSCRIPTION.—The amount required for the outfit of the Expedition, including provisions for two years, is only £3000—less than half the sum subscribed in New York for the same humane object. The Hudson's Bay Company have set on foot this Expedition; it is sanctioned by the Admiralty, and rather than it should be abandoned from want of funds, Sir John Ross has devoted to its equipment the proceeds of his half-pay and two pensions accruing during his absence; but it is confidently hoped that the public will come forward with subscriptions sufficient to render unnecessary this pecuniary sacrifice, in addition to his gratuitous personal services.



THE CARDIFF ATHENÆUM EISTEDDFOD.

THE CARDIFF ATHENÆUM EISTEDDFOD.

Some time since, the Committee of the Athenæum at Cardiff arranged to hold an Eisteddfod in the Town-Hall (the use of which was kindly granted by the Mayor), and to offer prizes for competition on various subjects. The night of Wednesday week was fixed for this interesting meeting, when the spacious Hall was filled to overflowing with company.

The Hall was decorated for the occasion with the flags from ships in the port, and with the colours of the Royal Glamorgan Militia; and an abundance of evergreens, chiefly laurel, were disposed in the room. Galleries were erected for the purpose, and the columns supporting them entwined with various colours. On the central lamp-stem was placed a bunch of leeks, emblematical of the Principality, tastefully arranged. In front of the chairman and other judges of the performance was a large table covered with mechanical objects—such as clocks, under glass shades; a model of a coal-shipping stage; a transit instrument, &c. The prize harp occupied the right end of the table.

From the turret of the hall a Union-Jack floated throughout the day; and in the evening there was a fine star beautifully illuminated with gas and surrounded with wreaths, evergreens, &c.

The fitting-up of the interior, the ornaments, &c., was superintended by Messrs. Bernard, James, and Bowen, and Honorary Secretary, Mr. Smart.

After the amateur band had played several pieces of music, the chair was taken by Whitlock Nicholl, of Adamsdown, Esq., President of the Institution, upon the motion of W. D. Bushell, Esq., seconded by Charles Vachell, Esq., Mayor of Cardiff.

The President opened the proceedings, by congratulating the company upon the success of the Institution, and then called upon Mr. Bernard, C. E., who delivered a prologue, which he had written for the occasion. The most complimentary marks of approval greeted Mr. Bernard at the conclusion of his address.

The distribution of prizes then commenced; Mr. W. D. Bushell delivering the first prize "For the best essay (not exceeding eight octavo pages) on the advantages and duties of Athenæums." Seven communications had been received; and the successful competitor was Mr. W. Christopher, of Newport; the next in merit being by "W. Gaisford, journeyman carpenter and joiner, at the Bute Docks, Cardiff." The prize was advertised to be Macaulay's "History of England;" but the committee substituted Mr. Layard's account of his "Researches in Nineveh."

The second prize was presented by Mr. Charles Vachell, Mayor of Cardiff, to Mr. Levi Marks, for the best recitation from Shakespeare, which was loudly applauded, the prize being "Campbell's Poets," 2 vols.

The third prize was for "the best model or piece of mechanism," the production of the exhibitor. The first prize had been awarded to Mr. Clements, locomotive superintendent of the Taff Vale Railway; but Mr. Clements being one of the judges, declined to take the prize, and received instead, from Mr. W. D. Bushell, a crown of laurel. The prize, two lithographic views of the Britannia Tubular Bridge, was then given to Mr. I. T. Barry, of Cardiff, for a handsomely-finished miniature steam-engine.

The fourth prize, a volume of the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Metropolitana," was awarded to Mr. H. Grant, of Duke-street, for a well-finished striking clock.

Mr. Bushell then presented to Mr. William Williams, for a figure of Mercury, a handsomely bound copy of Milton's works.

To a youth named John Rees, for a small brass cannon, and a new kind of water stand, was presented Beckmann's "History of Inventions."

Messrs. Avis, Price, and Rogers were then rewarded with "The Book of British Song," for some fine glee-singing.

The sixth prize, "Melodia Divina," a volume of Sacred Melodies, was awarded to Mr. John Roberts, of Newtown, Montgomeryshire, for his performance on the violin, in competition with Mr. Markl's ophicleide.

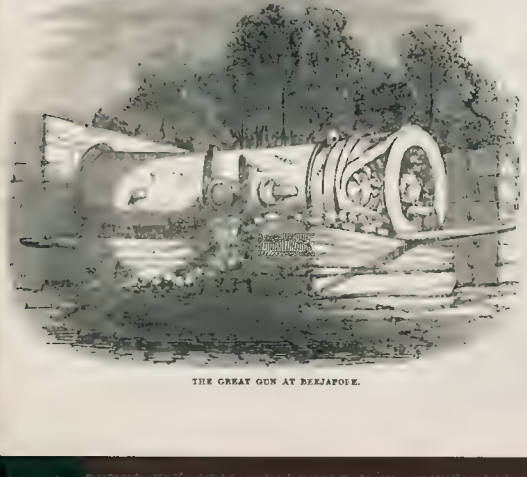
The sixth prize, for penmanship, a copy of Sir Richard Phillips's "Million of Facts," was given to a little boy, aged eleven years, named William Jones, a pupil at Mr. Evans's Academy, North-road, Cardiff.

Next was awarded the Cardiff Town Prize, a handsome harp, offered by the inhabitants of Cardiff. It was made by Mr. Bassett Jones, harp-maker to her Majesty and the Prince of Wales; and is said to be an excellent specimen of skill. The condition which competitors were to observe was, to play Welsh airs on the triple (Welsh) harp. The best player was to have the new harp above adverted to; and the second best a purse containing three guineas.

Mr. Llewellyn Williams, of Caerphilly, then came on, having suspended round his neck a gold harp, which, we believe, he won at Abergavenny Eisteddfod. He played the favourite old Welsh air, "Penyrhaw," with Parry's variations. Next came Mr. John Roberts, who played another favourite air, called "Llwynon," with variations—time, ad libitum. And thirdly, came the last and least—namely, John Roberts, junior, a youth thirteen years of age, and the orphan nephew of the previous player. He selected the popular air of "Jenny Jones," with variations. A fourth player, having heard his competitors, declined to enter the lists with them.

The first prize was given to Mr. Roberts, and the second to Mr Williams.

Mr. Charles Vachell then addressed the company; and, after the prizes had been handed to the successful competitors, a vote of thanks to the President was passed; three cheers were given for him, for the Mayor, for the Ladies, for the Committee, and for the Queen. The band then played the National Anthem; and, at about a quarter past eleven, the vast assembly slowly separated.



THE GREAT GUN AT BEEJAPORE.

THE GREAT GUN AT BEEJAPORE.

By the last Indian mail, we learn, among the news from the Bombay Presidency, that "a plan is before the Government for the removal to England of the great brass gun at Beejapore. It is the largest piece of ordnance in the world for its calibre. This gun was cast for the native Princes of Beejapore in 1590, at Ahmednuggur, and thence moved to Beejapore: in 1823, the Bombay Government was extremely desirous of sending it to England, as a present to the King; but, until the roads are improved, it would be almost impossible to transport such a ponderous mass to the sea-coast."

A Correspondent has favoured us with a Sketch of this Indian wonder. It is placed upon a bastion near one of the gates of Beejapore. Its native name is "Mulik Midhen" (Master of the Plain). Its length is 14 ft. 1 in.; diameter at bore, 2 ft. 4½ in.; diameter at breech, 4 ft. 10 in.; ditto at muzzle, 3 ft. 2 in. It is stated to require an iron ball weighing about 3100 lb. It is believed by some to be partly of gold; but there is a more wonderful tradition as to its history: it was fired once during a siege of the city, and the natives imagine the ball to be flying yet!

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE FOX MAULE, M.P. FOR PERTH, SECRETARY AT WAR.

The Right Honourable Fox Maule, Lord-Lieutenant of Forfarshire, and Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow, is a member of the Privy Council, and has a seat in the Cabinet. He is the eldest son of the present Lord Panmure, created Baron in 1831, and now upwards of eighty years of age; is cousin-german to the Earl of Dalhousie, and son-in-law to Lord Abercrombie, whose eldest daughter he married in 1831. Mr. Maule was born on the 22d of April, 1801; was educated at the Charter House School, which he entered in 1810, and left in the early part of 1818. In June, 1819, he entered the army as Ensign in the 79th Highlanders, served in Canada upon Lord Dalhousie's Staff from 1822 to 1826, and retired from the army with the rank of Captain in 1831. He took an active part in the election of Lord Ormelie, in 1832, and was chairman of Mr. Graham's Committee when he contested the county of Perth in 1834, on the vacancy occasioned by the succession to the peerage of the present Marquis of Breadalbane. The part taken in these contests brought Mr. Maule into political notice; and at the general election, after the dissolution under Sir Robert Peel in 1835, he contested Perthshire with Sir George Murray, Master-General of the Ordnance, and a member of Sir Robert Peel's cab-net, and carried the county by a majority of upwards of 100. On the accession of the Whigs to office in 1835, Mr. Maule was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department. At the general election, on the death of William the Fourth, in 1837, he was again a candidate for Perth, but was beaten at the election by Lord Stormont. He still, however, retained his office, and was so long without a seat. In February, 1838, Sir A. L. Hay having been appointed Governor of Bermuda, to which, however, he did not proceed, Mr. Maule succeeded him in the representation of the Elgin Burghs without a contest. At the general election in 1841, he contested Perth with Mr. Blacker, was returned by a large majority; and in the same year was appointed Vice-President of the Board of Trade. In 1842 he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow, took a leading position in the memorable struggle of the Scotch Church, and brought before the House of Commons the petition of the great evangelical body on the subject of non-intrusion, and for their independence in spiritual matters, as guaranteed to them by the Revolution settlement, and confirmed in judicial decision in Scotland. In his statement, Mr. Maule went through the whole history of the case. His able speech left no point unargued, and was received with the greatest satisfaction by the party for Church liberty throughout Scotland. He dwelt upon the great danger of a rejection by the Government and House of Commons of the claims of so large and influential a portion of the Church to its immediate and ardent liberation and practical relief. The case was proved, that the result would be the secession of the men most distinguished in the Church of Scotland for piety, eloquence, and zeal.

THE RIGHT HON. FOX MAULE, M.P. FOR PERTH.

Mr. Maule was the first member of the Whig Government of 1841 who took a part in the agitation for Free Trade. He filled the chair at one of the largest meetings ever held in Perth; and, in 1843-4, accompanied Mr. Cobden to the meetings at Stirling and Glasgow. He also spoke at the great banquet held in the amphitheatre, in Liverpool, and was afterwards regarded as the nominee of the leading Liberals to allow himself to be named as a candidate for Liverpool at the next election. He however, preferred continuing in the representation of Perth. He was appointed Secretary at War in July, 1846, and Lord-Lieutenant of Forfarshire in 1849.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 14.—Second Sunday after Easter.
MONDAY, 15.—Easter Term begins.
TUESDAY, 16.—Count de Buffon, the French naturalist, died, 1783.
WEDNESDAY, 17.—Length of night, 10h. 24m.
THURSDAY, 18.—Sun rises 5h. 56m., sets 6h. 59m.
FRIDAY, 19.—St. Alphege.
SATURDAY, 20.—Moon rises 11h. 51m. morning, sets 2h. 19m. morning.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 20. 1850.

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
3 10	3 30	5 0	5 4	5 48	6 40	6 5	6 15	6 30	6 50	6 15	7 45	7 0	8 30

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, MONDAY EVENING, April 15, 1850. Second night of Samuel's new Comedy, entitled "Un Voyage," in which Mdlle. Desain and M. Samson will perform, after which will be revived the popular play of "Le Mariage de Victorine." On TUESDAY NEXT will be repeated Scribe's popular Comedie, "Bertrand et Raton," in which M. Samson will sustain the character of "Le Comte Bertrand." Boxes and Stalls at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33 Old Bond-street, and at the Box-office.

MR. ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Unparalleled Success of the New Grand Easter Spectacle of Enchantment. Last Week but three of that extraordinary American Equestrian Phenomena, universally pronounced the Wonder of the World.—On MONDAY, April 15th, 1850, and during the Week, the Entertainments will commence with Mr. Batty's magnificent Spectacle, entitled the FOUR SONS of AYMON; or, the Days of Charlemagne—most gorgeously produced, introducing a Living Camel of the Desert, 2 Ponies, the beautiful Steed of Bayard, and all the vast resources of this Establishment. Concluding with a brilliant routine of Equestrian Wonders, during which Young Hernandez will appear for the first time in an entirely new Act, called PACE FOR PACE. To conclude with the highly interesting Melodrama of MRS. MURNOCH; or, the Fatal Glen.—Box-Office open from 11 till 4.—Stage Manager, Mr. W Hernandez.

MR. HENRY WYLDE'S MATINEES MUSICALES.—The FIRST will take place at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St. James, on MONDAY MORNING APRIL 15. M. Benoit and Mr. Henry Wylde will perform a Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin; and, in conclusion with Mr. Lindsay Sloper (Violoncello), Mr. Hill (Viola), Beethoven's Trio in C Minor and Mozart's Quartet in G Minor. Mr. Sternd le Bennett will play a Sonata in E Major (by Henry Wylde). Vocalists, Mr. Wilbye Cooper and Mr. Richardson. Trumpet, Mr T Harper. The Orchestra will be complete in every department, including Mr. Wly's Concert Band.—Tickets 1s, 2s, 3s, and 5s, to be had of the principal musicsellers; at Exeter Hall; and of Mr WILLY, 32, Trigon-terrace, Kennington

MR. AGUILAR begs to announce that he will give an EVENING CONCERT, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on WEDNESDAY, April 24 Vocalists Miss Lucombe, the Misses Cole and Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves and Herr Reichardt. Instrumentalists Mr. Aguilar, Violoncello, Herr Haussmann; Oboe, Mr. Nicholson, Clarionet, Mr. Lazarus; Horn, Mr. Jarrett; Bassoon, Mr. Baumann; Pianoforte, Mr. Aguilar Conductor, Mr. Benedict.—Reserved Seats, 10s 6d; Tickets 7s, to be procured at Messrs. CRAMER, WALE, and Co.'s, 201 Regent-street; and at the residence of Mr. AGUILAR, 63, Upper Norton-street, Portland-road.

MESSRS. G. and J. CASE beg to announce that their ANNUAL GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will take place at the LONDON TAVERN, on FRIDAY EVENING NEXT, April 19th. Vocalists, Miss Poole, Miss Leaford, and Dolby, Mr Sims Reeves and Herr Mengis. Pianoforte Miss Case. Violin, M Sainton. Pianoforte Seconds, Messrs Case. Twelve Instrumentals. Conductor, Mr. Lavenu.—Tickets, 3s. Reserved Seats, 5s. To be had at Mr. CASE'S Concert Repository, 28, New Bond-street, &c.

EXPOSITION de L'INDUSTRIE FRANCAISE, sous la direction de M. CHARLES SALLANDROUZE de LAMORNAIX, membre depute, membre du Conseil General des Manufactures de France. Magnificent addition of Specimens in Berries Bronze, Bohemian Cut Glasses, Porcelain, Works of Art.—OPEN DAILY, from 10 even till Six. 13 George-street, Hanover square. Admission, 1s.

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION for the Exhibition of MODERN ART Portland Gallery, No. 316, Regent-street (opposite the Polytechnic Institution). The Public are informed that the exhibition of the above society will open on MONDAY, the 15th instant. BELL SMITH, Hon Secretary.

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND Illustrated by a Grand Moving Diorama, with scenes of the most charming scenery in that country, including the lovely lakes of Killarney, by Mr. P. Phillipp, now open at the Cosmo Gallery, Hyde Park Corner Daily at 3, Evening at 8. Admission to the Reserved Seats, 3s., an interesting historical lecture will be given each evening.

NILE.—GRAND MOVING PANORAMA of the NILE; containing all the new scenes from Alexandria to its banks; to which is added the interior of the great rock-cut TEMPLE of ABOU SIMBEL, painted by Messrs. Grieve, Roberts, Bonomi, and Prout. An Addition to the Collection of Curiosities. EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, daily at Three and Eight. Stalls, 3s; Pit, 2s; Gallery, 1s. Children and Schools half-price.

NEW PANORAMA, 207, REGENT-STREET, adjoining the Royal Polytechnic Institution. The BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE on a Grand Scale with VIEWS of WOLVERTON VIADUCT, COVENTRY, BIRMINGHAM, CHESTER, the VICTORIA BRIDGE over the Thames, &c. Daily (Views to which has been added SNOWDON from CAPEL CARIG. Painted by J. W. ALLEN Esq. A Description by JOHN ANDERSON, Esq. Open from Ten till Six o'Clock, who open at Seven o'Clock. Quarter-past Twelve, Half-past One, Quarter to Three, Four o'Clock; and in the Evenings at Seven o'clock. Quarter past Eight.—Admission, 1s, Schools and children, Half price.

SOUTHAMPTON, BAY of BISCAY, the TAGUS, CAPE ST. VINCENT, CAPE TRAFALGAR, GIBRALTAR, ALGIERS, MALTA, ALEXANDRIA, CAIRO, BENI HAMPASSAN, and JERUSALEM the DESERT, the RED SEA where the Israelites crossed, MOCHA, and CALCUTTA, are all Illustrated in the GRAND MOVING DIORAMA, portraying the entire route of the OVERLAND MAIL to INDIA; from Southampton to Calcutta, now daily Exhibiting at the GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT STREET, WATERLOO-PLACE. Morning, at Half-past Two, Evening, at Eight o'clock Admission, 1s; Reserved seats, 2s 6d. Descriptive Catalogues may be obtained at the Gallery

NEXT DOOR TO THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

WILL OPEN, on TUESDAY NEXT, April 16, HARVEY'S ROYAL GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, consisting of Original Drawings of England and American Scenery, which have received great commendation from HER MAJESTY and H.R.H. PRINCE ALBERT, and many other distinguished persons. These Drawings are now for the First Time passed before the British Public, together with his more recent Views of the H. MEN and HARBOURS of the BRITISH POSTE. Open Daily, from Ten till Six o'Clock. Admission 1s. Mr. Harvey also begs to call attention to a series of SPLENDIDLY ILLUSTRATED LECTURES on the SCENERY, HABITATIONS, and PEOPLE of NORTH AMERICA. The Views are Sixty-three in number, each measuring eleven feet by eighteen feet, and are brilliantly illuminated by the Drummond Lime Light. (For particulars see small bills.) Doors open at eight o'clock. Admission 1s.—Stalls, 2s.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES on MUSIC, by Sir HENRY R. BISHOP, Professor, with an increased number of Vocalists for the Display, each on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at Eight, and on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Three o'clock. Mr. Bishop offers a SECOND LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY of MUSICAL SOUND, illustrated by Musical Effects, daily at Two, and on Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, at a quarter-past Nine. LECTURE by J. H. Pepper, Esq., on the CHEMISTRY of HYDROGEN, with special reference to its application for conveying by Balloons Pyrotechnic and other Signals, daily at Eight; Again on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Three, and on Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, at Eight. DISSOLVING VIEWS, illustrating the ARCTIC REGIONS and CEYLON, from Views of London in the Sixteenth Century, and as it now is. DIVER and DIVING-BELL, &c. &c.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.—Also new and Chemical Experiments conducted in the Laboratory, under the direction of J. H. Pepper Esq.

CONSOLIDATED INVESTMENT and ASSURANCE COMPANY, 45, CHEAPSIDE
OFFICE AS ASCE of all kinds, ENDOWMENTS and ANNUITIES, on the most equitable terms.
LOANS from £50 to £500 granted upon approved personal and other security, repayable by quarterly instalments.
Division of Profits will take place in 1851.
Insurances negotiable, except in cases of fraud.
Claims payable within One Month after proof.
Prospectuses on application to Solicitors and Clerks.
Agents wanted. WILLIAM CLARK, Actuary and Secretary.

EXHIBITION of INDUSTRY of ALL NATIONS, 1851.—The CITY of LONDON COMMITTEE for furthering the EXHIBITION of INDUSTRY of ALL NATIONS, in MAY, 1851, beg to draw upon the attention of parties residing within the City of London and invite them to exhibit, on the purchase Royal Commissioners a a desirous of becoming acquainted with the NAMES of exhibitors, the objects proposed to be exhibited, and the space required for the same before the 10th of May, 1850, and the Committee have now prepared to supply Printed Forms of Returns, to be filled up by intending Exhibitors.

STEPHEN HEATH and GAT LEY, Mr.} Hon. Secs.
DAVID WILLIAMS WIRE,

Office of the City of London Committee, 68, Cheapside, April 6, 1850.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES.—St. CLEMENT DANES BANK for SAVINGS and GOVERNMENT ANNUITY INSTITUTION, 40, Norfolk-street Strand.

The Trustees and Managers of this Bank continue (as Agents for the Government) to grant Annuities, either Immediate or Deferred, of from £4 to £50, to persons not possessed of an annual income of £150.

Persons residing in any part of the United Kingdom may purchase Annuities without their personal attendance.

The Public (especially Females) will derive great advantage in purchasing Annuities through the medium of this Office

Prospectuses and Tables of the cost may be had upon application at the Office of the Institution, No. 40 Norfolk-street, Strand, or by letter (post-paid).

Open for granting Annuities Daily, from Ten till Three

The amount paid to the Government on the purchase of Annuities granted through this Office during the quarter ending 5th of April, £23,613.

The total amount paid to the Government exceeds £337,823

Savings-Bank open for the receipt of deposits Saturday and Monday Evenings, from Seven till Nine: and Tuesday Morning, from Eleven till One Interest payable to depositors is £3 per cent. per annum.

5th April, 1850. W. T. WOOLCOTT, Actuary.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A SUBSCRIBER is thanked; but we have not room for the Sunderland Sketch—It is too slight BADAM, Cranbrook.—Mr. Badam's "Views of Nature," Bohn's edition, to be had, by order, of any bookseller SELFARES.—Mr Cattle's American-Indian Collection is open in Waterloo-place, Pall Mall.
The value of an American dollar is 4s 2d
CLIDE.—Yours is a Maundy Twopence of Charles II., very strongly gilt, but not gold
AN ORIGINAL SUBSCRIBER.—Inquire of Mr Gladstone, Royal Observatory, Greenwich, respecting the self-registering Thermometer
R.W. Upper Berkeley-street.—Any treatise on sheep will afford information as to the treatment of foot-rot
ARRACABARA.—See Mr. Christopher's forthcoming work, referred to in our Journal of March 16
ARROGUS.—We do not profess to reply to questions of law
R K J, Bolton, should apply to the secretary to the commission
J.R. New Brompton.—We cannot insert the Illustration upon any terms
H.A. Cambridge.—The Victoria Tower, at the south-west angle of the New Palace of Parliament, at Westminster, is 75 feet square, and will rise 340 feet; the entrance archway is 60 feet in height. Under the Victoria Tower the stately tower should not proceed, on account of its great height, and the danger of settlements, at a greater rate than thirty feet per year
M. E. F. Norfolk.—The "Country Edition" of our Journal is printed in time for Friday night's post
C. W. Dublin, had better send his coins to Mr Webster, 17 Great Russell-street, Covent-garden
VERAX.—In the article "Bell" in the "Penny Cyclopædia," which refers to the best authorities upon the subject
ALPHA.—The answer sent by John Bowes, Esq., of Streatlam Castle, are, "Erm. three bows string-ed-sa-ble. Crest A stand of arrows proper bound [illegible] and surmounted with the motto, Sans varience et mon droit."
A HOUSEHOLDER.—We shall give authority of London and York is styled Lord Mayor
BETA, Shaftesbury.—We are aware of the existence of the system, but do not recommend it to our Correspondents
A B D. Inquire of Mr Weale, publisher, High Holborn. Perhaps "Hood's Treatise on Warming and Ventilating" will serve.
J. Hulme.—We cannot state time to be improved by Hardme."
NOTTINGHAM and W.B.—Inquire of Mr Gurney's Bude Light is described by Dr Ure as ordinary coal gas, purified in a simple apparatus, and burned with argand from the atmosphere. It is named from Mr Gurney's residence, at Bude, in Cornwall.—See Dr Ure's Report, Year-Book of Facts, 1844, p 61
AN ORIGINAL SUBSCRIBER is thanked; but the Sketch is too slight PUPILS.—The custom of making fools on April 1 is from the French poissons d'Avril, i. e. simpleton, or silly unckered, which suffer themselves to be caught in this month. But, as with us April is the season of that fish, we have substituted the word Fools. D. Jones.
A LOVER OF SCIENCE.—Inquire for the Oxyhydrogen Microscope at Carpenter and Westley's, 21, Regent-street, Waterloo-place
W H Fleet.—We cannot, for the purpose he states, than provide himself with Cartwright and Holland's book for London in the second edition of which, at a reduced price will appear a notice of the new street and Church in the neighbourhood of Fleet, in connexion with the original plan of Charing Cross, has at last been discovered
The Church Parsons being a short tradition, and Oxford-street is named after Edward Harley, Earl of Oxford and Mortimer
J. C. Rochdale.—It is not necessary to have the assistance of a lawyer in making a will
J. M. C. Hornsey.—School subscription received
E. J. B. should advertise, offering some remuneration for the finding of the advertisement in question
Glasgow.—Sir John Franklin was a colleague of the Parry in the Admiralty North Polar Expedition of 1824. The expedition, which still remains, consisted of the Hecla and Fury, with 140 souls on board.
W. H. Hackney.—Try him. Do good by stealth and blush to find it fame, is by Pope
Q—Thanks. When rare he join'd to speak, then was the tug of war, as in an Nat. Lee's Alexander the Great
A CONSTANT READER.—We do not possess a list of the subscribers to the Hudson testimonial
NATIVE.—Application to Messrs Robinson and Rasbo, Blackwall, the boatbuilders of Mr Stephenson's yacht, Titania, may at once be made to inquire into the matter
H. L. Hale.—We fear you must search for the list of fees
O P had better write to a printseller
PEACOCK.—Received
JOHNS, Aberdeen.—Peterhead
A WORKING-MAN FARMER.—Received
CANTAB.—Reading, should advertise
E. J.'s.—The crest is a pike issuing per
* * Replies to several Correspondents are unavoidably deferred.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

The Horse Guards.—Chess Made Easy (by G. Walker).—More Verse and Prose.—Microscopic Examination of the Water supplied to the Inhabitants of London.
Music.—Home Gift Songs.—Romance for the Pianoforte.

ROME.

On MAY 4th will be Presented, to all Regular Subscribers to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, a

SPLENDID VIEW OF ROME,

Engraved in the Best Manner, from an Original Drawing made during the Late Siege. On which occasion a DOUBLE NUMBER of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be published, price ONE SHILLING the Two Numbers; with the large View of Rome Gratis, intended to form the Frontispiece to Vol. XVI. of this Journal.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1850.

LORD DUNCAN, in bringing forward his motion for the Repeal of the Window Tax, may be said to have exhausted the subject. As a matter of argument, his speech is utterly unanswerable; and if a display of reason and justice, of policy and philanthropy, could destroy a nuisance, the Window Tax would be already numbered among the things that were. But abuses and oppressions are long-lived; and absurdities take a great deal of argument to shame them into decent obscurity. The Window Tax is one of those monstrous fiscal burdens, for which nobody has a word to say, except Sir Charles Wood. It produces a certain amount of money; and as the Chancellor of the Exchequer wants that very money, and does not know where else to look for it, the tax must remain, although it amounts to a grievous and intolerable impost upon the light of heaven, upon fresh air, upon comfort, and upon health. Lord Duncan, after having ably argued the general question, insisted, with regard to this tyrant's plea of necessity, that the opportunity afforded, at the present time by the flourishing state of the national finances, made it the imperative duty of the Government to remove the tax without further delay. But the question, in reality, is a much simpler one than that. The Window Tax, as has been often remarked, is a house tax, and a house tax is a property tax. We can either afford to abolish this tax, or we cannot. If we were in a position to forego it, the country would be delighted to be relieved from the burden. If we are not in a position to do without the £1,800,000 which are the annual proceeds of the tax, let the Chancellor of the Exchequer levy it upon the house, and not upon the windows. In neither case is there any necessity for a Window Tax. "Light! more light!" was the dying prayer of a great poet. "Light! more light!" is the living prayer of the British people. From that light in their dwellings they are excluded by the mere wantonness of men in power, or by the heavy inertness of dull officialism, that will not lay a finger upon an abuse with the design of removing it, unless it is driven into it by long-repeated and increasing popular clamour. It is true that the Chancellor of the Exchequer defends the tax, and spoke very curtly about the policy of enduring old burdens that we know something about, rather than flying to new ones which we did not understand; but we doubt whether his arguments in this respect will give any satisfaction out of the House.

The small majority of three obtained by the Government will inevitably excite the opponents of the tax to renewed exertions for its repeal. If the £1,800,000 must be levied upon us as a supplemental property-tax, it would be better to call it so at once, and free our lungs and our health from the injurious system under which we at present collect it. If there be a necessity for the money, the same amount of money, to a fraction, can be screwed out of us in another way. We all know that as well as Sir Charles Wood; but we doubt very much whether the right hon. gentleman, if he loves office, will not ere long regret that he did not know how to do a gracious, a popular, and a just thing when he had the opportunity—and whether his colleagues will not have cause to rue their determination to support him.

AFTER an interval of two years the Governments of France and Spain have agreed to resume their diplomatic intercourse. Lord Palmerston on the one side, and General Narvaez on the other, have been brought into a good humour by the kindly offices of the King of the Belgians. Past differences and offences are to be forgotten; or, at all events, to be forgiven, and Spain is once more to have a representative at the Court of St. James's, and Great Britain to have a live Ambassador at Madrid. So far all is well. It is right that nations should not only agree, but that they should appear to agree, and that they should not imitate, either in carrying on or breaking off their mutual intercourses, the petty airs which are exhibited by the Abigails of the ante-chamber, and of which we sometimes see representatives in our most popular farces. But the English public, though doubtless inclined to applaud the reconciliation of Lord Palmerston and General Narvaez, has lately imbibed the notion that Ambassadors are, at the very best, but expensive superfluities, luxuries, in fact, with which nations might very well dispense. This very case of Spain is one in point. Great Britain has most unquestionably been none the worse because for two years she has had no Ambassador in Spain. Nay, she has been better, inasmuch as she has saved in the meantime the two years' very large salary of such a functionary. As for Spain herself, if we are to credit the Ministerial journal that congratulates this country on the happy event of a resumption of diplomatic intercourse, she has so largely benefited by the absence of any British Ambassador in Madrid, as to make it, as it appears to us, a matter of great regret that so satisfactory a state of things should be interfered with. "Party spirit amongst the Spaniards," says the Times, "has greatly diminished in intensity since they have ceased to be goaded on by foreign intrigues; and we observed the other day the names of Olozaga and Mendizabel among the honoured guests of the Prime Minister. Measures of real progress and rational reform have advanced with more security and vigour since they were no longer regarded with the jealousy which haunts all innovations in Spain when they are suspected of being the contrivances of foreign courts. Even in the chambers of the palace fewer intrigues have been set in motion, and the differences between the persons of that strange Court have given way to a better and more amicable feeling."

If such be, as we believe, the real state of the matter, Lord Palmerston and General Narvaez might as well shake hands and be good friends, without cementing their friendship by the appointment of new Ambassadors. A British Consul at Madrid, with £300 a year, would be sufficient to attend to all the real wants or interests of Great Britain in Spain, and would not have the power for mischief with which we usually invest the more pompous and important dignitaries to whom we pay £8000 or £10,000 a year, besides a house and an outfit. No doubt the foreign embassies are admirable sources of ministerial patronage; but in these days of excessive taxation—when the Government cannot un-tax paper, nor the light of heaven, for want of means—the feeling is becoming very prevalent, that ministerial necessities in the matter of patronage must yield to the greater necessities of the public pocket and the public welfare. Even if we paid these Ambassadors do nothing, the evil would be great enough in a pecuniary point of view; but when, as in the case of Spain, we actually pay them to do mischief, the question becomes far more serious. Consuls at all the capitals and ports of Europe are quite competent for any possible business which, on ordinary occasions, we can have with foreign countries. Even under our present system, we dispatch an extraordinary Ambassador and Minister Plenipotentiary for all extraordinary occasions. We could do no more, and no less, if all the present embassies were abolished to-morrow. Parliament has already undertaken to revise the salaries of all our public officers. If it will, at the same time, take the Ambassadors under its care, and place the diplomatic service of the country on a cheaper and more efficient footing, it will entitle itself to the gratitude of the people of this and (Spain might say) of some other countries.

COURT AND HAUT TON

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the youthful members of the Royal Family, returned to Buckingham Palace from Windsor Castle, at six o'clock on Saturday evening. The august party was conveyed by a special train to Paddington, proceeding from thence in several of the Royal carriages, escorted by a party of the 11th Dragoons, to Buckingham Palace.

On Sunday, the Queen and Prince Albert and the Princess Royal, with the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley officiated.

On Tuesday Lord Seymour had an audience of the Queen, and had the honour to kiss hands on being appointed a Groom in Waiting of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenue, Works, and Buildings. Her Majesty was attended by Lord Elphinstone, Lord in Waiting.

On Thursday the Duchess of Kent visited the Queen, and partook of luncheon with her Majesty. His Royal Highness Prince Albert visited the Duchess of Gloucester during the morning, and in the afternoon presided at a meeting of the Committee for the Promotion of the Exhibition of the Art of Nations in 1851.

The Viscountess Canning has relieved the Countess of Charlemont in her duties as the Lady in Waiting to her Majesty. The Hon. Amelia Murray and the Hon. Caroline Dawson have relieved the Hon. Matilda Paget and the Hon. Flora Macdonald in their duties as the Maids of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

Her Majesty's accouchement, it is expected, will take place in about a fortnight; and as soon afterwards as her Majesty's state will permit, the Court returns to Windsor, where it will remain until after Ascot races.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent comes to town from Frogmore on Wednesday next.

The Count and Countess de Neuilly, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess de Nemours and suite, have arrived at the Marquis of Bristol's mansion at Kemptown, from Claremont.

Lord John Russell has issued invitations for a Parliamentary dinner, at his residence in Chesham-place, this evening (Saturday)

ALMACK'S.—The first of these aristocratic réunions for the present season, which is fixed to take place on Thursday, the 18th instant, will, it is expected, be very fully and fashionably attended. The applications for vouchers have been already very numerous; and, as all the ladies patronesses in town have signified their intention of being present, we cannot doubt that a most brilliant réunion will result.

INFANT ORPHAN ASYLUM.—Her Majesty's attention having been called to the distressing case of an infant family, suddenly deprived of both parents in Canada (the father being Captain Mayne, in the 1st Regiment of Dragoon Guards), she has most kindly placed one of the youngest children in the Wanstead Infant Orphan Asylum.

ILLNESS OF THE POET MOORE.—Letters have been received from Sloperton, giving a most painful account of the decaying health of the poet Moore, whose death was daily apprehended. For three months past Mr. Moore had not left his room, and altogether his condition was considered hopeless.

Mr. Locke King and Mr. Alcock did not arrive in time to vote for the repeal of the window tax, having been at the Quarter Sessions at Reigate.

Mr. Tennyson D'Eyncourt was inadvertently shut out of the division on Lord Duncan's motion for the repeal of the window tax, although he had arrived from Paris that afternoon for the express purpose of voting.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Lord CAMPBELL (in the absence of the Lord Chancellor) took his seat upon the Woolsack at five o'clock.

LAW OF PLEADING.

Lord CAMPBELL brought in a Bill to amend the Law of Pleading. In introducing the measure, the noble and learned Lord went into a minute technical explanation of the practice of special pleading.

The bill was read a first time.

CONVICT PRISONS BILL.

Earl GREY moved the third reading of this bill.

After some discussion, the bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

DRAINAGE OF THE METROPOLIS

Lord ERSKINE, in reply to Sir B. Hall, said that the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers had not yet come to a decision upon the principle of drainage for the part of the metropolis north of the Thames.

RETRENCHMENT OF OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Lord J. RUSSELL moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the salaries and emoluments of offices held, during the pleasure of the Crown, by members of either House of Parliament not in the annual estimates; and also into the salaries and emoluments of judicial offices in the superi.r courts of law and equity in the United Kingdom; and into the retiring pensions allotted to the judges; and also into the expense of diplomatic establishments charged on the Consolidated fund. The noble Lord having d. tailed the proceedings for the appointment of such a committee, commencing with the year 1798, adverting to Lord Althorpe's resignation in 1830, and ending with the military enquiry of 1846, proceeded to say that a committee on civil salaries was now engaged on the subject, and he had delayed the present motion until he was in a condition to avail himself of its valuable labours. The noble Lord then having adverted to the various reductions made by Government of late years in all departments of the public service, concluded by declaring it necessary that a committee should be appointed to investigate the whole subject, so as to make an arrangement of a permanent character in the matter.

Mr. DISRAELI moved as an amendment, "That this House is in possession of all the information requisite to revise and regulate public salaries; that parliamentary committees of inquiry under such circumstances would only lead to delay; and that it is he du y of the Government, on their own responsibility, forthwith to introduce the measures that may be necessary for effecting every reduction in the national establishments consistent with the efficient discharge of the public service."

After a short discussion, the House divided : —
For Mr Disraeli's amendment	..	..	..	..	134
Against it	..	..	..	..	250
Majority	..	..	..	..	—91

The amendment was accordingly lost.

Mr. HORSMAN then proposed an amendment, that the inquiry be extended to the incomes of ecclesiastica. dignitaries.

On a division, the amendment was negatived by 208 against 95.

The original motion of the Government was then agreed to.

Adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock.

ENTERTAINMENT BY THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF HASTINGS TO THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.—It will be recollected that on the 24th of January the Lord Mayor gave a dinner to the Mayor and Corporation of Hastings. On Wednesday last the compliment was returned by the gentlemen who constitute that body. The Lord Mayor had on Tuesday sent down his private state carriage, horses, and servants; and, on reaching the Hastings terminus on Wednesday, was met by the mayor and other members of the corporation, who accompanied him, as he proceeded in procession, to the Swan Inn, where a splendid banquet was provided. The party consisted of upwards of 100 persons.

MUNIFICENT GIFTS.—The Duke of Norfolk has given a donation of 100 guineas, and the Duchess 50 guineas, in aid of the funds of "The Spinal Hospital for the Treatment of Disorders," Portland-road, Regent's Park.

EXHIBITION OF 1851.—We understand that fifty-one committees on Thursday made a return of their first subscription lists to the Royal Commissioners. We believe the sums announced were:—Bath, £20; Belfast, £310; Bingley, £20; Birmingham, £333; Blackburn, £400; Bolton, £470; Bradford, £1100; Bridgnorth, £17; Bristol, £237; Bristol (ladies), £6; Cambridge (town), £119; Cambridge (University), £100; Canterbury, £25; Cardiff, £93, Chertsey, £210; Dover, £27; Dudley, £245; Edinburgh, £1000; Gloucester, £67; Guildford, 41; Halifax, £261; Hartlepool, £29; Hereford, £37; Huddersfield, £784; Lancaster, £83; Kendal, £105; Kensington, £21; Leeds, £1000; Leicester, £100; in addition to these returns, the London and Westminster (ladies), £975, Manchester, £3300; Newcastle, £414; Newcastle-under-Lyne, £50; Newport, Monmouth, £33; Norwich, £330, Nottingham, 0; Oxford, £1; Penrith, Ramsgate, £21; Sheffield, £544; Stafford, £67; Stirling, £38; Stockport, £292; Tamworth, £33; Tewkesbury, £20; Warrington, £110; Wexford, £3; Wigan, £174; Whitehaven, £65; Windsor, &c., £238; Wolverhampton, York, £1120. In addition to these returns, it was announced that the Royal Academy had voted £500, and the Mercers' Company, £100. The Manchester subscription was, we understand, the contribution of thirty gentlemen.

TREMENDOUS STORM.—From an early hour yesterday (Friday) morning the appearances of the atmosphere in the metropolis indicated an approaching storm. As the day advanced the clouds became more black and portentous; about six o'clock darkness prevailed to such a degree, that business of all sorts had to be transacted by artificial lights in the City. Soon after that hour the rain fell in torrents, accompanied at intervals by vivid flashes of lightning and loud peals of thunder. At one o'clock the storm gradually subsided, but the evening was gloomy and wet throughout.

FIRE.—On Thursday evening, a fire, which, but for its opportune discovery, and the accidental bursting of a water-pipe, would, no doubt, have been attended with a most disastrous result, to the pounds' worth of property, occurred in the Manchester and shawl warehouse belonging to Messrs. John Marr and Sons, Friday-street, Cheapside. The flames commenced, from some unexplained cause, in the basement story, and its heat was so great that a water-pipe was melted, and there was a copious stream of water discharged from the melted pipe, which fortunately dropped upon the flames. The damage done was confined to the basement. The firm was insured.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

According to yesterday's (Friday's) accounts from Paris, the Socialist meetings are becoming more violent every day, and threaten serious consequences, if not restrained by the power of the Government.

On Wednesday evening, two hundred representatives of the Conservative party assembled in one of the rooms connected with the Council of State, the Tuileries, who was the leading speaker, gave a melancholy description of the distracted state of the country; and declared himself willing to bring forward general measures which might be necessary to meet the difficulties of the present crisis, and restore tranquillity if he could depend upon the support of those around him. M. Berryer, as the organ of the Legitimists, candidly refused to pledge himself in any way whatever, as they would be placed in an entirely unpledged and unfettered, leaving themselves to act as circumstances might require. This acknowledged determination of the Legitimists damped the ardour of M. Thiers, who evinced great disappointment and mortification at the result of the meeting.

On Thursday evening a review of troops took place at the Champ de Mars, and at which the President of the Republic was present. Some of the crowd attempted a republican demonstration, by shouting "Vive la République!"

GREECE.

The latest information which comes via Paris states that the Greek question may be considered as settled, such arrangements having been effected by M Gros, with the consent of Lord Palmerston, as to leave no doubt of the fact stated.

IRELAND.

ABOLITION OF THE VICE-ROYALTY.—An aggregate meeting of the citizens of Limerick, convened in pursuance of a requisition to the Lord Mayor, to petition the legislature against the contemplated abolition of the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, was held on Monday in the Round-room of the Rotunda, in the city. Admission by platform and reserved seats was by ticket, the price to the former being half-a-crown, and to the latter, 1s; but shortly after the commencement of the proceedings the whole of the edifice was crowded almost to excess, the audience including some ladies in the reserved places. The chair was taken by the Lord Mayor. Resolutions condemnatory of the intended abolition of the viceregal court were adopted.

LORD GOUGH.—Great preparations are making at the United Service Club in Dublin, to give a gold-cup banquet to Lord Gough on his expected arrival in the capital of his native country. Sir Edward Blakeney, the Commander-in-Chief, is to preside on the occasion.

JOSEPH ADY.—This insolvate letter-writer has lately been endeavouring to pass a marked 5s. piece at Limerick, and has so far succeeded, that very many of the citizens, not expecting such a correspondence, have already said the invitation fee of postage by opening his letters.

EXTRAORDINARY INCREASE OF POPULATION.—The town of Belfast has more than doubled its population since 1831, the amount then being, according to the census, 52,837, whereas the population at present is ascertained to be 103,733.

At the St. Clement's (Cornwall) vestry meeting, last week, Mr. W. M. Tweedy announced that Major Jenkins, in India, had offered a gift of £500 towards the building of schools for the parish of St. Clement, in connexion with St. Paul's Church; and, further, that if the parishioners will raise £500 he will give a second £500, thus making his whole contribution £1000, a substantial proof of the worthy Major's remembrance of his native parish.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE DEAN OF HEREFORD.

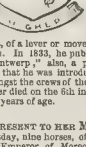
THE Very Rev. John Merewether, D.D., Dean of Hereford, was a scion of the ancient and respectable Wiltshire family of Merewether. He owed his rise to his being curate of Hampton, Middlesex, during the time that William IV., then Duke of Clarence, and his admirable Duchess, resided at Bushy. The fervour and zeal of the clergyman of Hampton, his avocations, and his popularity with his congregation, won the notice and esteem of the Royal pair, who took much interest in his preaching. He was appointed Chaplain to the Duke; and when that Prince ascended the throne, he made Dr. Merewether Deputy Clerk of the Closet and Dean of Hereford. The Dean was also named for a bishopric, but he was induced at the time to forego his claim in favour of another His recent connexion with the famous Dr. Hampden case is too well known to need detail or comment here. The Dean, who was also Rector of Radnor, and Vicar of Madley, died at his Vicarage, on the 4th inst., much and generally regretted. A Portra t of the late Dean, sketched in Bow Church, appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

GENERAL SIR ARCHIBALD GALLOWAY, K.C.B.

THIS ill tinguished officer, having spent the greater part of his life in active and able service, rose through the various grades to that of a General, and was made a Companion of the Bath in 1838: he sub equently became a K C B. Sir Archibald Galloway was Chairman of the Hon. East India Company. The gallant General died on the 6th inst., at his residance, 18, Upper Harley-street, to the great grief of a very extended circle of friends and admirers.

CAPTAIN SMITH, R.N.

CAPTAIN GEORGE SMITH, R N., the Admiralty Superintendent of contract packets at Southampton, entered the Royal Navy in 1808, and, after a brilliant career, was made a Captain the 13th April, 1832. Captain Smith was the inventor of very superior sights for ship's guns, of a lever or movable target, and of paddle-box boats for steamships. In 1833, he published a volume entitled "A few Remarks on the Siege of Antwerp," also, a plan for the suppression of piracy. It may be added, also, that he was instructing at Southampton the practice of naval gunnery amongst the crews of the contract Mail Steam-packet Company. This excellent officer died on the 6th instant, at Southampton, being at the time little more than fifty years of age.



PRESENT TO HER MAJESTY FROM THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO.—On Tuesday, nine horses, of the pure Arabian breed, presented to her Majesty by the Emperor of Morocco, arrived at the South-Western Railway terminus, Waterloo-bridge. The animals appeared poor diminutive creatures in comparison with English horses. They are of a grisly black and light bay colour, all under three years of age, and none standing more than twelve hands high They were accompanied by two noble attendants, and by the Queen's servants from the Royal stables, and two breaks, were at the station, and the horses were conveyed to Buckingham Palace, where they were inspected by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Duke of Norfolk (Master of the Horse), Col. Phipps, &c. The singular appearance of the animals, the mares being all rung and their tails of enormous size (the hair being cut close), together with the uncouth look of their attendants, attracted much attention, and a crowd of persons followed them to the gates of the palace.

THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER.—The total income of the Duchy of Lancaster for the year ending Michaelmas, 1849, was £34,960 18s. 10d., including a balance in the hands of the receivers of £4012 12s. 4d. The expenditure during the same period was as follows:—Salaries and allowances to the officers of the duchy and to the law officers of the county palatine, £7436; ditto of receivers and agents, £1819; stewards, bailiffs, &c., £423; pensions and retired allowances, £328; donations and charities, £1199; law charges, £1004; surveys and valuations, £466; labourers' wages, expenses of manorial courts, &c., £3039; purchase of stock, £1604; payments made out of the revenue to her Majesty's privy purse, £9500; balance, £7491.

SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.—April 11: Adjourned Meeting: London; J. J. Macgregor, Esq., in the chair.—Three auditors, Messrs. Orlebar Cocks, Morgan and Browne, were elected, the remuneration to be £50 each. Before the close of the proceedings the chairman stated that the directors expected the injunctions restraining the payment of the dividends until the Ashford and St. Leonard branch was opened, would be rescinded in a few days; however, no time would be opened in August next, so that the suspension of dividends could only continue until that time.

MANSION MODELLING.—Mr. Thomas D. Dighton, of Pimlico, well know for his talent in modelling the Houses of Parliament, has permitted us to inspect a chef d'œuvre of his, in an exquisite model of a mansion-house, designed for E. L. Betts, Esq., chairman of the Eastern Counties Railway Company. It is in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and of scarcely less than 100 feet in front has given, with the most minute and faithful accuracy, every point of the magnificent building, with its Italian garden, conservatory, fountains, and statues; and, curiously enough, we strike the imagination as a noble edifice looked at by an inverted opera-glass, and is as correct in its elaborate details as such a view of such an object would necessarily present.

GREAT FIRE AT COTTENHAM.—FORTY FARMS BURNT.

The village of Cottenham was, on Thursday night week, the scene of one of the largest conflagrations that has ever been known in Cambridgeshire. The flames were distinctly visible for miles around. The fire, which was the work of an incendiary, was first seen about eight o'c ock in Cambridge. It was first discovered in the rear of the farm premises occupied by Mr. Thomas Graves, and direct y in the direction of the wind, which was at the time blowing a stiff gale from S.W. by W. The inflammable nature of the materials in the yard soon caused the fire to spread with the most fearful rapidity; and in a short space of time the whole of the premises, the fire being assisted in its devouring progress by the wind, were in a complete mass of flame. The whole of the left-hand side as one enters from Cambridge up to where the fire commenced, consists, for the most part, of farm-houses and buildings. Long before Mr. Graves's premises were consumed, the fire communicated with those adjoining. The flames at this time began to assume a most awfully grand appearance. All human exertions were at once seen to be useless, and the owners were obliged passively to look on and behold the destruction of their property. The flames spread from farm to farm, and house to house with fearful rapidity.

On the opposite side of the road the flames consumed the Black Horse Inn and all the premises. This house stand- at a corner, at the turning towards Cottenham Church, and the flames caught it almost instantly, and the flames arrived before them attacked the premises of Mr. Chivers, and though the engines had arrived from Cambridge, they were of no use. The fire then attacked the houses of Mr. Smith and the White Horse. The whole of the premises of Mr. Farmer, with the exception of the house, were consumed, while the destruction of the latter was complete. The premises of Mr. Pain were also consumed, leaving only the house. There is a turning at this place to the right as one goes, leading down to another part of the village. On the right hand this turning are occupied by Mr. C. Chivers and Mr. Everett, and on the left by Mr. Watson, the whole of whose occupations are destroyed Proceeding onwards to the right, the fire attacked the homesteads of Messrs Watson, Papworth, and Everett, which, with the dissenting chapel, fell victims to the flames. In a straight direction the fire spread to the occupation of Mr Ivatt, which was completely annihilated. In its progress it consumed, likewise, a row of cottages and small occupations, and finally was got under at one occupied by Hopkins The loss is enormous. The vile act of the incendiary has in this instance caused the most heartrending misery. A number of families will completely thrown out of employ but are dependent upon charity for food and shelter, whilst the miscreant who has caused the calamity remains undiscovered. The following is a list of the farm-houses and premises destroyed:—Mr. Thomas Graves, F Goode, house standing, Spackman, Watson, Papworth, James Ivatt, house left; Chivers, Everett, the Black Horse; James Chivers, Smith, house left; the White Horse, Pain, house left, all in the main street. The cottages of Messrs Watson, Papworth, Everett, and the dissenting chapel. The following have had their houses destroyed:—Spackman, R. Ivatt, Rayment, Moore and, E. Rowed, Cat tress, A. Norman, Baird, Todd, T. Chivers, J. Chivers, Everett (tailor), Jacob Smith, Watson, W. Papworth, Emmerson, J. Everett, Hunnibun, Edmund Peal, Elson, John Smith, Hawkins, Mary Watson. Total loss nearly £100,000.

Besides these, there are between forty and fifty cottages destroyed. The losses will fall heavy on the Farmers' Union and the Farmers' Fire Insurance Offices to the amount of about £14,000.

The space traversed by the fire was very great. It seemed as if half the village had been laid in ruins; yet the fire had been very capricious in its course, for here and there was to be seen a house standing almost uninjured, in the very midst of black and smoking ruins.

The labourers worked willingly and well, so long as a chance of doing any good remained, but their efforts, aided as they were before long by the gentlemen from Cambridge, were so manifestly unavailing, that people at last stood by in helpless and despairing inaction. Farm after farm, cottage after cottage, fell before the flames; and by three o'clock in the morning, when further immediate danger might be said to be over, the awful destruction was completed. Happily, however, no human lives were lost, nor did any horses or cattle fall victims to the flames. A vast quantity of poultry and pigeons, and a good many pigs, were destroyed; but all the horses and neat stock were removed out of harm's way. Of course, numbers of poor families have been rendered homeless, and many of them have lost all their little store of furniture: we need hardly say that they have been cared for by their more fortunate neighbours, as well as circumstances would allow.

SPRING-TIME IN LONDON.

"ALL A-BLOWING! ALL A-GROWING!"

BY THOMAS MILLER.

"ALL a-blowing! all a-growing!" are the first sounds with which the spring flowers are ushered into the streets of London; and although not uttered by the lips of such fabled nymphs as the poets of old clothed in the richest hues of their imagination, and sent forth as attendants on blossom-bearing Spring, the voices still come like gentle greetings from old friends, all the sweeter through having been so long absent. Sometimes we see a pretty face, looking out through the homely bonnet, and behold a light and graceful form, and hear a clear musical voice calling out "Sweet primroses!" Another hurries along from street to street with the little basket balanced on her head, while with one hand she ever keeps throwing back the long silky hair that falls down and veils her deep violet-coloured eyes; and we think how some such figure haunted the poet's fancy when he peopled the vales of Arcady with the "sweet spirits of the flowers."

Now windows which have been closed throughout the long winter are again thrown open, and the pleasant breeze which has come from "far away o'er the sea," again blows freshly into those close and unhealthy smelling rooms. Over dead walls and high houses has the refreshing air climbed—escaping from courts in which there was no thoroughfare: through the steam of suffocating sewers it struggled; it shook off the malaria that clung to its skirts, as it swept over dark and stagnant ditches: over bone-boiling houses it hurried, and left the old posoe behind to float around the places where it was first engendered; and, though somewhat shorn of its sweetness and its strength, it comes like a welcome guest in at the open doors and uplifted casements of the poor. By it the grey hairs of that thin, pale-faced old man are uplifted: it tosses aside the long brown locks of the little grandchild that stands between his knees, fatherless and motherless—for the wind an hour ago blew over the empty house beside the black patrid ditch, where so many died during the past summer, and where that little orphan then lived. Even the inanimate lark that hangs by the window ing his wings in some silvery cloud high above the opening daisies.

The blessed breeze and the sweet sunshine have aroused the poor children who vegetate in courts and alleys; and these dirty images of innocence have descended from their miserable attics, and climbed out of the low damp cellars, and now, bare-headed and bare-footed and scantily clad, they are chasing each other like swallows, and appear as happy as if neither rags nor hunger existed in this great city of palaces, poorhouses, and prisons. A drum-beating boy with a gilded shuttlecock they never saw; nor would such things make them happier than those they have manufactured out of the corks they picked up among the sweepings of the fish-shop, and the feathers from the stall of a distant poulterer; while the bottom of a sauce-pan, or the crown of a hat, even the fire-shovel (if nothing else is to be had), furni h them with battledores. Somewhere those little ones have been sent, thrust their tiny arms through the railings where a lilac-tree was in leaf, and they have dug up the stones in the court and stuck the green lilac-twigs in the ground, and made themselves a garden, which they are watering out of oyster-shells and broken bits of pot; for the same instinct that leads a bird to build its nest, causes them to imitate the making of gardens. They collect the leaves of the turnip-tops which the greengrocer has thrown into the street, and, placing them on their little bare heads, march up and down the court, crying "All a-blowing! all a-growing!"

You peep through the open doors of little houses, at the fronts of which men and women are bartering old garments for roots or flowers, although in humbler neighbourhoods than the one our Artist has here pictured. And through those open doors you see a little sunbeam shoot between two dead walls, by the side of which a small portion of dark damp mould is portioned off, some-here about a yard and a half in length and eight feet in breadth, and those are the two gardens into which the "penny roots" will be stuck. Here they grow mustard-and-cress, on which the oats fight, and ever which Cinderella shakes her door mats, while scores of the ladies of the alley sit and seek each other amongst the leaves; nor will all the washing in the world cleanse your salad from these little superfluities. Then, just as the penny wall-flower had struck, and the two roots of daisies, which cost per dizen, were beginning to look as if the bodyhook looked as if it might live, and the lupin had still a few leaves left, and the Canterbury bell had one live shoot on, just as "the garden" was really promising to rear at least one root, the woman that lived in the two-pair floor front at last "broke" on the clothes-line (the line itself consisting of six separate pieces), and it broke, and every root broke too, and not one again raised its head. Then Billy was always howling his hoop, and could never turn it without going on the pavement and consequently placed his basket on the two scarlet runners that were coming up; and where the nasturtiums were set earwigs were ever creeping in and out, and long-bodied wire-worms, that looked up at Billy as if they would like to have a bit sociably, had put the sads in the sauce-pan, glee-fully. Then Polly ad told Mrs. So-and-so to save her soap-suds, to pour out on the roots of the little bit of grape-vine which only showed a leaf here and there, and she, wishing to give her landlady good soap, did so, and from what she says in screaming, Polly may come and ask an hundred questions as to what they saw, and what they did, and whither they went; and, from the answers they receive, go away convinced that there are no other children in this huge overgrown London, to be compared with their grandchildren. May heaven shower its blessings on the conceit, and they never have cause to think otherwise!

"ALL A-BLOWING! ALL A-GROWING!"—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

Besides such groups as these, the pavements were almost blocked up with little carts, in which many a kiss and many a scratch were exchanged, and in these children squalled and smiled as they were dragged part of the way to the fair. And the little nursery-maid, who still wore her workhouse dress, was compelled to turn round every few minutes and to threaten what she would do at the impudent but good-natured boys who would help to shove on the little chaise and cram a portion of their oranges or gingerbread into the children's mouths. Then one fine-looking, dark-eyed lad, after a harmless fight with the little maid, by some kind of freemasonry, was a minute or two after helping her to draw the chaise, and they went on chatting and laughing together, while he divided his fairings with her. On looking at that lad more closely, we remembered that for a month he brought our water-cresses, that for a fortnight he knocked at our door and called "Butcher!" then we lost sight of him for some weeks, and when he made his appearance again he came with our daily newspaper, followed by a dog, which he set on our favourite cat. Times got worse, and he came with another boy, and they swept the snow from the pavement for a penny, and as much bread and cheese as they could eat. Then he opened and shut a shop, but had the misfortune to break a pane of glass; and, as it was on Tuesday when the accident took place, and he was informed that the price of the pane would be stopped out of his week's wages; and as he calculated what that would amount to, and found that it would swallow up his whole week's earnings, why he went to breakfast, and never returned; and, just before Easter, he had raised a basket, and, either by money or credit, obtained a goodly show of roots and flowers, and, instead of "Water-cresses!" "Butcher!" or "Paper!" we heard his cheerful and well-known voice in the street, crying "All a-blowing! all a-growing!" He is now aspiring to a donkey and cart, and if we err not, to the little nursery-maid in the mob-cap and workhouse dress, and sweet smiling countenance (when pleased), which proclaims her to have come "of gentle kin."

Now, bundles of rhubarb, that run all to water in the pies and puddings, may be seen in the greengrocers' shops; and little new waxy potatoes, that have no taste, are ticketed a shilling a pound; and small gooseberries, that have the flavour of green-tea leaves, given to the old charwoman, and which she has kept stewing on the hob for a full hour, are ditto per half pint; and asparagus, that looks like candle-wicks, is tied up in bundles; while little salads made of two radishes, a couple of onions, a cw slice of beet-root, mustard, cress, and a half-penny bunch of water-cresses, sit in little baskets marked sixpence, and try to tempt the passers-by to purchase. Now, men, who smell of the aroma of old woods, stand before the doors of public-houses, with young honeysuckles and anemones, the roots buried in moss; and violets and primroses, fresh and blowing in their own native earth, just as they were dug up on the sunny banks by Sanderstead, or in the tree-shaded lanes around Cobham.

Finally, old hats, boots, shoes, and cast-off garments of every description are routed out at the cry of "All a-blowing! all a-growing!" and exchanged for flowers, the bearers of which barter on the principle of getting all they can and giving as little as possible in return. Even the lady of the house cannot resist the entreaties of her children, who, attracted by the well-known call, and the sight of the basket of flowers outside the window, drag her to the door, and let her have no peace until she has purchased the lovely heath, the beautiful Iris, the pot of American primroses, or the gaudier group of gold and silver-coloured crocuses. The servant-girl must also have her flower-pot in the high attic window, and she looks at it the first thing in the morning and the last at night, and feels thankful, in the words of Solomon, that "the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

SCENE OF THE FIRE AT COTTENHAM.—SKETCHED FROM LAMB'S' CORNER.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

WRECK OF THE "ROYAL ADELAIDE" STEAM-SHIP.

THE WRECK OF THE "ROYAL ADELAIDE."

The above Sketch of the present actual position of all that remains of this ill-fated vessel, taken from personal observation, as well as the detail of the facts and circumstances which led to the catastrophe, will serve to set the public mind right upon the subject, now that so many contradictory and almost incomprehensible statements have been published.

The first intimation the agents in London, of the Company to whom the vessel belonged, had of the wreck, was made on Sunday evening, March 31st, by the pilot Gillman, who arrived at Gravesend on that evening, with a barque he had in charge. He saw signals of distress from the Royal Adelaide at 7.30 P.M., the previous evening, about an hour after she had passed him, and after he had come to anchor for the night. She was then ashore on the Tongue Sands, about a mile west of the Tongue Light Ship; but the vessel Gillman had in charge was totally unable to render any assistance, for she had no boat that could live a minute in such a sea, with the whole force of the German Ocean, and a S.E. wind blowing almrricane at the time.

The gale continued with such unabated violence the whole of Sunday and Monday, that it was not until late in the afternoon of the latter day that any official notification of the wreck was made at Margate, and that by a diver who had gone out on Sunday night.

On Wednesday, April 3, Mr. James Cuttler, the Receiver of Admiralty Droits at Ramsgate and Margate, went on board the Tongue light-ship, to ascertain what her crew knew of the wreck; and, from the officer in charge of the vessel at that time, he received a report, the substance of which is, that the Royal Adelaide passed up the North Foreland and the Light at 6.30 P.M. on Saturday evening, and that in about an hour after she appeared to be ashore on the Tongue Sands, opposite the Shingles (where the Channel is but three-quarters of a mile wide); that she appeared to have lost her funnel, as her fires appeared coming up through the deck; and that thereupon the light-ship fired one gun and no more, and that they threw up no rockets, for they had none. The next morning, at daylight, they saw the vessel a total wreck, and then fired another gun.

On the two following days the wind blew so strong from the S.W., that it was useless for the divers to attempt any operations on the wreck, the sea swell over her was so heavy.

On Saturday morning the weather cleared up, the wind abated, and out went the divers, four in number, accompanied by a Government cutter, to protect them in their operations from the adventurers who followed in search of stray portions of the cargo, and whose boats numbered no fewer than sixteen craft.

We arrived very soon after the divers, and found it was then low water at the sands; yet at that moment the depth was nine feet, and the only portion of the wreck visible above the surface was about one-half the starboard paddle-wheel. On descending, we found the position of the wreck to be very different from that which has been generally represented. The Tongue Sand lies due east and west, and the wreck is represented as lying parallel with it and the Channel, while in fact she lies in a position the very contrary—that is to say nearly due north and south, or right athwart the Sands, with her bow to Margate. The whole of her stem and starboard quarter are completely gone; and she lies almost broadside on her larboard. The spokes of the two paddles still adhere, as well as a great portion of the engines and machinery; but the whole of the timbers that remain are loose and quivering, which renders the operations of the divers extremely perilous; while the sand has accumulated in enormous mounds in every part of the wreck, greatly impeding the recovery of such portions of the cargo as were stowed in the fore-part of the vessel. Many of the bodies of the poor people who were steerage passengers are lying about embedded in the sand.

The Company to whom this ill-fated vessel belonged have now in course of preparation a memorial to the Lords of the Admiralty and the Trinity Board, praying for an inquiry into the conduct of the officer in charge of the Tongue light-ship, on the night the wreck took place. The memorial is grounded on the following state of facts:—

"Mr. James Cuttler, the Receiver of Admiralty Droits at Ramsgate and Margate, did not receive any communication officially upon the subject of the wreck until about three o'clock on Monday afternoon, April 1st; the vessel having been wrecked on the Saturday previous at half-past seven P.M., within a mile of the above-named light. The communication then received by Mr. Cuttler was made by Mr. Fruin, the diver, who had been twice down in the wreck during Sunday night and Monday; and this communication Mr. Cuttler reduced to the form of a regular deposition, to which Mr. Fruin was sworn. Mr. Cuttler then wrote to Mr. Charlewood, the Superintending Commandant of the Coast Guard Service of that district, requesting to know whether any, and what, signals of distress had been seen by the Coast Guard of the Margate station from the wreck or the light-ship on the night of Saturday. The reply of Mr. Charlewood is to the effect that at the West-gate station only one signal of distress was seen and one gun heard from the Tongue light-ship, and that having seen and heard only one, it was presumed that the vessel had got off; that the night was dark and hazy, the wind blowing very hard from S.E. Mr. Charlewood then goes on to say that he had ordered a cutter to attend the wreck and protect the divers in their operations."

On Wednesday, the 3rd inst., Mr. Cuttler went out to the Tongue light-ship, for the purpose of ascertaining from the officer in charge of that vessel on the sight of the wreck, what he knew of the circumstances attending it; and the statement of that individual, as taken down in writing by Mr. Cuttler, is in these words :—

WRECKS ON THE ROCKS AT TYNEMOUTH.—SKETCHED FROM BELOW THE SPANISH BATTERY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

"On Saturday evening, the 30th ult., a large steamer, with a black hull, passed the Light towards the Prince's Channel, at about 6h. P.M. At about 7½h. P.M., same evening, saw a steamer ashore on the Tongue Sands, and saw a flare from her deck, as if her funnel was gone. Soon after, saw another flare, and then one gun was fired from the light-ship. It was then blowing very hard from S.E., and the sea very heavy. Did not send up any rockets, as the light-ship is not supplied with any. On Sunday morning, at daylight, saw the steamer a total wreck on the sands, and then fired another gun."

This is the statement upon which the present memorial is founded, and which the Company consider sufficient to call for an immediate investigation. A subscription has also been set on foot for the relief of the widows and orphans created by the disaster.

The crew of the light-ship consists of a master and mate, who relieve each other, and five men.

The body of a woman was found on the Maplin Sands, in the parish of Foulness Island, Essex, last week. In the pocket of her gown were several letters, two of which were dated respectively the 7th and 10th of March, 1850, from Warley Barracks, commencing "My dear wife," and signed "John Harrington;" also a pair of child's socks and a string of beads. The unfortunate person seemed, from appearance, to have been one of the passengers of the Royal Adelaide. A coroner's inquest returned a verdict of "Found dead." Other bodies had been more recently washed up, namely, that of a man with a tattooed arm, Harwich; a woman, at Great Holland; a child at Little Holland; and a child at Frinton; but as there could be no reasonable doubt that they were the bodies of parties drowned at sea, and probably belonging to the Royal Adelaide, Mr. Codd, the coroner of the district, declined holding inquests upon the bodies.

THE EQUINOCTIAL GALES.

GREAT LOSS OF PROPERTY AT THE MOUTH OF THE TYNE.

IN our Journal of last week we briefly recorded the loss of property at Tynemouth by the recent storm; we are now enabled to present to our readers a view of the sad scene, sketched by one of our own Artists.

We gather from the North and South Shields Gazette that, for a fortnight previous to the latter part of last week, the Tyne had presented at high tide, one unbroken sheet of water, with comparatively few vessels taking in or delivering cargoes upon its bosom. Indeed at one time there were not more than a dozen vessels lying between the Stanhope and Tyne Drops and Young's High Docks. The wind blowing continuously in a N.E. direction, a fleet of colliers—between four and five hundred sail—which had been detained in Yarmouth Roads, and thereabouts, waiting for a change of wind. In consequence of this, the towns of Shields were in a very depressed condition, and many of the seamen's wives and families were suffering considerably from the long delay of their husbands and friends. On Thursday afternoon, however, the wind chopped round, and blew a steady breeze from S.S.W.; and on Friday some of the best sailing vessels got down, and came into port safe. The Arcadia, of North Shields, ran on shore in the evening, however, and went to pieces.

During Friday night the wind increased into a gale, the sea running high on the Bar. As the morning tide began to make, and vessels were fast crowding in, it was plain to see that there would be mischief, and it was feared that some of them would be driven on shore on Tynemouth Rocks; for along with the light vessels that were coming from the south, were a lot of laden colliers which had gone out on Thursday, and which, seeing the gale coming on, were now putting back. The mischief soon commenced; for, between four and five o'clock in the morning, a Hanoverian galliot, the Luna, laden with grain, missed her helm, and run on to the rocks at Tynemouth, under the Spanish Battery. The Manet, a Swede, ran on the Black Middens about the same time. The Vigilant schooner followed her, and now lies with her bottom knocked out. At 4 P.M. the Mary Ann, of North Shields, laden coller, likewise struck on the rocks as she came in.

On Saturday afternoon the gale was at its height; and the large mass of the vessels from Yarmouth Roads had got down on the coast, along with others from the Continent. As it approached high tide, they began to crowd into the harbour. The narrow entrance through the Bar, and the fact of the ebb tide flowing, the vessels coming from foreign parts were brought up at the Low Light Point to be searched. In consequence of this, a fearful confusion took place. The vessels came running in, and before long they got entangled with those brought up; and what then half an hour such a smashing and crashing, and tearing away of yards and spars, and breaking in of stems and bowsprits, and carrying away of bowsprits, &c., took place as never was witnessed in the memory of the oldest of the first caller left the Tyne. Between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, the scene was awful to contemplate. There was a dense forest of masts from the Mussel Scarp to above Tegg's Nose. There were three or four distinct fields of confusion; and as others came in they had either to jam into the confused mass, run on to the Mussel Scalp, or be placed on the Low Light Shore. Eventually, a channel was cleared, and those inside got through, and into safety. All Saturday night and Sunday, steamboats were engaged hauling vessels out of the mass at the Narrows, and it was Monday forenoon before order was restored.

Meanwhile, the scene at the Bar was most exciting. The three lifeboats were out in the Narrows A brig had run into the Black Middens, and was lying on them with her sails all aback. The North Sunderland coast eventually got alongside, and brought the crew off. They took the vessel's anchor and cable in a manner, in a little schooner, wh ch was making the bar, grounded on the Spar Hawk, the limit of the Conservancy jurisdiction, and unshipped her rudder. She was being swept on to the rocks, and there was nothing but speedy destruction between her and her crew, when luckily she drove round the point, and, as by a miracle, amid the cheers of the spectators on the Spanish Battery, ran up high and dry on the beach at Prior's Haven, to the westward of Cullercoats, of Hye, was pitched upon the rocks in the Haven, immediately under the Garrison.

We regret to learn that, notwithstanding the vigilance of the river police, there was great plunder, the wrecking being mostly Irish.

On Sunday morning, the Sally, of North Shields, came ashore, on Tynemouth rocks, and at four o'clock in the afternoon, in the presence of thousands of spectators, she went to pieces. The scene at the breaking up of this vessel was most imposing. She was lying on the rocks, sea after sea leaping over her; in a moment she was seen to part asunder, and within five minutes there were not two planks or ribs of her left together.

So far as we have ascertained, amid all this loss of property, not one life has been sacrificed, thanks to the lifeboats, and the brave fellows who risked their lives in them.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL SCHOOLS.—On Tuesday the official report of her Majesty's Inspector of Schools, respecting the Greenwich Hospital Schools, was printed by order of the House of Commons. There are 800 boys in the schools, and, according to a new dietary table, the weekly cost of the whole 800 boys was £121 3s. 8½d., or a little more than 3s. 0d. per boy daily. A saving of some hundreds annually has been effected by leaving off beer. The inspector adds: "The saving of beer has moreover an important bearing on the morals of the institution; although the allowance to each boy was not enough to hurt him, yet several allowances clubbed together afforded the means of intoxication, and any cases of intoxication which have occurred in the institution have been supposed to have arisen in this way." In regard to the 969 boys

LEICESTER-SQUARE SOUP KITCHEN.—The monthly report for March, which has just been issued, states that want of employment and consequent privation is still lamentably felt, not only by servants, but by mechanics, artisans, and labourers. There have been relieved with soup and bread 6,000 at the kitchen: Men, 2227; women, 782. Homes—Men, women, and children, 24,877. Total, 33,886 The establishment for the Reformation of Juvenile Criminals, St. Ann's-street, Westminster (from which six emigrants were recently sent to New York), has been assisted by a supply of 192 gallons of soup and 48 quarters loaves during the month. In the asylum, 194 women and 443 men, making a total of 637 persons, have had the comfort and protection of a home, and the supply of a morning and evening meal. Amongst the persons relieved are many female servants, footmen, and butlers, who, having been long out of employ, are not able, from want of clothes, to apply for situations, but are now, from aid granted by the institution, endeavouring by "jobbing" to obtain suitable apparel, whereby they may reinstate themselves in their former positions. The names of upwards of 700 individuals of all classes of domestic servants, artisans, and labourers have been registered, and their characters carefully investigated—of whom 13 men and 66 women have been sent after respectable situations. Applications are daily being made at the office, personally and by letter, for servants, &c., which are immediately attended to by sending suitable persons on the registry to wait upon the parties. Several of the metropolitan clergy have followed the example of this institution and established free registries at the vestry-rooms of their respective churches. From the facilities afforded to employers and unemployed by this method, local advantages would be derived in parishes by the general adoption of free registries in every vestry and workhouse in the metropolis.

CURIOUS APPLICATION.—Mr. Davenport, the solicitor, applied to the magistrates at Liverpool during the week, on behalf of Mary M'Court, for a summons against the captain of a ship, which, arrived in the Mersey on Sunday last. The girl (as she stated) had gone on board the vessel at New Orleans, to see a female friend, named Miss Grace, off, when the captain forced her into the cabin, and would not permit her to go on shore. She was accordingly (as she said) brought to Liverpool, and left on shore without money or friends. The summons was granted.

WATERLOO-ROAD RAGGED AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.—The first annual meeting in support of these schools was held at Hookham-hall, Waterloo-road, on Monday; Mr. D. Wire in the chair. The chairman having addressed the meeting in advocacy of the system adopted by the promoters and supporters of the ragged schools, for reforming the juvenile population of the metropolis, called upon the secretary to read the annual report. It appeared that the schools had been opened about eighteen months ago, and since that period between three and four hundred children of both sexes had entered, and many of them turned out most useful and creditable members of society. The receipts of the past year amounted to £102 16s. 11½d., and the expenditure to £104 3s. 3½d., leaving a debt to the treasurer of £1. Mr. Josiah Conder and several other gentlemen addressed the meeting. At the close of the evening a liberal subscription was made; and a vote of thanks having been passed to the chairman, the assemblage separated.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Tuesday last, the Queen, the Prince Consort, and the Royal children honoured this theatre with their presence; and not the least gratifying circumstance in the performance was to observe the delight evinced by "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" in the Royal box; her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert repeatedly giving the most gracious and marked applause to Mdme. Sontag. The first scene of "Il Barbiere" passed with considerable applause; but the impatience of the public to behold the great Rosina was very strongly marked, and her entrance was hailed with the loudest applause. The absolute silence that followed during the introduction of "Una voce" was the more striking when contrasted with the enthusiastic applause which marked the conclusion of the first musical phrase; and from that moment the encores and the recalls were constant. Since her trip to Paris the voice of Madame Sontag having attained strength has a more mellowed sweetness. Her store of notes appears inexhaustible, when she pours forth her vocal embellishments so infinitely varied -some sparkling, playful, and fresh as the warbling of a lark, and relieved by harmonic trills and pathetic tones which strongly appeal to the feelings.

The part of Bartolo is essentially the creation of Lablache. Beaumarchais never wrote it; Rossini never composed it. Who has it will die. Fortunately, it still lives in all its matchless charm, to the delight the public, and to the enduring honour of the great Neapolitan whose genius has nobly rescued so many secondary parts from their supposed inferiority. The improvement of Belletti and of Calvari since last year was most signally marked in the "Barbiere." The whole performance was a scene of constant excitement It was with difficulty, and after prolonged resistance, that Mdme. Sontag caused singing Rode's variations three times. Recalled with the other singers at the fall of the curtain, she was also once more recalled alone.

On Thursday, Madame Sontag appeared, for the first time in this country, in the part of Zerlina, "Don Giovanni," Don Giovanni. Her debut in her character in this character, with her native music, the highest expectations were entertained: they were not only realised, but surpassed. She played with that timid espiéglerie which is the characteristic of the part; and to the music, sung with traditionary respect for the score; she maintained "the magic of sound" by the pure simplicity and pathetic sympathy of her utterance. Only those who have witnessed her performance of Susannah in the "Nozze," can form an adequate idea of her interpretation of Zerlina.

Parodi, in her tragic part, showed herself a worthy pupil of the great Pasta; and Giuliani gave its full value and a real charm to the character of Elvira—so essential to the scene in the graveyard. The grim visage of Don Giovanni, Coletti, has returned from St. Petersburgh, with the full plenitude of his former voice, but a much better actor in Don Giovanni, in which last year he lacked the elastic gaiety and the gallant grace characteristic of the part. Lablache was loudly applauded and justly encored in "Il mio tesoro." The two great dancers, Carlotta Grisi and Marie Taglioni, were rewarded by the warmest greetings, for the flitting bonnet Monsieur Monnet, by dancing the "Tarantella." The choruses were in admirable voice, and "Viva la Libertà" sung with the dramatic assistance of the mute mimic performers, was one of the great successes of the night. That which surpassed all others was "Vedra Carina."

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Grisi and Mario's return on Tuesday night, in Donizetti's opera, based on Victor Hugo's terrible drama "Lucrezia Borgia," was hailed with peals of applause. The tenor was the first recognised in the crowded house, and welcomed with a loud hum; it seemed as if the audience would never cease from the expression of their welcome. He sang his opening air, "Di pescatore ignobile," to perfection; and in the cantabile, in the second act, with Grisi and Tamburini, the delight of execution was equally beautiful, but indulgence was claimed for him before the third act, on the ground of sudden hoarseness, and he omitted the interpolated air of "Alla." In the death scene, which he acted with much truthful feeling and power, there were not the slightest traces of hoarseness. Grisi's Lucrezia was a grand triumph. Her vocal and histrionic genius shone supreme in the aria d'entrata, to the concluding outbursts of the mingled grief and despair at Gennaro's death. Her novel cadences in the cavatina were exquisitely executed, and the delicacy of her piano passages could not be surpassed.

Tamburini's fine acting of the Duke contributes much to the general effect; and it is to be regretted that his vocal powers are not equal now for the execution of the grand scena.

Mdlle. de Meric was to have appeared as Orsini, but bills were posted at the doors, announcing her indisposition, and the substitution of Mdlle. Dworzki, whose name appears on the prospectus, and who sang in the National Anthem on the opening night. To state that this débût was a complete failure, scarcely suffices, without the expression of our amazement at the hardy attempt to introduce an artiste for whose pretensions we, in vain, sought a single redeeming point. We have already alluded to the loud and angry hisses heard in Orsini. Some of the most striking situations in the opera were ruined by this disastrous exhibition, which, although received with the polite forbearance of profound silence, was only the prelude to the hisses. Negliati, Polonini, Lucchesi, Marini, Rache, and Salvi, gave effect to the subordinate parts; but Marini's thundering tones were missed in the Chorus of Masques; and it was curious that neither Formes nor Lablache were to replace him in the music.

"Norma," and the second and third acts of "Massaniello," with the new tenor Tamberlik, and Massol, were Thursday night's entertainments, Mario's only appearing the performance of "I Puritani," as originally announced. In "Norma" there were changes from last season's cast, Mdlle. Vera succeeding Mdlle. Corbari in Adalgisa, Mdlle. Cotti replacing Madame Bellini in Clotilde, Formes being Oroveso, vice Marini, and Tamberlik following Salvi in Pollio.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured the performance of "Norma" with their presence; the house was quite crowded. Grisi was again in magnificent voice, and created the part of Norma. The part, in which she was last year armed every favourable impression that was raised by his Masaniello, but he proved himself to be the first Pollio ever heard in this country, bold and decided. Anything more manly and impressive than his opening cavatina was never heard, and he acted and sang throughout with passionate energy and the most refined taste. The Druid High Priest of Formes was also a great part, totally differed from the Italian mode of playing the character; he invested it with German mysticism, until the feelings of the father found vent in the concluding scene on the discovery of Norma's dishonour, when Formes displayed tragic powers of a most elevated school. His powerful organ told grandly in the concerted pieces. Mdlle. Vera's Adalgisa was highly interesting, and she sang with the greatest expression and taste. The first duo between her and Grisi was perfect—the second one will gain by more rehearsals. On the whole, the ensemble was the most finished interpretation of "Norma" ever given in this country—the working up of the crescendo by Costa, in the finale was transcendently grand.

ST. JAMES'S.

The season or French plays commenced on Friday, and was inaugurated with M. Scribe's "Bertrand et Raton," the character of Bertrand being confided to M. Bressant, the original representative, when first produced at Paris, in 1834. His performance was throughout admirable for its sang froid and courtly bearing.

On Monday, "L'Ecole des Vieillards" was presented, the part of Danville being performed by M. Leach: the latter had also made her first appearance, as Hortense, and as Rosaline in "Les Projets de Mariage," in which latter piece M. Samson took the part of Pedro. The house was well attended.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Stirling Coyne's version of "The Vicar of Wakefield" was performed on Thursday, and we are thus enabled to compare it with Mr. Tom Taylor's, at the Strand Theatre. The former drama is in two acts, and that of presents only the "Autumn" and "Winter" adventures and perils of the worthy Vicar, in a sort of "new edition, with the latest additions and improvements." The dramatic personæ are the same as those portrayed by the author of the Goldsmith drama, but as Mr. Coyne has retouched them. This remark particularly applies to Mr. Buckstone's Moses, which was exceedingly absurd. Mr. Wallack's Primrose was good, its scenes good as the whole, it was better. The principal characters were, indeed, Mr. Selby's Captain Scuggers, and the Lady Blarney and Miss Skeggs of Miss P. Horton and Mrs. Fitzwilliam. Miss Fortescue was provided with a song which proved effective. Olivia was impersonated by Miss Reynolds, who acted with nature and feeling. The piece was frequently applauded, and, though towards the conclusion it proved rather heavy, may be pronounced successful.

STRAND.

We have seldom seen a new piece which has so well pleased us as a drama in one act, produced at this theatre on Monday, under the title of "Poor Cousin Walter." It is by Mr. Palgrave Simpson, who has shown in it much skill and facility in both modes of dramatic dialogue: he passes from grave to gay with the utmost ease and tact The general style, too, is one of remarkable elegance. The scene is laid in Hazelton Hall, in the middle of the 17th century, the present possessor of which, Jasper Hazelton (Mr. Norton), has come into possession of the estate by means of a forged will; but he ease his conscience, has brought up his brother's son, the rightful heir, in a way to command his gratitude. The boy is of a pure and generous disposition, but esteemed as a bumpkin by himself and his cousin, Philip (Mr. W. Farren, jun.), whose better fortune, as the son of Jasper, makes him a little vain. But he is romantic withal; and being in love with Helen (Mrs. Stirling), the daughter of Sir Argent Busyant, Knt. (Mr. G. Cooke), feels desirous to learn whether he is loved for himself alone or for his wealth. Philip accordingly practises a ruse upon the lady, and passes himself off as his "poor cousin Walter," much, as we may readily conceive, to the annoyance of his father. Matters, too, are soon hurried to a crisis. Sir Argent, fond of surprises, makes a sudden visit, with his daughter, to the hall, and both are soon introduced to the real "poor cousin Walter," whom, however, they mistake for the son. It is a case of love at first sight; and, in a delicately managed scene, the situation is beautifully brought out. But the secret of Jasper's fraud is known to Helen, from the written death-bed confession of an accomplice in it; and, being a girl of generous principles, she resolves upon testing her lover, by showing him the document and insisting upon the restoration of the rights to the defrauded heir. In this way the important evidence alluded to comes into Walter's keeping. Strong and wild is the temporary struggle he suffers; but after a while he is enabled to resist the temptation, and commits the proof of his uncle's guilt to the flames. Mistaking the young man's motive with his person, poor Helen gives him up all for lost. But an éclaircissement soon takes place; Philip and his father enter to explain the mistake that she has made between the cousins; and, in so doing, place the conduct of Walter in its true light before him, therefore she now devotes herself without any moral reservation whatever; and, after admonishing Jasper of his guilt, and reconciling Philip to his disappointment, concludes the piece with appropriate reflections, and leaves the audience in a state of delightful sentiment.

This little drama was capitally acted. Mr. G. Cooke, who made his first appearance here, will prove a great acquisition to the company. Mr. Leigh Murray acted with modesty and force; his delineation of the rustic gentleman was perfect; while Mrs. Stirling, in the heroine, performed with that exquisite propriety which distinguishes her best impersonations. It is needless to add that the piece was perfectly successful.

MARYLEBONE.

T. is theatre has been re-opened under the management of Mr. Kinloch and Mr. Stirling. On Monday "Othello" was performed; Mr. Brooke performing the Moor, and Mrs. Seymour Desdemona

DRURY-LANE.

"The Passing Cloud," a domestic drama, in two long and elaborate acts, by Mr Bayle Bernard, produced on Monday night, is one of the best, if not the very best, of that gentleman's productions. In it he has aimed at, and in a great measure attained to, the dignity of a poet. The plot is simple, perhaps common and melodramatic enough; but the tone, colouring, and general purpose entitle it to be considered as a work of art. In some part, it is an experiment on the public taste, and calls for more patience than English audiences are willing to accord; but, in these particulars, the latter need educating into that appreciation of dialogue which distinguishes the French and German theatre. The scene is laid in Bremen, where one Albert Bannanen (Mr. Vandenhoff) has risen into wealth and importance as a merchant and magistrate, by no blast with a taste for the arts, and living in elegant style, with one Linda, his reputed daughter (Miss Faucit), and her supposed father, Linda is, however, the child of his brother, Moritz (Mr. Anderson), who, many years ago, at Leghorn, was convicted of felony, and condemned to the galleys. Linda is, however, unconscious of all this, being brought up from her cradle by her uncle, in ignorance of her parentage, and as his own child. But it happens that Moritz, although a criminal, is yet human: impelled by his paternal feelings, he has come to enquire, at Bremen, after his daughter, and, as a ragged wanderer, receives benevolence from his daughter, much to his joy, which, however, he permits not to betray him into a declaration of their relationship. Here he perceives, as a distinguished guest in his brother's house, the accomplice of his crime, Colonel Rhenberg—and, at his personal peril, remains on the spot, to baffle his evil purposes. In possession of a certified copy of Moritz's trial and conviction, this wretch causes the Christian name to be altered, and thereby forges the false alliance. The beauty of the dialogue and situations held the audience enwrapt, and extorted the loudest applause. The elaborate development, however, of inner feeling attempted by the author was towards the end misunderstood, but this inconvenience was but indeed as "a passing cloud" in the course of representation, and the piece concluded triumphantly. When some needful reductions are made, there is no doubt that the success of this really fine drama will be complete

On Wednesday, Mr. Bunn took his annual benefit at the ST. JAMES'S THEATRE, on which occasion Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean appeared in "King René's Daughter;" Mr. Leman and M. Jullien in the comedy of "Le Jeu de l'Amour et du Hasard." Other entertainments were also provided, Mr. Bunn delivering the first part of his "Monologue," Mr. Benedict and Mr. Lindsay Sloper performing on their grand piano, and Madle. Carlotta Grisi and M. Silvain dancing the "Truandaise."

A theatrical demonstration in favour of the Royal Exposition of 1851 is advertised as about to be made at SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE. One night's benefit in its favour has been announced, under the patronage and presidency of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. It is recommended that the artists engaged should second the good intentions of the management, by volunteering their gratuitous services on the occasion.

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Mendelssohn's oratorio, "Elijah," two performances of which took place at Exeter Hall on the 10th and 12th inst. (last night), and which, under the direction of Birmingham Festival, has never been heard with such an approximation to perfection in this country, not so much from the effectiveness of the principal singers as from the chorus and orchestra, was given on the occasion of the present week, however, unexceptionable as regards Miss Dolby, the Misses A. and M. Williams, and Mr. Lockey, who are thoroughly conversant with Mendelssohn's work. Miss Catherine Hayes and Herr Formes are as yet not altogether familiar with the composer's intentions. The German singer has certainly improved in his interpretation since we first heard him at the Liverpool Musical Festival; but he has yet to combine refinement of style with his great dramatic power, before he can approach those of the first rank; still, in point of vocalisation he is superior to Phillips. Miss Catherine Hayes seems to have studied the notation of the chief soprano part more than the words; hence it was that the celebrated scene of the Prophet and the Widow was coldly received, and the air lacked all declamatory feeling. The great air opening the second part, "Hear ye, Israel," was not sufficiently impressive; her upper notes in the two quartets, "Holy, holy," and "Oh, come every one that thirsteth," and "Elijah." Was exactly the tone of the standing works of the sacred répertoire, certainly as long as the present generation is in existence, it is of importance that every English singer should be as familiar with the music as the text of the Bible. The execution of the three elaborate instrumental movements was admirable; the feelings of despair and sorrowful supplication in the two opening choruses were finely depicted by the singers, and the solemnity of the chorus "Yet doth the Lord" adequately sustained. The choruses of the Priests of Baal were splendidly done; and the "Hear and answer" was thrilling. In the chorus "The watching over Israel," was given with exquisite light and shade, the trebles singing delicately, as also in the short chorus "He that shall endure." The grand picture, "Behold, God the Lord passed by," was remarkably vivid; "The still small voice" was most poetically rendered. In point of massive grandeur, the chorus "But the Lord from the north," was one of the finest displays of the night, and the finale was a stupendous exhibition of choral force. The entire performance advanced the reputation of this excellent body of amateurs in the highest degree, and the strictest evidence of their extraordinary improvement under Costa's artistical guidance.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The symphonies at the third concert, last Monday evening, were Spohr's in C minor, No. 3, Op. 78, and Beethoven's in B flat, No. 4; and the overtures, Weber's "Ruler of the Spirits," and Ferdinand Ries' "Don Carlos." Spohr's work abounds with his peculiarities of instrumentation and unconventional bearing, it is destitute of original invention. Right welcome was the glorious B flat of Beethoven: the surpassing loveliness of the adagio, the captivating piquancy of the minuetto, and the colossal proportions of the opening and last movements, were the highest possible treat. The overture, like the symphonies, was an antithesis: the one was sublime, the other ridiculous. Weber concluded gloriously the first part; Ries' was a walking-out piece of music for the amateurs.

The solo performer was Mr. Cooper, a member of the Royal Italian Opera orchestra, who last season made such a successful début at the Philharmonic concerts. He selected Mendelssohn's violin concerto, the only one the composer wrote for that instrument—a fact much to be regretted. Mr. Cooper made a powerful impression on his auditory by his masterly interpretation of the work, particularly in the andante, in which his breadth of tone and impassioned style quite startled those critics who regard the execution of intensity as the part of an English player as an impossibility. Mr. Cooper's mechanism is that of a thorough master, and he appears to combine all the necessary ingredients of a great player. In his style an increase of refinement is the desideratum. He was much applauded at the close of the concerto, both by band and audience. Amongst the latter was the Duke of Cambridge. The vocal portion of the concert comprised "Ah perfido" from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens;" Nozze di Figaro;" Mendelssohn's quartett, "When the west;" and Rossini's duo, "Quis est homo," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater;" sung by the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Benson and Bodda. The fourth concert will be on the 22d inst.

WESTERN MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

The 11th anniversary festival was celebrated on Tuesday night, in Freemasons' Hall; the accomplished President of the Society, Lord Saltoun, in the chair. The poetry wedded to music by the ancient Madrigal composers is so full of gallantry and devotion to the fair sex, that it is not surprising the members of the society are anxious to invite living illustrations of the poet's enthusiasm and the musician's impassioned strains at their festivals; and the gallery of the beautiful hall was, therefore, filled with ladies—realizing the words in Wilbye's Madrigal

Where smiling roses and sweet lilies sit,
Keeping their spring-tide grains all the year.

After the banquet, the usual disposition of the company took place—some airy visitors, non-vocalists, occupying tables behind the chair, and the singers being classed in the body of the hall, exhibiting an effective of some forty-eight basses, thirty-six tenors, and fourteen altos, which, with the fifteen boys of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey, made, with the conductor, Mr. Turle, the organist of the Cathedral, 114 voices, amongst whom were the Rev. Mr Helmore. Professor Day, or, Messrs. Lawler, Land, Genge, Fitzwilliam, Brinley Richards, Anderson, Gray, Forbes, Clinton, King, Oliphant, Bishop, Keppingham, Banmer, Hall, Walmesley, J. Calkin, Donald King, W. Seguin, Barnby, Howe, Coward, Griesbach, Banting, Rawlins, A., Novello, &c.—a combination of professional and amateur talent which ensured the effective performance of the selection. The scheme comprised R. Farrant's Full Anthem, &c. (a.D. 1580), "Lord, for thy tender mercy's sake;" C. Ferrabi's Madrigal (1576), "My Lady still abhors me," J. Ward's "Hope of my heart" (1613); T. Weelkes's "When Thoralis delights" (1600), and "Now is my Cloris" (1598); J. Farmer's "Now each creature" (1598); J. Wilbye's "The Lady Oriana" (1601), and "Sweet Honey-sucking Bees" (1609); T. Morley's "First fire" (1595); H. Purcell's "In these delightful" (1676); J. Benet's "All creatures now" (1601); Luca Marenzio's "So saith my fair" (1580), and the customary finale, J. Jarvis's "Waltz" (1797). There were numerous encores in this judiciously selected and well-executed programme. The usual loyal and occasional toasts were drunk, little time being lost in oratory. A just tribute was paid to the indefatigable zeal of the worthy President in upholding the Society, and to the great exertions of Mr. Budd, the honorary secretary, whose absence, from severe indisposition, was much to be regretted.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The Duke of Cambridge and a numerous assemblage of aristocratic and literary amateurs were present at the second meeting, on Tuesday, to listen to a highly interesting programme, executed by a "quadrumvirate" of the Germ, French, Italian, and English artists. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's quartet, Op. 44, in E minor, beginning with the "Allegro," and ending with the finale, but for the two original middle movements substituting fragments from composer's posthumous work, Op. 81, including an andante in E major, and scherzo in A minor. We cannot approve of this kind of arrangement, even although it bears the high sanction of Beethoven's name. Two such interpolated movements are "gems of art," no doubt, but the principle of introference with a composer's work is bad; and there can be no objection to listen to these posthumous works as the lamented composer has unfortunately left them, without mutilation of his other compositions. Beethoven's quatuor, Op. 10, in E flat, was also given in magnificent style by Ernst, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti. With Sterndale Bennett's Beethoven's sonata in G, No. 3, for piano and violin, the inimitable Ernst found an admirable coadjutor. The playing of Bennett in some of Mendelssohn's "Songs without Words" was distinguished by poetic feeling as well as perfect mechanism.

The third matinée will be on the 23rd instant.

MDME. SCHWAB'S EVENING CONCERT.

The annual concert of the above pianiste took place, on Wednesday night, at the Princess's Concert-room. She performed in Mozart's quartuor in E flat with Mr. Thirlwall (violin), Mr Hill (viola), and Mr. Reed (violoncello); with Signor Briccialdi (flautist); and in a duo for two pianofortes, with Mr. T. Prosser, the composer. The vocalists were Mdlle. Nau, Mdme. F. Lablache, Misses Poole, Messent, Pyne, Thirlwall, Leslie; Signor Matras, Herr Mengis, Messrs. Burdini, and Whitworth. Miss Messent was encored in Sir H. R. Bishop's air "Tell me, my heart," and Mdme. F. Lablache, in a Scotch ballad.

MR. G. A. OSBORNE'S MATINEE MUSICALE.

This clever composer and pianist gave the first of a series of three matinées, on Thursday, at the Beethoven Rooms. He performed in his own trio in G, with Herr Ernst and Signor Piatti; and the same artists executed Beethoven's trio in D for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. Mr Osborne also played some of his own pleasing compositions, and, with Ernst, Musgrave's sonata in A minor. Miss Catherine Hayes was encored in Mr. Osborne's elegant ballad "Oh! sing to me," which she sang very nicely. Mrs Hampton, the sister of Mr. Osborne, sang expressively one of Lover's songs—she has a speciality in her style of rendering Irish melodies. The room was filled to overflow with a fashionable assemblage.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Mr. Henry Phillips and Mr. Henry Smith gave musical entertainments on Monday last, the former at St. Martin's Hall, and the latter at Crosby Hall; a concert also took place at the Horns tavern, given by Mr. W. Wilson, at which Misses Poole, Cubitt, Thornton, Harris, Ransford, and Mrs. Wilson, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Genge, Smith, Ransford, and Ford, were the chief singers.—The fourth concert of the Amateur Musical Society will take place next Monday.——On Tuesday, an evening concert will be given, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on behalf of Mr. Henry Boys, a much respected professor, who has been disabled from following his career by paralysis: the most eminent artistes, native and foreign, will give their services.

——On Wednesday will be the fourth and last musical evening of Mr. Lucas, Mr. Wilcox's concert at Exeter Hall, Mr. Szczepanowski's matinée, and Mr. Chandler's evening concert.——On Friday, Miss Chandler will give an evening concert at the Music Hall.——On the same evening, the London Sacred Harmonic Society, under Mr. Surman's direction, will perform Handel's "Judas Maccabæus," with the Misses A. and M. Williams, Stuart, Messrs. Sims Reeves, T. Wilkins, and Bodda as chief vocalists.——On Thursday Mr. Lumpedan gave his second lecture on Music at the Wellington Club.——A meeting of the committee of management for Mr. Platt's Farewell Concert on Wednesday, the 24th, met at the Hanover-square Rooms on the 10th inst., Sir George Smart in the chair. It was announced that Mr. Lindley, who is about to retire from the orchestra, will perform on this occasion, in a trio by Corelli, assisted by Messrs. Lucas and Howell; Mrs. Anderson will play a pianoforte fantasia; and the splendid band, consisting of the entire Royal Italian Opera orchestra and Philharmonic Concert, will, under Costa's magic ôdion, execute either three overtures, or a symphony and two overtures. The vocalists will be Miss Catherine Hayes, Miss Ellen Lyon, Miss Sessano, Miss Dolby, Mrs. Shaw, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Do by, Miss Birch, and Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr Benson, and Mr. Lockey, tenors, and Mr. H. Phillips, Mr. Machin, and Signor F. Lablache.——Mr. Wyle's matinées musicales will commence next Monday, at Willis's Rooms.——Mr. G. and A. Case's concert will be at the London Tavern, on the 19th.

LOSS OF THE BARQUE "CONCORDIA."—The crew of this ship landed, from her Majesty's brig Alert, Commander Dunlop. The Concordia, registered 411 tons, belonged to Mr. Thomas Peake, of Plymouth, and was commanded by Mr. Barrett, who, with a crew of fourteen hands, left Plymouth about Christmas last, bound to Sierra Leone, for timber. The barque had 250 tons of ironstone for ballast, and, on the 18th of February, in 11 N. lat., when under a.l plain sail, steering S. by W. half W., with a light wind from the N W., thick hazy weather, strong westerly current, struck on a sand-bank at low water. Got boats and provisions ready in case the ship's boats. By the time the ship bumped up three miles further inland, and they found that they were in the Bay of Yoff, to the south of Senegal, near Cape Verde, and seven miles north of Goree Island. The natives, robust, tall men, continued to increase in numbers in the vicinity of the ship, and in the course of three days numbered, perhaps, 8000 persons on the shores, and from 800 to 1000 in the ship. Captain Barrett, on the 19th, went to Goree, and, on the 20th, returned with two French men and an interpreter, who erected tents on shore, but the natives were gnawed, and eventually stole everything off the decks and out of the hold, all loose wearing-apparel, chests, &c., and tore away the deck-house, uniwarks, stanchions, &c. The French commodore King Joseph sent a post-captain and a lieutenant to inspect the condition of the barque, which was irretrievable. Her crew, by the help of canoes, were, with the remnant of their luggage, conveyed across the tumultuous surf, by the Pap mountains, to the French station at Goree, and placed, on the 23rd of February, on board L'Etile razée line-of-battle ship, now used as a guard-ship, where, among other prisoners from the French fleet, there was the crew of a brig-cutter, the master of which, an Englishman, had been murdered by them, and his vessel run ashore. The Concordia's crew complain that, for eight days, they had the same poor fare and foul water as were served out to prisoners, and that at night they lay where they could. Five of them subsequently had the yellow fever, and one died on board the Alert. On the eighth day, the 2nd of March, they took passage in a French merchant barque, and in twenty-four hours reached the Gambia, where they were held in charge by the English Consul until the 13th, when they joined the Alert, and thus reached Plymouth on the 4th inst.

THE HULKS.—A somewhat serious case of insubordination has occurred on board a of the convict hulks at Portsmouth harbour. A telegraphic despatch from the Admiral Superintendent of the Dockyard at Portsmouth was received at the Admiralty on Monday forenoon, announcing that the convicts on board the Stirling Castle, moored near the entrance of the harbour's mouth, had been in a state of insubordination during the whole of Friday night, which still continued. Sir George Grey immediately despatched Mr. Voules, superintendent of convicts, to Portsmouth, to investigate the circumstances attending this proceeding, happily so infrequent. The convicts on board of that hulk are amongst the most unruly of the able-bodied portion of those condemned to various terms of transportation, who are placed there to undergo the preparatory stage of their discipline before they are selected for transmission across the seas, and the complement on board is from 400 to 500. This ennuie was followed by one on board the York, on Monday, when the convicts refused to go to work and commenced with the legs of their stools for bludgeons, and to use all sorts of abusive language to their keepers; but the officer who had charge of the ship promptly seized two of the ringleaders: one of these men received two dozen lashes, and he then asked for a glass of water, which being given him, he told the officer he did not care, and that he might flog away; his request was complied with, and he was ordered to receive two dozen lashes more. The disciplined labour force

THE EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

No. 681.—Crystal Tazza. No. 635.—Goblet and Cover. No. 626.—Glass Cup (Lower Empire). No. 636.—Tall Goblet, Rope Stem. No. 657.—Goblet with Lace Work.

ROMAN AND VENETIAN GLASS.

(Continued from page 232.)

In resuming our notice of this Exhibition, we cannot avoid remarking that the great success attending the present collection is conclusive evidence of the interest taken in the subject of Ancient Art; it is also clear that the public will not remain satisfied with an Exhibition which, being exclusive in its character, limits the display to such objects as can only be strictly considered works of Art, thereby causing the rejection of many relics of the highest historical value. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the year 1851 (destined to disseminate so much utilitarian knowledge throughout the world) will not be suffered to pass away without an attempt on the part of the Archæological Institute to illustrate the past. With the single exception of the British Museum, there is literally no place in this great metropolis to which the thousands of enquiring foreigners who will visit these shores can resort for the purpose of acquiring any information relative to those treasures of antiquity which this country is well known to possess; and there can be but little question that an Exhibition of Antiquities on a large scale would form an agreeable contrast and relaxation to minds fatigued with the contemplation of improved spinning jennies, or the latest inventions of Sheffield, Paris, Calcutta, or St. Petersburgh. Such a scheme, if carried into effect, would tend materially to assist the formation of the department for British antiquities in our national museum, which has been for some time in progress. It is becoming every day more desirable that records should be preserved of "merrie England in the olden time." A few years hence, and perhaps all traces of our former condition as a nation may be lost sight of or swept away in the restless torrent of "improvement." Nor is it by any means improbable that some useful hints may be derived by the modern artist from having the opportunity afforded him of studying the productions of bygone ages. Many of these will stand the test of comparison with those of the present day: for instance, in the article of glass, some of the forms of which cannot now be imitated.

We have elsewhere remarked on the popular fallacy regarding the early manufacture of this material; nor is this surprising, considering the great diversity of opinion upon the same subject entertained even by the best-informed. The story of the Phœnician navigators having accidentally made the discovery from kindling a fire on the sand of the sea-shore, is, of course, a mere traditionary legend; but it is not improbable that, in their intercourse with the natives of Britain, they may have introduced the knowledge of its manufacture, which was, in fact, successfully carried on at Sidon, whence even Imperial Rome itself was supplied. The East, indeed, seems always to have been the cradle of this science; and, in later times, Byzantium acquired great celebrity for the various methods practised there of engraving, stamping, and cutting glass. Of this, a more beautiful specimen could scarcely be desired than is presented by the tazza belonging to Baron Lionel de Rothschild, which is richly ornamented with a Bacchanalian subject, executed in bas-relief. This cup, as a work of art, must doubtless be highly prized; but, as an almost unique example of the productions in glass of that period, it is of priceless value. The dark green colour of which it is composed assumes a bright ruby or amethyst hue when held against the light, and it is represented in our Engraving as forming the centre of a very interesting groupe of objects formed of the same material, but of much later date.

After the taking of Constantinople, in 1204, it is probable that for a long period the method of ornamenting glass and many other arts which had formerly flourished there, and for which it had become famous, languished under barbaric influences, and became for a time almost extinct; but the Venetians, who soon after became the principal merchants for the supply of the civilized world, did not fail to avail themselves of so profitable an article of commerce, and, accordingly, we find the glass wares of Venice, and its adjacent city, Murano, soon became in great demand. At the latter end of the fifteenth and beginning of the sixteenth centuries, therefore, these towns had attained the height of excellence in this manufacture; and it is to this period that the beautiful crystal tazza, of which we give an Engraving, the property of Sir Charles Price, Bart., must be assigned, as also the other specimens we have engraved, the property of the Duke of Buccleuch and Mr. Slade.

Our next Engraving represents a figure of the Madonna and child, exquisitely carved in box-wood. It is attributed to Martin Schongauer, and must be considered a fine specimen of the German school, which is remarkable for its strict attention to the folds of the drapery, and the minutest details indicative of character or costume. This carving is the property of Mr. Magniac.

We have also selected the very curious steel casket, belonging to Mr. Hailstone, as a subject for the engraver. This ingenious specimen of the work of the sixteenth century, which possesses no less than thirty-six bolts, is in all probability the product of the metal manufactories for which Augsburgh and Nuremberg were celebrated. It is difficult to define the exact use to which these caskets were applied, but it is not unlikely that they were made to contain the trousseaux of brides, in accordance with the custom prevalent in old times, and hence they have been frequently called marriage coffers. In addition to this specimen Mr. Hailstone has contributed largely to this Exhibition, and was, we believe, one of the originators of it.

Amongst the numerous objects which we perceive have considerably swelled the catalogue, is a most valuable square silver dish of Roman workmanship found near Newcastle, the property of the Duke of Northumberland. On it are represented raised figures of Apollo, Diana, Juno, and Minerva. It is of considerable weight, and, as no other similar example is known to exist in England, its value must be great. We notice also some ancient British armlets of pure gold, twisted, which were dug up near Egerton, in Cheshire, and are the property of Sir Philip de M. Grey Egerton, Bart. Then there is a head of Henry the Seventh, executed in stone by Torregiano, who also constructed his tomb in Westminster Abbey; and the cup given by William Camden to the Paper Stainers' Company, with several other less important additions

We have previously alluded but slightly to the rather large number of enamelled works which this collection contains; not because this section of the Exhibition does not present many attractions, but because, these specimens deriving their value from colour rather than form, any engravings of them should be illuminated to do them justice. We cannot refrain, however, from mentioning the fine Hunting Horn said to have belonged to Francis the First, on which the whole history of Saint Hubert is depicted with all the accuracy of a finished painting. It formerly formed part of the Strawberry-Hill collection, but is now the property of Mr. Magniac. These enamels present a consecutive series of specimens of the art, from the earliest periods to the time when those of Limoges, in the sixteenth century, attained the height of perfection, and when artists of high renown did not disdain to furnish designs for the enameller; they are, consequently, particularly valuable as illustrative of the rise, progress, and decline of this branch of ancient art. In the earlier examples of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, we particularly noticed a very primitively formed Pyx, belonging to Mr. Rodhe Hawkins; and the Croziers, the property of Mr. Hailstone. Amongst those of later date our attention was arrested by the two Tazze exhibited by Mr. C. Tucker, on one of which the subject is painted en grisaille from a design by Giulio Romano.

No. 165.—Engraved Steel Casket, 16th Century.

No. 201.—Carved Boxwood Figure of the Virgin and the Infant Jesus.

Under the head of "Textile Fabrics," have been classed a variety of objects of considerable interest, amongst which are the embroidered Palls of the Fishmongers', Saddlers', and Ironmongers' Companies. There is a richly ornamented Cope of the thirteenth century, the property of the Earl of Shrewsbury, of which the morse and orfaries is covered with coats of arms of the Ferrars, Derbys, Granvilles, Champernoun, Newburgh, Mortimer, Percy, Despencer, and other noble families of that period. There are also some specimens of needlework exhibited by Lady Katherine Bolteau, the Earl of Enniskillen, and Mr. A. Lawson; and truly, if these objects were to be the means of re-introducing the taste for this or any other kind of female handicraft, by which the thousands of our distressed needlewomen could obtain a decent livelihood, their proprietors will have rendered both them and the State no small service.

BRITISH INSTITUTION EXHIBITION.—"THE COVENANT OF JUDAS."—PAINTED BY J. FRANKLIN.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

This effective picture, its painter, Mr. Franklin, has designated in the catalogue "The Covenant of Judas." The event is told in these words:—

14 Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,
15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.
16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.—St. Matthew, chap. xxvi.

The subject, we need scarcely observe, is of the highest class that has ever exercised the art of painting, in which the old masters maintain unapproachable excellence. Mr. Franklin's picture does not lack vigorous composition; the figures remind one of those in Haydon's large performances.

"The Covenant of Judas" hangs in the North Room of the Institution: its dimensions are 5 feet 2 inches in height, and 6 feet 6 inches in width.

CONSECRATION OF THE CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN HAMMERSMITH.

On Thursday last, this Church was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of London, in the presence of a large and highly-respectable congregation, and a number of the metropolitan clergy, who had been invited to attend. The Church, which has been erected in little more than six months, by the Messrs. Bird, of Hammersmith, from designs by Mr. A. Salvin, of Argyle-street, is a light and elegant structure, situated on the south side of the road at Shepherd's-bush; and its lofty and elegantly-proportioned tower and spire, rising to the height of nearly 150 feet, forms a conspicuous object from every point of approach. The visitors and residents of the district, who had been invited to witness the solemn ceremony of the consecration, began to arrive shortly after ten o'clock, and in the course of an hour the Church was filled in every part; the appearance of the interior, with its richly-stained glass windows, and the display of plate upon the communion-table, with the large number of clergymen in their official robes forming a very interesting and striking scene.

The Lord Bishop of London arrived precisely at half-past eleven o'clock, and was received at the western entrance by the clergy, who were ranged in two lines from the entrance-gate to the Church door. The procession was then formed in the following order:—The beadle, members of the committee, with the architect and builder on either side; the verger; the members of the choir, in their white surplices; the clergy of the choir, the parochial clergy, the church-wardens, the apparitors, his Grace the Bishop of London, the Chancellor, the Archdeacon, the Chaplain, the Registrar, the Archdeacons, and Rural Dean; the procession being closed by the clergy, two and two. On arriving at the communion-table, the Bishop was attended to the vestry by the Archdeacon of Middlesex, the Chaplain, and the Vicar of the parish, the Rev. Mr. Atwood; and, having assumed his robes, was again conducted to the communion-table, where the Rev. Mr. Atwood presented the petition praying his Lordship to consecrate the edifice. The petition having been read by the Registrar, the Bishop and Clergy proceeded from the east to the west end of the Church, returning up the nave, reciting alternately the 24th Psalm, commencing "The earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is." The Bishop having taken his seat on the north side of the communion-table, the deed of conveyance was presented to him by the Minister, and his Lordship then rose, and addressed the congregation as follows:—

Dearly beloved in the Lord: forasmuch as devout and holy men, as well under the Law as under the Gospel, moved either by the secret inspiration of the Holy Spirit, or by the express command of God, or by their own reason and sense of order and decency, have erected houses for the public worship of God, and separated them from all profane and common uses: which godly practice hath a manifest tendency to advance the honour of God's holy name, and to enliven the devotion of those who are engaged in his service: let us humbly hope that our Heavenly Father will favourably approve our present purpose, of setting apart this place in solemn manner, for the performance of the several offices of religious worship; and let us faithfully and devoutly pray for his blessing on this our undertaking.

After a solemn prayer from the Bishop, in which the blessing of God was invoked upon the Church and the various ceremonies to be performed therein, the Chancellor read the sentence of consecration, which was then signed by the Bishop and handed to the registrar.

The service of the day was then read by the officiating minister; and after the lessons and collect, the Bishop read a very impressive prayer in reference to the dedication of the Church. The morning service terminated with the 1st, 4th, 5th, and 7th verses of the 84th Psalm. Then followed the Communion service, which was read by the Bishop; and the Rector announced that divine service would be performed in the Church in future every Sunday morning at eleven, and every Sunday afternoon at half-past six, and morning prayers daily at eight o'clock. The 100th Psalm was then sung by the congregation—the organ, at which Sir George Smart presided, pealing out its solemn tones in harmony with the voices of the choir.

The Rev. Mr. Humphrey, the Bishop's Chaplain, then ascended the pulpit, taking his text from the Second Book of Chronicles, c. vi., v. 8. The rev. gentleman, in the course of a very eloquent and impressive discourse, alluded to the magnificent temple erected by Solomon in token of his homage, and as an acceptable offering to the Lord; and they were now, after an interval of 3000 years, imitating his glorious example; pointing out, at the same time, the marked and important distinctions that existed between a Jewish temple and a Christian church—between the sacrifice of goats and oxen, which were offered to propitiate God's mercy and goodness in this life, and the commemoration of the death and passion of our Saviour, which had opened up to the Christian the life everlasting in the next world, which enabled him to look across the Valley of the Shadow of Death to a world of immortality, which added earnestness to his supplication, and shed a ray of hope on his death-bed. However humble and unadorned the church of the Christian might be, the magnificent temple of Solomon, in all its glory, was not arrayed like one of them. The rev. preacher then referred to the great moral and social improvement that was observable in the neighbourhood of every newly-opened church, and the blessings it was calculated to confer upon the poor of a district which hitherto had not the advantage of a place of worship. In an age when a portion of the Church's children were perplexed, and when their enemies were resorting to every means of aggression, it was gratifying to see such visible marks of union and membership as were evinced on occasions like the present. These, indeed, were not times for sitting still and with folded arms, as if they were in security; on the contrary, they had great need to be up and doing, and he trusted they all would be found ready to aid in promoting the good work. After referring to the liberality with which his Lordship (the Bishop of London) had come forward to promote the present undertaking, he stated that the Church was already completed, and that no further funds were required for that purpose; but there was another building, next to the Church itself in importance, for which funds were required—he meant a school-house, in which the poor and the ignorant might receive that instruction of which they stood so much in need. The rev. gentleman concluded an eloquent address by calling upon all present to contribute according to their means for this benevolent object.

THE CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN SHEPHERD'S BUSH.—CONSECRATED ON THURSDAY.

After the Offertory and the prayer for the Church militant, the Bishop offered up a prayer to God to bless the religious solemnity of the day, and to grant that in this place then set apart for His service, his holy name might be worshipped in truth and purity to all generations.

At the conclusion of the service, the Bishop, attended by a procession arranged in the same order as at his entrance, proceeded down the aisle to the western door. The collection made at the Offertory was then understood, of very considerable amount, and will enable the trustees forthwith to commence the erection of a school-house, for which ground has been already procured.

The Church, of which we annex a front-and West View, consists of a nave with side aisles; a chancel, and a lofty pinnacled tower, with spire at the west end; and side entrance porches; the several gables having enriched crosses and other ornaments; the whole in the best periods of our ecclesiastical architecture.

The interior is entirely fitted with English oak; and the walls are decorated with appropriate inscriptions and diapers. The aisles are laid with Staffordshire red and buff tiles; and the chancel with Minton's encaustic tiles.

The donations have been numerous. The east window, of stained glass, has been presented by members of the Bishop's family; the west window by some residents in the neighbourhood of the Church; the two north windows in the chancel by Mr. W. Scott, resident in the neighbourhood; the south window in the chancel by the architect and builder; the two windows at the east ends of the north and south aisles by a number of the Essex clergy; as a mark of respect and regard for the bishop of the diocese. The small window near the roof of the chancel by the Bishop's chaplain; and the two quatrefoils in the nave by Mr. Willement; the organ, by some personal friends of the Bishop; the communion plate by his family; and the brass alms-dish by a number of the Essex clergy; and the font by the church-wardens of the Holy Trinity, Finchley, in testimony of their gratitude for the great assistance rendered to that district by the Bishop.

The Church is built at the expense of the Bishop of London, who endows it with £150 per annum out of the revenues of his see. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners add £40 per annum, being the amount of the reserved rent payable to them on account of the sinecure impropriated Rectory of Fulham and Hammersmith. It is to be the church of a new parish, which is to be named St. Stephen's, Hammersmith; the patronage to be with the Bishop of London for the time being.

The site has been given partly by the Messrs. Gomm, of Hammersmith, and partly by the Bishop, as Lord of the Manor, who has also purchased a piece of ground for a garden to the Parsonage House, which the Bishop is about to build; and it is expected that schools will be erected by the parishioners.

THE GORHAM CASE.

SINCE we last noticed the Gorham case, it seems to have grown in interest and importance. The most conspicuous step of the party which sides with the Bishop of Exeter, is the protest of the clergy of the Archdeaconry of Exeter, in which they "solemnly repudiate the opinion or position that the civil power of the realm has, or ought to have, any authority or rightful power to appoint a lay court of appeal in matters affecting the doctrine of the Church of England, without the sanction and consent of that Church in sacred synod assembled." At the head of those who sign this protest stands the name of Dr. Coleridge, Prebendary of Exeter, and it is followed by the names of sixty-three other subscribers, prebendaries, incumbents, or curates of the Archdeaconry.

The rector of Falmouth, two rural deans, thirteen incumbents, and seven curates, in the neighbourhood of Falmouth, Penzance and Helston, have addressed a letter to Lord John Russell, declaring, in opposition to his statement in the House of Commons, which they expressly refer to, that the decision of the Privy Council has not given satisfaction to the great body of the clergy, that, on the contrary, they are highly dissatisfied with it. At the same time, they declare that the question at issue is of the highest importance to the Christian faith, and fundamentally affects the system of the Church.

Mr. Denison, who has already solemnly protested against the decision of the Privy Council, has published a sermon preached by him on Palm Sunday, in the parish church of East Brent, Somersetshire, in which he says, amongst many other things, "That decision tells the people of England that baptism does not them to believe two things, the exact opposites the one of the other, touching the holy sacrament of baptism: a decision which tells the people of England that a minister who teaches his people, according to the Catholic faith, that their children are regenerate or born again in, and by the grace of, holy baptism; and a minister who teaches his people, contrary to the Catholic faith, that their children are not regenerate, or born again in, and by the grace of, holy baptism, but in and by something else—whereof Holy Scripture and the Church are wholly silent—that these two ministers are, both of them, equally fit to have care of souls, and to teach in the Church of England."

The Rev. William Burdsnell Barter, Rector of Burchlcere, in Hampshire, has published a form of sympathizing address with the Bishop of Exeter, and suggests the opening of a subscription to defray the expenses of his Bishop's defence.

At a meeting of ninety or a hundred clergymen of the Archdeaconry of Chichester Archdeacon Manning presiding, a resolution was voted by a large majority, "That it is desirable to take steps to procure an alteration of the present court of appeal for the determining of questions of doctrine and other matters purely spiritual."

We give these extracts that our readers may know how solemn and serious in the estimation of some gentlemen is the present state of things, and how much is now at stake.

Out of the dispute a new society has grown into existence, called "First Principles Association," which met at Harlow, Essex, on Tuesday. The object of this society is "to unfold and call into action the social and other parts of the system of the Church, to point out a remedy for existing evils, and supply an antidote to the false philosophy which has occasioned and is perpetuating them." The Rev. Charles Miller, vicar of Harlow, was in the chair; and perhaps the views and objects of the society may be guessed at by what he said at a church festival on the same day—"Things were in just now a lamentable confusion. I am sorry to speak with disrespect of the Government of my country, but a regard to truth compels me to say that ignorance is the chief characteristic of the Legislature." "Those who direct it seem to have no knowledge of first principles." "The Church is so ordered and arranged in connexion as to be entirely independent of the State." "She has a revenue in herself." "As she is independent in her endowment, so is she in her jurisdiction altogether independent of the State." "We are to look to nothing else but the Church to see that they comply with the principles on which the Church is established." "To gain and give force to first principles like these, by appealing to the people, is the association formed. It is properly and justly called a 'First Principles' one, as it is thoroughly awakened the members of the Church throughout the length and breadth of the land." Whatever may be the result, the foundations of the union between Church and State will never be lifted and examined.

On the other side, the clergy of Hull, Beverley, and other parts of the East Riding of Yorkshire, to the number of forty-five, have "embraced an early opportunity of expressing" to the Archbishop of York, "under the present painful—not to say alarming—crisis of the Church," their "deep sense of the Divine favour and goodness towards us, in the appointment of your Grace to the high and responsible office you now fill with so much honour." They add, "But especially we desire with lively gratitude to acknowledge the hand of your Grace and to the Archbishop of Canterbury, for the approval and sanction you have each given to the wise, dispassionate, and conciliatory decision of the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, in the case of 'Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter.' We are surprised at the violence with which this judgment has been assailed, as it appears to us merely to establish the right of the clergy to maintain doctrine which is recognised as true by the Articles and Liturgies of the Church, and which has been held by many of our most distinguished divines from the period of the Reformation."

Mr. Gorham's own flock of St. Just-in-Penwith assembled in vestry on Easter Monday, and, with one dissentient voice, congratulated him on the successful issue of the suit between him and his diocesan, involving, as they believe it did, vital Christian truth.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.—In a Convocation holden on Wednesday, the proctors of last year resigned their offices, the senior proctor, Mr. May, making the usual proctorial speech recounting the events that had occurred during his term of holding office. The new proctors, having been previously elected by their respective colleges, were then presented for admission to the Vice-Chancellor—the Senior Proctor the Rev. George Marshall M.A., student of Christchurch; Junior Proctor the Rev. William George Henderson, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College. The former was proposed by the Very Rev. the Dean of Christchurch, the latter by the Rev. Dr. Bloxam, one of the Senior Fellows of Magdalen College. After making the parliamentary declaration, taking the usual oaths, and being admitted by the Vice-Chancellor, the new proctors nominated the following gentlemen to be pro-proctors for the ensuing year:—The Rev. Charles Edward Conybeare, M.A., and the Rev. Edward Stokes, M.A., Students of Christchurch; the Rev. Henry Harris, M.A., and the Rev. John Rigaud, Fellows of Magdalen College.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. William Corfield, to the Rectory of Llanfoist, Monmouthshire. The Rev. W. Wilkinson, to the rectory of Mambledon, in Surrey. The Rev. W. S. Thompson, M.A., to the rectory of Fobbing, Essex. The Rev. Charles Henry Hoskyn, to the vicarage of Cubert, Cornwall. The Rev. E. Bulmer (not the Rev. Dr. Layng, as given in our last), to the vicarage of Holmer, with the perpetual curacy of Huntington, Herefordshire. The Rev James Archibald, to the vicarage of Avonbury, near Brevyard; patron, the Crown.

CHURCH AND STATE.—The Anti-state Church Conference are calling upon their supporters to send delegates to the approaching second triennial conference of the Anti-state Church Association. This association first met at a conference of upwards of 700 delegates from all parts of the country in 1844, and its constitution provides for a similar assembly every three years, at which its basis of action and principles of general policy, will be open to such them to the varying circumstances of the times. The Anti-state Church Association disavows all theological or sectarian preferences, while the committee "wish it to be distinctly understood that all persons—whether previously connected with the society or not—who concur in the society's fundamental principle, and in the propriety of organised efforts for giving it effect, are eligible both to appoint and become delegates."

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—On Tuesday a special general meeting of graduates of the University of London and proprietors of University College was held at the College, to consider the supplemental charter recently granted to the University of London. The Right Hon. E. Strutt was called to the chair; and having introduced the business of the meeting, Mr. Key and Mr. Wood addressed it. The latter gentleman moved the first resolution, which was met by an amendment proposed by Mr. Sharp:—"That whereas the charter of the London University empowers it to grant degrees after examination of the candidates, and does not empower it to grant degrees without examination of the candidates; and whereas the Senate by the new by-law proposes to confer a part of the Bachelor of Arts degree on the faculty of medicine, without examination from the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin; therefore this meeting of proprietors of the University thinks it right that all candidates should undergo the same Bachelor of Arts examination." Disapproves of the new by-law. This was seconded, Mr. Wood withdrew his original resolution, and the amendment having been put as a substantive motion, was agreed to nem. con. Mr. Wood then moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting regrets the acceptance by the Senate of the University of London of the supplemental charter, enabling them to grant certificates in isolated branches of knowledge, apart from any proof of the candidates having gone through a regular and liberal course of education." Professor Key seconded the motion which was also agreed to. Mr. Wood then proposed the third resolution, which requested that the above resolutions should be sent to the Home Secretary and the Senate, with a request to Sir G. Grey to declare to the House of Commons his signature. Mr. Warburton objected to the latter part of the motion, which was after a short discussion withdrawn, leaving only a few lines of the commencement. The meeting separated, after thanking the chairman.

RESTORATION OF WORKSOP CHURCH.—His Grace the Duke of Portland has lent the parish of Worksop, free of interest, the sum of £1600 to pay the bill incurred by the restoration of the fine church at Worksop, completed in 1848, bonds being given for the repayment of the loan in six years.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.—The general meeting of the members of this society was held on Tuesday at the offices, Lincoln's Inn Fields. The Lord Bishop of Exeter presided in the letter from the Bishop of Cape Town, that he had been invited by the Governor, on the recommendation of the Chief Commissary of British Kaffraland (Colonel Macfarlane), to found a mission among the Kaffirs, which his Lordship had undertaken to do. He stated that he must look to the mother Church to aid him in his object; and added, "We want both men and means, and I doubt not that God will provide them." The Bishop enclosed a copy of the South African Almanack for 1850, printed in Cape Town.—The Bishop of Prince Rupert's Land stated that considerable local efforts were making at the Red River for the building of new churches: the exertions of the people had been most praiseworthy.—St. Andrew's Church, which his Lordship was about to consecrate, being entirely raised by subscriptions on the spot. Supplies of books were granted on his application. The society voted the sum of £75 towards building a church at Pietermaritzburg, the capital of Natal, and £50 towards building a new church in Swellindan.—Aid was also voted for churches in the diocese of Fredericktown.—The sum of £700 was placed at the disposal of the Lord Bishop of Melbourne, for the purpose of erecting five new churches, and one existing church, in his diocese.—An important communication was read from Archdeacon Macartney, from Geelong, in Australia Felix (Port Philip), describing the satisfactory condition of a large number of emigrants, who had arrived there by the Andromache. The healthy condition and the moral and religious character of these settlers, as far as could be judged on their arrival on the Australian shores, the Archdeacon considered to be owing to the judicious selection of Mr. Hawkesford, who had been recommended by the society as an emigrant teacher in that ship. A grant was made towards a new church and school-houses in Prince Edward's Island.—Rev. Mr. Hill, of Sydney, New South Wales, announced a mission of which he had given notice, with a view of restricting the terms of a grant of £100, passed by the board at the disposal of Bishop Gobat, for educational purposes in Palestine, the object of such motion being to prevent misunderstanding with the authorities of the Greek Church. This communication was received from the standing committee, by which it appeared, that, in reply to a letter from the Bishop, the committee had directed a communication to be made to his Lordship, not restricting the grant to the Greek Church, but requesting the strict observance of anything likely to lead to dissension on the subject; upon which Mr. Sherrett, with the gentleman who seconded it, withdrew the motion. The Secretary also stated that a communication had been received from Bishop Gobat, in adv

NEW BOOKS, &c.

NEW WORK ON NINEVEH

Just ready, in 2 vols, post 8vo, 21s. bound,

NOTES FROM NINEVEH;

AND

TRAVELS in MESOPOTAMIA, ASSYRIA, and SYRIA.

With Remarks on the Chaldean Nestorians, Yezidees, &c.

By the Rev. J. P. FLETCHER.

"Thy shepherds slumber, O King of Assyria: thy nobles shall dwell in the dust; thy people is scattered upon the mountains, and no man gathereth them."—Nahum, iii. 18

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Orders received by all Booksellers.

Now ready at all the Libraries, in 3 vols,

MR. WARBURTON'S REGINALD HASTINGS an Historical Romance.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"As an historical romance, Mr. Warburton takes a first rank. The present romance possesses all the value of a history. It is replete with power and interest."—Literary Gazette.

"Certainly no historical tale of greater power has been written since the time of Sir Walter Scott."—Messenger

"Mr. Warburton's 'Reginald Hastings' belongs to a high order of historical romance. The story is told with great dramatic effect."—John Bull.

"We prefer for this work a popularity commensurate with the historian importance of the events therein so truly and so charmingly portrayed. Never have the civil wars of England been invested with greater fascination or interest."—Morning Herald

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. CHARLES MACKAY'S NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

Just ready, in fcp 8vo, with Portrait of the Author,

EGERIA, the SPIRIT of the SHORE; and other POEMS. By CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D

DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street

MR. ALBERT SMITH'S NEW WORK

In a few days, in post 8vo,

A MONTH AT CONSTANTINOPLE. By ALBERT SMITH with illustrations from Original Sketches, on Steel and Wood. DAVID BOGUE Fleet-street.

Just published, price 12s 6d,

THE MARINE STEAM-ENGINE. Designed chiefly for the use of Naval Officers and Engineers. By THOMAS J. MAIN, M.A., Professor, Royal Naval College, Portsmouth, and THOMAS BROWN, Chief Engineer, R.N.

Also, by the same Authors, price 6s 6d,

THE INDICATOR and DYNAMOMETER, with their Practical Applications.

London: HERBERT, Cheapside.

THE

ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

Vol. IV.

The whole of these Elegant and Interesting Volumes have been Re-published in Commencement May 15, 1847, and may be had in Complete Sets, at the following Prices:—

STITCHED IN AN ORNAMENTAL WRAPPER,

Volumes I., II., III., IV., 7s. 6d. each, 10s. each

IN CLOTH, ELEGANTLY BOUND, WITH GILT EDGES,

Volume I., 10s.; Volumes 2, 3, 4, 4s. 6d. each

The Complete Sets of the Volumes contain all the SPLENDID PANORAMIC PLATES that have been published, with the numerous DOUBLE NUMBERS, &c. Each Volume is rich in Engravings of the Events of its own date, and forms a valuable Illustrated Chronology of History, Literature, Art, and so nam.

 SINGLE NUMBERS of the BACK NUMBERS are CHARGED ONE SHILLING EACH, FOUR WEEKS AFTER the DAILY of PUBLICATION.

OFFICE, 198, STRAND, LONDON.

Now ready, price 10s 6d,

THE HORSE GUARDS. By the Two Mounted Centaurs. Embellished with Twelve Coloured Illustrations. "This was built the Duke—but who the Duke inferred

The 'Horse Guards' proves to be a work written evidently by an officer, and which contains a vast amount of practical knowledge, conveyed in a style very easily read. The anecdotes and sketches in its tone; regular and terse in its arrangement; and profoundly conducing to the attainment of the important data. Its military man can arise from a perusal without acknowledging that in this volume he has found a faithful detail of the grievances of the profession, and a plain animadversion upon the many wrongs perpet uted upon officers of all grades, and more particularly by subalterns as well as general officers, and carefully read."—British Army Dispatch.

"The Horse Guards' Centaurs is the work of a capital author upon the mismanagement of the Horse Guards. It embraces a wide field of comment ry upon all the existing army abuses. We hope to have to devote more space at our command next week, and to enlarge upon the work the full notice it appears to deserve."—United Service Gazette.

"Read extensively it will be, if only on account of the title it bears."—Naval and Military Gazette.

J. and J. A. ALLEN, 128, Bishopsgate-street.

On the 1st of MAY next, 1850, will be published, PART I. of

HISTORIC RELIQUES;

A Series of Representations of

ARMS, JEWELLERY, GOLD and SILVER PLATE, FURNITURE, and

In Royal and Noble Collections, Colleges, and Public Institutions &c.,

and which

FORMERLY BELONGED TO INDIVIDUALS EMINENT IN HISTORY

DRAWN FROM THE ORIGINALS, AND ETCHED BY JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS.

Reliques of Antiquity, in themselves so full of interest and instructive, become doubly so when they have belonged to individuals whose deeds are chronicled in history. Who is there, "to dull forgetfulness a prey," that does not feel a thrill of pleasure in contemplating with the "mighty victor, mighty lord," Edward the Third, the Black Prince, Richard III.; the imprisoned Mary Queen of Scots and Mary of Scotland, or the unhappy Charles I.? Not only of a age, but of their favourites, and of the illustrious men who have died, leaving in their vast wardrobes of history are the richest most instructive and interesting.

The aim of the present publication is to illustrate, by a series of original Drawings, the various Reliques which have historical interest, and to preserve, by Drawing, Novelties in Ancient Plate, Furniture, &c., formerly belonging to persons celebrated in history, and which are now dispersed in the Museums and Collections of the Nobility and Gentry, in Colleges, Halls, Public Museums, &c.; permission having been already graciously accorded by Her Majesty, and granted by many Noblemen, Gentlemen, the Authorities of various Colleges &c.

Some few of the Reliques of the past, having historical associations connected with them, have been represented in archæological works, but it is proposed to each one as a whole in a Series of Plates, as limited number. The present work will embrace a great variety of objects of interest, and at the same time it is peculiar to itself, that every subject will be Historical, renders it a book of great interest.

To the Historian and Antiquary the proposed series of Illustrations must be regarded as of great importance; and to the lover of Ancient Art, for the beauty of most of the objects represented, and the character of the execution of the Drawings with the Engravers on the Wood, it will be found a work of high value.

To the Artist these Illustrations will be of essential importance; for each object is drawn to each full size, and the Engravings on Wood in most cases are executed from the Drawings made by the Artist himself, and on the block, so that every subject will be Historical, renders it a book of great interest.

To the Historian and Antiquary the proposed series of Illustrations must be regarded as of great importance; and to the lover of Ancient Art, for the beauty of most of the objects represented, and the character of the execution of the Drawings with the Engravers on the Wood, it will be found a work of high value.

To the Artist these Illustrations will be of essential importance; each object is drawn to each full size, and the Engravings on Wood in most cases are executed from the Drawings made by the Artist himself, and on the block, so that every subject will be carefully studied, and will enable him to carry out designs in the styles of various periods

It is proposed to issue the Work in Monthly Parts, containing three Engravings drawn with the most scrupulous fidelity, and Illustrations, executed in the beautiful manner of Ancient Illuminations, coloured, and the size of the Work be imperial 8vo, a limited number in imperial 4to, the subjects fully coloured, and on India letters also.

The Editor is greatly obliged by communications of objects of interest, and will be happy to have the Reliques of Historic interest being forwarded to 198, Strand, London.

Each Part will contain Three Plates, Price 2s 6d each.

Large paper copies 5s.

Office, 198, Strand, London.

Just Ready, Fifth Edition—Just ready,

SOPHISMS of FREE-TRADE and POPULAR POLITICAL ECONOMY EXAMINED. By a BARRISTER. In foolscap 8vo, price 3s sewed, or 3s 6d per dozen.

CRITICAL NOTICES

"Rumour has assigned to a barrister who is a member of the bar, whose well-earned reputation will not, at all events, suffer by the report. The preface is in an earnest, truth-seeking spirit, renowned in the first consideration and severe acquiescence."—Quarterly Review, No. 171.

"It is a long time a new we encountered a work which we have read with greater satisfaction or interest, or can more heartily recommend to the discriminating notice of our readers"—Fraser's Magazine (February.)

"A work which completely exposes the utter folly of that system under which this country has been so grievously."—The Times.

"We can scarcely recite anything better for our country, than that the book be extensively circulated."—Standard.

"A little vo ume which was just appeared, of great brevity and terseness, but of most unanswerable logic."—Morning Herald.

"In another part of our paper we have borrowed a second chapter from that admirable and unassailable work, 'Sophisms of Free-trade and Popular Political Economy Examined.' By a Barrister.' We promise no man to regret the purchase of that work if he will only read it."—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

"The book is not addressed to the passions or prejudices of party. It is a grave inquiry in the truth of many of those popular sayings which have received popular currency in the last few years, and which cannot be resolved from the Manchester school unquestioned." "A Barrister meets the politicos, economists, and free-traders on their own weapons, and with their own tactics in the identical conflict. One by one he takes up their 'sophisms,' and lays open the fallacy, strips them of their plausibility, and almost shows them to the world the naked shams which they really are. We feel that we are in the hands of a man of strong intellect and good principle, and we can pronounce this little book to be a contribution to the literature of the day which is calculated to be of very great service to the cause of truth and sound po icy."—Cambridge Chronicle.

"We have before us a particularly neat and handy little book, bearing the title, from the pen of a sound and robust reasoner, who signs himself 'A Barrister.' The learned gentleman, in the space of a couple of hundred of duodecimo pages, has contrived to throw together some of the most compact and forcible arguments against the sophistries of Free Trade we have yet met with in any shape."—Manchester Courier

Saunders, 34, Fleet-street, and 9, Hanover-street, Hanover-square.

NEW SONG, "PRYTHEE, SWEET HEART, BE NOT SO SAD;" sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Written by FOLKESTONE WILLIAMS. Esq. composed by FANNY H. RAWLOWE. Price 2s. "A melody which takes the ear by surprise, from its sweetness and fortunate."—New Monthly Belle Assemblee.

SHEPHERD and JONES, 80, Newgate-street; and CHAPPELL, 50, New Bond-street

Just published, price 3s.

NEW QUADRILLE—"THE FLIGHT OF CARE; with the Vocal finale, ad lib., as performed before her Majesty by Adelaide Kemble and Mr. Sims Reeves, at Her Majesty's Theatre; BRIEVE, 23, Bishopsgate-street Within.—Post-free for thirty-six stamps sent to F. Y. Brievé, Esq., 23, Bishopsgate-street Within.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GUIDE to WATER-COLOUR PAINTING, By R. N. POBLE

With an Illustration in Colours

Price 1s 6d stitched, or 2s bound in cloth; post free, 6d extra.

Sixth Edition.

GUIDE to OIL PAINTING.

By J. S. TEMPLETON,

Price One Shilling; or, post free, 1s 6d.

THE FINE ARTS ALMANACK,

or, ARTISTS' REMEMBRANCER for 1850.

Containing 176 closely printed pages of valuable information connected with the Fine Arts, and not to be met with in any other publication.

GEO. ROWNEY and Co., 51, Rathbone-place, London

THE ANGLO-SAXON, for April, price 2s. 6d., or 2s. post-free, contains

England and her Colonies: Commercially Considered, with Maps.—English Church Music.—Christian Architecture.—London, a Poem. Essay II.—The Ancre Riwle: Three Versions of Martin A. Tupper.—Anglo-Saxon Literature, the Leading Section of Dr. King Alfred's Works, with Specimens and Translations.—Wives and Mothers.—Ang.-Saxon Colonies: Hastings, Cumberland, Fort Essington (Aqua-Nigra).—Original Ballads

The ANG.-SAXON for 1849 forms a handsome volume, price One Guinea. London: T. BOSWORTH. 215. Regent-street.

THE COMFORTER. Dedicated to all Hospitals. By the Rev. RICHARD CORBOLD, M.A., Author of "A Father's Legacy to his Children," "A Voice from the Mount," "Zenon the Martyr," &c —"Who would not recommend such a book as this?"—Sun. From the Author, 6, Sussex-place, Regent's-park.

THE ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY VOLUME, By P. H. GOSSE. Part I., Price 1s, contains—Sacred Streams, the Rivers of the Bible.—Sower of Babes, the Confusion of Tongues, Rice Nurtured, the Ingratitude of Abram, the Mission of Eliezer, Babylon, the Hanging Gardens, the Palace, the Court, the Great Image, Daniel, the Doom of Babylon, Belshazzar's Feast, &c. &c.

C. COX, 5, King William-street, Strand.

AN ELEGANT PRESENT

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.

(AUTHORISED VERSION.)

Beautifully bound in leather, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings. Morocco, Half-Crown. With Silver Splendid Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists, expressly for this Work. With Notes, Historical, Explanatory, and Descriptive; and embellished by a new, Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land, from Original Sketches taken on the spot by the principal Artists and places mentioned in the Old and New Testament, assisted by eight Engravers.

The ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some fine bold and imaginative sketches. Much tact has been shown in the choice of subjects, and how much judgment in the treatment, pictorially and up, are treated with originality of conception."—Daily News

"A publication characterised by the spirit of the well-known proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and destined, we doubt not, to continue their popularity. The Illustrations are characterised by a daring originality, and finished with a boldness and beauty that makes them immensely attractive."—Weekly Times.

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers.

THE ILLUSTRATED BIBLE.

In 8vo, with plates, price 4s 6d; post free, 5s.

A MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATION of the ENGRAVINGS of NAVAL Scenes in LORDS and the SUBURBAN DISTRICTS: illustrated by coloured plates. Containing the Flying animal vegetable productions in the Thames and other waters, as supplied by the several properties. By ARTHUR HILL HASSALL, M.B., F.L.S.—SAMUEL HIGHLEY, 32, Fleet street

COMPLETE EDITION of the AMERICAN and CONTINENTAL SCENTIFIC in the cheapest state, price 1s. THE POETICAL WORKS of JOHN G. WHITTIER, Author of "the Vision of Echard," "Old Portraits," &c. Also, in this Series, (uniform), LONGFELLOW'S COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS; N. P. WILLIS'S COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS. Shortly will appear, BRYANT'S COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS. With Original Preface by F. W. N. Bayley, Esq.—London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster-row.

WASHINGTON IRVING'S COMPLETE WORKS

THE POPULAR LIBRARY.—NEW VOLUMES are now ready. The price is each, in every cover; or cloth gilt, 1s 6d., WASHINGTON IRVING'S LIVES of the SUCCESSORS to MAHOMET, SKETCH BOOK, TALES of a TRAVELLER, BRACEBRIDGE HALL, and ASTORIA, complete in 2 vols. 3s. 6d. each. JAMES SMITH The other Volumes of this series are EMERSON'S REPRESENTATIVE MEN, BRYANT'S OMOO, and MELVILLE'S TYPEE.  In ordering specify the POPULAR LIBRARY. London: GROOMBRIDGE and Co. Bibb-square; and all Booksellers, Newsvendors, and Railway Stations

NEW EDITION

Price One Shilling, or post-free, 1s. 6d.,

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK.

This work is embellished on every page with the EASY ARRANGEMENT of the SPELLING, which associates all difficulties experienced by the young in the PLEASING ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATING LESSONS, which unites the learner to advance of his own accord; while the whole is ILLUSTRATED by UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED and FIFTY SMALL BEAUTIFUL WOOD-CUTS of objects and scenes described, forming by far the most alluring introduction to learning ever published. 144 pages.

A few Copies are Coloured, Price Two Shillings.

The Trade and Schools supplied on Liberal Terms for Cash only.

Published at the Office of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London; and sold by all Booksellers.

Just published, 70th Thousand,

THE MORISONIANA, or FAMILY ADVISER of the BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New-road, London, price 6d., or 14 by post, and to be had of all the authorised agents for the sale of Mr. Morison's Vegetable Universal Medicine throughout the world

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, and £10 10s. GOLD LEVERS, at the Manufactory, 338, High Holborn. These Houses are warranted not to vary more than for a minute per week. The great reduction of price at the above sale will at once strike every purchaser as the most liberal ever submitted to the public. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 0s., he will forward to any part. Read John's Sketch of Watchwork, sent Free for a Postage Stamp.

WATCHES and their MANAGEMENT.—T. COX SAVORY and Co have published a PAMPHLET, describing the various advantages in the use of their Watches, sent free, and explaining the advantage of each, with lists of prices. It is intended for the information of purchasers, and will be found serviceable to the purchaser of an article, the principal characteristics of which depend upon its durability. It also contains numerous remarks on the proper management of a watch by the wearer. It may be had gratis of the Manufacturers, 127, New Bond-street.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch street).

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY and Co's Pamphlet of Prices, with outlines, may be had gratis, or will be sent free, if applied for by a purchaser The numerous Illustrations of Patterns of Silver Plate, and Second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks, new and second-hand Tea and Coffee Services, Waiters, Silver-mounted Goods, the newer plated as a white metal Spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Cutlery, Jackets' Gold Tee Chains, and Jewellery

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch street), London.

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS and HOT-WATER DISHES.—R. B. SAVORY and SONS, 5, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, invite an inspection of their STOCK of those elegant appendages to the dinner-table, which they continue to sell of superior quality at cheaper rates than any other house in the trade. Drawings, with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the Kingdom, free of postage.

SILVER TEA SERVICES, of New Patterns. R. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill (opposite the Bank), have just finished several new and elegant patterns of TEA and COFFEE SERVICES, of rich and original design, and of the highest finish. The following have been generally admired:

The Portland Pattern, tastefully chased	The Louis Quatorze Pattern, richly chased
Strong Silver Tea-pot ... £12 15 0	Strong Silver Tea-pot £15 10 0
Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 5 5 0	Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 6 5 0
Ditto Cream-jug ... 3 3 0	Ditto Cream-jug ... 4 4 0
Ditto Coffee-pot ... 16 16 0	Ditto Coffee-pot ... 17 17 0
£42 0 0	£47 0 0

A large stock is offered for selection in the Show-rooms, including every variety of patterns, from £3s upwards

ELECTRO PLATE.—SELLING OFF, at 136, High Holborn, the entire STOCK of ELECTRO PLATE, at prices that must convince the Public it is the only Establishment where they can purchase bargains, as the whole must be cleared immediately. Electro-Plated Corner Dishes and Covers, £6 the set; set of four, forming eight dishes, Soup Tureens, £5 12s 6d. A splendid assortment of Cake Baskets; ditto Bread Baskets; Candlesticks from 5s 6d; Table Candlesticks from 6s per pair; Dessert Knives, 4s 9d.; Dessert Forks, 7s 6d.; Table Spoons or Forks, 16s per dozen; Dessert Spoons or Forks, 12s; Teaspoons, 10s 6d per dozen. Every other article equally low in price at WM. CRANSBROOK and CO.'s, 136, High Holborn.

243, REGENT-STREET, 243.

KING and CO., SILK-MERCERS, &c., respectfully beg to announce that on MONDAY NEXT and following days, they will have a first-rate Instrument of this description, by Messrs. Broadwood, Collard, and other eminent makers, for SALE or LETTING on Hire.

KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

PATTERNS of SILK, POSTAGE FREE. Ladies residing in the County are most respectfully informed that KING and CO. will forward Patterns of all the new Spring Silks, Muslins, Barèges, and Grenadines, consistent with the general Lace and Drapery Trades, to any part of the United Kingdom, India, or the Colonies, on application by letter, addressed in

KING and CO., 243 Regent-street, London

THE NEW

FRENCH CHINE SILKS,

at 2/6 6d the full dress.

The richest qualities,

45s the full dress

 Patterns sent Postage free.

KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

THE NEW

MOIRE ANTIQUE SILKS,

4½ Guineas the Full Dress,

Usually sold at 5½

KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

 Patterns sent Postage free.

THE NEW

GLACE and STRIPED SILKS,

at 15s 6d and 21s the full dress.

The Richest Qualities,

at 42s the full dress

The New Gaze Arabians and

Brocke Silks,

at 35s the full dress.

Address, KING and CO., 243, Regent-street

 Patterns sent Post free.

VERY RICH

BLACK GLACE AND WATERED SILKS,

Bronzed Satins,

and Mourning Silks,

at 36s the full dress

The richest qualities, 2 wide,

at 50s the full dress.

 Patterns sent Post free

Address, KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

THE NEW FRENCH PRINTED

BAREGES, MUSLINS, PERCALES,

Jaconets,

French Lawns,

Glace Bolonas,

Llama Cloths,

Mousseline de Laine

Plain Barèges

every other Novelty for spring and Summer Dresses.

at 6½d, 8½d, 9½d, and 11½d per yard.

 Patterns sent, Post free

Address, KING and CO., 243 Regent-street.

NEW SILK, MUSLIN, and LACE MANTLES, Collars, Jackets, &c., of the latest and most approved Parisian fashion.—MARADE (Biddle and Co.) respectfully invite the attention of ladies to their Mantle Department, which is now supplied with the newest and most elegant Shapes in Silk, Lace, Muslin, suitable for young Ladies, at a very moderate price, to the fashionable Mantles, beautifully trimmed with black lace, and now the prevailing fashion. Haywards (Biddle and Co.), Lacemen, 81, Oxford-street, opposite the Pantheon, London; and 37, King's-road, Brighton.

BLACK FLOUNCINGS, SHAWLS, SCARFS, VEILS, &c., in REAL LACE, also an extraordinary INFLATION of the same, of Nottingham manufacture, at a very moderate price, at HAYWARDS (Biddle and Co.), Lacemen to the Royal Family. Established 1770. They respectfully submit the attention of Ladies to a choice of the above, as well as to the newest and latest style of fashion in made-up LACE GOODS, comprising Shawls, Veils, Jackets, Collars, Sleeves, Lappets, Handkerchiefs, Cuffs, Caps, Scarfs, &c., from the simplest and least expensive kind, BRUSSELS LACE of all descriptions. Patterns of Laces sent by post, or articles forwarded for choice, on receipt of order and reference. HAYWARDS (Biddle and Co.), Lacemen, 81, Oxford-street, opposite the Pantheon, London; and 37, King's-road, Brighton.

LINENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN.

LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, and WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITS for HOME, INDIA, and the COLONIES, are supplied by

JOHN CAPPER and SON, 69, Greenbench-street, LONDON, in a Separate Department, under competent Female superintendence, where prices are economical, the materials and needlework excellent.

BABY LINEN, Ladies' Dressing Gowns, &c.

Parcels of £5 sent throughout the Kingdom free of all railway carriage.

SAMPLES, which may be returned, SENT for inspection, on receipt of a note addressed to

JOHN CAPPER and SON, 69, Greenbench-street.

LISTS, with PRICES, sent POST PAID.

MESSRS. BEECH and BERRALL, 83 and 84, EDGEWARE-ROAD,

Have much pleasure in informing the gentry, and the public generally, that their newly-manufactured silks for the Spring of this year are now quite ready for inspection, being the largest stock by one establishment, in this particular branch, ever this season unparalleled, as no single article in the extensive Silk Mercery business has been more previous to the great advance which has taken place on all Silks since that period

Prices of a few of these goods are here annexed:—

RICH FIGURED AND STRIPED SILKS MANUFACTURED.

New Striped and Checked Silks, 2 wide, at 1s 4½d and 1s 11½d per yard.

Elegant Glace, and Satin Stripes, 2s 4½d to 2s 9½d

Beautiful Glace Silks, 2 wide, at 2s 6d per yard.

Upwards of two thousand pounds' worth of plain Black Silks, Satin-cords, Bands Watered and Diamond Checks, Ottomans, Armures, Satins, and Black Dress Satins, at the same proportionate low prices.

For the convenience of Ladies in the country, patterns forwarded as usual, Postage free

N.B.—All parcels to the amount of £5 sent to any part of the country, carriage paid

Address, BEECH and BERRALL, 83 and 84, Edgeware-road

PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER respectfully inform the Nobility and Public that their Parasols this season are much larger than usual, but, owing to the peculiarity of their make, do not look so. They are made of plain and striped silks, of perfectly new mixtures of colours, of the most striking and elegant description. W. and J. S. have also a very extensive and much admired swiss Parasol, upwards of 30,000 of which were sold last season—10 Regent-street, 94, Fleet-street; 10, Royal Exchange; 75, Cheapside.

THE FLORIFORM PARASOL

Registered, Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65.

Some time ago, a Number of the "Art-Union" Journal contained a letter from Mr. Loudon, on the Art of Forming, the writer of which tastefully suggested that a great improvement could be made in the Parasol, by altering the form, and thus imitating the configuration of Flowers, instead of the antique Mushroom shape.

This suggestion, as far as is mechanically practicable, is carried out by the Inventors of the FLORIFORM PARASOL, which, when open, the elegant outline of an expanded flower.

The FLORIFORM PARASOL may be purchased of all first-class Silkmen and Parasol Dealers throughout the country, and wholesale, of JOHN HOWLAND and SON, Manufacturers, 36, Eastcheap, London-bridge

MILTON'S HAIR LUBRICANT.—A new and elegant preparation for the Hair, compounded on rational principles, and which must commend itself to all those who prefer the filthy stuff sold as Bear's Grease, Circassian Cream, or various other vile compounds, the names, which possess not the slightest power to render a beautiful MILTON'S HAIR LUBRICANT is of the purest description as the hair sold with each pot, will soon render the Hair clean, lustrous, and curly. Price 3s. per pot.

Sold by all perfumers and medicine vendors in town and country. Wholesale London Agents—Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Edwards, 64, Farringdon-street; Edwards, 64, Paul's Church-yard; Sutton and Co., Bow Church-yard; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; and Janney and Co., Oxford-street.

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth-brush combines the advantages of a hair and bristle brush, is used in more extraordinary manner, hairs never come loose; it is peculiarly penetrating hair-brushes, with the double unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Cushion-bristle, that cleans harmlessly to one-quarter the price. An immense Stock of genuine unbleached smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE, BINGLEY, and CO.'s only Establishment, 130A, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.—Observe the Corner Shop, 130A, Oxford-street.

CHILDREN'S HAIR.—The Baisamic Properties of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL nourish the Hair in its earliest growth, prevents baldness in maturity, and continues the possession of healthy vigour, long and soft curls, and luxuriant redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Genial and purifying, it dispels all scurf and impurity, and renders the use of the fine comb unnecessary.

 Many spurious imitations are offered for sale, the purchasers of which have not been aware of the imposition until the advent to all loss of their Hair has convinced them that they have been using a compound of deleterious ingredients, instead of the original ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. It is, therefore, highly necessary to see that those words are on the wrapper and on the 7s. family cottles (equal to four small), 10s 6d., and double that size, 21s.—Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden; and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PIANOFORTES.—TOLKIEN'S splendid toned Piccolos, with 6½ octaves, G G. Full, Metallic Plate, only 25 guineas. Parties requiring a first-rate Instrument for a small money, will do well to purchase at TOLKIEN'S old established house, 27, 28, and 29, King William-street, London bridge. Drawings, list of instruments sent post free. Old instruments taken in exchange

PIANOFORTES.—CHAS. HOLDERNESSE and Co., Manufacturers, 444, New Oxford-street, London, have always on Sale, at the very lowest prices for which a really good and warranted instrument can be made, a choice stock of new Pianofortes, which, for elegance of design, beauty of tone, and durability of manufacture, cannot be surpassed by any house in the trade, a variety of good Secondhand, by Erard, Broadwood, Collard, and other eminent makers. Four £10 Pianos, every description of musical instrument taught, repaired, and taken in exchange

BARLOW'S PIANOFORTE INSULATORS.

Important to all who value quality of tone they possess, simplicity of action, fine power, brilliancy, and sweetness of the best stops, which can never be obtained (where the piano is used in a carpeted room) without them. JAMES BARLOW, Inventor and manufacturer, 14, King William-street, Mansion House Price, 6s 6d, the set

C. OLLIFIER'S Registered "Album of Ornaments" sent for Four Stamps. Also sole inventor of the new FLORAL BRACELET, which can be made, of the shortest hair. Every description of Hair Ornaments made and mounted in best Gold, for inspection —3s, Old Compton-street, Soho

AIR-GUNS and AIR-CANES for shooting rabbits, rooks, sea-fowl, &c. With ball, small shot, and fish with harpoon and line, &c.—Prices from 65s, pump and apparatus complete.—REILLY, Gun-maker, New Oxford-street.

Post-Office Orders out 3d.

FIVE POUNDS of Superior Black, Green, or Mixed TEA, for 20s. Packs 1 in a tin case, and sent carriage-free to all parts of England.—ALEXANDER BRADEN, Tea Merchant, 13, High-street, Islington, London.

PAPER-HANGINGS.—Cheapest in London! Also papers, 3d per yard; Satins, 8d; Flocks 8d per yard, 30,000 Patterns in Stock. Panel Decorations, flowers or oak, at cheap as other papers Terms Cash Established 20 years.

W. CROOK, Manufacturer, 25, Lowther Arcade. N.B. Three doors from the Strand entrance.

COCKERELL & CO.'S BEST COALS ONLY. Offices, Oxford-street, East-street, Blackfriars; Eaton Wharf, Lower Belgrave-place, Pimlico; and No. 1, Coal Exchange. Cash price, 24s per ton

FIRE and ROBBERY.—Safety for Plate and Cash.—CHUBB'S PATENT FIRE-PROOF SAFES and CHESTS are the most secure depositories for deeds, cash, plate, account-books, &c., both from fire and burglars. All are fitted with the detector locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; 28, Lord-street, Liverpool, and 16, Market-street, Manchester

BARLOW'S NEW INVENTED SYPHON CAP REQUIRES NO VENT PEG; prevents ale, beer, cider, or other liquors from becoming flat or sour, so that the last pint draws as good as the first. Sold by all chemists, glass-sellers, and wine-merchants, at 6d. each, glass-plated, for sherry &c., 8s 6d. JAMES BARLOW, 14, King William-street, Mansion House.

FIRES OF LONDON.—LEADBEATER'S Strong Wrought-Iron Filled FIREPROOF SAFES, BOXES, and DOORS, of best make, possessing all the latest improvements of security against Fire and Thieves Patent Detector Locks, Cash, and Deed Boxes.—LEADBEATER'S Manufactory, 125, Aldersgate street.

DR. CHOWNE'S PATENT AIR-SYPHON. —The novel and effective mode of Ventilation, and every kind of Apparatus for economical applying Gas Heat to Chemical, Culinary, Manufacturing, and Domestic use, may be seen in operation at DR. RICKEE'S Gas Stove Manufactory, Agar-street, Strand, opposite Cavendish Hospital.

GLENFIELD STARCH.—The Ladies are respectfully requested to make a trial of the Glenfield Patent Double-refined Powder Starch, which, for domestic use, now stands unrivalled. Sold by all the leading grocers, oilmen, and other shopkeepers in the kingdom. AGENTS WANTED. Apply to Mr. R. WESTERTON, 2, Bunhill-row, Finsbury.

BOND'S PERMANENT MARKING INK, the original and by far the best, requiring no preparation, offers the surest means of protection for every variety of household linen and wearing apparel against the confusion of mixture, for which we are wanted to ask for the genuine article, prepared by the inventor, JOHN BOND, 69, Long-acre, London. Sold by Sutton, Bow Church-yard, and most chemists, stationers, and medicine vendors Price 1s. a bottle.

DAMASK TABLE LINEN, &c.— FAULDING, STRATTON, and Co.'s Linen Warehouse, 13, Coventry-street. Families supplied with every description of House hold Linen at wholesale prices.

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRTS.—Gentlemen Genuine and obtaining Shirts in the very best manner in which they can be made, are solicited to try FORD'S EUREKA SHIRTS. Six most unique, and the only perfect fitting Shirt made. Detailed catalogues, containing list of prices, and directions for self-measurement, sent post-free. Patterns of all the new coloured shirtings sent post-free, on receipt of a post-paid envelope.—FORD, 10A, Regent-street, London.

THE CORAZZA SHIRT.—CAPPER and WATERS, Inventors, 24, Regent-street, St. James's.—Gentlemen can have the Corazza, or any other form of Shirt, by sending measures, taken tight, round the throat, wrist, chest, waist, thigh, and height of wearer.—Excellent Long Cloth Shirts, with fine linen fronts, Three Shirts, and Waists, every price from 10s. 6d., and Linen Shirts 10s. to 25s. each. Additional charge for Dress Fronts, 2s. to 5s. Gentlemen's own Shirts can be sent, carriage paid, to the kingdom, on receipt of a money order for the price of the Shirt, with addition of two shillings, which addition is deducted from the amount of the set.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS. Patentees, JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street.—Six years' experience has proved the value of this invention. The great durability, the lightness, and extreme comfort of these Hats, together with their sensible mode of ventilation—by means of a valve—thereby preventing an accumulation of perspiration, render them at once superior to any that have hitherto been manufactured and introduced to the public. JOHNSON and CO. beg to the Queen and Royal Family, 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street

THE NICOLL PALETOT, or Patent Coat; Registered pursuant to the Act 6 & 7 Vict. cap. 65). The West-end Warerooms, for the sale of these graceful and useful articles of dress, are in Regent-street, and extend from No. 114 to No. 120 inclusive; and the City Depôt are at 22, Cornhill, the shipping department being in the rear.—Sir Charges-a-by. Many have assumed the use of the word paletot, but 114 and 120, Regent-st. are the sole proprietors and patentees of either dress or material. The paletot is a garment for all seasons, according to the climate or purpose for which they are required

AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, CAPE of GOOD HOPE, NATAL, &c.

PASSENGERS to the COLONIES, generally, may obtain their OUTFITS from S. W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, &c., 66 and 67, CORNHILL, and 8, BISHOPSGATE-STREET, E.C. Messrs. S. W. S. and Co. study the whole of the articles comprised in an outfit to secure durability, so that the Cabin Folding Furniture may become a comfortable household Furniture on arrival in the colony.

They also make, and give ship-sailing INFORMATION, but they neither receive nor pay a commission, their object being to give PASSENGERS who call the benefit of their knowledge every benefit; and they forward small packages for their customers (gratis) through their AGENTS in the COLONIES.

N.B.—To Australia, per ship GRYFFLDDA, at sixty days' sight, of £.53 for every £100 paid here.

An EMIGRANT'S OUTFIT and Guide is at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE-STREET, opposite the London Tavern, where a comfortable Set-out for MAN or BOY, including bedding, can be obtained for FOUR POUNDS.

A branch of same at ST. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

PAPER-HANGINGS.—CUTTERELL BROTHERS, 500, Oxford-street a few doors from Holles-street, invite attention to the very superior character of their PAPER-HANGINGS, for the present season, consisting of the most elegant French and English manufactures. A stock of from 30,000 to 50,000 pieces is always on hand, so that they can at all times supply any quantity, of every grade, class, and colour, for immediate use. Parties in the country should write for the Table to measure rooms, which, with a specimen of Cutterell's celebrated Penny Paper for bedrooms, will be sent post paid on receipt or two postage stamps. CUTTERELL BROTHERS' complete assortment of Borders for walls and ceilings are well worthy the notice of persons of taste. The Oxford-street Paper Hanging Warehouse, No. 500, a few doors from Holles-street, also at Bristol and Bath.

DEAFNESS.—NEW DISCOVERY.—The ORGANIC VIBRATOR, an extraordinary, powerful, small, newly invented instrument for Deafness, entirely different from all others, restores hearing of the kind that cures are effected are the result of a disordered state of the blood. To remedy this, the occasional use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS is recommended. [illegible] to, and by the use of this instrument the [illegible] are restored to perfect hearing. Pamphlets containing [illegible] tions, "D

THE "DUKE OF PORTLAND," EMIGRANT SHIP, FOR PORT PHILLIP.

SLEDGING IN STOCKHOLM.

A CORRESPONDENT in "the Venice of the North," as Stockholm has been well termed, informs us that great preparations are making in that capital, to celebrate the marriage of the Prince Royal of Sweden, fixed to take place in June.

The accompanying Sketch is a scene from the Swedish metropolis, and represents a young Diplomatist (a striking likeness) crossing the North Bridge in his sledge. The peasants on foot are from the province of Dalecarlia; and the whole presents a very characteristic scene of Swedish life.

In the very amusing "Life of a Travelling Physician," we find some pleasant glimpses of the peculiarities of Stockholm. Our tourist says:—

"The women in Stockholm perform operations which in other countries are monopolised by the male sex. They labour, too, for a pittance. Still are they no race of Amazons; but a pretty set of women are the Wacker Flikas and the sight of them proves to you that you are not in Russia."

"The people bear the character of great good-nature; but this is even carried to a fault, and is a national weakness. They have not sufficient firmness when it is necessary, and can hardly say no to a request where prudence demands a negative. Hence they are continually getting into scrapes by lending their names as security upon bills, &c. The poorer classes are reckless, and live much for the day, which for them is sufficient. They are given to intoxication. They fare hardly, living upon black bread which requires a hatchet to break it, and which you see selling in the street, in the shape of round cakes with a hole drilled through the centre. By this means it is hung on hooks to the beams of the hut: and sometimes Sancho's proverb proves too true—that you often see hooks in the ceiling where there is no bacon to hang upon them. Herrings and potatoes are not within the reach of all."

THE "DUKE OF PORTLAND" EMIGRANT SHIP,

1000 TONS.

EMIGRATION has now become like a great and rapid stream, which draws into itself, and hurries along with it in its course, a very miscellaneous assemblage of interests. Of this, example was afforded in the living freight of the Duke o Portland, a noble specimen of an emigrant ship, which left Gravesend for Port Phillip, on Wednesday last.

There were emigrants on board o. very different ranks and degrees; among them an unusual number of that class called "respectable," in whose dress and general aspect one had to seek some other cause than pressing poverty for the long voyage, and new and uncertain future on which they were venturing. Among these there were leave-takings; and on the part of friends returning on shore were tokens of sorrow. There were, of course, others belonging to that great class who make wealth; and who, let us hope, will make the wealth of the antipodes on such terms as to acquire for themselves a larger share of it than would have been their lot in the old country.

The Duke of Portland is also freighted with the third instalment, to the number of sixty, of that female emigration so nobly planned and carried forward by the Hon. Mr. Sidney Herbert—as they were described by a Gravesend boatswain (with a tone and context gentler than the phrase), "a parcel o' needlewomen." These arrived on board on Monday afternoon, accompanied by Mr. S. Herbert and a few gentlemen interested in their welfare. The Star, Gravesend steamer, which conveyed the party, is seen in our Illustration, running down for the ship, just previous to rounding to and ranging up alongside.

The spacious cabin in which the poor needlewomen were speedily assembled, mustered, and arranged, presented a strange and interesting scene. The noble-hearted and high-born promoter of the emigration plan, the clergy, and others employed in superintending the arrangements, the emigrants themselves sitting in quiet order, with their looks of cheerful hope, all combined to form a scene characteristic of our time.

Others among the emigrants were sent out in like manner by means of funds charitably raised among a few individuals. We observed a clergyman taking leave of some of the poor of this great city, who owed their bettered prospects to his exertions. Others of the clergy were bidding adieu to members of their flocks.

The Duke of Portland is a very fine ship, of about 1000 tons, and she and her commander, Captain Cubitt, appear to understand making quick voyages. The spiritual interests of the emigrants, and of their children, will not be uncared for; for, besides a good supply of books put on board by Mr. S. Herbert, and those associated with him, the ship is provided with a "religious instructor," accredited to his mission on the voyage by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

SLEDGING IN STOCKHOLM.—FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1850.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 422.—Vol. xvi.] SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1850. [Sixpence. { WITH SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

THE TAXES ON KNOWLEDGE AND OPINION.

The motion of Mr. Milner Gibson for the Repeal of the Taxes on Paper, Newspapers, Advertisements, and Foreign Books, though opposed by a Government that seems to have as great an antipathy to the mental as it has to the physical enlightenment of the people, if either of these questions threaten to give it trouble in the equalization of income with expenditure, is one of those motions which defeat cannot destroy, or even postpone for any lengthened period.

We have already expressed our opinion at considerable length upon the two most important of the four subjects—all closely related—which Mr. Milner Gibson, in his very temperate and effective speech, brought before the notice of the Legislature, on Tuesday evening. We can do no more than reiterate generally the arguments we have previously used in support of the immediate abolition of the Excise Duty on Paper and upon Advertisements in Newspapers. In a purely trading or commercial point of view, those taxes are highly objectionable. They prevent the employment of vast numbers of industrious people; they restrict the business, not only of the paper-maker, but of the rag-merchant, the machinist, the type-founder, the compositor, the bookbinder, the bookseller, and the author. The Advertisement Duty stands between the buyer and the seller, and between the employer and the employed; and is, in effect, a tax upon commerce and upon industry. All these points were well argued by Mr. Gibson, and have been so often brought before the public, and so often proved to the satisfaction of all intelligent minds, that they have become truisms. The question, however, stands upon higher grounds than these. It is not merely a commercial matter, but one which affects our national character for intelligence and morality, and upon which the future fate of this country, amid the troubles of Europe, may ultimately depend in no inconsiderable degree. It is well known to all persons connected, however remotely, with literature, and ought to be known to the legislators of the nation, that, under the present law, the vilest and most degrading fictions, the most libellous, scurrilous, and paltry publications, abominable for their matter, contemptible for their manner, and printed on the most wretched paper and in the most inferior style of typography, find a large and increasing sale; whilst periodical works conducted with honesty and ability, capable of elevating the minds and polishing the manners of the people, and of instructing them in their duty to God and to one another, are crushed under the operation of the Excise duty upon paper. These facts may be said to be patent, and to be incapable of contradiction by any friend of the truth. Upon these points, as upon those which were merely commercial, Mr. Milner Gibson put his case with great clearness and energy. Should there be still in England any persons in the condition of those antediluvian intellects who dread that a reading people must necessarily be a dangerous people, we advise them to study well the whole bearing of the facts which have been brought forward; and decide whether it is better that the people should continue to read the abominations of the Holywell-street press, as they do now, or that they should be enabled to store their minds with the reading placed weekly before them, for the inculcation of honesty and truth and the laws of social well-being. This matter is indeed a serious one, and has lately assumed a character so alarming as to call for the prompt interference of all who value English morality and religion; and who do not desire that this country should be indoctrinated with the vulgar, heartless, and godless licentiousness, which always precedes and hastens revolution.

The question of the repeal of the Import Duty on Foreign Books is a very simple one. There is not a syllable to be said in its favour. The amount it yields is paltry; its opposition to the true principles of commerce is palpable; and the injury it inflicts upon those learned men who cultivate a love for foreign literature, and diffuse what is good in it among the people of England, is considerable. Never had an impost a more wretched leg to stand upon; and we suppose that even our present Chancellor of the Exchequer would yield it up in a moment upon its own merits, were it not that, by so doing, he would weaken to some extent the citadel of his opposition to the other three taxes with which it is associated.

The Stamp Duty on Newspapers appears to differ from the other branches of the subject, but it only differs because a question of the Post-office has been mixed up with it. The two, however, are easily separated. As regards the first, we are aware that numbers of very estimable people are of opinion that newspapers are rightly subjected to a stamp, for the sake of the public interest, and to keep the highly important business of newspaper-making in the hands of men of capital and responsibility, in order that private character may not be assailed by men of straw, and that the State may have some little guarantee that the men who wield such great and increasing power may not be altogether irresponsible for its exercise. Unhappily, however, the Stamp Duty on Newspapers—if this be really its object—does not attain the end in view. Men of straw and men of infamous character publish periodicals; and, as long as they do not promulgate the public news of the day, and the facts of our social and political condition, which we see in the stamped journals, they pay no duty, and carry on an unimpeded and unrestricted trade of libel and defamation. We will not serve the purposes of such literary bravos by even mentioning the names of their despicable journals. As Mr. Milner Gibson expressed it, "under the present system of Stamp Duties, truth is taxed, and lying is untaxed." If this tax were abolished, the principal and speedy result would be an extended sale for newspapers of the superior kind, and the gradual extinction of the infamous class of publications. At present the newspaper is rendered so dear by the combined operation of the excise duty upon paper and the stamp duty upon each impression, that the poor man cannot afford to purchase it. He goes into a public-house to read it, and pays for the liquor which he consumes over the operation more money than would enable him, if those taxes were repealed, to purchase a good paper and read it to his family at his own fire-side. We think that even Sir Charles Wood might confess that it would be better for the poor man, better for trade, and better for the morality and happiness of the country, that such should be the case.

Portici—The recent residence of the Pope sketched from the sea.—(See next page.)

As regards the plea that this tax is necessary for the purpose of the Post-office, we hold it to be entirely an error and a misconception. No one desires that the Post-office should be compelled to carry newspapers post free; but surely it would meet the necessities of the Post-office, and the justice of the case, if the penny stamp, instead of being branded on the corner of all newspapers, in order that a proportion of them may pass the Post-office, were affixed, as it is now, upon letters. By this means the Post-office would lose nothing; and those only who have occasion to send newspapers through the post would have to pay for the accommodation. Nay, the Post-office would actually gain very largely by the change. At present a newspaper may pass and re-pass a dozen times through the Post-office; but if the stamp were affixed, as upon a letter, it would have to pay each time of transmission; and thus the Post-office would gain an amount of revenue which would be probably a four-fold, or six-fold, increase upon the sum at present derivable. The plea is in other respects unfair, as will be at once understood from the fact that the Post-office grants no exception to newspapers passing through district posts. A newspaper posted in London and sent to any part of London pays a penny postage, notwithstanding the stamp upon it. This Post-office plea for the retention of the stamp, we therefore hold, on every ground, to be utterly worthless.

The plea that there is no surplus of revenue to enable the Government to grant the boon demanded, which was obstinately urged by Sir Charles Wood, and more feebly by Lord John Russell, is one that will not stand. A government has a right to the money necessary for carrying on the affairs of the State; but it has no right to raise the sum required by taxes that impede trade and thereby diminish the public wealth, or that injuriously affect the health or the morals of the people. It cannot be said that the excise duty upon paper, the stamp on newspapers, and the advertisement duty do not injuriously affect trade, and prevent the dissemination of healthful literature. It is the business of members of Parliament, speaking in the interests of their constituents, to press for the repeal of unjust or impolitic taxation. It is not their business to suggest a substitute. Mr. Gibson is quite right in stating that if a member of Parliament were to wait, previous to asking the House to express an opinion upon the policy of particular taxes, until there was a clear surplus, and no way pointed out of applying that surplus, he would never have an opportunity of submitting such a motion. At all times Government managed to spend as much as it could get. The expenditure was always up to the revenue.

A wise Minister, by a judicious reduction of taxation, increases not only the public satisfaction and prosperity, but the national revenue; and the power of doing this is the test of a good financier. This, however, is not the forte of the present Government, as nothing seems more alien from the thoughts of Sir Charles Wood than that he should be driven into any such personally inconvenient piece of public usefulness. Lord John Russell wavers more than his financial colleague, and begins to see that, at some future day, it will be advisable to consider this great subject; and, notwithstanding the present defeat of the motion, the best friends of the prosperity and morality of the British people, and the stability of their institutions, will continue to press it upon the attention of this and every future Ministry. Even this first object arrived at by Mr. Milner Gibson would be a blessing to the country: it would tend to spread abroad truth—to encourage temperance—to strengthen the religious sentiment, and to forward every good and holy work; and yet the Ministry that recklessly and mischievously throws away upon the African squadron double the amount acquired by the Exchequer from this impolitic tax, has the bad taste to talk of being unable to afford the sacrifice. If it were inconvenient at present to have repealed the Newspaper Stamp and Advertisement Duty, the Government might easily have postponed those questions for an indefinite period, and entitled itself to the gratitude of the country by taking the excise man out of the paper-mill. This it has not done, when it had the chance; and for this, as well as other gross errors, it will pay the penalty sooner or later, and be replaced by a Ministry which shall have the courage and ability to consider our system of taxation as a whole, and to re-model it upon principles which shall unfetter industry, trade, and commerce; and leave religion, education, and all sorts of intellectual pursuits of more importance, to reach the multitude. It is an idea with some people, not considered altogether insane, that all this may be done without diminishing the national income. They even go so far as to assert that a judicious reform of our financial system would attain these desirable objects, and increase the national revenue at the same time. Whatever may be the Ministry that shall attempt this great task, it is quite clear it will not be one in which Sir Charles Wood is Chancellor of the Exchequer.

THE POPE'S CHATEAU, AT PORTICI.

THE Royal Palace of Portici has of late been a place of especial interest, as the abode of PIUS IX., which his Holiness quitted on the 4th inst., for Rome. The details of his departure, and his journey to the Eternal City, will be found in the adjoining column.

The Palace of Portici lies at four miles distance, by railway, from Naples. The building does not present any remarkable features; on the contrary, it is an ugly pile, of quadrangular form, through which the main road passes, under arches at either end. A Correspondent, on a late visit there, found the courtyard of the Palace occupied by a few officers, and one or two Cardinal's carriages, which were so oddly built, as to remind him of those designed by artists in gingerbread. There was a melancholy quiet about the place. He heard nothing but the footfall of the sentinels, who guarded every doorway, and gave the Palace a prison-like appearance. His Holiness occupied that portion of the Royal residence which faces the sea. The building was erected by the Bourbon Charles III., about a century ago, and its foundation is formed of the lava which destroyed Herculaneum. Here the statue of Balbo the younger was found, and some curious pavements, which now decorate the Palace—the interior of which, however, presents little attraction, with the exception of one or two rooms decorated by the portraits of Napoleon, Murat, Massena, and others, which recal the French occupation of Italy.

The village of Portici was destroyed in 1631 by the same Vesuvius that still appears to threaten the Elysian coast. The town is long and straggling, with many imposing palaces, which the Neapolitans use for a few weeks in autumn. The lower, or ground floors of these palaces are chiefly used as maccaroni shops; and here may be seen many a long row of yellow pipes baking in the sun. On either side of these pipes there are stalls, or shops, for the sale of bread and cake, the latter, in varied circular forms, being nailed to long strips of boarding, as if the "staff of life" were for works. The accompanying Sketch, taken from the sea, represents the village of Portici, at the point where the railway passes, and affords by far the most pleasing view of the residence of the Pope, peeping over the bosco, the pleasure-grounds of the palace, backed by the grand old mountain.

A letter from Naples of the 1st inst. thus describes one of the Pope's latest receptions at Portici:—"The officers of the French squadron, headed by the Admiral and the Ambassador, M. de Rayneval, were received by the Pope, in the Cortile of Portici, on the 20th ult. There is nothing remarkable in the residence, except the situation: the furniture is very modest, the decorations faded, the saloons deserted. The staff assembled in a vast apartment which precedes the throne-room, and in which were several chamberlains, and a private secretary of the Pope, Monsignor Borromeo. On the invasion of the chief of the camerieri, and in conformity with the ceremonials adopted by the Court of Rome, all the officers took off their gloves before entering the throne-room. The Holy Father was standing, wearing a white cassock and cap. The arms of the Holy See were embroidered on his red-leather slippers. Pius IX. is of middle height, and somewhat stout. His features are soft, calm, and intelligent, his [illegible] and abundant. The Admiral, after having expressed to the Pope the name of the officers of the squadron, and the books they owed him for the audience he had deigned to accord them, said that he should have proud to have been able to escort him to his States. The Pope replied in Italian:—'I am happy, gentlemen, to receive the officers of the French squadron. I shall never forget what France has done for me, for the sake of the Church, and of the right which I derive from our divine religion. I know several officers of the French army, and always see them with pleasure; they have procured me during my stay at Gaeta all sorts of consolation. I could desire to bless France as I now bless you.' At these words, all the officers inclined themselves, and M. Perseval and M. Lacuée, kneeling, kissed the Pope's ring. The three chaplains of the squadron, who were present, kissed the Pope's slipper; and all then retired backwards from the presence of his Holiness."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The accounts from Paris this week communicate intelligence of a dreadful catastrophe. On Tuesday last, while the 11th Regiment of Light Infantry were crossing the suspension-bridge over the Loire, at Angers, a great portion of the chain-work gave way, by which between 200 and 300 men fell into the river and were drowned. This melancholy fact was announced to the Assembly, on Wednesday, by the Minister of War, where it created a deep sensation. The Minister afterwards promised to afford all possible relief to the families of the unfortunate sufferers.

M. Eugène Sue, the well-known novelist, has been selected by the Socialists as their candidate at the ensuing Paris elections. The Conservative party are divided between M. Foy and M. Leclerc.

The Electoral Union Committee, who are not pleased at some of the Moderate party bringing forward M. Leclerc, have determined that a preparatory ballot shall take place, in order that the conservative candidate shall be duly selected from a list that is then to be submitted to its members. The Moderates, on the other hand, have resolved to pay no attention to the demands of the Electoral Union; and insist on M. Leclerc being brought forward as their candidate. M. Leclerc is the gentleman who, when acting as a National Guard, and witnessing his eldest boy fall at his side pierced with balls, in the June insurrection, went home for his second son, and returned with him to the conflict.

In the Legislative Assembly on Monday evening, the subject of discussion being the budget, the Minister of Finance proposed that 717,000 francs be voted, in order that assistance might be granted to those distressed persons who should have a claim on the Government. M. Murin (de la Drôme) objected to the motion, upon the ground that political refugees ought not to partake of this vote, for it was offering a premium to rebellion. He concluded by proposing, as an amendment, a reduction of 300,000 francs, which was put and carried, amidst much unseemly violence of language and gesture. Another uproarious scene took place in the Assembly on Tuesday evening, upon M. Schneider moving an amendment restoring the grant to political sufferers. Members of all parties were speaking at one and the same time, and in the most vehement manner, so that it was difficult for the persons present to understand what was going on. At length the previous question was moved, and carried by 406 to 305.

At Wednesday's sitting, the credit of 1,200,000f. for foreign refugees having been moved, M. Joly, of the Mountain, attacked the Government for expelling those individuals from the country instead of succouring them. The Minister replied, that those only had been expelled who had mixed themselves up with factions that threatened the peace of the country. The proposition was carried by 412 to 307.

The President of the Republic still assiduously pays court to the army. On Monday, he visited the military prison at St. Germain, where he granted a pardon to sixty of the convicts.

A Socialist riot occurred at Saumer, a day or two since, which rendered the interference of the military necessary. Some of the mob were injured in the affray, but the disturbance was soon put down.

ITALIAN STATES

ROME.—At length the return of the Pope to Rome is a fait accompli. His Holiness left Portici on the 4th instant, escorted by Neapolitan and Roman Dragoons, and accompanied by the King of Naples and several members of the Royal family, together with their Eminences the Cardinal Antonelli, pro-secretary of State, and Cardinal Du Pont, Archbishop of Bourges; his Excellency Signor Garribaldi, the Apostolic Nuncio at Naples, and the whole of the Pontifical Court. On the 6th he crossed the frontier, and entered his own dominions at Terracina, where he passed through a triumphal arch, amidst the roar of artillery and the acclamations of the people, compelled to procure; including throughout, with some clumsy circumlocution and much infelicitous point, that we and our contemporaries, the "high-priced" organs of opinion, take rank together with the littérateurs of Hyde-park street—with the writers whose Muse is Cloacina, and whose type is the Père Duchesne.

After all, it would be idle to defend our order against the insults of the Whig leader, if his lordship were entitled to such honours by notice. Is the claim to this exhibition to be seized in the famous confession of Lord Althorp—"I never read newspapers"? and are we to conclude that the great families have given the political machine another engineer who systematically neglects the greatest of its moving powers? Is the polished "leaf of the untamped press"? The latter hypothesis may be rejected as implying not only an inability to distinguish the treatment from the abuse of a subject, but an absence of the common æsthetic power of discerning between the opposite. In fact, there is no plausible solution but one. Lord John Russell became angry from angry grew imprudent—and then gave vent to a little of the acrid bile which, nourished by the pride, family and political connexions, secretes in some remote corner of his heart of hearts. Shall we say, in the names of ourselves and our contemporaries, that it is well for him our position is so well secured? As things are, we can afford to be calm; but a minister of less unique influence smaller and Lord John's larger than it is, we might, when we meditated on the qualifications for our dudes and for his—when we reflected how little mere respectability of character would compensate to a journalist for a meagre philosophy, a frigid imagination, and a schoolboy pen—be tempted to employ against him, and perhaps with more formidable effect, the anti-social weapons of that very anarchical press to which he injuriously assimilates us.

Just one word, however, on the feature of resemblance between the two schools of journalism on which his Lordship thought fit specially to animadvert. It appeared that the literary Yahoo whom Mr. Gibson cited had been attempting to defile Lord Grey. "The character of Lord Grey," observed Lord John Russell, "I almost thought might have been written by Jacob Omnium, or one of the writers for the daily press." We are almost afraid we insult the intelligence of our readers by explaining that, between the performance in question and the inimitable letters of Mr. Omnium, there was absolutely nothing in common but the introduction of Lord Grey's name. The inference is, that the grace and refinement of composition are immaterial, in the Premier's judgment, to preserve censure of the Colonial Secretary from the odium of the assassin. A wrong-headed partiality is sufficiently extraordinary; but, after all, the most curious reflection suggested by Lord John's comparison is this—that there is extant another "character of Lord Grey," besides those of Mr. Jacob Omnium, Mr. G. W. M. Reynolds, and the "writers of the daily press." Who has forgotten that portrait sketched by one of the most eminent of masters, though with coarse colours and a hasty hand? "A most captious, the most ill-tempered, the most impracticable, the most" &c. &c. of mankind.

It is a little odd that, in that circle of the Inferno where the galleasyers of Whig patriotism struggle chin-deep in filth and mire, we should find ourselves alongside of the late colleague of the Premier—the great illustration of his party and of our age. But justice is even-handed, of course.

CALIFORNIA.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

Salmon Falls, South Fork of American River,
Alta Ca fornia, January 3, 1850.

SIR,—There has lately been a new discovery respecting the gold in this country, and great interest has been awakened on the subject. On the western slope of Sierra Nevada veins of gold-bearing quartz have been discovered, the richness of which will quite change the manner of mining in California. In June last T. Butler King commenced his investigations, and devoted two months to the subject, assisted by Mr. Wright. They have since made the results public. The specimen of quartz rock in possession of Mr. Wright are generally of a brownish tinge, and in some instances present the appearance of a slight incipient decay or decomposition of the rock formation. The gold points or particles are seldom visible to the naked eye, but the microscope reveals them plainly. Mr. Wright, however, has one specimen of the same rock weighing some 10 or 12 lb., from ad parts of which the gold protrudes plainly, in a state almost pure. This specimen, from the most careful specific gravity test, as applied by Mr. Wright, contains about equal dollars worth of pure gold.

But the interest or importance attaching to this or any other isolated specimen, however peculiar or rich in itself, is very inconsiderable in comparison with that which belongs to the average class of specimens. The astonishing results brought out by the investigations is, that 4 lb. of the quartz rock yielded upon an average 11 dollars worth of gold (valued at the rate of 16 dollars per oz.) The largest yield from the 4 lb. of rock was 12 dollars, and the smallest yield was 10 dollars.

In other veins of quartz rock in the same mountain range, many specimens have been tested, but in no instance has the yield been less than 1 dollar to the pound of rock, and the average yield has been from 12 to 2 dollars to the pound of quartz.

From these facts, it is clear that in future the principal mining operations will cease to be located on the rivers and ravines, but will be carried on in those primeval masses of rock in which the gold was formed, and in which it is now embedded, inexhaustible. All the gold hitherto found in this country is but the chance washings and abrasions from these mountains.

GEORGE WARDE.

court-martial ordered to inquire whether that officer did his utmost to quell the mutiny of his guard. The colours of the 66th were to be delivered over to the Nusseeree battalion, who will be in future denominated the 66th or Goorka Regiment.

His Excellency, the Governor-General of India (Marquis of Dalhousie), returned to Calcutta on the 7th March, where he was received with the most rapturous acclamations.

Sir Willoughby Cotton's resignation of the command of the Bombay army has been accepted; and it is expected that he will be relieved from that post of honour in October next.

The troops were enjoying tolerably good health, no great amount of sickness being prevalent. Small-pox was doing deadly work at Calcutta and its neighbourhood; and among other victims to that disease was Captain Hanfield, of her Majesty's 29th Foot.

The expedition under Sir Colin Campbell against the mountaineers in the neighbourhood of Peshawur had not been attended with the expected results. The expedition had returned to Peshawur.

The Hindoo and Mussulman populations in Mirzapoor had risen against each other under the influence of religious fanaticism; and in the disturbances which followed, the city was burnt to the ground.

The rest of India was profoundly tranquil.

CHINA.

The accounts from Hong-Kong are to the 27th of February. They contain nothing of interest in the domestic intelligence, but they state that the news recently received there from San Francisco had once more given an impetus to Californian speculation. Provisions—and indeed almost every article—were in great demand, to supply the places of those destroyed by the late conflagration. Several vessels had departed for the land of gold during the month, and others were on the eve of departure. Something in the nature of a slave trade was springing up at Hong Kong, which was either not known or was connived at by the consular authorities there viz. contracts with artificers (Chinese) were made for three years, and these men were conveyed to San Francisco, and their services openly sold there for 400 dollars. A regular stream of emigrants was thus moving towards California from China, east.

[CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The latest intelligence from the Cape informs us that the Neptune convict ship took its departure from the colonial waters at eight o'clock a.m., on the 21st of February. In the evening of that day, a general illumination took place, when the city on our readers to have witnessed a brilliant scene. The houses of the poor as well as those of the rich contributed their portion of light to the dazzling blaze, while the streets were thronged with spectators, gazing with rapture on the splendid view around them.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL AND THE PRESS.

(From the Morning Chronicle of Thursday.)

We are well aware that Prime Ministers, whose oratory must be ready to brave all weathers, are occasionally apt to be at a loss for a retort; but we are really astonished that even Lord John Russell's poverty of resource should have betrayed him into the suicidal argumentation of the speech which he delivered on Tuesday night. Our readers will remember the debate and its occasion. Mr. Milner Gibson, after moving resolutions condemnatory of the stamp and paper duties, had pertinently urged that the factitious price at which the Excise and Stamps cause first-class newspapers to be sold was rapidly driving the people, in their hunger for knowledge, to feed on the obscene or envenomed garbage of the unstamped sheets. The Government thought it could not afford to abandon the taxes on knowledge. Well and good. An appeal ad misericordiam is tolerably certain of favour with the House, and the Premier might easily have softened the disappointment of his suitors by a little of the oil of compliment or the saccharine solvent of partial concession. But spleen, or dyspepsia, or Mr. Roebuck, had exasperated his Lordship's temper, and he riposted with a thrust which almost forced Mr. Gibson's seconds to take the affair out of the hands of their principal. The "extracts read by his right honourable friend"—which consisted, be it observed, of mere anti-social nonsense and brutality—"seemed to him very much like what we read in stamped newspapers." This was the key-note which Lord John continued for some time in the same strain, affirmed that "much of the matter contained in newspapers cannot properly be dignified by the name of knowledge," and hinted that the chief superiority of the highest to the lowest class of journals lay in the expensive machinery which the former employed to procure it. Imitating throughout, with some clumsy circumlocution and much infelicitous point, that we and our contemporaries, the "high-priced" organs of opinion, take rank together with the littérateurs of Hyde-park street—with the writers whose Muse is Cloacina, and whose type is the Père Duchesne.

After all, it would be idle to defend our order against the insults of the Whig leader, if his reverend mother were entitled to such honours by notice. Is the claim to this exhibition to be seized in the famous confession of Lord Althorp—"I never read newspapers"? and are we to conclude that the great families have given the political machine another engineer who systematically neglects the greatest of its moving powers? Is the polished "leaf of the untamped press"? The latter hypothesis may be rejected as implying not only an inability to distinguish the treatment from the abuse of a subject, but an absence of the common æsthetic power of discerning between the opposite. In fact, there is no plausible solution but one. Lord John Russell became angry from angry grew imprudent—and then gave vent to a little of the acrid bile which, nourished by the pride, family and political connexions, secretes in some remote corner of his heart of hearts. Shall we say, in the names of ourselves and our contemporaries, that it is well for him our position is so well secured? As things are, we can afford to be calm; but a minister of less unique influence smaller and Lord John's larger than it is, we might, when we meditated on the qualifications for our dudes and for his—when we reflected how little mere respectability of character would compensate to a journalist for a meagre philosophy, a frigid imagination, and a schoolboy pen—be tempted to employ against him, and perhaps with more formidable effect, the anti-social weapons of that very anarchical press to which he injuriously assimilates us.

Just one word, however, on the feature of resemblance between the two schools of journalism on which his Lordship thought fit specially to animadvert. It appeared that the literary Yahoo whom Mr. Gibson cited had been attempting to defile Lord Grey. "The character of Lord Grey," observed Lord John Russell, "I almost thought might have been written by Jacob Omnium, or one of the writers for the daily press." We are almost afraid we insult the intelligence of our readers by explaining that, between the performance in question and the inimitable letters of Mr. Omnium, there was absolutely nothing in common but the introduction of Lord Grey's name. The inference is, that the grace and refinement of composition are immaterial, in the Premier's judgment, to preserve censure of the Colonial Secretary from the odium of the assassin. A wrong-headed partiality is sufficiently extraordinary; but, after all, the most curious reflection suggested by Lord John's comparison is this—that there is extant another "character of Lord Grey," besides those of Mr. Jacob Omnium, Mr. G. W. M. Reynolds, and the "writers of the daily press." Who has forgotten that portrait sketched by one of the most eminent of masters, though with coarse colours and a hasty hand? "A most captious, the most ill-tempered, the most impracticable, the most" &c. &c. of mankind.

It is a little odd that, in that circle of the Inferno where the galleasyers of Whig patriotism struggle chin-deep in filth and mire, we should find ourselves alongside of the late colleague of the Premier—the great illustration of his party and of our age. But justice is even-handed, of course.

CALIFORNIA.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

Salmon Falls, South Fork of American River,
Alta California, January 3, 1850.

SIR,—There has lately been a new discovery respecting the gold in this country, and great interest has been awakened on the subject. On the western slope of Sierra Nevada veins of gold-bearing quartz have been discovered, the richness of which will quite change the manner of mining in California. In June last T. Butler King commenced his investigations, and devoted two months to the subject, assisted by Mr. Wright. They have since made the results public. The specimen of quartz rock in possession of Mr. Wright are generally of a brownish tinge, and in some instances present the appearance of a slight incipient decay or decomposition of the rock formation. The gold points or particles are seldom visible to the naked eye, but the microscope reveals them plainly. Mr. Wright, however, has one specimen of the same rock weighing some 10 or 12 lb., from ad parts of which the gold protrudes plainly, in a state almost pure. This specimen, from the most careful specific gravity test, as applied by Mr. Wright, contains about equal dollars worth of pure gold.

But the interest or importance attaching to this or any other isolated specimen, however peculiar or rich in itself, is very inconsiderable in comparison with that which belongs to the average class of specimens. The astonishing results brought out by the investigations is, that 4 lb. of the quartz rock yielded upon an average 11 dollars worth of gold (valued at the rate of 16 dollars per oz.) The largest yield from the 4 lb. of rock was 12 dollars, and the smallest yield was 10 dollars.

In other veins of quartz rock in the same mountain range, many specimens have been tested, but in no instance has the yield been less than 1 dollar to the pound of rock, and the average yield has been from 1½ to 2 dollars to the pound of quartz.

From these facts, it is clear that in future the principal mining operations will cease to be located on the rivers and ravines, but will be carried on in those primeval masses of rock in which the gold was formed, and in which it is now embedded, inexhaustible. All the gold hitherto found in this country is but the chance washings and abrasions from these mountains.

GEORGE WARDE.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.

Lord Stanley, in presenting a petition from the agriculturists of St. Peter's, in the Isle of Thanet, and from five places in Lincolnshire, called the attention of their lordships to the fact that the abolition of the Corn-laws had reduced the price of corn much below the price which had been admitted to be the lowest that would be remunerative to the farmers. The noble Lord referred to the general cry for a reduction of public salaries and pensions as an example of the extent to which the effects of "Free Trade" made it felt. He did not consider that it would be safe to reduce public salaries, and, by that means, the efficiency of the administration of public affairs, in the way in which the petitioners desired; but, as the policy of the present Government had increased the burdens of the agriculturists very materially, he thought their claims were entitled to consideration.

The Brick Duties Bill and the Exchequer-bills Bill passed through committee.

ECCLESIASTICAL DOCTRINES.

In reply to a question from Lord Redesdale, the Bishop of London stated that it was certainly his intention to proceed with his Bill for the Establishment of a Court of Appeal other than the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in cases of False Doctrine held by Ministers of the Established Church. The course he should propose would be a Church court; but he had not yet had an opportunity of consulting his right reverend brethren on certain of the clauses of his bill. As soon as he could obtain their opinion on those clauses (which, however, would not touch the question of the proposed new court of appeal), he should proceed with the bill.

Lord Redesdale expressed a hope that the right reverend prelate would not delay pressing his measure.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

QUESTIONS.

To a question from Mr. Hume, Mr. Labouchere stated that steps had been taken to reduce the expences of our quarantine establishment to the lowest practical amount. There are now only three establishments, the total cost of which was but £1500. He did not think that it wou d be advisable to abolish our quarantine establishment altogether, without the concurrence of other powers.

ABOLITION OF THE LORD-LIEUTENANCY OF IRELAND.

Lord J. Russell gave notice that he would, on the 6th of May, move for leave to bring in a Bill to abolish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and to appoint a fourth Secretary of State.

STAMP DUTIES.

On the motion to go into Committee on the Stamp Duties Bill,

Sir Henry Willoughby inquired if it were competent to the House to go into Committee on the bill, considering that it deviated in a very material degree from the preliminary resolutions agreed to in committee of the whole House.

The Speaker ruled that the preliminary resolutions were sufficient Committee of the bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that, since the introduction of the bill, a great number of communications had been received, setting forth objections or suggestions, and that ninety-nine out of the hundred objections had been altogether removed by the alterations subsequently made in the measure.

Mr. Gouldburn pointed out some objections to the bill as then framed. It had been brought forward with the professed intention of giving relief to the landed interest, yet in the case of mortgages it increased the stamp duties on large transactions enormously. The right hon. gentleman showed how, in the instance of a property heavily mortgaged, it would operate as a preventive to the reduction of the high interest now charged.

After some critical remarks of Mr. Roundell Palmer, Mr. Henley, Mr. Hume, and Mr. Sadleir, the House went into committee on the bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer then said that he had not proposed the bill as a relief to all parties, but as a relief to small interests, agricultural and commercial; and this he sought to do by adopting the ad valorem principle of duty throughout, as far as practicable. It appeared to him that large transactions should pay, in fairness, an equal percentage with small transactions. With respect to bonds and mortgages, and also to leases, and to the consolidation with the Chairman of Inland Revenue, to make the reductions equal, and to fix the duty at 1 per cent. instead of 5 per cent., as was first proposed in the bill. He should add to the large amount of reduction of duties on small transactions, and increase of duties on large transactions, the loss to the revenue would be somewhere about £320,000 his original estimate of loss having been under £300,000.

Mr. Disraeli remarked that the right hon. gentleman had so had introduced the measure as a benefit to the landed interest; but it turned out that his proposal was to tax one portion of the landed interest for the advantage of another. Whether any opinion whether or not such a measure was politic or necessary, he (Mr. Disraeli) could not avoid protesting against the underhand mode of its introduction.

After a desultory discussion, Mr. Bright suggested an adjournment, as he did not think the subject had been maturely considered by the Government.

Lord J. Russell said the principle of the measure had been for a month before the House, and all objections to its details should be discussed rather at the Chairman of Inland Revenue, to make the reductions equal, and to fix the duty at 1 per cent. instead of 5 per cent., as was first proposed in the bill. He should add to the large amount of reduction of duties on small transactions, and increase of duties on large transactions, the loss to the revenue would be somewhere about £320,000 his original estimate of loss having been under £300,000.

Mr. Disraeli remarked that the right hon. gentleman had so had introduced the measure as a benefit to the landed interest; but it turned out that his proposal was to tax one portion of the landed interest for the advantage of another. Whether any opinion whether or not such a measure was politic or necessary, he (Mr. Disraeli) could not avoid protesting against the underhand mode of its introduction.

After a desultory discussion, Mr. Bright suggested an adjournment, as he did not think the subject had been maturely considered by the Government.

Lord J. Russell said the principle of the measure had been for a month before the House, and all objections to its details should be discussed rather in committee than on the clauses. The greatest inconvenience would be caused by further delay, for many transactions were kept in abeyance pending the decision of the House upon it.

The bill passed every disposition to agree to the remission of duties on small transactions, but, such was the general impatience of taxation, he had no disposition to agree to an increase of duties on large transactions.

The clauses of the bill were agreed to.

On schedule B, by which it was proposed to establish an ad valorem duty on bonds, beginning at 2s. 6d. on sums under £50,

Sir H. Willoughby moved, as an amendment, that the duty should begin at 1s., and go on increasing ad valorem.

Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Goulburn, and a great many hon. members supported the amendment as the principle of an ad valorem duty was to be adopted, it would be best to begin at the lowest practicable amount.

The committee divided.

For Sir H. Willoughby's amendment	..	..	164
Against it	..	..	135
Majority against the Government	..	..	—29

The Chancellor of the Exchequer immediately moved that the Chairman report progress, in order to allow him to consider what course he should adopt in consequence of the decision of the committee.

Progress was accordingly reported, and the Chairman obtained leave to sit again on Monday.

SECURITIES FOR LOANS (IRELAND).

The Solicitor-General moved the second reading of the Securities for Advances (Ireland) Bill.

Mr. J. Stuart thought, that, as this bill was introduced with the intention of aiding the operation of the Encumbered Estates Act, the House ought to be informed how many sales had been actually effected under that act, how many orders had been made for the sale of estates by the Commissioners, and in how many cases applications had been made to have sales effected on payment of half the purchase money, and the other half in the mode provided by the bill. The honourable and learned member moved the adjournment of the debate until this information should be before the House.

Sir J. Walsh supported the adjournment. He thought that the information required by Mr. Stuart should be laid on the table before the discussion on the second reading of the bill, and he thought, moreover, that twelve o'clock at night was too late an hour to begin a debate on so important a measure

Mr. Hatchell and Mr. Anstey urged the necessity of proceeding without delay.

The debate was ultimately adjourned to Thursday next.

MEDICAL CHARITIES.

Sir W. Somerville moved the second reading of the Medical Charities (Ireland) Bi l, the objects of which he shortly explained. The principle of the bill was the establishment of a medical board. The right hon. gentleman announced that he had several alterations to make in the bill.

Mr. Hamilton agreed that the medical charities in Ireland required amendment, but he had many objections to the bill.

The bill was read a second ti e, on the understanding that it should be committed pro forma, in order to have the amendments proposed by the Irish Secretary introduced into it, and that the general discussion should then be taken.

The Money Payment of Wages (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

EXTRAMURAL INTERMENTS

Sir G. Grey moved for leave to bring in a Bill to make better provision for the interment of the dead in and near the Metropolis. The right honourable gentleman recalled the House to the report of the Board of Health, though it did not follow the recommendation of the Board of Health, in all its details. By its enactments, interments within the metropolitan districts would be prohibited, and a board or commission would be appointed. The metropolitan districts would be as near as possible the same as the Registrar-General's districts. The board would be authorised to provide burial-grounds, to fix the fees for interments. They also would be empowered to take any existing cemeteries, making compensation to the present proprietors. The burial-grounds under this bill would be in part consecrated according to the rites of the Established Church, and in part unconsecrated, for all other denominations of Christians. Power would be given to the Queen in Council to order burials in churchyards in the district to be discontinued, with certain reservations of existing rights.

Leave was given to bring in the bill.—Adjourned at a quarter past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

Their Lordships sat for about half an hour.

The Earl of Hardwicke, in presenting some petitions, expressed his regret at the recent dismissal of the naval surgeons on the subject of grievances complained of by the assistant-surgeons in the navy

The Brick Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

CANES ON KNOWLEDGE.

Mr. M. Gibson, after presenting petitions in favour of this object from several printers of the metropolis, from Manchester, from Sligo, from Wells, from Ipswich, from Staleybridge, from Cumberland, from Halesworth (near Manchester), from Marylebone, and from the members and friends of the Literary Institution, John-street, Tottenham-court-road, rose to move the following resolutions :—

"Whereas all taxes which directly impede the diffusion of knowledge are highly injurious to the public interests, and are most impolitic sources of revenue, this House is of opinion—

"1st. That such financial arrangements ought to be made as will enable Parliament to repeal the excise duty on paper

"2nd. That it is expedient to abolish the stamp duties now payable on newspapers in Great Britain and Ireland.

"3rd. That it is expedient to abolish the duties now payable on advertisements in Great Britain and Ireland.

"4th. And that the customs-duty on foreign books ought to be repealed."

The hon. member said,—Sir, before I enter upon the merits of the particular resolutions that I am about to submit to the House, I think it right to make a few preliminary observations, in order to explain to the House why I have thought it consistent with my views to submit the motion in its present form of separate resolutions; also to explain to the hon. House exactly what it is I wish my motion to be understood by hon. members who are inclined to vote for any of these resolutions; and also to explain why I consider it right to move for what some might consider a large reduction of taxation after the financial arrangements of the year had been concluded. With regard to the last of these points, viz. in reference to the difficulty which honourable gentleman naturally feel to entertaining any proposition for the reduction of the taxation of the country, after the financial arrangements of the year had been made, I wish to say that, if members of Parliament are to wait previous to asking the House to express an opinion upon the policy of a tax until there is a clear surplus, and no way is pointed out of employing that surplus, I very much question whether we will ever be an opportunity for an independent member to submit the policy of any taxation to the House. At all times Government spend as much as they can get. You can at no particular moment point out what it is you have found that the expenditure of the country is equal to its revenue. If you are to wait for the time when Government has a surplus with no plan for its disposal, I say that you will scarcely have an opportunity to raise objections to any part of the taxation. In 1842, when the right honourable gentleman the member for Tamworth (whom I see opposite) entered into power, with a large deficiency, the expenditure having exceeded the revenue, that did not deter the right hon. gentleman from dealing with taxation as a matter of policy, and from making financial arrangements, that, without impairing the public revenue, he was able to repeal many taxes which rested on the springs of industry and fettered the operations of manufactures. I, therefore, without reference to the question, whether money is lying idle in the coffers of the State, am justified in bringing forward these matters as matters of policy, with a view to ask the House whether any particular tax is the fittest one for permanent part of taxation. I do not ask any gentleman to do anything rash, nor do I myself wish to do anything rash connected with finance. It has been contended that the amount of population is rising up sometimes : I do not think so now ; but I do not feel myself precluded from examining the consequences of particular modes in which taxation may press on industry, to see whether we can make any progress in such a manner as will leave the public revenue without checking the diffusion of knowledge or pressing on the important branch of trade and manufactures. The mode in which I ask the House is simply this : I ask them to declare at this moment that the paper tax is the one. I ask them to declare that such financial arrangements ought to be made as will enable Parliament to repeal the excise duty on paper. I ask them whether they think it a thing that such a tax at this moment remain a permanent source of revenue? I apprehend I am not departing from the legitimate functions of a member of the House of Commons in asking the opinion of the House on so important a question of policy as to any part of taxation. Although it is true that these resolutions are headed by a preamble, yet they will be put to the House separately, and I do not presume to ask any member of this House to vote for all these resolutions on one motion of my own, submitted in a form that should embrace every part. All that I do is to declare my own opinion, that all of these taxes ought to be repealed, but I only ask the House to vote for each separate resolution as it stands ; and if any gentleman may have difficulties as to the removal of the stamps on newspapers, he is not to be precluded from voting for the excise on paper, or if any other gentleman may not vote for the repeal of the duty on paper of £800,000 per annum, he is not to be deterred from voting for the repeal of the duty on stamps on papers. I wish to explain this matter to the House before my motion is placed in the hands of the Speaker, that hon. members may know to what extent they may give a favourable vote. The resolution that stands first is that on the duty on paper. This duty upon paper yields a revenue of something like £800,000; but if we were to deduct from that £800,000 the amount which is supplied to be paid by the State itself in duty upon the paper that the State consumes in all public departments, perhaps we might lower the amount. It consists with not less than something like between £30,000 and £300,000 ; and I do not think I should be far from the mark, if I put the paper duty on the whole at £750,000. Now, if we consider the duty on paper simply in relation to its effect on an important manufacture, I think we should find in it a convincing case for taking into our early consideration its repeal. Without going into the more immediate object of my motion, viz. the effect of this duty in impeding the diffusion of knowledge, I will call the attention of the House to its effect on the paper manufacture itself, upon the employment of labour, and upon some other considerations of a commercial character, that perhaps are not so immediately connected with the diffusion of knowledge. I hold it to be fatal to a tax, if you cannot protect, by any device you can adopt, the honest trader from the fraudulent trader. I would ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he would ask any experienced member on either side of the House, whether he would undertake to say it was in the power of Government, by any device they may adopt, to protect the honest manufacturer from the arts of the fraudulent manufacturer, and give him a fair chance in competition in supplying goods to the market? What a monstrous thing it is, if it be true that the Excise in Ireland are unable to protect the honest manufacturer, that you should continue a tax of this description? I am sure you ought to be fatal to the tax. We have heard of the competition of smuggling imported goods, but I do not think the competition of the smuggler is to be talked of for one moment in comparison with the competition of the fraudulent manufacturer of paper with the honest manufacturer who pays the duty. A list was published last year of the names of many persons who had been proceeded against by the Excise for carrying on a systemsale violation of the law in order that they might cheat the honest manufacturer from the fraudulent manufacturer, what do you do? You have recourse to a system of most vexatious interference, of constant prying into and meddling with all the affairs of the manufacturer of paper. You are obliged to do this—which I think anyone would hardly think to be true of any country, even Algiers—to protect in some slight degree the honest manufacturer from the unfair competition of the fraudulent manufacturer. I will give an instance of the sort of way in which it is thought necessary to interfere with the manufacturers of paper. Mr. Baldwin says :—

"It costs me in labour alone to help to charge myself with the duty on paper above £100 a year. I make about twelve tons per week ; and, in consequence of these excise laws, have to weigh every ream four times over, besides taking the number of every ream, and writing the weight on each. There are seven or eight paper-makers in Birmingham, all of whom, like myself, pay the duty of £50 a year duty ; while the time occupied by the excise man and supervisor in charging them with this amount costs the country five times that amount."

Is that there is no interference with the process of manufacture ; but you do interfere with the process of manufacture if you frame an act which is to be laid down that paper should be manufactured of certain materials in a wet state. And then it was found out that paper could be made of those materials in a dry state ; and the manufacturer producing articles from dry rags without paying the duty was competing with a man paying duty levied on paper made in a wet state. It was necessary to take some steps to make regulations to obviate this anomaly. A compromise was entered into with the manufacturer which permitted paper materials got up in a dry state. This manufacturer still defies you ; for he found some other invention which does not infringe your regulations, and is making out paper without paying duty which competes with paper paying the regular duty. You will say, these are matters not peculiar to the manufacture of paper ; that they are true of other manufactures to which the excise laws apply. It may be so to some extent ; but I will mention some additional reasons which render it most expedient that the House should consider the question of this duty on paper. With regard to the employment of labour, I would just ask you, gentlemen opposite, inter. ted as they are in the employment of the labourer of the rural districts, to consider how materially the paper manufacture is connected with the employment of labour in many agricultural districts. The manufacture of paper is the only rural manufacturer we have. The paper-mills are to be found in almost every county of the United Kingdom. We require a large amount of labour, and if it be the tendency of these duties, as I believe it is, to lessen the number of paper manufacturers, to lessen the production of paper, by the export of which from this country we are enabled to purchase the rags which are the materials of paper. Mr. Crompton has made a calculation as to the employment of labour. He has calculated that the repeal of the paper duty would employ 40,000 additional people in London alone. Mr. Crompton says that a single newspaper that purchases as much as £3000 value in one year in paper, employs as much as £15,000 per annum in labour. When an important consideration it is, when we see societies springing up to export from this country the female population, because they cannot earn their own living! For it is in the manufacture of paper that females are most employed. Instead of raising a large sum of money to export the female population, consider whether it would not be well to do something towards the removal of those fiscal obstacles to the employment of labour which are mainly instrumental in bringing about the evils which you deplore. I ask on these grounds alone, in reference to the employment of labour, and in reference to the success of the manufacture, and in reference to the vexatious interference of the excise, whether of itself there would not be a primâ facie case against this tax? There is no reason why we should not manufacture paper in England and Ireland, and make it as cheap as any country in the world. (Hear, hear.) At this time Canada and other colonies are taking the paper of France, the United States, and Germany, rather than have it from the manufacturer in this country, who is driven to increase the cost of the paper in consequence of the interference of the excise regulations, and the additional cost he is put to by the actual duty itself. It is true he gets the drawback, but that is not equal to the additional cost he is put to. It places him to some extent on a disadvantage with the foreign manufacturer in colonial markets. We do not see any increase in the export of paper, if I may judge from the amount of the drawback; on the contrary, the drawback on the paper is pretty much what it was many years ago. It appears to be stationary trade—(a laugh) —and if there were not something sapping the root of the paper manufacture in this country, considering the great facilities that we have, we should see it, like other branches of our exports, increasing and we should observe a corresponding accession of prosperity in that branch of our manufactures with the other heads of exports. But the view that I base it, that the operation of the paper duty is the most important as to its effect in preventing the diffusion of knowledge amongst the great body of the people. I hope newspaper stamp, it goes free of advertisements through the Post-office; and this, we are told, is necessary, in order that newspapers should go free. This is a most anomalous and absurd system, and I contend that you ought to do by all the other newspapers as you now do by these fifty-three registered newspapers and by Savory's book. I would make it a rule that all should be stamped at all times, or that all should be stamped when they go by post, and unstamped when they do not. It would be fair for the House to call on the Chancellor of the Exchequer to do this, if he does not like the present system to break down, as I feel it will certainly do, and will thereby bring that department of the stamp duties into disrepute. I contend that, on the ground of simplicity alone, inasmuch as all the most learned men had totally failed to define what they meant by a newspaper, that you ought to abolish the stamp duty to that extent, because, by maintaining it, you do a great injustice by allowing many papers which give news to go untaxed, whilst others have to pay. (Hear, hear.) I deny the ingenuity of any man to lay down as a definition of a newspaper that which includes, sometimes, their names, their places of residence, and everything that could make every person identify them and know who they were, and utterly truly or untruly, mostly untruly, state the most shameful libels. But there was another point which I wish to call the attention of the House. This paper libelled a clergyman at Barking, and said that this clergyman had been guilty of some improper connexion with one of his female servants. The Stamp-office was consulted, and the solicitor to the stamp department, Mr. Keogh, says, that the paper called Sam Sly is not liable to the newspaper stamp duty, so that it appeared that, without paying a tax, you are at liberty to circulate statements concerning individuals, affecting their private characters. Now, I ask the House if this is not news, sy, and news of the worst description, but, according to the solicitor, Mr. Keogh, you circulate these things without being liable to the stamp duty. (Hear, hear.) The clergyman proceeded against Sam Sly. How was he obliged to deal with him? Why, according to the ordinary law, and in point of fact, the securities of the Stamp-office, and the stamp itself, were of no avail whatever. The defendant pleaded in his defence that he got his living by circulating that description of intelligence. (Hear.) This is the most anomalous and extraordinary tax that ever existed in any country at any period. The solicitor for the stamp department tells us to say, that Paul Pry and the Town are not liable to the newspaper stamp duty, but are regularly assessed for advertisement duty. But I contend that these papers do circulate news, and their exemption from the tax is the most glaring anomaly that can be conceived. I see another extremely useful papers, which you will not allow to publish the smallest fact, or if they did you would come down on them immediately for the tax. It is said that the stamp is to prevent papers getting from being sent among the working classes. I could bring down to the House a large bundle of unstamped newspapers, if it were not irregular to do so, which are weekly periodicals, and which are circulated amongst the great masses of the community. These papers contain those very theories which some gentlemen think they have kept within certain limits by the means of the stamp. I believe that some of those unstamped newspapers are very respectable, but I understand that they are at liberty to promulgate their political theories. Now, the Newspaper Stamp Act says, "That any man who publishes any intelligence, news or facts, or any remarks or observations thereon, shall be made liable to the stamp duties." Now, I mean to say, that with regard to the latter part of the passage which I have quoted from the act, I apply to all those periodicals which I have made, and I observe that most of them are giving their views and sentiments to the world. The law has not the effect of preventing them from doing so, and from giving their political theories without let or hindrance. (Hear, hear.) It does not hinder any man from circulating his speculative opinion, provided he does not give those facts which are necessary to test the accuracy of his theory, and which are necessary to guide the people who read it to form a just idea on it. (Cheers.) You may give any opinions you please—you may speculate on religious and political matters to-morrow, but you cannot give those facts. You may publish as many falsehoods as you please, and you will not be liable to a tax; this fact is, that there is no tax on lies, but there is a tax on truth. (Cheers.) A man may publish the most false calumnies, and the most wicked libels against the Sovereign, or the Minister who advises her. You may accuse the latter of being guilty of acts of the greatest unworthiness, and nothing could be done to you; but if you told the public the truth, if you gave them facts, you could be made liable to the stamp duties. You, or your solicitors, are before the courts of justice, or what falls which occur in this House, the proceedings in the courts of justice, or what falls from the judges on the bench—if you told them of these things, which it is necessary for them to know—if you told them of these facts, which would prevent them from adopting dangerous errors—then the Solicitor of Excise would come down on you, and tell you that you had inserted in your paper matter which brought you within the Newspaper Act. I will ask the House if this is right, if you wish that sound views should be published in the public papers, and that the truth should be made known among the great body of the people. To give some idea of the host of comments and the extent of comments that the Newspaper Act allows, I shall observe that it allows to the Excise officers do not interfere to prevent. I will quote from the Lamp, a penny publication, and a religious paper, in which the writer is commenting and remarking on published intelligence. He thinks to take a slice out of the Excise of Exeter," and having commenced with the following quotation from Shakspeare—

Sir John. "That was a hard case—a singular case—an important case."

Justice. "Nay, your honour; it was simply a ludicrous case."—

He says:—

"For months past, as all the world knows, the minds of the English public have been kept in a state of feverish excitement by the theological squabbles of the two Anglican worthies whose names head this paper. The good men and true of the Establishment became regularly pitted against each other, ranged themselves into two parties, they prepared for a smashing encounter—the one stoutly maintaining, in the person of their right rev. leader, the old and orthodox dogma of spiritual regeneration by infant baptism; the other as stoutly maintaining the opposite view, and cheering their chosen champion to the skies. What a scene to laugh at for those who had neither spiritual nor temporal interest at stake! How the Dissenters might chuckle and sneer, and turn up their nose in disgust, while witnessing these solemn tomfooleries. How they might scourge these grave puerilities which their own code of belief boldly repudiates, and which, to do them justice, they could neither sanction nor understand. But to what light did Catholics view this clerical set-to? Why, to them there was nothing strange to be seen; it was merely a repetition of some of the antics and vagaries of the mutinous crew of a leaky, shattered old barque, whose cable they wickedly cut some three hundred years ago, and set her adrift without compass or rudder, and have kept her ever since beating about through rocks and shoals upon the stormy sea of uncertainty and error."

I quote this as an anomalous instance. If you allow them to comment and to make observations of this description you must allow them to state the facts—the actual trial and the proceedings thereat. Let them tell the whole case, and do not limit them to observations. (Hear, hear.) But you cannot enforce the act; if you attempted it you would involve yourselves in a chain of prosecutions, and in such a system of fining and imprisoning that you would bring the whole thing about your ears. I will quote from another publication Reynold's Political Instructor—which, in descanting on the Government in very strong language, says:—

"Lord Palmerston flared and blustared in the House about the independence of Hungary; but not one bullet nor one musket found its way from the Government stores to assist that noble people in their glorious struggle for freedom. In foreign lands our policy has been a perfect piece of perfidious and dastardly meanness. Never, perhaps, were the following lines of Lord Byron, when alluding to the position of England, more appropriate than at the present time:—

Alas! old she but really, truly knew,
How prize great name is now throughout abhorr'd,
How all the world is eager for the blow
Which shall lay bare to them the sword.

The condition of our colonies, under the flagrant misrule of Earl Grey, is deplorable in the extreme. Notwithstanding the floggings and shootings of those aspiring Haymans in the Ionian Isles and Ceylon—Ward and Lord Torrington—the people of these possessions are more discontented sooner or later, to throw off the merciless yoke of England. One by one, our colonies, following the example of America, will free themselves from the chains of aristocratic domination."

All that was said without rendering the paper liable to stamp duty. I hold in my hand a paper which professes to mount on the necessity for an entirely new organisation of society, based on principles not opposed to, but in accordance with, nature. (Laughter.) Then here is Cooper's Journal; or, Unfettered Thinker and Plain Speaker for Truth, Freedom, and Progress. That is a most unstamped paper, and the writer descants on the speech from the throne in a letter headed "Men of the Future." It begins by saying:—

"The concluding paragraphs of the Queen's Speech merely confirm the report that it would allude to the ministerial purposes of altering the law relative to the franchise. I have always looked for such an act as to what little concession is intended, and how far it will be an extension. The Delphic oracle was never more enigmatical: 'The favour of Divine Providence has hitherto preserved this kingdom from the revolutions and convulsions which the two years have shaken so many of the states of the Continent of Europe. It is her Majesty's hope and belief that by combining liberty with order, by preserving what is valuable, and assembling round the throne all orders of her people, our institutions, as the abode and the shelter of a free and happy people.' If the Weekly Chronicle, professing to have official sources of information, had not told us that "an extension of the suffrage" was included in the Royal Speech as a ministerial intention—if Admiral Dundas, a Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, had not assured his constituents at Greenwich that the Government he served would most positively introduce a measure for the extension of the franchise this session—if expectation and belief had not thus been created who could have ventured to interpret the peroration of the Queen's speech as having any such substantial meaning? Lord John, during the recess, has evidently been studying Herodotus—perhaps in Mr. Bohn's newly translated edition, for one cannot give him credit for much Greek scholarship—and has noted the slippery skill with which the priestess was wont to give her reptiles from the tripod. 'Combining liberty with order,' said 'preserving what is valuable, and amending what is defective,' may mean not attempting the suspension of the Habeas Corpus, or any other curtailment of English liberty, temporary or permanent—that is to say, doing nothing relative to the franchise; or it may be explained, in the course of the session, to mean the abolition of the ratepaying clauses in the Reform Bill of 1832, or almost any other peddling 'improvement.' In short, the last sentence of the Queen's Speech is a very pretty stroke of Whiggery, and may be made to mean anything that Ministers may be compelled to propose, in order to keep their places. If the President of the Council turn out blusher, and the financial reforms prove as 'decorous' as in the last session, it can be shown to mean the 'preservation of our venerable constitution,' by simply letting it alone."

This is allowed apparently under the act, but you will not allow a systematic record of facts; and you will not let cheap newspapers go into the field to compete with unstamped publications, to which you leave the extensive monopoly of forming the minds of the great working body of this country, without allowing the papers the power of correcting the effect of their errors by the promulgation of facts. I do not wish to see the country deluged with publications that would do harm; there would be no such effect from a free unstamped press. Having stated these arguments, I believe that I have laid before the House what it behoves it calmly to consider and thoroughly to understand, because I believe that it is most important that we should give to the man of capital and respectability the power of giving to their newspapers faithful records of facts to the great body of the working-classes of this country. (Cheers.) There is another description of unstamped paper as a substitute for newspapers. It is a description of paper calculated to excite the nerves of the people; and as you will not let the proprietors of these unstamped periodicals publish recorded facts, you must let them rack their brains for something that will excite the nerves or the imagination of the people. I hold in my hand a paper called The Weekly Mirror and Laughter. That is for the nervous. There is another paper which contains a horrible account of a Duchess murdered by a maniac, and another giving "The Adventures of a Countess; or, the Life of Lola Montez." As there seems to be a desire amongst the people for something of this kind, I do not blame persons for selling what they can get a livelihood by. The sale of such publications rises because you will not allow newspapers to go into competition with them. I was told by an eminent bookseller in Manchester that he sold over his counter—I think he said between 80,000 and 90,000 per week of these penny publications to the working-classes. He told me that the working-man comes into his shop on Saturday, and buys his penny publication. "Sometimes," added the bookseller, "he is political, and sometimes he is a man for the imaginative. He takes his book home to his family. But, if there were, also, on my counter a penny newspaper, which gave a fair account of the leading events of the day, the proceedings in Parliament, and the courts of law, I do not believe that there is one man in fifty who would not prefer the newspaper to the other publications." (Hear.) But the working-man cannot have a high price for a newspaper; and you cannot circulate newspapers at the present price among the working-classes. Now I will quote the evidence of Lord Brougham, when Lord Chancellor, before a committee of the House of Commons, on which was given the responsibility of a man holding the Great Seal, and is of great weight. It is as follows:—

"The people wish to read the news, in which they take an interest, and in which it is fit they should take an interest. In public affairs they are nearly concerned, and it is both their right and their duty to attend much to public affairs. I am of opinion that a sound system of Government requires the people to read and inform themselves upon political subjects, else they are the prey of every quack, every impostor, and every agitator who may practise his trade in the country. I do not read—I do not profess to read—if they do not digest, by discussion and reflection, what they have read and learnt—if they do not thus qualify themselves to form opinions for themselves, other men will form opinions for them not according to truth and to the interests of the people, but according to their own individual and selfish interests, which may, and most probably will, be contrary to that of the people at large. The best security for a Government, and for the Legislature, for the Crown, and, generally, for the public peace and public morals, is, that the whole community should be well informed upon its political as well as its other interests; and it can be well informed only by having access to wholesome, sound, and impartial publications. Therefore, they will and ought to read the news of the day, political discussions, political events, the debates of their representatives in Parliament and of the other House of Parliament, and on not one of these heads can any paper be published duly or regularly without a stamp duty, and consequently, the people at large are excluded by the dear form in which alone the respectable publishers can afford it, while they pay the duty. They can only have it in a cheap newspaper form by circulating publications under the description of libels, and thereby by paying for no stamps, and also break all other laws by the matter they publish. If, instead of newspapers being sold for sixpence or a shilling, they could be sold for a penny or a halfpenny, no doubt a very large addition would follow the greatest possible improvement in the tone and temper of the political information of the people, and, therefore, of the political character and conduct of the people. I cannot help thinking that the reduction of the duty, that I propose, would lay the stamp on newspapers, instead of increasing the facility to set up libellous publications, you greatly lessen it by increasing the number of good publications, and by destroying the monopoly in the hands of a few men, who neither mind the old law of the land nor a breach of the stamp laws."

The present Chief Justice, Lord Campbell, went still further than Lord Brougham. He said that he wished the day would come when he should see newspapers published for one-halfpenny. A penny stamp imposed a duty on every newspaper of two hundred per cent. A halfpenny stamp would be two hundred per cent. (Hear, hear.) Does not this affect the circulation of knowledge and truth among the people? It is right that the people of this country should be in possession of information, and, instead of keeping back knowledge from the masses, and that suspicion must be entertained by them when they see the way that this question is argued and dealt with in this House. It has been avowed, and the avowal has been received, that the object of the penny stamp was to prevent the cheap newspapers from getting into the hands of men who are not respectable, and to keep them in the hands of men of respectability and capital. I would ask the House if it is right that the people are treat of. It would be better to found this tax on revenue. And do not let any one say that in these days we are to make it a matter of public policy to prevent by fiscal regulations our fellow-countrymen getting cheap information. Such facts of importance. (Cheers.) In regard to the Times, and other influential newspapers, it is not to be doubted that the effect of the tax is to limit their circulation. There are many who tell us that they have an interest in maintaining the stamp duty, and are not favourable to its removal. I will not enter into that argument, and I think that no honourable member wishes me to do so. What! was a monopoly in intelligence to be supported by fiscal regulations? No; the people would be willing to pay that; I am now addressing. (Hear.) I do not believe in this monopoly. I do not believe that papers of established reputation lose by the repeal of stamps; but I am confident that they would be willing to run with others the advantages to be derived by the removal of the duty. The relative positions of newspapers would not be changed at all by such a change of duties as would be common to all the newspapers, and I understand perfectly that those who are opposed to expunging that there is any ground for the fear that the removal of the stamp duties would materially injure those papers which now circulate among the wealthy classes. (Hear, hear.) I believe that the Times newspaper pays 40,000 a year in stamps, and it would be of very little importance to the proprietors of that duty. It is not, however, with reference to this class of newspapers that my motion is addressed: it is with reference to that class which I have alluded to already, and the small class of whose prices (fourpence and fivepence) are a prohibition to the poor, and which, nevertheless, are prevented by the stamp act from giving facts which would be beneficial to the people, and which they ought to give. I will now refer to the case of a publication called The Reasoner, which has given rise to how obscure and uncertain is the meaning of the Stamp Act. The Solicitor of Stamps gave its proprietor a caution, that his publication was violating the Newspaper Act. The correspondence on this head is as follows:—

"Inland Revenue, Somerset House, 7th March, 1850.—Gentlemen,—The attention of this board having been directed to some articles of public news contained in Nos. I. and II. of your publication, the Reformer, under the head of the 'Record of Progress,' of a character that cannot lawfully be published in any but a stamped newspaper, I have been directed to acquaint you with the circumstance, and to caution you against any future insertion of like matter.—I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, J. TIMM, Solicitor of Inland Revenue."

To which the Editor returned the following reply

"Norwich, March 12th.—" Sir, I have received your intimation that the intelligence given in the Reformer, under the heading 'Record of Progress,' cannot be lawfully inserted in any but a stamped newspaper. I should feel greatly obliged if you would inform me on what grounds the Gentleman's Magazine, United Service Magazine, Tait, Edinburgh Magazine, Curwen, Observer, Popular Journal, with others that might be mentioned (including unstamped copies of the Freeholder, Athenæum, &c.) are permitted to furnish similar information. Also, why the reports of the Geological Society, philanthropic, and scientific character are allowed to contain details of their respective operations, while that privilege is denied to the journal of a political association. Thanking you for your caution, and soliciting information upon these points,—I remain, sir, your obedient servant, the Editor of the Reformer."

The Solicitor wrote again as follows:—

"Inland Revenue, Somerset House, 13th March, 1850. Gentlemen,—I am this morning in receipt of a letter without signature, but purporting to come from the editor of the Reformer; and, as it is written in reference to mine of the 7th instant, addressed to you, I reply to it as coming from you. The publications to which allusion is made are not before me, either officially or otherwise I know, therefore, nothing of their contents; but, assuming them to be unstamped papers, and to contain matter which they ought not to publish, it is not my wish to offer any explanation upon the subject, nor can the circumstance justify irregularities in others. I may, however, remark, as I am aware that the subject has been under notice, in reference more particularly to learned societies, that articles, although of public news and intelligence, yet, as partaking of the character of a review, are not looked upon as matters to be objected to in unstamped publications. So, also, with regard to dramatic performances and such like.—I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant, J. TIMM, Solicitor of Inland Revenue."

Now, I submit it with all possible respect to the House, that, considering how enormous are the penalties to which a man is liable for infringement of this act, the seizing of his machines and presses, and other dire casualties, we ought to have something more explicit, in the way of legal definition, than simply telling a man that he might write something that merely serves to news, but that he must not regularly or formally convey intelligence to the public. (Hear, hear.) I hope that the noble Lord, or some member of his Government, will tell us what is meant by this definition of the Solicitor's. Because, remember that this is a penal statute, and all its provisions, and the reading of it, should be perfectly clear and explicit. (Hear, hear.) To tell a man that he may savour his writing with intelligence, but not give it, is to leave him in a position, with reference to a penal statute, in which no British subject should for a moment be left. (Hear, hear.) Here is some correspondence from another person whom you have prosecuted at Greenock, but who has found a very novel and ingenious way of evading the Stamp-office. His letter is dated March 18, 1850:

"GREENOCK, Wednesday, 13th March, 1850.

"Sir,—I sent per post yesterday, one each, periodicals on paper and cloth. The former was abandoned, in consequence of an Exchequer process; the latter is still continued, and No. 27 will appear to-night. The prosecution was for breach of the last act restraining liberty of the press. In it every paper is held to be a newspaper which contains 'news, events, intelligence, or occurrence, or any remarks or observations thereon, or upon any matter in Church or State. On the proposal of this measure, Mr. Wakley sounded a proper alarm to no purpose, as the public were ignorant and unheeding, and 'the best possible public instructors,' the stamped press, from interested motives, favourable to the destructive bill. 'Chambers's Journal,' 'Hogg's Instructor,' in truth, every publication not less than 25 inches square, or sold for less than 6d., is illegal. The law is rarely enforced; yet, because some articles in mine gave offence to a 'little brief authority' here, I was served with a 'Victoria, greeting,' &c., and fined for five pounds—£20 south. In January, 1849, a second attempt was made to put my brochure down; but having studied this oppressive act, I observed that a cloth was not prescribed, I might adopt it instead of paper, save the penny stamp, and escape the bonds, &c., to which newspapers are liable. I therefore, in conformity with the law, 'use no more than is necessary for the medium for the diffusion of knowledge. But I hope you will see the utility of exposing the anomaly, that while others all over the kingdom, or queendom, safely despise or set at nought the law, I am compelled to respect it in an absurdity—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"JOHN LENNOX, printer, news agent, &c."

And here it is! The right hon. member here produced a printed cloth newspaper.] I have another letter here, in which he mentions that the fines have been remitted, but still continues to publish his paper as before, and others are every day publishing around him without a stamp—namely, certain general observations upon public events. He is not even granted that permission to "devour" with intelligence which is graciously conceded to the Norwich Reformer. (Hear, hear.) I should mention that, in harmony with his altered material, he has altered the name of his journal, and now calls it the Greenock News Cloth. (A laugh.) I say, then, that if you are to insist that no man shall observe on public events unless he has a newspaper with the stamp, you ought to enforce your law universally, because it is fatal to its efficacy when you only single out particular cases for prosecution. (Hear, hear.) It involves you in a virtual censorship of the press—a censorship more dangerous in its degree, what it should read, and what they should not. Are you prepared to establish such a censorship, presided over by the Solicitor to the Stamp-office? If you are not prepared for that, you must do one of two things, whether repeal the stamp duty on newspapers, or enforce it fairly upon all. (Hear.) Let us have no evasions. Make all pay equally, or relieve all equally. If you do not do this, you involve yourself in this dilemma, whether parliament, which, no man in this House will, I am sure, attempt to justify—that of setting up in Somerset House a censorship on what is to be read by the community. (Hear, hear.) These are the grounds upon which I call upon you to vote with me for the second resolution, providing for the repeal of the stamp duty on newspapers. The revenue arising from it is stated to be about £350,000 per annum; but you will not lose all that by repeal. You will still have the stamp on all that go through the post, and will pay 70 millions still on matter published as heretofore. I do not mean to say that the post if this compulsory stamp were removed, but I think it fair to presume that a considerable number would still pass. I am confirmed in this opinion because there are fifteen registered papers which only stamp for posting, a clear proof that people will stamp newspapers for postage alone. (Hear, hear.) It is, I think, fairly to be presumed that the same rule would apply to the whole, and the payment of sending them by post would cause a great many of them to be stamped. (Hear, hear.) It is clear, then, that I am not asking you to sacrifice the whole of this £350,000; all I am asking the House is to risk the sacrifice of a portion, and to confer, in risking that sacrifice, a inestimable boon upon the whole body of the people. There is no reason why, under favourable circumstances and fair legislation, newspapers should not be as cheap in this as in any other countries. We might have a penny weekly, and a halfpenny daily paper, and a penny paper, while for a higher class of newspaper a higher price would still be paid; and the penny publications would become penny newspapers. (Hear, hear.) But it is reasonable to suppose that working men would sustain an abridgment of the reading fact of the day as may be sufficient for him for a penny, and that penny and even halfpenny publications of a wholesome nature may come into general circulation. (Hear, hear.) Under such circumstances publications calculated to instruct him in the best means of procuring employment in his occupation, to assist him in earning his livelihood, and in fine, as I believe, preventing that unconstrained opinion and feeling which proceeds from a free press, and the adoption of proper information upon which to reason, which causes the working people of this country to keep down any plans upon which their ears have been fled, in the hope of an employment which is, practically speaking, dead or ever, thus depriving themselves of opportunities of improving their social condition. I would therefore, in conclusion, have been wrongly legislated. (Hear, hear.) I believe that cheap newspapers would be of infinite advantage in discussing all those questions respecting the factory population, and in giving facts upon which the working men form just and impartial judgments in their own case. (Hear, hear.) Besides, let me say one word with reference to the laws of the land. You hold it necessary that every man should be acquainted with the law, and you will not allow ignorance as an excuse for crime. Therefore, why prevent spreading through the country accounts of proceedings in your courts of justice through the medium of cheap newspapers, which are the only practical means by which the working man can obtain a knowledge of the law. (Hear, hear.) Is it likely that a working man would study Blackstone or Coke's Institutes? He cannot; but accurate accounts of the proceedings in courts of justice would give him the necessary information. I say that you are bound to let him have it; at least you are bound to remove any obstacle in the way which he is expected to obey. (Hear.) Are we to infringe this great principle for the sake of some paltry £130,000 revenue? (Hear, hear.) On these grounds I trust I shall have a favourable consideration for the newspaper stamp as for the duty on paper. My next resolution I hardly feel at liberty to enter upon, because the subject is in the hands of my honourable friend the member for Montrose, who pays great attention to it. But I placed it as one of the resolutions in my motion, because I felt that it came under the generic name of taxes upon knowledge, and that the motion would be incomplete in which it was not included. It is a tax of great inequality in its operation, and pressing with great unfairness on the poor—making the poor servant pay as large an amount of advertisement duty on his application for a place as a person of rank. Suppose that when the public crier through the public crier, and he puts a case. Suppose that when the public crier has about to announce the sale of the effects of a bankrupt's stock, or some important event in the way of news, or to inquire after some lost child claimed by a distracted mother, the excisemen should be close at his heels, and when he stamp that upon pain of being fined stop him, and insist upon eightpence as a necessary preliminary to each announcement (for it is a tax upon each), what any difference being that by being put on paper the announcement is given more correctly? Mr. Mills goes on to say that the excisemen making such a demand would be met with universal execration: indeed, he is not sure whether the people would not in such a case try physical force as a means of testing the law. Why, the advertisement duty is a monstrous tax upon calamity. (Hear, hear.) You cannot put down a subscription to a ragged school, or the sufferings of some deserving individual, without paying a large fine to the state. People do not know, when they give their money towards the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations, how much of that money goes to swell the revenues of the state. I must add that this advertisement duty is one that gives only a small amount of revenue—about £130,000 a year, and if you deduct what the state itself pays for advertisements, it will be much smaller. (Hear, hear.) How absurd it is to see the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who advertises in every paper in the kingdom, calling the revenue £153,000. He ought to deduct all that he pays for the Government advertisements. I should have been glad to have waited for returns which have been moved for on the subject, but I did not like to lose my chance of bringing the question forward. What is this paltry sum of £150,000 compared to the injury it must do to trade, to industry, and to those in distress. (Hear.) I could mention cases of great oppression, to show how this works in reference to newspapers. I will take the case of the Daily News. That paper, some time past, proposed to give a list of all the births, deaths, and marriages; and it also proposed to give hunting appointments and law notices at present; this matter very valuable and interesting to the public, and likely to be a useful feature in the paper. But what said the stamp office? You must not add that to the price of your paper without payment of 1s. 6d. on each announcement; and the paper was consequently obliged to discontinue a practice which appears to me to have been quite as reasonable as to negotiate a piece of paper as the hunting appointments in the Morning Post. Why is it necessary to come down so harshly on trade and knowledge? (Hear, hear.) Why do we single out those two interests for all our fiscal severities? We grant pensions for much less useful purposes? (Hear, hear.) I believe that the expense of advertisement in the United States, as compared with this country, differs so much that I am almost afraid to name the sum. The cost of a single advertisement in a banner, six or seven times as much in this country as in the United States; and I believe that when you advertise by the year, that which would cost £200 a year in the Times, may be done for £6 or £7 in the United States, and that, too, in papers of equal circulation; brades which, the advertiser gets a copy of the paper. I do not mean to say that the analogy is strict, because the habits of this country are different, and we could not be expected to conform to such a system immediately, although I believe that, ultimately, the system would be adopted. But if there were a disposition to advertise so generally as it is done in the United States, all I say is, that your advertisement duty would be a fatal objection, making their cost about a year which, in the United States, could be done for £8 or £9. Is not this an enormous drawback on trade and industry, and on the ready communication which is necessary among civilised men, not only for commercial, but for social purposes? (Hear, hear.) I will simply say further, on this part of the subject, that my hon. friend means to bring it forward as a substantive motion, and therefore, it is not necessary I should trouble the House with more lengthened observations. My last resolution refers to a small, but not unimportant matter, only £3000 or £9000 a year, which may amount to a very considerable advantage on the articles books imported into this country. It was mentioned before the committee that it formed a very important obstacle to the supplying of libraries with expensive works, and gave rise to a great deal of irregularity, and, therefore, I trust that I shall have the consent of the House to its removal from the tariff. It is really a duty which ought to be removed, being so small that it is not worth collecting, while at the same time it obstructs that free intercommunication of books which should subsist between civilised countries. I do not anticipate any first resolution with reference to the paper duty, and I do earnestly hope that it may receive the favourable consideration of the House. (Hear, hear.) My conviction is, that if you do not remove these taxes you are not justified in expecting that your object is to hinder the spread of knowledge among the great body of the people, and that you are laying in a store of great evils, which will fall on this country at some future time, and be a vast tax upon the contribution for your present economical policy (Loud cheers.) The right hon. member concluded by moving the first resolution.

Mr. Cowan, in seconding the motion, gave some results of his own experience in proof of the loss and inconvenience in the manufacture that attended the levying of the excise duty upon paper.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer made no complaint against his right hon. friend for bringing forward his motion; but still less did he complain of having had to listen to the very able and eloquent speech. To the success of his motion, as some of his friends, and as a tax with the public for present convenience cessitated matter—a surplus revenue. The first consideration was, that any suffering interest in the country ought to be relieved. And if there were no particular interest in a depressed state requiring relief, then the next duty of the minister ought to be to relieve all the interests in the community by a general reduction of taxation, and a diminution of the public debt of the country. Such, in his mind, were the influences which should guide a minister of finance in dealing with a surplus revenue. When it was announced that we had a surplus revenue, believing that there was an interest in the country which was suffering more particularly than any other, a matter which was admitted by all the members of that House, he had brought forward a proposition to devote a portion of that surplus to the relief of that interest which was oppressed (Hear, hear). What had been the conduct of the Government upon that occasion? They had opposed that proposition. They said that, under all the circumstances of the case, they felt justified in resisting the proposition of the opinion of the surplus revenue of the country to the relief of that particular interest. He failed in the object he then attempted to effect. What had been the conduct of Government after that? Did they devote that surplus to the reduction of the public debt or the diminution of the burdens which pressed upon all classes? (Hear.) They did not. They came forward with a proposition which he thought he was justified in saying was most insulting to the country. They proposed a reduction of the excise duty on bricks (“Hear!” and laughter.) He could say with truth, that that measure was accepted by those for whom it was announced as a measure of relief, with utter derision. (Hear.) They had reduced 2s/6m in the revenue from one and a half million to half a million. They proposed to apply the surplus revenue of a surplus revenue of one million, and they were asked by the hon. member for Manchester to apply part of that to a reduction of the duty upon paper. Before he referred to that, there was one observation which he had to make in reference to the present question. It was true that the proposition to repeal the excise duty on paper, so far as it applied to the customs duties, was not a proposition to discontinue a tax pressing upon an interest represented at his side of the House. Now he did maintain that there was nothing more dangerous in principle than to make the question of the reduction of taxation a question as between town and country. (Hear.) He condemned those who wished to confine the public, that the only relief from taxation on which they at the opposition side of the House wanted to enjoy, was relief for one class and for no other. The question of relief from taxation was a national matter. If a measure of relief was brought forward for one particular class, it was because that class was the only suffering one. (Hear.) The Chancellor of the Exchequer (continued the hon. member) having declined to be influenced by either of those considerations which I think ought to direct the conduct of an administration, and finding that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with a surplus revenue, and taking into account the present proposition, I am to consider whether it is most for the advantage of the country that the excise duty on paper should be repealed, or the Chancellor of the Exchequer left in the possession of those funds, for the discreet exercise of which I have no security; because the Chancellor of the Exchequer, let it be remembered, after the events of last night, did come forward at half-past four o'clock to say, and frankly tell us, what he intended to do with his surplus, and whether he proposed to proceed with his measure with respect to the stamps or not. He left us in complete obscurity upon that point, and he perm ted us to consider, under the most favourable circumstances, the first proposition of the right hon. gentleman the member for Manchester. What is that proposition? Is there any man in this house who has two opinions on the abstract merits of that proposition? Is it possible, that on its abstract merits any person can entertain an opinion different from that of the right hon. gentleman? (Hear, hear.) There may be two opinions as to the effect of the advertisement duty; there may be two opinions as to the effect of the stamp duty on newspapers; and as we have not yet arrived at the resolutions on those subjects, I decline for the present to express any opinion with respect to them. But that there is no greater evil abstractedly than an excise duty that the abstract evils of an excise duty are aggravated in an instance in which to material injury moral injury is added, is a position which I think no one will contest. I shall not here enlarge on those commercial details on which my right hon. gentleman dwelt, and with which many of us are already familiar. But when the expression “tax on knowledge” is sneered at as fantastical by the First Minister of the Crown, I may be permitted to remind the House that at this very time Mr. Chambers has given up a publication of 80,000 numbers a week one of the most instructive and rational publications that ever appeared, and one of the most calculated to good government and public morality, the fact being that he was beaten out of the market by a publication in Holywell-street, which he preceded his in circulation, and which, from the cheaper form in which it appeared—a form not suited to his work—carried the town before it; and that a publication dedicated to the most indecent and blasphemous purposes (Hear, hear.) Then I ask, can we, in the present state of the revenue—the Chancellor of the Exchequer having declined to relieve that interest—and having been supported by the House in his resolution upon that subject—when nothing was proposed to relieve, and not having offered us the alternative of a reduction on any considerable scale of the general taxation of the country—can we do better with the resources at our command than assent to the proposition of the right hon. gentleman the member for Manchester? In my opinion it would be a prudent, a politic, and a beneficial motion to assent to. And we are to be prevented from assenting to a resolution so justified by circumstances, so practical in its character, and so beneficial in its results, by the exaggerated assertion of a revolutionary republic being conjured up before us, and the possible catastrophe of a change of ministry being intimated in Delphic utterances? (Hear, hear.) I believe we are not near such a result. The effect of this motion, separating that portion by which it was proposed to give summary jurisdiction to magistrates in cases of petty larceny by persons at and under sixteen years of age, from the portion by which it was proposed to give a summary jurisdiction to magistrates in cases of adults.

The committee having divided, there were—For Mr. Law's amendment, 102; against it, 89: majority, 13.

The bill was, consequently divided into two parts, and that referring to adults was expunged.

On the clause for extending the provisions of the Juvenile Offenders Act to persons up to sixteen years of age, Mr. Law moved that the Chairman report progress

On a division, there were—For reporting progress, 61; against it, 70: majority, 9.

Mr. Roebuck objected to the extension of the power of summary jurisdiction by magistrates, and opposed the clause.

Sir George Grey supported the clause, and the committee divided—For the extension to 16 years, 84; against it, 78: majority, 6.

On the clause giving the power of inflicting punishment on offenders summarily convicted up to 16 years of age,

Sir George Strickland moved a proviso declaring that the magistrates should not have the power to order the infliction of the punishment of whipping on any offender under 14 years.

On a division, there were—For the proviso, 170; against it, 89: majority for the proviso, 81.

The bill, as amended, was reported to the House.

The Tenants at Rack Rent Relief Bill passed through committee on the motion of Mr. Sotheron

MARRIAGES BILL.

Mr. J. S. Wortley moved the committal of the Marriages Bill.

Sir T. Temple objected to go on with a bill of such immense importance at an hour (near midnight) when it was impossible to give it due consideration. He therefore moved the adjournment of the debate.

Sir George Grey suggested that the bill should be allowed to go into committee pro forma, but Sir R. Inglis insisted on a division.

The House divided—For going into committee, 89; against it, 152: majority, 63.

Captain Boldero moved the adjournment of the House, and a division took place—For the adjournment, 89; against it, 147: majority against adjournment, 58

Mr. Forbes moved the adjournment of the debate, and the House again divided—For the adjournment, 48; against it, 133: majority, 85.

Further opposition having been threatened, Mr. J. S. Wortley yielded, and agreed to the adjournment of the debate.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

WILLIAM KEOGH, ESQ., M.P. FOR ATHLONE.

The subject of our memoir is the eldest son of Wm. Keogh, Clerk of the Crown for the county and city of Kilkenny, by the only daughter of the late Austen Ffrench, Esq., of Galway. The family is one of the most ancient in the county Roscommon, and has for several generations held property in the immediate neighbourhood of Athlone, where Mr. Keogh was also known as one of the most distinguished members of the Western Circuit. He was born at Galway, in 1817, was educated at the school of the Rev. Thomas Huddard, the largest in Dublin at that time, and obtained the science premium, and in October, the certificate, being the highest science honour of the year, and for which five honour men of the same class were his competitors. During the subsequent years of his course he not only maintained the early character as a classical scholar, but continued to obtain first-class science honours. He was also a successful competitor for the Vice-Chancellor's prize for the best essay in English; and, as a member of the College Historical Society, then, as of old, distinguished as a school of oratory, and for the spirit of its debates and energy of its speaking, he carried off the medals both for debate and English composition. His contemporaries in the society were—amongst others who have since obtained more or less of professional or political distinction — Isaac Butt, Q.C.; Wm. Torrens M'Cullagh, M.P. for Dundalk; the late Thomas M'Nevin, author of the “Life and Speeches of Shiel,” the “State Trials in Ireland,” the “History of the Irish Volunteers,” and many other works; and the late Thomas Davis, whom men of all ranks loved to call their friend, the originator of the Young Ireland party (who caught his fervour, but let his sense die with him): founder, and for a long time principal writer of the Nation newspaper, and author of many songs and ballads after the manner of Beranger, and having no less force and exciting scarce less spirit than his.

In 1838, Mr. Keogh entered Lincoln's Inn as a student for the Irish bar, to which he was called in 1840, being then just of age. In the same year he published the “Practice of the Court of Chancery,” and which continues to be the text book of the court. He joined the Western Circuit, and at the bar, as in college, soon distinguished himself, so much so, that during the last four years, although but a stuff-gown, he has had by far the most leading business on the Circuit, both on the civil and Crown sides: until the period of his entering Parliament, he had also an extensive business practice both in the Rolls Court and Court of Chancery. He married, in 1841, Kate, eldest daughter of the late Thos. Roney, an eminent surgeon; and, at the general election in 1847, came forward as a candidate for Athlone, and, after a severe contest, was returned.

He first spoke in Parliament upon the exclusion of Roman Catholics from the jury struck for the first trials of Smith O'Brien and others for sedition, dwelling upon the grievance in a most unconstitutional, unjust, and calculated to perpetuate and increase the religious and party animosities of Ireland. It was felt that he understood the subject; he was listened to with marked attention, and established for himself the certainty of being well heard on all occasions when, with knowledge of the matter in hand, he might choose to take part in the debate. He has since gained additional credit by sharp and telling replies made on the spur of the moment, to Mr. Roebuck's attacks on Irish members, and opposing to Mr. John Stuart (Dungarvan, I suppose), on law reform, and which the Times, in a leading article commented upon, as a speech conferring infinite credit upon the learned member. Except the Hon. George Smythe, he is the only member of Sir Robert Peel who has voted with Mr. Hume for extension of the franchises.

Mr. Keogh is a Free-Trader, voted with the Government for the Repeal of the Navigation Laws, and against Mr. Disraeli's motion. He is in favour of retrenchment and reduction of taxation; has spoken in support of the Irish Encumbered Estates Bill and Sir John Romilly's Chancery Reforms; and is in favour of such a system of tenant right both for Ireland and England as shall ensure the tenant compensation for improvements without interfering with the just proprietary rights of the landlord.

During the past week, in an able reply to Sir John Hobhouse, he supported Mr. Sadleir's motion relative to the subject of the omission, during a long period, of members of the Irish bar from all appointments to the Indian bench, and again afforded evidence that he has fully established for himself the good hearing of the House.

Our Portrait is from a Photograph by Kilburn, of Regent-street.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, April 21.—Third Sunday after Easter.
Monday, 22.—Duke of Sussex died, aged 70, 1843.
Tuesday, 23.—St. George.
Wednesday, 24.—Oliver Cromwell born, 1599.
Thursday, 25.—St. Mark. Princess Alice born, 1843.
Friday, 26.—Sun rises 4h. 43m., sets 7h. 14m.
Saturday, 27.—Sir William Jones died, 1794.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 27, 1850

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
10 15	10 35	10 49	11 29	11 40	Tide	0 20	0 45	1 10	1 35	1 55	2 10	2 35	2 50

ARCTIC REGIONS, PANORAMA ROYAL, LEICESTER-SQUARE, JUST OPENED, and showing the VIEWS as seen in SUMMER and WINTER, from Drawings taken by Lieutenant Browne, R.N., of her Majesty's ship “Enterprise,” during the late Expedition under Sir James Ross in search of Sir John Franklin, which ensure protection to Mr Barford by the Admiralty; comprising also Portraits of her Majesty's ships “Enterprise” and “Investigator,” and the Sub ine Effects of an Aurora Borealis. The Views of Cashmere and Pompeii are also New Open, but the former will shortly be closed.—Admission to each View, or 3d. 6d. to the three. Schools, half-price.

A NEW PANORAMIC MOVEMENT, accompanied with MUSIC by Dr Wallis, has been adopted at the PICTORIAL EXHIBITION, 309, Regent-street (adjoining the Royal Polytechnic Institution), of VIEWS of the BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE, SNOWDON, on a Grand Scale, the Size of Nature, painted by J. W. ALLEN, Esq.—Admission, 1s; Visitors of the Royal Polytechnic Institution, Schools, and Ch dren, Half-price. Open from 10 till 5.—Exhibition “Day and Night” Half-past Seven, and Nine o'clock.

LOVE'S POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENTS. VENTRILOQUISM EXTRAORDINARY.—These celebrated Entertainments will be delivered at the MERCHANT TAILORS' HALL, FENCHURCH-st, on MONDAY, APRIL 22, at the Horns Tavern, Kensington, on Tuesday, April 23; at Greenwich, on Monday, April 29, at the Athenæum, Shefield, on Tuesday, April 30; at the Assembly-Rooms, Salisbury, on Monday, May 6; at Reading, on Tuesday, May 7; at the Literary and Scientific Institution, Guildford, on Wednesday, May 8, at the Institution, Gravesend, on Monday, May 13; and at the Mechanics' Institution, Maidstone, on Wednesday, May 15. Begin at Eight. Books, containing programmes, &c., to be had at the doors, price 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES on SCIENCE, by Sir HENRY R. BISHOP, resumed, with an increased number of Vocal and Instrumental Illustrations, on Monday at Eight, and on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Three o clock. Dr. Bachhoffner's SECOND LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY of MECHANICAL SCIENCE, daily at Two, and on Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, at a quarter-past Nine. LECTURE by J. H. Pepper, Esq., on the CHEMISTRY of the ELEMENTS, with numerous Experiments. A splendid Set of Machinery by Bablous Pyrotechnic and other signals to Sir John Franklin, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Three and on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday Evenings, at Eight. DISSOLVING VIEWS, illustrating the ARCTIC REGIONS and CRYSTAL PALACE. New Views of London in the Sixteenth Century, and as it now is. DIVER and DIVING-BELL, &c. &c.—Admission, 1s; Schools, Half-price. Analyses and Chemical Experiments conducted in the Laboratory, under the direction of J. H. Pepper. Part TRAFALGAR.—A Large and Interesting MODEL of the BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR is now exhibiting at the NEW PANORAMA, adjoining the Clarendon Hotel. This great work of art is modelled to a scale of 50 feet to an inch, thereby rendering it portectly di-tinct. It also possesses this great advantage over all paintings on the same subject, that each individual ship can be viewed from all sides at once, as she was brought into action, and producing at the same time a series of beautiful pictorial effects. Open from 10 in the Morning till 10 in the Evening. Admission, 1s.—Saturdays 2s. 6d. Children, half-price.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A Constant Subscriber, Brighton.—The Athenæum, 61 guns, was wrecked off Sardinia, Dec 30, 1808, 347 souls perished. “Sewage” has of late been used for “sewerage”
C W, Leeds.—Railways have not yet been made in Austria is H S, Birmingham.—The “Guide to the Stage” is published by Cumbyan, Catherine-street, Strand
Nemo, Exmos.—Her Majesty's Theatre usually opens in February or March, and closes in August
Bald Pancier, Bradford.—See Bechstein on Cage Birds
A Subscriber, Manchester.—Memoirs of Shelley may inform you
An Old Subscriber had better consult a solicitor as to the property
A Constant Reader.—Matches for ignition are composed of chlorate of potass, 10 parts; sugar, 3; sulphur, 3, wheat flour, 1, vermilion, 1, spirit to mix
A Subscriber.—See a reply as to “Mean Time,” in the Supplement given with the present Number
X Y Z, Ashton.—The compilation would be absurd
An Old Subscriber should apply to the magazine in question. Madrid was visited by cholera in 1833
Hydrogen, Aberdeen.—Apply at 175, Fleet-street
C H, Russell-square.—Dr Forbes has written a tract against Mesmerism, published by Churchill
T W W, Louth.—There is a collection of Specimens of recent British Manufactures now exhibiting at the house of the Society of Arts, in the Adelphi, already noticed in our Journal
F B.—Apply to Messrs Beard, photographers, King's Mall arcade, City
C.—See Mr Christopher's new work on Natal. There have been published several Guides to California
Polymnia.—Mdlle Jenny Lind's most popular character is Amina, in “La Sonnambula
An Orphan Subscriber.—Subscriptions to the Botanic Gardens at Kew are open every day, Sunday excepted
A D B, Norwich, is thanked; but we have not room for the subject at present
An East Kent Farmer.—The proposition will, doubtless, be advertised
E K L, Portsea.—Colonel Hawker's pamphlet on the Game-Laws
Ignoramus, Dublin.—The Turnpike Trust Debt Commissioners are a considerable portion of the public dept of this kingdom; the famil tar term being Consols
R U S must have verified from coins by Mr Cuming's memoirs
A Constant Reader should apply respecting the investment at the Government Annuity Office, Old Jewry
A Liverpool Reader.—See Mr Kenny Meadows's “Illustrations of Shakspeare”
Clericus is recommended to apply to a music publisher
X Q L R, Jersey.—We cannot determine until we have seen the Sketches
W J, Isle of Wight.—We cannot decide the point of Churchwarden law
Nemo.—The Lieutenancy of her Majesty Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms is purchasable for about £7000. The Gentlemen-at-Arms obtain their places for about £1000
A Subscriber.—The half-pay of a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy is 4s a day, increased to 5s and 7s by seniority. The half-pay of a Lieutenant in the Cavalry is 6s 8d a day; of a Lieutenant in the Infantry, 4s
Test.—The crest of Magee is a lion sejant collared
A Constant Reader.—A young swinger on a rope is not entitled to a Coroner
A Constant Subscriber.—The present Lord Talbot de Malahide is brother of the deceased Peer
S B S.—The arms of Blower are “Or on a chev. between three balls vert, a crescent, gold. Crest: Out of a mural coronet or, a demi-eagle displayed vert, wounded in the breast with an arrow proper, feathered arg.”
Sigma.—The arms of Seys of Monmouthshire are “Sa. a chev. between three spear-heads arg. Lodowick Seys. Crest: A demi lion rampant.”
Cuthlaus.—The present Mr Barkley is second son of the late John Scandrett Harford, Esq. of Blaise-castor.—Here, a crest salient, and the surname be bears on succeeding to the estates of his kinsman, William Battersby, Esq.
Warrior.—The arms of M'Carthy are,” Quarterly arg. and sa., in the first and fourth quarters a martlet or, a l within a bordure”
T W W.—The legitimate children of an illegitimate son would not be entitled to any arms, unless their father got a grant
Incredulous.—The exact state and eventual succession of the Earldom of Newburgh invested in the Salvin family is a matter of history for himself to search here
W S.—We do not know where to refer our correspondent for the pedigree and arms of Colonel Lodowick Stevens
Subscriber.—There are no arms to the name of Blechers, of Yorkshire
Presentator.—Here, a crest salient, and “are the arms of Mone;” Arg. a lion rampt. az. first quarter a lozenge of the second” for Lee, of Surrey
A Faversham Subscriber.—Immediately before the closing, December, 1844, the price marked 10½

S E I is liable to the tax
Civis, Kington.—We cannot advise
Novatus at Oxford
J L B, Pontefract.—We cannot recommend
T M.—The Guarantee Society

J F.—We cannot inform you
Francis, Penrith.—We cannot advise you
L A M, Great Yarmouth.—We have no room
W W.—The publication has been discontinued
R C R H.—We are not in the secret

 For replies to several Correspondents, see the Gratis Supplement, page 276, delivered with the present Number.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Bailey's United Service Record.——Money versus Life.——Pleasant Pastime.——My Old Pupils.——Webster's Royal Red Book——Visit to Sherwood Forest.——The War in Hungary.

With each Number of the
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,
For this day, April 20, 1850, is delivered
A SUPPLEMENT GRATIS!

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1850.

IF the Government carry no other bill during the present Session than the one just introduced by Sir George Grey, for the abolition of the practice of Intramural Interment in the metropolis, its labours will not be wholly unproductive of good. The bill in question—which was introduced with the approbation of all parties, promising its speedy transformation into a law of the land, is founded upon the report of the Board of Health, which was published several weeks ago, and commented upon at the time in this Journal. The metropolitan parishes affected by the provisions of the bill are enumerated in a schedule appended to it, and constitute what is popularly known as the Registrar-General's London district, with the exception of some few outlying, and as they may be termed rural parishes, which it has not been thought necessary to include. We have already given an abstract of the principal provisions of the bill. There can be no doubt, from the unanimity displayed upon the subject, both in and out of Parliament, that it will be carried without any essential modifications; and that intramural interments, so long the disgrace of our age and the peril of the public health, will cease in the metropolis. It will now become the interest, as well as the duty of other large towns, which suffer from the same evil, to apply to Parliament for powers to remedy it in a similar manner.

THE Ultra-Democrats and Socialists of Paris have agreed to support the candidature of M. Eugène Sue, the well-known writer of fiction, for the representation of Paris. M. Emile Girardin, who, after trying all parties, and being rejected by all, has been finally coquetting with the Social Republicans, has not been deemed trustworthy enough for the privilege of representing them, and the struggle will lie between M. Sue and some Moderate candidate not yet named. The Government, as if resolved to force the extreme party into violence, has absolutely forbidden public meetings to be held to debate upon the merits of the various candidates; and, in this violation of the Constitution, it has been supported by the Legislative Assembly. This is another and very striking proof of the truth of the allegations we made last week, that Liberty, in the name of which the Revolution was accomplished, has been ignominiously expelled from the soil of France, and that the present Government is neither more nor less than an absolute tyranny of brute force, without the slightest regard to the law or constitution from which it derives its only right to existence. The principal feature of the Constitution, of 1848 was the right of public meeting. That right was partially annulled in 1849, after the failure of the wicked project of M. Ledru-Rollin and his party to establish the Red Republic; but an exception even in those days of peril and mistrust was expressly made in favour of meetings for the purposes of election to the Legislative Assembly. Such meetings were allowed to take place during the period comprised between the promulgation of the decree convoking the electors and the day of election—a period limited to forty days. The present Government has at length annulled this last remnant of the right of public meeting; and the Prefect of Police has officially announced that no public meetings, upon any subject whatsoever, will be allowed. Several meetings have accordingly been closed by the police; and although the officers did not arrive in time to prevent the assemblage of delegates—which ultimately fixed upon M. Eugène Sue as the Socialist candidate—they arrived soon afterwards, and formally declared the meeting to be at an end, and the law of the police, and decreed that the hall should be closed. If the Socialists and Red Republicans are certain of carrying their candidate, they will probably content themselves with peaceably protesting against this violation of the Constitution, in which case they will ultimately array on their side a large portion of Moderate men who now hold aloof. The situation is an exciting one for all parties; but the Government is so clearly in the wrong, that, unless the army be more staunchly attached to the existing state of things than is generally supposed, nothing but its utter discomfiture can be the result. What France is driving to, unless it be to new convulsions, no one can predict.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The incidents of Court life during the past week have been comparatively few. Her Majesty continues, we rejoice to learn, in excellent health and appeared in public at the Opera on Tuesday last.

On Friday last, the Queen and the Prince, with the younger members of the Royal Family, inspected the presents sent to her Majesty by the Emperor of Morocco, consisting of nine barbs, with the dress saddles of the country and horse furniture complete, whose presents were delivered to the Queen and Prince Albert by Hadj Abdallah Lamarty, Kaid Abdekrim, and Hassan Bouchetta. His Grace the Duke of Norfolk, Master of the Horse, and the gentlemen of the Royal household in waiting, attended on the occasion.

On Saturday morning three of the horses were inspected in the Riding School, and Hadj Abdallah Lamarty and Kaid Abdekrim, together with a groom (Boojmar), exhibited feats of horsemanship, with which the Queen and Prince, and the younger members of the Royal Family, were much gratified. Hadj Abdallah Lamarty, Kaid Abdekrim, and Hassan Bouchetta, with the attendant (Boojmar), are under the charge of the officers of the Master of the Horse, by whom they are to be shown the different objects of interest in the metropolis. The Queen and the Prince, with Prince Alfred and the Princess Helena, took a drive in a carriage and four on Saturday afternoon. The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk and Lord and Lady John Russell dined with her Majesty in the evening.

On Sunday the Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley officiated. The Royal family took their usual exercise during the day in the garden of Buckingham Palace.

On Monday the Queen and the Prince again took a drive in an open carriage and four. The equerries in waiting, Lord Charles Fitzroy and Lieut.-Colonel Francis Hugh Seymour, attended on horseback. During the afternoon La Contesse Rossi attended at Buckingham Palace, for the purpose of singing to the Queen.

On Tuesday, the Queen, accompanied by the Princess Alice, took a drive, attended by the Honourable Caroline Dawson, in an open carriage and four. The Prince Consort rode out on horseback during the morning, attended by Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour. The Royal children also took a carriage airing during the day. In the evening the Queen and Prince Albert honoured her Majesty's Theatre with their presence. The party consisted of the Viscountess Canning, the Hon. Amelia Murray, the Hon. Caroline Dawson, the Earl of Listowel, Lord Charles Fitzroy, and Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour.

On Wednesday, the Queen and the Prince, with the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Alice, again took a drive in a carriage and four. The Prince Consort also rode out on horseback during the day. In the evening the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty. The Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer had the honour of joining the royal party.

On Thursday the Queen and the Prince took a drive in an open carriage and four. Lord Charles Fitzroy and Lieutenant-Colonel F. H. Seymour, the Equerries in waiting, attended on horseback. The Duchess of Kent visited her Majesty during the day, and in the evening dined with the Queen and the Prince Consort. The band of the Coldstream Guards, and her Majesty's private band, attended during the evening.

THE MILITARY KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.—A vacancy has occurred in this foundation by the almost sudden death of Lieutenant John Allen, one of the military knights of Windsor, who died on Monday last, after two hours' illness. This veteran officer entered the army as Ensign in the 1st Royals, and afterwards served in the 84th Foot in the Peninsular, under the Duke of Wellington.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

SMOKE PROHIBITION BILL.

On the motion of Lord REDESDALE this bill was read a second time.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS CONTRIBUTION BILL.

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, this bill was read a second time.

A long conversation on the subject of the Irish Poor-law was originated by Lord WESTMEATH, in presenting a petition complaining of its operation; at the close of which their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

CHARTIST LAND SCHEME.

Sir B. HALL gave notice that on the 30th inst. he should ask the hon. member for Nottingham when he intended to bring in a bill to wind up the affairs of the National Land Company?

Mr. O'CONNOR said he would answer the question at once. He had had a consultation with a Mr. Walmsley, and he found that it would be necessary to insert advertisements three times in the provincial newspapers published in the counties where the estates were situated, before he could introduce a private bill into the House. A question as to the right of the registrar of joint-stock companies to register the National Land Company would shortly be decided by the Queen's Bench; and if the judges were of opinion that it ought to have been registered, he would then bring in a bill to wind up the affairs of the company under the new Winding-up Act. It was his intention, in case the decision should be an adverse one, to petition the House to enable him to bring in a private bill on the subject.

COMMITTEE ON OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL gave notice that on Monday next he should move that the following hon. members be appointed as the Select Committee: Lord John Russell, Mr. Wilson Patten, Mr. Bright, Sir John Yarde Buller, Mr. Cobden, Mr. Becket, Mr. Napier, Mr. Home Drummond, Mr. William Evans, Sir William Molesworth, Mr. Henley, Mr. Ellice, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Walter, and Mr. Deedes.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES GOVERNMENT BILL.

The House then went into committee on this bill. Clauses 3, 4, and 5 were agreed to without discussion. On clause 6 being proposed,

Sir WILLIAM MOLESWORTH, with a view to having two chambers instead of one, moved as an amendment, in line 26, to omit all the words after the word "That," down to the word "and," in line 29, for the purpose of inserting these words, "there shall be established in the colonies of Van Diemen's Land and South Australia respectively a Legislative Council and a House of Assembly." If this amendment were agreed to, he should proceed to propose other amendments by which those two chambers would be made elective.

After considerable discussion in the course of which Lord J. RUSSELL and Mr. HAWES, on the part of the Government, opposed the amendment—the Committee divided, rejecting the amendment by a majority of 118 to 100.

Mr. ANSTEY then moved as an amendment, that the nominees of the Crown should not sit in the same chamber as the elected members; and this amendment was likewise rejected, by a majority of 180 to 37.

The clause was then agreed to.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

EXPLOSION AND FIRE.—Shortly after nine o'clock yesterday (Friday) morning, an explosion of an oil boiler took place on the premises of Mr. J. Hinde, pine oil and grease manufacturer, York Wharf, Prince-street, about a quarter of a mile westward of Lambeth Palace, and abutting on the Surrey shore of the Thames. Flames issued immediately from every part of the manufactory, which were fed by the oil and grease that escaped from the exploded vessel. The premises were closely surrounded by small dwellings, densely inhabited by very poor people, several of whom, in endeavouring to rescue their furniture, were scorched, though not much injured, except a man who was carrying his infant in his arms, both of whom were considerably burnt about the head and neck. The fire raged nearly two hours, when it had exhausted itself, as it was useless for the firemen to throw water upon the burning pile, from the nature of the element with which the flames were fed: they therefore confined their attention to endeavouring to save the contiguous buildings from destruction, in which they succeeded, although the grease manufactory was entirely destroyed. Mr. Hucks was uninsured, as no fire office would undertake the risk of an insurance, notwithstanding that the proprietor had offered a large premium. His loss is therefore considerable.

TERMINATION OF THE STRIKE AT ABERDARE.—The whole of the colliers in the Aberdare Valley—or, rather, as many of them as the masters would take into employment—have signed the agreement and returned to work.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The accounts from Paris last (Friday) night refer principally to the fuller details which have been published relative to the catastrophe at Angers. It appears that the chains of the suspension-bridge at first gave way on one side only, when the soldiers on the bridge, feeling the movement of the floor, naturally rushed to the other side, when the chains there also gave way, and the whole floor of the bridge fell. From one bank to the other the river was completely blocked up with the soldiers struggling to reach the shore. If the weather had been calm, the greater number of them would, in all probability, have been saved. The wind, however, blew a perfect hurricane, and the waves were very rough. Instead of being able to assist each other, the waves every moment dashed those of them until only one remained. Beams of wood, planks, and every article that could be laid hold of were launched, to enable the men to keep afloat until further assistance could arrive. Of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd companies, there only remain 14, 16, and 19 men respectively. The number deficient amounts to 219, to which must be added 33 dead, and 30 wounded in the hospital, making the total loss to the battalion 282. Some of the wounded were among the men met their deaths previous to reaching the water, the bayonets affixed to their guns having pierced them through while in the act of falling. So great was the pressure, that many of the barrels of the guns were bent double. Several of those who were rescued from their precarious situation had met with severe wounds from coming in contact with their field arms, or from fragments of the bridge falling upon them. The President of the Republic left Paris on Thursday to visit the spot where the melancholy accident had occurred, in order to obtain the best information regarding its cause, and to sympathise and relieve those who should need his assistance.

Some important changes have been made by the President of the Republic in superior military commands. General Baraguay d'Hilliers, whose appointment in Rome was only a temporary one, returns to France, and is to be replaced by General Gemeau, who now commands at Lyons. Gen. Castellane, one of the most energetic officers in the service, replaces General Gemeau at Lyons, and General d'Arbouville takes the command at Bordeaux.

The Electoral Union have withdrawn M. Foy from the contest for Paris, and chosen M. Leclerc as their candidate.

GERMAN STATES.

The Prussian party in the Parliament at Erfurt have sustained another defeat. A telegraphic dispatch of the 17th, published in the Nord-Deutsche Zeitung, mentions that the bill containing the charter of the constitution had been brought forward in the Upper Chamber on that day, and that Potsdam's resolution, which had passed the Lower House, had been agreed to, by 72 against 19, in the Upper House also.

COUNTRY NEWS.

NEW MILITARY PRISON AT GOSPORT.—The new military prison at Forton, Gosport, is now completed, and in about a fortnight the establishment now occupying Southsea Castle will be moved over. It consists of a governor (Captain J. Curtis, late 60th Rifles), a chaplain (the Rev. Mr. Davis), a surgeon (Mr. Dowse), a schoolmaster (not yet named), with about seventeen or eighteen warders. The new prison will contain about 180 prisoners, each with a separate cell. The cells are capacious, airy, and well-lighted by a small corrugated glass window, placed high up. The glass admits light freely, but is impervious to sight, and a small pane can be opened by the prisoner to admit air, if he requires it. The cells, and, indeed, the whole building, are kept perfectly warm by hot-air pipes that run under the floorings. Each cell is provided with a bell-pull, which strikes a gong; and the act of pulling the bell throws out an indicator that points the warder the cell from which it has been rung. The building is three stories high; the cell doors face each other in three tiers, with iron verandahs running along. The centre or nave between the doors is lighted from the top by a glass roofing. The lower tier of cells contains the solitary and dark prisons for punishment; but these are also warmed by hot-air pipes, and are well ventilated. Four baths for the use of the prisoners also occupy the basement, and in each there are places for washing, shaving, and a number of water-closets. The food is brought from the furnace-room by means of a trap-door in the floor, and a railway then conveys it to the door of each cell. At the back of the prison is a capacious chapel, and underneath the chapel room is a large school-room. The prisoners are constantly in their cells, and within the walls are three class-yards. The prison has been erected at an expense of £30,000.

On Tuesday, the annual general meeting of the Windsor and Eton Auxiliary Bible Society took place at the Town Hall, Windsor; Charles Palmer, Esq., took the chair, in the place of the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, Canon of Windsor, who was unavoidably absent. The report was read by the Rev. J. B. Mozley, secretary to the society, and adopted. The Rev. J. G. Coakesby, in a very eloquent address, condemned those principles which unfortunately have so recently occasioned such discord in the religious world. The Parent Bible Society was represented by the Rev. J. Frost, who entered into a lucid description of the proceedings of that society, both at home and abroad, mentioning that the funds are in a flourishing condition, and that thirty-seven millions of Bibles had been distributed, out of which only [illegible]. The Rev. J. Gore also made an able speech on behalf of the society. Several other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and a liberal subscription was afterwards entered into.

POCKET-PICKING NEAR THE DOORS OF A CHURCH.—On Sunday evening last, a gentleman, on coming out of Christ Church, Salford, had his pocket picked of a small black roan pocket-book, containing a promissory note for a £100, a £20 dividend warrant, and various memoranda.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The past week has been almost exclusively devoted to the Craven—the first of the trio of Spring meetings at Newmarket: the sport was averagely good, nothing wonderful. In the ensuing week we shall have a couple of days' racing at Malton, and the same number on Lansdown (Bath); a third, however, has been ranked on, for steeple-chasing solely: the country is well adapted to sport of this description, requiring horses that can really "jump" as well as race, which was not the case at the recent steeple-chase meeting, so called, at Epsom. The Bath people do their best to "command success;" we hope they will not be disappointed. In our next we shall have to announce the opening of the cricketing and aquatic campaigns. It is so far fortunate they have not already commenced, inasmuch as the elements have not favoured out-of-door sports.

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

3 to 1 agst Bee-hunter	6 to 4 agst Pinsford
	3 to 1 agst Hardinge

DERBY.

5 to 1 agst Bolingbroke	15 to 1 agst Voltigeur	30 to 1 agst Punang
7 to 1 —— Dhuleep	18 to 1 —— The Italian	33 to 1 —— Nutshell
8 to 1 —— Gladiateur	18 to 1 —— Mildew	40 to 1 —— Blarney
8 to 1 —— Mavis	20 to 1 —— Pinsford	50 to 1 —— Hardinge
15 to 1 —— The Nigger	25 to 1 —— Knight of Avenel	50 to 1 —— Delocco
	66 to 1 agst Cariboo

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING.—MONDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each, for colts (Handicap). Mr. Barnett's Abdallah (Sly) 2

HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES of 25 sovs each.—Colonel Peel's Ione (Chapple), 1. Lord Clifden's Sagacity (Pearl), 2.

HANDICAP of 20 sovs each.—Mr. Gurney's b c by St. Francis (W. Harlock), 1. Mr. Payne's Saucy Dick (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 100 sovs each.—Mr. Combe's Necklace (W. Cotton), 1. Sir J. Hawley's Rippla (Templeman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 100 sovs each.—Col. Peel's Hardinge (Flatman), 1. Mr. Combe's Tomboy (R. Cotton), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Lord Exeter's Nutshell walked over.

TUESDAY.

The TUESDAY'S RIDDLESWORTH of 200 sovs each Colonel Peel's Hardinge (Flatman), 1. Lord Exeter's Nutcracker (Norman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Sir J. Hawley's Tiff (Templeman), 1. Mr. Combe's Tomboy (R. Cotton), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 100 sovs each.—Lord Exeter's Nutcracker (Norman), 1. Lord Exeter's Ghio (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each.—Lord Exeter's Bishop of Romford's Cob (Norman), 1. Sir J. Gerard's Jest (Bartholomew), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Mr. Gratwicke's The Nugger (Flatman), 1. Mr. Ford's Satire (Bartholomew), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Lord Airlie's Clincher (F. Butler), 1. Duke of Richmond's Compass (Flatman), 2.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP of 50 sovs each. Mr. Gratwicke's Cheerful (Collson), 1. Mr. Stevens's Knight of Gwynne (T. Smith), 2.

WEDNESDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Major Martyn's Fernando (W. Abdale), 1. Duke of Rutland's Ondine (W. Boyce), 2.

SUBSCRIPTION PLATE of £50.—Mr. Rolt's Collingwood (Flatman), 1. Lord Clifden's Honeycomb (Pearl), 2.

The COLUMN STAKES of 50 sovs each. Colonel Peel's Longinus (Flatman), 1. Mr. Greville's Carriboo (A. Day), 2.

THURSDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Haram Scarum, 1. Warner, 2.

PLATE of 50 sovs.—Beaucleve, 1. Sibaran, 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Offspring, 1. Falcon, 1.

FRIDAY.

HANDICAP.—Telegraph, 1. Colt by Miss out of Virago, 2.

FORT STAKES.—Osterley, 1. Lady Evelyn, 2.

MATCH, 200, h ft.—Preshaw beat Canada colt.

GRAND METROPOLITAN STEEPLE-CHASE AT EPSOM.

YESTERDAY week the experiment of a Steeple-Chase meeting at Epsom was made with perfect success. Last year, an attempt made to get up such a meeting failed, from the opposition of the resident gentry, who considered a steeple-chase would be a misappropriation of the Downs. The endeavour was this year renewed, the ground being changed from Epsom Downs to Epsom Common; and the stakes were duly filled.

The line commenced on Epsom Common to the right of the Leatherhead-road, about one mile and a half from Epsom, starting from the distance-post beyond the stands, over two flights of hurdles; it then passed over a cut hedge placed on a bank, with rather an awkward ditch on the taking-off side, on to a piece of heavy ploughed land, in the middle of which a red flag was placed, round which it proceeded down the hill, and over another cut fence with a slight drop on to a sod piece. Still descending the hill to a stiff fence on to the common again, which had been carefully levelled, and a regular track laid out, it then skirted the lower ground, bearing obliquely towards Newt-own Wood, crossing an artificial fence of posts and rails well brushed, with a made drain on landing. It now rose slightly to the right, over another obstruction of a similar character two hundred yards further on, passing in front of Mr. Hutton's wood house, and running parallel with the wood side—this portion of the ground, from the recent rains and bottoming nature of the soil, being knee-deep and sticky. It then crossed the brook with a 5 feet of water, defended on the taking-off side by a made hedge, and proceeded in a direct line towards Clay-hill, turning again to the right in front of Mr. Stone's farm-house, up the hill, leaving Squire Trotter on the left, and then entered the straight run in on the brow of the hill a quarter of a mile from home, over two flights of hurdles, the finish being cut, topped and staked, forming an oblong of two miles, which had to be passed over twice for the four miles. The ground, from (as we have before stated) the nature of the soil and the effect of the weather, was extremely heavy and distressing to the horses, especially in the lower portion, where it was all but impossible for them to make a trot of it. The fences were light and unimportant.

Barnard's two stands were erected and were filled with company, and the enclosure was thronged.

The assemblage on the ground, malgré the frequent showers, and the dreadful muddy state of the ground, was immense. Both sides of the straight run in was lined two and three deep with carriages of every description. Amongst the lions of the day were the four natives of Tangier, who recently arrived in this country in charge of the presents from the Emperor of Morocco to her Majesty.

The proceedings, as set forth on the card, commenced, and at the time fixed, with the Surrey Hunt Steeple-Chase, for which nine came to the post, and, after one of the longest and most severe races, terminated in favour of the Hero by a head only.

Next came the Metropolitan Steeple-Chase of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 if declared, with 100 added by the lessee; a winner of 100 once, four times, after the weights are published, once 7lb, twice 12lb extra; the second to save his stake; the winner to pay 30 sovs towards expenses; four miles; 25 subs, 7 of whom declared.

Mr Stafford's ch m Fugitive by Rust, 10st 8lb	..	..	(H. Bradley) 1
Mr Treadgold's b m Maria Day, aged, 10st	..	..	.. (Frisby) 2
Mr Skipworth's b m Rachel, 6 yrs, 10st	..	..	.. (Taylor) 3
Mr Elsegood's (Bath) Yeoman, aged, 11st 7lb	..	..	(W. Archer) 0
Mr H Bird's Sir Peter Laurie, aged, 11st 5lb	..	..	(Mr Goodman) 0
Mr T. Mason's Proceed, 10st 10lb	..	..	(J. Mason) 0
Mr E. Haggard's Miss Collingwood, aged, 10st 2lb	..	..	.. (Tanner) 0
Mr Cartwright's Thurgarton, aged, 10st 7lb (including 7lb extra)			(T. Oliver) 0
Captain Knight's Leo, aged, 9st 10lb	..	..	.. (Boxall) 0
Mr F. G. Dixon's Falcon, aged, 9st 10lb	..	..	.. (Britton) 0
Mr Pettifor's The Last Forrester, aged 9st 6lb	..	..	.. (Rackley) 0
Mr G Symond's Ploughboy, 9st 6lb	..	..	(C. Boyce) 0
Mr M. Stubbs's Skim, 9st 5lb (carried 9st 9lb)	..	..	.. (Webster) 0
Mr Mol ny's Moly, 6 yrs, 9st 4lb	..	..	.. (Owner) 0

Betting: 3 to 1 agst British Yeoman, 4 to 1 agst Sir Peter Laurie, 5 to 1 agst Proceed, 7 to 1 agst Maria Day, 10 to 1 agst Thurgarton, 12 to 1 agst Fugitive, and 20 to 1 agst Rachel.

The horses, having taken their preliminary canters, were got to the starting post in capital order, and an excellent start effected. Miss Collingwood being first on her legs, jumped away with the lead over the first flight of hurdles, followed by Rachel second, British Yeoman third, Sir Peter Laurie fourth, and Ploughboy fifth, the rest lying in a cluster, headed by Proceed, two or three yards in the rear; but soon after clearing the fence into the ploughed land, British Yeoman took up the running, followed by Rachel, Sir Peter Laurie, Miss Collingwood, Maria Day, Skim, and ploughboy, the others forming at this early part of the race an extensive tail, the last of whom was Falcon. With little or no alteration in the order of running the lot progressed to the brook, which the British Yeoman took in advance, Rachel stalelying second, then Sir Peter Laurie, Miss Collingwood, Maria Day, and Skim, in the order we have named them, a long interval separating the rear division. In rounding the turn opposite the farm-house, Miss Collingwood gave way to Skim, who became second, the others, on breasting the hill, lying wide of each other, and in which form they ran to the distance, where they gradually closed, and proceeded in close order to the flight of hurdles opposite, which was cleared in succession by the British Yeoman, Skim, Sir Peter Laurie, Maria Day, Miss Collingwood, Proceed, and Fugitive. Descending the hill, Maria Day obtained the second place, Sir Peter Laurie lying third, Rachel fourth, Miss Collingwood and Fugitive fifth and sixth, the others being disposed of; and at the brook the second time, nothing apparently had a chance, with the exception of those we have named. On breasting the hill, the British Yeoman and Sir Peter Laurie gave way, beaten, to Maria Day, Rachel, [illegible]ve, who went on nearly abreast to the last flight of hurdles, which [illegible]ther. A fine race home then ensued, which ended in favour [illegible]ond, Rachel third, the rest nowhere.

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

PRESENTATION OF A MEMORIAL TO DR. TAIT, AT RUGBY SCHOOL.

RETIREMENT OF DR. TAIT FROM RUGBY SCHOOL.

THE appointment of the Rev. Dr. Tait to the Deanery of Carlisle, has led to his retirement from the Head-Mastership of Rugby School, of which Thursday week being the last day, the great School was the scene of a very interesting ceremony. At eleven o'clock, immediately before the first calling over on the three-quarters holyday which had been given for the occasion, the Dean of Carlisle and Mrs. Tait took their seats on two chairs in front of the master of the week's desk; the masters, the sixth form, a deputation from the town, and a large body of old Rugbeans, were assembled on either side; the masters' wives and some other ladies occupied the raised benches on the right; and the whole of the body of the School was filled with boys. On a table, immediately in front of the desk, lay a piece of plate, a clock, a pair of candlesticks, and Richmond's portrait of Dr. Tait. The plate consisted of a group in frosted silver, representing Faith supported by Philosophy and History, elaborately executed, and inscribed "Viro admodum Reverendo A. C. Tait, LL.D., D.D., scholæ Rugbensis alumni, 1850."

Mr. Shirley, scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, and son of the late Bishop Sodor and Man, in presenting the portrait to Mrs. Tait, read the following address in the name of the old Rugbeans:—

I have been requested, Mrs. Tait, on behalf of the subscribers, most of whom are old Rugbeans, to beg your acceptance of this portrait of our former Head Master, which, we trust, you will consider not less as an acknowledgment of the genuine kindness and courtesy which we have ever experienced at your own hands, than of the high qualities which we have all had occasion to admire in Dr. Tait. It is our privilege, indeed, to be able to say even more than the present members of the School. His unwearied energy, his warm interest in his pupils, and his high talents as a master, we have had the same opportunity of appreciating as they, while every year that separates us from the School only enables us to understand them better, and to value them more: but we have had most of us the additional advantage of knowing him on more friendly terms, as old Rugbeans, and of feeling how much both we individually, and, as I am sure I may add, the School at large, owe to his having, by his constant hospitality and true friendship, kept alive and gathered round himself those strong feelings of attachment which caught to bind every Rugbeian to the place of his education. We have also had the opportunity of observing—though, from our age, we can but imperfectly understand—how much the general cause of religious and liberal education in this country owes to his influence, which, we rejoice to think, will not be withdrawn in the more dignified position which he has now been called to occupy, and in which it is our earnest prayer that every blessing may attend both him and you.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING.—GREAT METROPOLITAN STEEPLE-CHASE: THE JUMP AT THE BROOK.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

The place of plate was then presented to the Dean by Mr. Gilechan, the head of the School, after a short speech full of excellent taste and feeling.

Mr. Moultrie, Rector of Rugby, afterwards read an address from the town, testifying their high sense of respect for Dr. Tait and his excellent lady.

On each occasion the Dean made a short reply, delivered with earnestness and depth of feeling. He spoke of the great happiness which he had enjoyed at Rugby—of the public and domestic blessings which he had received in connexion with it—and still more of the happiness which he had felt in taking part in a great and noble system, from which he had learnt far more than he had taught, and had derived lessons which would abide with him during his life, and after his life was over. He said that there was a spirit of good at work in Rugby, which he was sure would continue; and while he acknowledged that those set over the School had many anxious moments (for there must always be anxiety and care where many people are assembled and exposed to much temptation), yet the knowledge of their weakness was the secret of their strength; to be aware that evil existed, was the first means, under God's blessing, of changing it into good. He rejoiced to see the old Rugbeians rally round their old School and their former teachers, and still more to think that many of them were dispersed in spheres of usefulness in every profession, every part of the kingdom—almost in every part of the world. When at college, he had often wished that he had been a Rugbeian in his boyhood, and felt it a real privilege to have become one only in his manhood. He spoke of the cordial cooperation of the masters in their common work, of the assistance which they also received from the parents; but assured the boys, that, after all, the welfare of the School depended mainly on themselves—not merely the welfare which is proved by large numbers and University honours, but the higher welfare which consists in making the School a place where God is feared and loved. He alluded to the one dark cloud which had hung over him during his head-mastership, his severe illness two years ago—a cloud which, by God's mercy, had cleared off, and left on his mind only a refreshing influence. This led him to thank his neighbours and fellow-townsmen for the kindness then shown to him. Towards the end of his reply to the town address, he noticed the large number of foundationers who are now doing themselves credit in the School, of whom no less than thirteen are now in the sixth form.

The above is a very inadequate account of a succession of speeches, listened to with breathless interest, and received not only with enthusiastic applause, but with every manifestation of real and earnest affection. The candlesticks and clock were a present from the boys of the School-house to Mrs. Tait, and the masters sent the Dean a copy of the Benedictine edition of St. Chrysostom, in 13 vols. folio, with the following inscription in the first:—

ARCHIBALDO CAMPBELL TAIT, PRÆSIDI SUO
D.D.
SCHOLÆ RUGBEIENSIS MAGISTRI
STUDIIS DESIDERIO CARITATE
DECENTEM PROSEQUENTES
A.D. III. ID. APR.
CIↃIↃCCCL.

On Friday Dr. Tait quitted Rugby. When he was ready to start, the boys (having procured 500 yards of rope) took the horses from the carriage, and he was drawn to the station by nearly all the School. The road was filled with hundreds of the townspeople; and Dr. Tait was greatly cheered at the station. the carriage he was in was surrounded by the applauding crowd. The train started for about 20 yards, then stopped, when the cheering was renewed; it started again, and the cheering continued until the train was out of sight.

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.—No. 45. "GALLIOTTI, THE ASTROLOGER, SHOWING LOUIS XI THE FIRST SPECIMEN OF PRINTING." PAINTED BY R. S. LAUDER, R.S.A.

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.

In the Supplement to the Illustrated London News, given with the present Number, will be found a critical notice of this new Exhibition of Pictures, which was opened to the public at the Portland Gallery, Regent-street, nearly opposite the Polytechnic Institution.

We have this week engraved one of the best pictures—perhaps the finest in the collection—No. 45, "Galliotti, the astrologer, showing Louis XI. the first specimen of printing;" one of Mr. R. S. Lauder's seven contributions to the Exhibition. The scene is from the following passage in Scott's "Quentin Durward:"—

"You are engaged, father," said the King, "and, as I think, with this new-fashioned art of multiplying manuscripts by the intervention of machinery. Can things of such mechanical and terrestrial import interest the thoughts of one before whom Heaven has unrolled her own celestial volumes?"

"My brother," replied Martivalle, "can I look forward without wonder and astonishment to the lot of a succeeding generation, on whom knowledge will descend like the first and second rain, uninterrupted, unabated, and unbounded; fertilising some grounds, and overflowing others; changing the whole form of social life; establishing and overthrowing religions; erecting and destroying kingdoms——"

"Hold, Galliotti," said the King. "Shall these changes come in our time?"

"No, my Royal brother," replied Martivalle: "this invention may be likened to a young tree, which is newly planted, but shall in succeeding generations bear fruit as fatal as that of the Garden of Eden—the knowledge, namely, of good and evil."

Louis answered, "Let futurity look to what concerns them—we are men of this age, and to this age we will confine our care. Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."

OPENING OF THE ABERDEEN RAILWAY.

The accompanying Illustration shows the terminus, station buildings, and adjoining scenery, sketched on the occasion of the opening of the Aberdeen Railway for traffic throughout, on Saturday, the 30th ult. In the foreground is represented the elegant bridge across the Dee, from the designs of Messrs. Locke and Errington; and which, from the peculiar difficulties attending its construction over a rapid and shifting mountain river, causing more than one alteration of the foundations, is not the least creditable among the various tasteful structures which distinguish those eminent engineers. In the background are seen the suspension-bridge erected several years ago; and on the left the numerous steeples and factory chimneys of the enterprising city of Aberdeen.

By the completion of this last iron link, increased facilities will be afforded to the tourist, sportsman, and the commercial body. The former class may now, with ease and comfort, enjoy the beautiful scenery of Aberdeenshire, which, from want of rapid communication, was, till within a few years, comparatively unknown.

Aberdeen has, for some time, been the only town of its size in the Island without a direct railroad communication with the metropolis; and the commercial advantages likely to result from this establishment of a direct continuous route of upwards of 500 miles to London, cannot be too highly appreciated. The rising agricultural country to the northward of Aberdeen has hitherto exported considerable supplies of perishable commodities, such as provisions, game, fish, &c., and must be greatly aided by the quicker and more certain transit afforded in comparison with the precarious communication (in the winter season, at least) by steam or sailing vessels.

Trains for light goods have already been established; and we understand that direct passenger trains will run in the summer, thus affording passengers from Aberdeen or London opportunities of reaching either extremity within the compass of a summer's day, i. e. in 15 or 16 hours.

A new route will also be opened up for a considerable amount of traffic from the west of Scotland to Aberdeen and the adjoining counties. Many goods—for instance, those imported into Glasgow from the West Indies, and which must run risk of injury from frequent handling and change of transport—will now be conveyed direct, instead of the circuitous route by rail or canal to Leith or Edinburgh, and thence by sea. The manufactures and trade of Aberdeen have as yet scarcely recovered a period of unusual depression and the commercial crisis of 1847. We trust the opening of the railway will be the precursor to a renewal of an era of increased prosperity to those interests, and to all others of the populous and rising city of Bon Accord.

OPENING OF THE ABERDEEN RAILWAY.—DEE BRIDGE AND ABERDEEN TERMINUS.

The appearance of our Illustration has been unavoidably deferred to this date, through prior claims upon our artist.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Although "Don Giovanni" had been announced, "Don Pasquale" was repeated for the fourth time on Tuesday, by special desire of her Majesty; and the performance was rendered with more brilliancy than on any preceding performance. On no occasion did Madame Sontag exemplify more admirably one of her great gifts that of concealing all the mechanism of art; for those marvellous chefs-d'œuvres of execution, she so appropriately introduces in this opera, intricate as the web of Arachne, were performed by Madame Sontag with as much apparent ease as a bird warbles its song, whilst she toyed with her fan, or tossed gaily her head with the most winning coquetry. Lablache gave the comic inspiration its full flow, introducing new devices and new jokes, practical and verbal, on the spur of the moment. Calzolari and Belletti sang with their usual effect, and shared the honours of the evening with Lablache and Madame Sontag.

On Thursday night the "Nozze di Figaro" was given Mdme. Sontag, in her celebrated part, Susannah. This favourite opera, with this great vocalist, and the cast, consisting of Lablache, Ronconi, Catherine Hayes, Bosseti, and Palermini, with the support, in the "Zarabanda," of Carlotta Grisi and Marie Taglioni, attracted the greatest house of the season. Every morceau except two was encored; and the trio "Io," was sung thrice, amidst general laughter and the most enthusiastic applause. The opera was concluded at last, much exhausted by the fervour of the encores, and, after a prolonged demand, Mdme. Sontag obtained by her mute gestures permission not to repeat "Deh vieni non tardar," which she has previously sung with a purity of tone, a taste, a feeling, and a finish which surpassed all precedent. It is needless to add the ovations that followed. The "Ice Ballet" was received with every possible demonstration of delight: the effect of its curious picturesque scenery and evolutions being enhanced by the dancing of Carlotta Grisi, Maria Taglioni, and Ferraris, Charles and Paul Taglioni. The next event will be the appearance of the celebrated Tamberlik from Naples, Baucarelli. He is 23 years of age, handsome, and possesses a powerful and melodious voice.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The first appearance, this season, of Mdlle. de Meric, the contralto, took place on Saturday, as Orsini, in Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia." She was very well received; and although she had only arrived from St. Petersburgh on the day she made her début, she sang and acted correctly. Mdlle. de Meric has a most lovely organ, especially in the lower notes, the sympathetic quality of which is very touching. Her method is that of a thorough musician. In her vocalisation, being yet so very young in the profession, she has not the charm and finish of Alboni, and in her acting she has not the dramatic power of Angri; but her Orsini is attractive from its saucy vivacity. With experience, she may occupy advantageously the ground of her gifted predecessors in the contralto parts.

The acting and singing of Mdlle Steffanone on Tuesday as Norma, was on Saturday magnificent, and created the most exciting sensations: the death-scene was appallingly thrilling. To state that Grisi was sublime, will be only to echo the sentiments so rapturously expressed by the audience from the first to last of her matchless delineation of Lucrezia. Let us add, that the suggestion thrown out, in our last week's notice, of adding Herr Formes to the Prologue, was acted upon, and that the thundering accents of the German basso secured the encore for the Chorus of Magicians.

On Tuesday night there was a crowded house, to witness Grisi's second appearance in "Norma," with Mdlle. Steffanone as Adalgisa, and Signor Tamberlik's Pollio. This masterpiece of Bellini has never been more powerfully cast than at present: Tamberlik's Pollio is an invaluable acquisition. He sang in the second and third acts of "Casta diva," after "Norma;" but why not give the third and fourth acts on some nights, as a change, and then the public will hear Tamberlik's exquisite singing of the air of "Sleep," in the fourth act. Rossini's "William Tell" ought to be revived expressly for Tamberlik, on whom the mantle of Duprez has expressly fallen for the part of Arnold.

On Thursday night, Mozart's terrible lyric drama, "Don Giovanni," was announced, with Grisi as Donna Anna; Mdlle. Vera, Donna Elvira; and Madame Castellan, Zerlina; Tamburini, Don Giovanni; Taglioni, Commendatore; Polonini, Masetto; Herr Formes, Leporello; and Mario, Don Ottavio. The powerful dramatic situations, lovely melodies, gorgeous harmonies, and rich descriptive instrumentation in this work, render it particularly amenable to the test of more than half a century, and every new generation confirms the fiat of its predecessor. Of Grisi's intensity of graphic power in the description of the agonising faculties of filial devotion and Taglioni's endless grace and fantasy, still unapproachable even with his diminished vocal powers—of the unparalleled charm of Mario's singing in this opera—of Tagliafico's artistical style of rendering the music of the Statue, it is unnecessary to write, familiar as the attributes of the above artistes in these parts are to the musical public. Mdlle. Vera and Madame Castellan and Herr Formes are new in the present cast; but the German basso was unable to appear, owing to a severe cold, and Polonini was substituted as Leporello, acting vice Herr Alexander Herr Formes." He acquitted himself very creditably in this emergency—his sonorous bass voice telling in the concerted pieces. Tagliafico doubled the parts of Masetto and Il Commendatore with infinite ability. Mario sang "Dalla sua pace" with the purity, especially the difficult air "Mi tradì." Mdme. Castellan's Zerlina was a charming performance; she has never been heard to greater advantage, and was rapturously encored, both in the "Batti, batti," and "Vedrai carino." The other encores were Mario in "Il mio tesoro," Tamburini in the two airs "Finche del vino" and "Deh vieni," Mdme. Castellan and Tamburini in the duo "La ci darem," and Grisi, Vera, and Mario in the duo "Protegga." The overture and accompaniments were superbly played. The house was crowded.

PRINCESS'.

The five-act French opera "Gustave III., ou Le Bal Masqué," was produced for the first time in this country, last Monday night, as written by Scribe, and composed by Auber. An English adaptation represented at Covent-Garden Theatre, some years since, under Mr. Bunn's management, although mounted with great splendour, contained many important departures from the original text and score. At the Princess', with the exception of the cutting of repeats and the duo opening the fourth act between Ankerström and his wife, the opera was performed in its integrity; and, considering the resources of the establishment, was well put on the stage. "Gustavus," however, is a work exacting infinite care in the ensemble: it is more distinguished by its gorgeous spectacle, powerful choruses, dramatic concerted pieces, in which two actions are going on frequently, and beautiful ballet music, than as a ballad opera; and for this reason, a large arena, an extensive orchestra and experienced body of choristers, are required to appreciate the grand effects which are done at the Grand Opera in Paris, on its original production, on February 27, 1833. The music is, as every amateur knows, full of sparkling melody from first to last. Instrumented with Auber's peculiar delicacy and brilliancy, there is scarcely a theme in the opera which has not gone the round of the world, and many a barrel-organ has been worn out in grinding its galop or other dance pieces. The story is also well known. The Swedish Monarch, who was shot at a masked ball in Stockholm, in March, 1792, by Ankerström, who suffered the penalty of death, after the most horrible torture, is presented by Scribe as a love-sick monarch; and his assassin is depicted as a faithful subject of his King, but he discovers that there is a liaison between Madame Ankerström and Gustavus. A curious circumstance connected with this opera is, that Madame Ankerström, who survived her husband in 1833, wrote to Scribe to protest against his invention of any intrigue between herself and her fair fame—Ankerström being a political madman, and having no private reasons for the act of assassination he so daringly perpetrated, and which he explated on the scaffold.

The cast here was:—Mdlle Nau, Madame Ankerström, admirably sung and acted; Miss Louisa Pyne as Oscar, the page, who was naïve, and sang the bravura music successfully; Madame Macfarren, Arvidson, the fortune-teller; Mr. Harrison, Gustavus; Barker and Latter, the chief conspirators, Riborm and Warting; Mr. Wynn, Christian, the sailor; and Mr. Weiss, Ankerström: exceedingly well sustained, vocally and dramatically. The chorus, "Long live the King," ending the second act, was encored: it was well grouped, and energetically sung. The scenery was very good especially the snow-covered rocks and firs in the vicinity of Stockholm by moonlight, with the gibbet, &c.; and the last, a brilliantly lighted-up ball-room in the Swedish Opera-house, in which innumerable costumes were displayed, including visitors from the front of the house in dominos—a privilege which seemed to have been largely exercised by the curious, who are so anxious to have a peep behind the scenes

SURREY.

Mr. Marston's "Patrician's Daughter" has been acted during the week; the part of Mordaunt by Mr. Creswick, and that of Mabel by Madame Pomeli. The play was well mounted, and, notwithstanding its refinement, told on the sympathies of the audience.

SADLER'S WELLS.

Lord Byron's tragedy of "Werner" was revived on Monday. Mr. Phelps's delineation of the hero was a remarkably effective and intelligent performance. The night's proceeds benefit the treasurer, Mr. Bennett. On Monday, 1851, it will be paid by the management, leaving the entire receipts of the occasion applicable for the purpose intended.

ST. JAMES'S.

The vaudeville of L'Apprenti" was, on Monday, succeeded by M. Samson's comedie "Un Ventage," the character of Menard being exquisitely represented by the author and actor. The well-known comedy of "La Marquise de Senneterre," concluded the evening; Mdlle. Denain performing the part of Henriette. It is, however, to "Un Veuvage" that public attention will be directed; and critics will be reminded by it of his "Trois Crispins," with which it will support a favourable comparison. "Un Veuvage" is in verse, smoothly written, and artistically conducted. The plot turns upon the anxiety of a rich widower, M Menard, to escape from the importunities of parents of marriageable daughters For this purpose, he flies to the provinces; but in vain. His hostess, his former flames, and his rural neighbours, are equally bent on promoting his happiness at the expense of their own. They quarrel among themselves, and almost make him resolve to fly from mankind altogether. The object of a former attachment, who renews her addresses, is one Mdlle. Avenel, a poetess, who would fain conceal her interested motives under the thin gauze of sentimentality. This artificial style of comedy admits of much that may be termed ideal in its treatment; and it is the presence of this, indeed, which gives so much refinement and delicacy to the treatment both of the situations and characters.

DRURY-LANE.

A musical farce, called "The Cricket Match," was produced on Monday; but it proved a failure.

STRAND.

A very amusing farce, by Mr. J. M. Morton, was produced here on Monday. It is entitled "Friend Waggles," and is founded upon the well-known episode of the winning-post match in one Mille. Avenel, a poetess, who would fain conceal her interested motives under the thin gauze of sentimentality. This artificial style of comedy admits of much that may be termed ideal in its treatment; and it is the presence of this, indeed, which gives so much refinement and delicacy to the treatment both of the situations and characters.

DRURY-LANE.

A musical farce, called "The Cricket Match," was produced on Monday; but it proved a failure.

STRAND.

A very amusing farce, by Mr. J. M. Morton, was produced here on Monday. It is entitled "Friend Waggles," and is founded upon the well-known episode of the winning-post match in one Mille. Avenel, a poetess, who would fain conceal her interested motives under the thin gauze of sentimentality. This artificial style of comedy admits of much that may be termed ideal in its treatment; and it is the presence of this, indeed, which gives so much refinement and delicacy to the treatment both of the situations and characters.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

It is now the full concert season, and every day, matinées, soirées, and grand concerts are given by native and foreign professors. To analyze individually each of these entertainments, would occupy infinitely more space than we can afford, and a passing notice must, therefore, suffice.

On Monday, Mr. H. Wylde, the pianist, commenced a series of Matinées Musicales at Willis's Rooms.

On Tuesday evening, the concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, under distinguished patronage, for the benefit of Mr. Henry Boys, the organist and pianist, incapacitated by an affection of the eyes from continuing his professional avocations was perfectly successful in its object. The artistes who gave their gratuitous aid were Misses C. Hayes, Rainforth, Pyne, Poole, A. and M. Williams, Dolby, Birch, Mdme. F. Lablache, Mdme. Anderson, Messrs. Reeves, Lablache, Signor Marras, Mr. Benedict, Herr Ernst, Signori Platti and Briccialdi; with Mr. Brinley Richards as conductor.

On Wednesday, M. Szczepanowski, the clever guitarist, gave a matinée at the Beethoven Rooms, assisted by Mdme. Macfarren, Misses Cole, Miss A. Nunn and three artistes, Mesdames Mora, Bongiouanni and Westwalewicz, from St. Petersburgh; whose names are new to us. Mdme. Szczepanowski's pianiste, and Mr. W. G. Macfarren, conductor.—On the evening of Wednesday, the Beethoven Quartett Society recommenced their meetings in Queen Anne-street; the quartets being Ernst, Cooper, Hill, and Rousselot, who played No. 1 in F, No. 9 in G, and No. 13 in B flat. Beethoven's trio in D introduced the celebrated composer and pianist, Stephen Heller, in the pianoforte part. We were unable to be present at this performance, but after the next soirée we shall notice these remarkable quartet parties —Mr. Lucas had his fourth and last musical evening also on Wednesday, at which the quartets were, No. 3, Van Bree; No. 80, Haydn; and No. 7, Beethoven; with Mozart's pianoforte sonata, No. 30, played by Mr. R. Barnett, and Weber's duo in E flat, in which Lazarus, the admirable clarionet player, appeared. Sainton, Blagrove, Hill, and Lucas have played together for so many years, that their rendering of quartets is as nearly an approach to perfection as possible.—Mr. Willy, the clever violinist, gave his concert at Exeter Hall also on Wednesday, aided by the accomplished Miss Kate Loder, Mr. Richardson (flute), and Mr. T. Harper (trumpet); the vocalists were Misses Birch, Lucombe, Dolby, A. and M. Williams, Ellen Lyon, Mrs Grosbacth, Messrs. Benson, W. H. Seguin, and Whitworth.—On Thursday morning, Mr. Charles Salaman, the pianist and composer, at the Hanover Rooms, made the fifth musical performance he has given on Wednesday last: Mr Salaman had the cooperation of Miss C. Hayes, Mdlle. Parkes, Wagner, Miss Bassano, Messent, Herr Franz Stahl a German basso, and Mr. Sims Reeves, Lablache, Benedict, Hausell, Lucas, Piatti, Regondi, G. Cooke, R. Blagrove, Card, Geffre, N. Mori, Watkins, Hill, Trust, in Mendelssohn's "Clello," and Hummel's Septuor in D minor.

MADAME DULCKEN.—In the Supplement published with the present Number is recorded the lamented death of Madame Dulcken. She was born at Hamburg, and with her brother were early associate of Mendelssohn, who, by a singular coincidence, also died in Hamburg this year. Madame Dulcken was married at sixteen, and in 1830 first performed here in public at Mr. [illegible] Soirées Musicales," in Herz's fantasia on themes from Mehul's "Joseph." Her fame was at once established, and her performance of Weber's Concertstück on her début at the Philharmonic Concerts, created a great sensation. Her remains were interred on Monday, in the Highgate Cemetery. A whole length portrait of Madame Dulcken appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 99.

MEMOIR OF MR. PLATT.

This famed player on the horn, whose farewell of the public will take place next Wednesday, the 24th inst., at the Nobility Concerts, given at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of a committee of gentlemen, of which his friend George Smart is chairman, including upwards of sixty of the leading musical professors and amateurs, and under the immediate patronage of her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Duke of Cambridge, at an early age displayed such promising talent for both the 2nd, or tenor horn, and the 1st or bass, of which his father was master, and in which he remained eleven years. It was the celebrated Braham, who, hearing Mr. Platt play a solo at a concert in Newcastle, suggested to him to go to London. His first engagement was at Drury-lane Theatre for two years; and he afterwards entered the orchestra of the King's Theatre (Her Majesty's), having been strongly recommended by Anfossi and Spagnoletti, the successor of Puzzi, in whose place Platt played one night, the former having met with an accident from that period Mr. Platt was engaged as principal horn at the Ancient and Philharmonic Concerts, Her Majesty's Theatre, the Royal Italian Opera, the Societa Armonica, the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the theatrical festivals, until declared unfit for service, when he was compelled to retire, having lost the whole of his front teeth from continuous pressure in his arduous duties. Mr. Costa's opinion of Mr. Platt's tone, that, in "singing on the horn, he was the finest and most expressive he had ever heard," is that of the general body of the profession Mr. Platt was remarkably attentive and punctual in his engagements, and has for years been the foremost to play gratuitously for all charities, public and private, and during the whole of the long and sharp contest between the Philharmonic Concerts and the Ancient Concerts, natural that the gentlemen in the gallery should take in some degree after the bad practices of the gentlemen in the House. Late one eventful night, Wilberforce was speaking; and a reporter named Prendergast, who ought to have been attending to him, was sound asleep, with his head on his note-book. The napping functionary was roused by a burst of laughter from the House. "What's that?" he stammered; "what are they laughing at?" he inquired of his next neighbour. Now this neighbour was what was then called a wag, and his name was Mark Supple—he being in fact the identical gentleman who, on another occasion, requested the Speaker to favour the House with a song. "Laughing at," says Mark, "take your pencil, and I'll tell you. Wilberforce has just said grace over the potato as an article of nourishment. 'Look at me,' he was saying; 'see what a lean scarecrow of a fellow I am. Why, if I had been brought up on potatoes, I should have been as stout and jolly a looking fellow as the hon. member for Galway" (the famous Dick Martin). Poor Prendergast was half asleep, and more than half tipsy, so down went the precious "point" in his note-book; and next morning it actually appeared in the British Press. Great, therefore, was the fun all day, apropos of Wilberforce's speech; and when he appeared in the House at night, there was a roar of laughter. Presently he rose, said that he was not usually in the habit of making a fuss about reporting errors, but that there really was a passage attributed to him in that day's British Press——here another shout of laughter interrupted him. The good-natured anti-slavery orator stood for a moment irresolute, then joined the laughter heartily, and it may be saw the rest of the House wiping its eyes. The matter as a joke, and that so, he was content to let it remain. So far, I believe, the debates in Hansard will corroborate the story; but there is a pendant to it to the effect that Prendergast, when he came down to the House, swore stoutly that Wilberforce had made use of the expressions—that he had heard them with his own ears—which he certainly had—and, finally, that he actually went round to the members' lobby, and indignantly told Mr. Wilberforce that the professed sanctity of character ought to be ashamed of himself for so disgracefully denying his own words! The last portion of the anecdote, however, is manifestly too good to be true.

A. B. E.

MERCANTILE MARINE BILLS.

A meeting of shipowners, shipmasters, and other persons interested in British shipping, was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, "to adopt measures for inducing the postponement of the bills affecting the British mercantile marine recently introduced into the House of Commons by the Right Honourable the President of the Board of Trade, until a full and impartial inquiry shall have been instituted into the laws and regulations now in force relating to British marine commerce, with a view to such relief from all burdens and restrictions not absolutely necessary for the public interests; to the consolidation and simplification of maritime law; and to the establishment of a system adapted to the existing system of British navigation."

The meeting was fully attended. Amongst the gentlemen present were the following:—Mr. Hume, M.P.; Mr. Forster, M.P.; Mr. Anderson, M.P.; Sir J. Johnstone, M.P.; Sir J. Duke, Bart., M.P.; Lord John Chichester, M.P.; Mr. Heywood, M.P.; Mr. Hudson, M.P.; Mr. Clay, M.P.; Mr. Moffatt, M.P.; Mr. Ross Mangles, M.P.; Mr. Geo. Fred. Young; Sir J. Pelley, Bart.; Mr. William Philips, Mr. Wm. Watson, Captain Gilmour, Captain Mangles, Mr W. L. Ogilby, Mr. G. Richardson, Mr Straker (North Shields), Mr. Hartley (Jarrow), Mr. Watson (Dustin), Mr Robinson (South Shields), Captain Henderson, Mr. Locket (Liverpool), Mr. Aiken (Liverpool), &c.

Joseph Hume, Esq., M.P., was called to the chair.

Mr. Lockett, chairman of the society of shipowners in Liverpool, proposed the first resolution:—

That, from the assurances given by her Majesty's Government, more especially during the discussions in Parliament on the repeal of the Navigation-laws, the shipping interests of the United Kingdom confidently relied on the speedy removal of the many harassing impediments and disqualifying burdens to which shipowners are exposed from the operation of existing laws and regulations affecting maritime commerce.

Mr. Straker (North Shields) seconded the resolution, which was agreed to; as also were the following:—

That it is with extreme disappointment they have viewed the introduction into Parliament of the Mercantile Marine Bill, which, so far from extending relief to the shipping interest, is calculated to increase its burdens and embarrassments, and further to inequalize its position, were for the maintenance of that competition with the shipping of all foreign nations which he is now called to sustain, while many of its provisions are opposed to all sound principle, and are ill adapted to the character and condition of the British marine—a subject which this meeting cordially and anxiously desires to promote.

That in the present unsatisfactory position and defective state of our maritime law, it is of the highest importance that a comprehensive and impartial inquiry should be forthwith instituted into the various legislative enactments and regulations now in force affecting British shipping with a view to their consolidation and simplification as far as practicable, and to the establishment of a system adapted to the present times, and to the present position of the navigation of the empire.

That the following gentlemen be appointed a committee, to prepare a petition to Parliament, founded on the foregoing resolutions, to be signed by the chairman, on behalf of this meeting, to wait upon the President of the Board of Trade for the purpose of representing the views now expressed and by the shipping interest in general on the whole question, before he brings forward the postponement of the bill, and for such other measures as the position of the proposed inquiry, and to adopt such other steps as they may deem expedient for giving effect to the above objects of the meeting; viz. Mr Forster, M.P.; Mr. Moffatt, M.P.; Mr. Anderson, M.P.; Mr George Frederick Young, Sir James Duke, Bart, M.P. Sir John Pelly, Bart, Mr J Clay, M.P., Mr George Moffat, M.P. Mr W Philips, Mr W. Watson, Captain Gilmour, Captain Mangles, Mr W L Ogilby, and Mr G Richardson, with power to add to their number.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MILITARY TRAINING SCHOOL.—A considerable addition is about to be made to the hospital at the school at Chelsea, for the comfort and accommodation of the sick students, and a new and more suitable kitchen is to be built for the use of the establishment.

THE REDUCTION OF THE NAVY.—Since the 1st of April, the following vessels have been paid off, or are under orders to be paid off:—Cygnet, 8, sloop, at Devonport, paid off; complement, 80. Rosamond, steam-sloop, Woolwich, paid off; complement, 160. Columbine, 16, Captain Hay, to be paid off at Chatham, on the 15th; complement, 120. Bull-dog, 6, steamvessel, Commander Willcox, to be paid off at Portsmouth, on the 16th; complement, 150. Alert, 8, sloop, to be paid off at Devonport, on the 16th; complement, 80. Griffon, 8, brig, to be paid off at Portsmouth; complement, 80. Ariadne, 26, Thetis, 3, troop-ship, Master Commander Fearn; complement, 40, to be paid off at Woolwich, on the 17th. The total reduction, therefore, since the 1st of April, will be 7 vessels, 1,000 seamen, and 710 officers, seamen, and marines.

CAPTAIN AUSTIN'S EXPEDITION.—The Admiralty have taken up the Emma Eugenia, transport, Deptford, to take out the coals and surplus stores for the expedition. Light gatts pervola sledges are to be provided for the expedition, on a plan proposed by Lieutenant Hallett, R.N.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—The Lady Franklin, Captain Penny, and the Sophia, Captain Stewart, sailed from Aberdeen on Saturday last, for the Arctic regions, in search of Sir John Franklin. The two vessels were hauled out of the dock at two o'clock, and left the harbour amid the cheers of a large crowd of spectators. Lady Franklin and Sophia have 25 men each, including officers, and are provisioned for three years.

THE ANNIVERSARY of Lord Rodney's glorious victory was celebrated on Thursday, by a meeting of the members of the Navy Club, who dined together at the Thatched House, on the 12th, Captain Rodney Mundy, a descendant of the gallant Admiral, filled the chair.

MUNIFICENT GIFTS.—The Duke of Norfolk has been pleased to give a donation of 100 guineas, and the Duchess 20 guineas, in aid of the tunds of the Spinal Hospital, Portland-road, Regent's-park.

MR. LAYARD'S ASSYRIAN RESEARCHES.—By the Overland Mail we have intelligence from Mosul to the 4th of March. Mr. Layard and his party are still carrying on their excavations at Nimroud and Koyunjik. A large number of copper vessels, beautifully engraved, have been found in the former, and from the latter a large assortment of fine slabs, illustrative of the rude conquests, domestic life, and arts of the ancient Assyrians, are daily coming to light, and are being emitted to paper by the able artist, Mr. Cooper, one of the expedition. Mr. Layard intends to make a trip to the Chaboor, the Chaberas of the Romans, and to visit Kelah Alita, the Resen of Scripture, where he hopes to find a treasure of Assyrian remains. The inundations about the north of Syria is unsafe for travellers, and strong escorts are requisite. The Ottoman Government, instead of favouring the cultivation of silk in the mountains, which are remarkably adapted for the growth of the mulberry, and which, in the course of a few years, would yield a staple export, are dreaming of further conquests in the southeastern parts of Arabia, down by the Persian Gulf and the districts of Oman. An Admiral and about 50 engineer officers and ship-builders passed through Mosul on their way to Bussorah, where they intend to make a dock, build ships, and swim a fleet in the Gulf of Persia.

THE AFRICAN AND AMERICAN SLAVE-TRADE is the subject of a series of moving panoramic views just brought to this country from the United States, and announced for exhibition at Leicester, on Monday next.

THE CHARTIST PRISONERS.—On Wednesday, at the Southwark Police-court, Maynard, one of the turnkeys of Horsemonger-lane gaol, was brought up before Mr. Hugh Conway, James Maxwell Bryson, James Scouton, and Samuel Morgan, five men who, with others, were convicted, at the September sessions, 1848, at the Central Criminal Court, of being engaged in the Chartist riots that occurred at that period. The prisoners above named were sentenced to two years' imprisonment each in the above gaol, besides the infliction of heavy fines; but, in consequence of representations on their behalf, their sentences have been committed, and a communication was notified to Mr. Keene, the governor of the county gaol, directing the discharge of the prisoners on their procuring bail to keep the peace for five years each. It was for this purpose the accused parties were brought to the court, but the requisite sureties having been entered into, they were accordingly set at liberty.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT MANCHESTER.—On Monday morning, about nine o'clock, a very alarming fire broke out in the premises of Mr. Thomas Baxter, cotton-waste dealer, Cross-street, Manchester. The premises are situated in a very closely-built part of the town, and are surrounded by piles of warehouses, all containing a great amount of inflammable materials; and for some time destruction threatened the adjacent property, but, by the exertions of the fire-brigade, the fire was confined to the building in which it originated, not, however, before damage to the extent of £2000 had been caused. The stock and premises are insured in the West of England office.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E D.—The word "Chess" appears to have been derived from the Sanscrit, where it is written Tchatouranga; this by successive changes, first by the ancient Persians and the ancient Arabians, and afterwards by the modern Persians, became Schatrandj or Chatrang. Of late the more modern Arabians and Turks have made Satrang, or, as Sarratt, adding the article, gives it, Alsatrang. The Spaniards, from Satrang got their Ajuger or Escaque, and subsequently Acuedrez, or Acuedres, from whence it has been transformed into Scacci, Echecs, Echecs.

BLACK AND WHITE.—Examine Problem No. 323 once more.

D. D.—Pray try your hand on something less complex. The last are only "Much Ado about Nothing."

W. G. Mate cannot be given in the first, as you propose

J B K, Glasgow.—At all times acceptable

J B W, Oxford.—It appears to us an obvious mate in two moves, if White play, 1. Q to K B 2d

F G K.—Your solution of Problem No 321 was perfectly correct, but was received too late to be acknowledged last week

A LOOKER ON.—There is little interest or merit in so cheap a victory. White's defence is chouldne

A B C Q.—White only protracted the game unnecessarily by advancing the Q to Kt 5th. He had an easy mate in five moves without calling in the assistance of the Q's Rook

BELLARY.—The last in three moves is smart enough, and shall have insertion

BETTS.—The Problem is crowded and inartistic, and the game evidently played by very inexperienced amateurs. At the 4th move, both parties overlook the fact that White's Kt may be won if Black's queen moves to Q R 3rd.

RHO SIGMA.—Much too obvious.

K T.—If a person in leaning over the chessboard touches a piece by accident, he incurs no penalty in so doing

H D M, B W F, CAMUS, W C, W I B.—are now under consideration

A CONSTANT READER.—Get Tomlinson's "Amusements in Chess," published by Parker, West Strand

CAROLUS.—Quite right

THE BLACK PAWN.—The right of taking a Pawn in passing must be exercised at the moment the Pawn to be captured is thrown forward, and cannot be claimed after another move has been made; you were perfectly justified, therefore, in advancing your Pawn as you did

VERAX is thanked for the game. In reply to your query of where Black lost his advantage, we think the chief error consisted in playing the P to K B 3rd, at his 11th move

ALCIDES, Brixton.—In the position you give, the game must be drawn

H L, Boston, Massachusetts, U S.—You are perfectly right in both particulars

E D R, Bath.—The second edition contains a correction of that part of the opening to which you refer

F G W.—Your second Solution is the true one. If Black retreat the B to Q Kt sq, you simply take it, and then play the Rook back again to Q Kt 6th, mating next move

T, Rectory, Chester, will find the real Solution to the "Brutgardt Problem" in our last Number

P H J.—We regret to admit there is an difficulty in the case. If Black play, as you propose, 1. Q to Q Kt 3rd, White checks with the Kt at K Kt 3rd, and taking P with P, checkmates in one more. Look to the Number stipulated

J S—You may rely assured the Solution you propose of No 321, is definitive, although, from want of room, we cannot give the variations to demonstrate the error

A CLERK, Islington.—There is a mess society, called "The City-rink Chess Club," 21, Cityroad—the terms of which, we are told, are extremely moderate—where you could, doubtless, obtain the practice you desire

M E D.—See Diagram No 9, page 14 of the "Chess-Player's Handbook." We have not space to explain the term so that you won d fully comprehend its meaning

SOLVERS by Q, of Glasgow; R F, Royal Artillery; F G H; REUBEN; J P, Hythe; M P; G W; Rev R M; Rev F W; RUGBIENSIS; EX S-HOTT; S S, Ghent; D D, Oxford; MUNDO, Φ, HARROW, T B, P, Bolden; J A W, J E, Ireland; QUEEN SARE, M E R, INTERPRETER, FERDINAND, K K, Liverpool; DEREVON, C B (No. 324), B D M, Q, MEMPHIS, URIAH, FAWN, P H J (No. 324), and others are wrong.

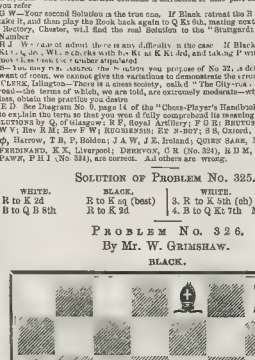
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 325.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to K 2d	R to K sq (best)	3. R to K 5th (ch)	R takes R
2. B to Q B 8th	R to K 2d	4. B to Q Kt 7th	Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 326.

By Mr. W. GRIMSHAW.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, to mate in four moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (London).	BLACK (Amsterdam).
4. P to Q B 4th	Q B to Q Kt 2d

London to play.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

Games in a Match now pending between Messrs. HOREWITZ and GREENAWAY, the former giving the odds of the Pawn and two moves.

(Before playing over this game remove Black's K B P from the Board.)

WHITE. (Mr. Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr. Horwitz.)	WHITE. (Mr. Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr. Horwitz.)
1. P to K 4th		16. K Kt to K 4th (ch)	K to K 3d
2. P to Q 4th	P to K 3d		K to K 2d
3. K B to Q 3d	P to K Kt 3d	17. Q B to K 7th	Kt to Q Kt 5th (b)
4. P to K 4th	P to Q 4th	18. Q B to K B 6th (ch)	K to K B sq
5. P to K 5th	P to Q B 4th	19. B takes R	Kt takes B (ch)
6. P to K 6th	P to K Kt 4th	20. P takes Kt	P to K R 3d
7. P to K 6th	K B takes K R P	21. K Kt to K B 3d	B to Q Kt 4th
8. Q to K 2d (ch)	K to Q 2d	22. K to K B 2d	K to K B 2d
9. Q to K 7th (ch)	Q to K 2d	23. B to K B 6th	R to K Kt sq
10. Q takes Q (ch)	K takes Q	24. Kt takes P	B to Q R 3d
11. K takes B	Kt takes R	25. K to Q B sq	R takes P
12. Q B takes P (ch)		26. R to Q B 7th (ch)	K to K Kt sq
	K to K B 2d	27. Kt takes K P	B to K Kt 5th
13. B takes Kt	P takes P	28. R to K Kt 7th (ch)	R takes R
14. K Kt to K B 3d	Kt to Q B 3d	29. Kt takes R	K to K B 3d
15. Q Kt to Q 2d	B to Q 2d	30. Q Kt to K B 3d	and Black resigned

(a) The attack up to this point is maintained with uncommon spirit and determination

(b) This appears to have been an oversight. Black forgot that his adversary would first drive the King back, and thus win the Rook o ne.

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS.

(Remove Black's K B Pawn from the Board.)

WHITE. (Mr. Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr. Horwitz.)	WHITE. (Mr. Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr. Horwitz.)
1. P to K 4th		17. Q Kt to Q 2d	Kt to K 2d
2. P to Q 4th	P to K 3d	18. K to K Q 4th	Castles (ch)
3. P to Q 3d	Q Kt to Q B 3d	19. K to K 5th	R takes Q Kt P
4. P to K 5th	P to K Kt 3d	20. K to K R 2d	Kt to K B 4th
5. P to Q B 3d	P to Q 3d	21. Kt takes Kt	Q R takes Q Kt
6. P to K B 4th	K B to K R 3d	22. Kt to K Kt 5th (ch)	K to K 2d
7. P to K R 4th	Q P takes P	23. K R to K Kt sq	K R to K B 7th
8. Q P takes P	Q Kt takes P (a)	24. Q to K Kt 8th	B to Q 6th
9. P takes Kt	B takes B	25. P to K R 5th	B to K 5th
10. K B to Q Kt 5th (ch)	P to Q B 3d	26. P to K R 6th (ch)	K to K R sq
11. P takes P (ch)	P takes B	27. Q R to K B sq	R takes R (b)
12. Q takes B	Q to Q 4th	28. B takes R	R takes P (ch)
13. K Kt to K B 3d	B to Q R 3d	29. K to K R 3d	R to K R 7th (ch)
14. Q to Q 2d	Q to K 5th (ch)	30. K to K Kt 3d	Q to K Kt 7th (ch)
15. K to K B 2d	Q to Q 6th	31. K to K B 4th	Q takes R (ch)
16. Q to K 3d	Q to Q 8th (ch)	32. K takes B	Q to Q B 5th (ch)
		And White resigned.

(a) Well played, as he must win a piece in return, and relieve himself from the attack.

(b) He might also have taken the K Kt Pawn (ch) and won with equal facility, without his coup de repos.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 561.—This clever little End Game we owe to Mr. W. HORNER.

White: K at K B 3d, R at Q 8th, B at K Kt 7th, Ps at K 2d and K R 4th.
Black: K at K B 4th, K at Q R 6th, Kt at Q R 3d, Ps at K B 5th and Q B 6th.
White, playing first, mates in three moves.

No. 562.—BY E. H. G.

White: K at Q Kt 5th, B at K Kt 2d, B at Q Kt 8th, Kt at K B 3d; Ps at K R 6th, K 3d, and Q 6th.
Black: K at Q 4th, R at K sq, B at K B 3d; Ps at K R 6th, K 3d, and Q 6th.
White to play, and mate in four moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Monday, Lord Campbell took his seat for the first time as Chief Justice of England in the Court of Queen's Bench, Westminster.

The Rev. Mr. Maskell, domestic Chaplain to the Bishop of Exeter, who it was said was about to join the Church of Rome, states in a letter which he has just published, "I have resigned my cure of souls, because I have no doctrine and no faith to teach as certainly the faith and doctrines of the English Church; but, for a time at least, I leave not her communion. Brief time it may be: One alone can tell."

The following is copied from the Jersey Times of the 12th inst.—Drowned in the Royal Adelaide, on her passage from Cork to London, the 30th March, Anthony Le Ber, Esq., and his family, consisting of his wife and 6 children, 3 sons and 3 daughters, the eldest 16, and the youngest 8, leaving behind one daughter."

The Marquis of Granby had a narrow escape from drowning on Saturday last, while hunting with the Belvoir hounds between Melton Mowbray and Kirby. The fox crossed the river, and the noble Marquis charged it at full speed where it was an impossibility for any horse to leap over, and it was with considerable difficulty that the horse and rider were extricated.

There have been serious riots at Rouen again since those mentioned last week during the performance of Turcaret. As the observation in Moliere's play, "We live under a Prince who is an enemy to fraud," there was a loud yell, which was followed by a terrific riot; the military were called out, several prisoners were taken, and the whole town resounded to the echoes of the "Marseillaise" and the "Chant du Départ."

Letters from Bosnia in the Austrian Lloyds of Vienna state that Omer Pacha was marching at the head of 40,000 men against the insurgents of that province.

The Austrian Government has notified that it will pay 20,000 ducats to the person who will construct and deliver the best locomotive for the railway which passes by the Semmering, the mountain which separates Styria from the Archduchy of Austria.

Additional advices have recently been received from Mr. Layard, at Nimroud, by which it appears that in a part of the building not far distant from that containing the throne, the whole of the military apparatus of the Monarch of Assyria has been discovered. It consists, among other things, of an immense brazen cauldron, and more than 100 diadems, &c., of the same metal. No golden diadems have, however, yet come to light.

The Prussian Government has some intention of entering into a customs-union with Switzerland.

At the Isle of Ely sessions, last week, the Rev. H. Fardell, chairman, in addressing the grand jury, gave a statistical account of the state, within twenty miles of Ely, during a period of several years, which was truly appalling.

On Tuesday night last, about half-past eleven o'clock, an incendiary fire broke out on the farm premises of Mr. Thompson, of Dry Drayton (Cambridgeshire), in a straw stack standing in immed ate contiguity to the house. The stack was lighted in such a direction as to bear evidence of intention to fire the dwelling-house, but in this the vile incendiary was happily foiled, as the wind veered before his purpose was effected. Farm produce and stock however of the value of £300 were destroyed. This is the fifth attempt to fire these premises within a period of six months, and a party named John Wingham has been committed for trial for the offence.

Patrick Holton, the principal witness examined before the House of Lords as to the tombstone story in the Tracy peerage claim, was sentenced, at the last session at Borris-in-Ossory, to two years' imprisonment for cow stealing.

Dr. Cantwell, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Meath, is at present engaged in consulting with the rest of the clergy of his diocese, upon whom he has by circular called for that purpose, a "Tenant Protection Association," for the counties of Meath and Westmeath, which is designed to co-operate with the various tenant-right societies and meetings in Ulster, that is, the Orange North, for he wishes all sectarian feeling is fast vanishing in that quarter.

The total amount of window-duty assessed in the year ending the 5th April, 1849, was £1,893,988, and the net amount received £1,813,629. The number of houses charged was 487,411. The following towns comprise the largest amount to the window-tax:—Bath £21,275, number of houses charged 3732; Birmingham £14,686, houses charged 9473; Brighton £17,672, houses 3613; Bristol £30,000, houses 4350; Cheltenham £8767, houses 1407; Lisbon £8895, houses 1373; Leeds £7595, houses 2479; Liverpool £28,856 houses 11,342; Manchester £20,576, houses 7794; Norwich £8465, houses 1871; Newcastle-upon-Tyne £7842, houses 3864; and Plymouth £11,929, houses 4537.

The Duke of Marlborough has intimated his intention of giving a cup to be sailed for during the Royal Squadron Regatta week at Cowes.

The Archbishop of Canterbury preached a sermon on Sunday, at St. James's, Holloway, in aid of the funds of the Holloway ragged School. His grace took for his text the 119th Psalm, verses 6 and 7: "He taketh up the simple out of the dust, and liteth the poor out of the mire, that he may set him with the princes, even with the princes of his people;" and in an eloquent discourse set forth the claims of these Christian undertakings. The collection at the door amounted to upwards of £50.

The farmers in the parish of Bothamsell, near Redford, having for years suffered to severely by the immense quantity of game on the estate, recently memorialised his Grace the Duke of Newcastle upon the subject. A reply to this has been received from the Duke, who regrets exceedingly that they have been so seriously injured, and assures them that he has given orders for its destruction, and that they shall have no cause to complain for the future.

The storm in the metropolis on Friday week was very destructive. A man, unknown, was struck dead by the electric fluid near the Nightingale, Lisson-grove, and removed to the Paddington dead-house. A billy-boy, 80 tons burthen, was also struck near to Hungerford Suspension-bridge, and instantly sank, the crew, three in number, escaping almost by a miracle. The enormous ballistead that fell have destroyed property to a considerable amount in the suburbs, more particularly in the nursery-grounds at Kilburn, Fulham, Deptford, Camberwell, &c.

The Norfolk Chronicle complains that the Health of Town Act is, in consequence of a decision of the Town Council, to be introduced at Norwich, and it makes the usual complaints against increased expenditure and centralauthority.

A plain, but neat monumental stone, executed by Mr. George Rochester, has been erected in Sunderland churchyard, in memory of the late Captain Coulson Douglas, who perished behind the South Pier, whilst endeavouring a few weeks ago to save the life of his fellow-creatures.

The office of Judge-Advocate in Ireland is now held by Mr. Walker, and the entire establishment, it is understood, are to be abolished, and the duties to be transferred to the office of the Judge Advocate-General in London.

Captain Douglas W. F. Lascelles, of the Coldstream Guards, has been appointed Chief Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, in the place of Captain Hay, who has succeeded Sir Charles Rowan as Joint Commissioner with Mr. Mayne.

The total number of newspaper stamps issued in England and Wales in the year 1849 was 75,868,330, or which 66,159,324 were of the value of a penny, and 10,309,223 of a half-penny; in Ireland 6,384,070, of which 6,343,727 were penny, and 39,343 half-penny; in Scotland, 6,983,203, of which 6,286,205 were penny, and 200,000 half-penny. The number of advertisements inserted in the London newspapers in 1849 was 886,106, paying a duty of £665,448 2s.; in the English provincial newspapers, 834,729, yielding to the Crown a revenue of £625,604 12s. 6d.; in the Irish papers, 220,254, paying £11,026 4s.; and in the Scotch papers, 240,961, paying in duty £18,079 16s. 6d. The total number of newspapers published in the United kingdom in 1849 was 603; viz. 160 in London, 324 in the English provinces, 117 in Ireland, and 94 in Scotland.

On the Rolleaday of the 4d instant, the children of Mr. Dyson, proprietor of the Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, in going to pray on the roof of the house discovered their father lying dead, he having, in a fit of insanity, shot himself. A report of the suicid had been spread about, but, not the slightest suspicion of the dreadful circumstance existing, no notice was taken of it. No reasons can be assigned as to the cause which prompted this sad act. He has left a wife and a numerous family.

On Saturday last, Mr. John Enoc, mess-master of the 1st Life Guards, caught a pike in the River Thames, at Chewerpoint, near Windsor, weighing upwards of 22 lb., it was a male fish, and in an excellent condition.

A meeting of bankers was held at the London Tavern, yesterday morning, to take into consideration the effect which this measure will have upon banking, but the proceedings were strictly private.

A person named Joseph Cockburn, charged with embezzling £200, belonging to the London and Provincial Law Assurance Company, is in custody. The prisoner was a clerk in the station. The police are on the track of his accomplice, a porter named Monnseer.

At one of those dangerous sports called steeple-chases, an unfortunate jockey was thrown from his horse, last week, in the county of Waterford, and killed on the spot.

An important discovery is said to have been made in Oregon, which, in consequence of the great increase of commerce between that place and San Francisco, will have a material influence on trade. Coal and fine stones to the mouth of the Columbia River had been discovered by accident. The Southern Pass, as it is called, has hitherto been deemed impracticable, but two vessels, it seems, had passed through it into the open sea, and the least water found was about six fathoms. It was intended to be immed ately surveyed.

The Swiss papers state that M. Boichot, the French military sergeant who lost his arm as reprisal taken for Paris in consequence of the affair of the 13th of June, 1849, has embarked at Genoa for Africa, with the intention of joining Garibaldi

Lord Carlisle has appointed Mr. William Ramshay, of the Northern Circuit, to the succession of Mr. W. Lowndes, Judge of the County Court in Liverpool. Mr. Ramshay has been long on the circuit, and formerly attended the Liverpool Sessions.

During the ten years ending 5th January, 1850, the sum of £1,983,580 has been advanced in grants or loans for public works, relief of distress, &c., in Ireland. On the sum there has been paid in interest £70,870 6s. 3d., and £101,349 of principal has been repaid. There remained unpaid on the 5th of January last principal to the amount of £1,882,230 19s. 6d.

It is stated as a statistical fact that the population of the county of Durham is, with the exception of Glamorganshire, increasing faster than any other county in England and Wales.

GRAND BANQUET TO THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON, AT HASTINGS.

GRAND BANQUET TO THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

HASTINGS was, on Wednesday week, the scene of perfect holyday, in consequence of the long-expected visit of the Lord Mayor of London to the borough taking place on that day. At twenty minutes to one o'clock, the Lord Mayor, accompanied by several of the City dignitaries and private friends, arrived by railway, and was met by the Mayor of Hastings and the Town Clerk, who, with other corporation authorities, in carriages and on horseback, started from the station in procession through the town, the Lord Mayor in his private state carriage, drawn by four splendidly caparisoned horses, preceded by an outrider. With the Lord Mayor were his Lordship's chaplain, sword-bearer, and mace-bearer. The procession having reached the Castle Hotel, the civic party alighted amidst loud cheering.

Shortly before six o'clock, the Lord Mayor proceeded to the Swan Hotel in his state coach, followed by two or three private carriages. Having alighted, his Lordship entered the presentation-room, which was prepared on the ground-floor of the hotel.

The ceremony of presentation having been fully completed, the whole party adjourned to the banqueting room. The more distinguished of the guests occupied a table placed across the room in the upper recess, being situated on a slightly elevated dais. Behind and above them were the national colours and the corporation arms. The remainder of the guests were ranged on either side of two tables, extending the whole length of the room.

The Mayor (G. Scrivens, Esq.) took the chair, supported on his right by the Lord Mayor of London, the Recorder of Hastings (W. W. Attree, Esq.), and Viscount Chewton; on the left by Earl Waldegrave, Mr. Alderman Humphery, M.P., and the Mayor of Rye (J. Smith, Esq.) The remainder of the guests occupied the other two tables—the Town Clerk of Hastings (F. G. Rose, Esq.) being deputy chairman to one table, and Mr. Councillor Emary deputy chairman to the other.

The banquet was of a very recherché character, and was provided by Mr. Carswell, of the Swan Hotel, assisted by Messrs. Ring and Brymer, of London.

A corps of singers, under the superintendence of Mr. Hobbs, performed some musical pieces in the course of the evening. Mr. Harker performed the office of toast-master. Several of the company appeared in uniform, and others in Court costume, which united with the splendour of the general arrangements to compose a striking tout ensemble.

The "loving cup" having been passed round, "Benedictus" was sung.

The usual loyal and constitutional toasts having been drunk with the accustomed honours and enthusiasm, the Mayor of Hastings proposed "The health of the Lord Mayor of London." "We welcome your Lordship," said the hon. gentleman, "as a native of this town; we welcome you as an honourable merchant and banker; we welcome you especially to-day as the chief magistrate of the first city in the world, and as the first Sussex man who has ever held that proud office. (Loud cheers.) I hope, beyond the present of this day, a moral lesson may be conveyed to my townsmen by your Lordship's visit—that in this free country the path to fame which you have walked is open to all, and the eminence they may be attained which you have reached." (Great acclamations.) The Lord Mayor gratefully returned thanks. "Amidst the cares of a merchant's life," said his Lordship, "I have not forgotten the place of my earliest associations, nor, surrounded by the honour of the chief magistracy of the City of London, do I desire to overlook my old friends. It gave me much satisfaction to see you at the Mansion-house, and I consider this day one of the proudest of my life." (Continued cheers.) The Lord Mayor then proposed "The Mayor of Hastings." After several other toasts connected with the county had been drunk, "The health of the Mayor of Manchester" was proposed. The Mayor of Manchester, in returning thanks, said "he represented the youngest city in the three kingdoms, but one which was a monument of the skill, industry, and enterprise of our countrymen. Our institutions (continued he) are connected with the land, but we are still dependent upon manufactures. I trust the commerce, manufactures, and agriculture of our empire may flourish together." (Cheers.) When the toast of the "Corporation of London" was drunk, Alderman Humphery said—Country people and young people are taught that when they visit London, they will find the streets paved with gold. It is true. The streets of that great city are paved with gold, and you have proof today that any man who goes to London will find it so, whose course is marked by industry, honour, and religion. After a day passed in splendid conviviality, the party, which consisted of upwards of 100, broke up at midnight.

We have engraved the scene of the Banquet, which took place in an elegant room, embellished with statues of the Muses. On a table, in the centre of the room, stood, amongst other articles of plate, the vast silver punch-bowl presented by the Barons who attended the coronation of King George II and Queen Caroline, A.D. 1727. It weighs 164 oz. 18 dwt., and holds about seventeen quarts. The following inscription is engraved on one side:—

This Silver Bowl was presented to the Corporation of Hastings (the premier cinque port) by the gentlemen whose names are hereon inscribed, who had the honour to be unanimously elected the Barons of the said town, to support the canopy over their sacred Royal Majesties King George II. and Queen Caroline, at the solemnity of their inauguration at Westminster, the 11th day of October, 1727; and the same was made out of their shares and dividends of the silver, &c., belonging to the said canopies.

On the opposite side:—

CANOPY BEARERS TO THE KING.	CANOPY BEARERS TO THE QUEEN.
Sir Wm. Ashburnham, Bart.	The Hon. Thomas Townsend, Esq.
Thomas Pelham, of Stanmer, Esq.	James Pelham, Esq
Edward Dyne, Esq.	John Collier, Esq.

Between the inscriptions, on one side, the King is represented sitting in his coronation robes, with the crown, sceptre, and orb; and on the opposite side, the Queen, sitting in her coronation chair, crowned and robed, holding a sceptre and orb.

As punch is now disused, and has long ceased to be a fashionable liquor, and the Corporation preferring wine at their public festivals, a framework of wood has been made to fit the inside of the bowl, to hold decanters: by this means it still forms a handsome appendage at their dinners, and constitutes a grand centre ornament to the table.

We have engraved this fine old piece of plate, appended to the initial letter in the previous column.

The reporters of the local press justly complain that they were not admitted to the banquet; and they were justified in refusing to attend to report the after-dinner proceedings.

SUPERB TESTIMONIAL.

THE richly digit box represented in the accompanying Engraving has just been manufactured by Mr. C. F. Hancock, of 35, Bruton-street, for presentation to the Lieutenant-Colonel of the 79th Regiment of Cameronian Highlanders, now and for some time past stationed at Gibraltar. The box bears the following inscription, which indicates its donor and its object:—

"To the Honourable Lauderdale Maule, Lieutenant-Colonel of the 79th Regiment of Cameronian Highlanders, in testimony of cordial and sincere friendship, from Prince Anatole Demidoff."

This beautiful work is 2 feet 2 inches in length, 16 inches in breadth, and 10 inches in depth; it is of the finest ebony, elaborately inlaid over the entire surface of the lid with silver, in laurel and grape leaves around the edge, the corners surmounted with the Scottish thistle, all superbly chased in silver, as is also a volant eagle at each end. On the lid, also, within a frame of gold, is a water-colour painting by Eugène Lami (a pupil of Horace Vernet), the subject, the colours of the 79th Regiment of Cameronian Highlanders; whilst on the inner lid is a water-colour painting of the rock of Gibraltar, by Harding.

The box is interiorly divided into six compartments, and lined throughout with cedar. It stands upon four feet of chased silver, whilst a lock, escutcheon, and key, all of silver, complete this beautiful work. It is intended for a mess-box for the regiment, and its value is estimated at about £350.

The design is by M. Eugène Lami; the workmanship by Mr. Hancock, and the result is highly creditable to the taste and skill of both gentlemen.

THE "AZORIAN" ORANGE SCHOONER.

THE Azores and Spain are known to afford the best oranges. The trade carried on in this produce is of considerable value and importance, and the present season of this fruit has been unusually productive.

A certain class of schooners, during six months of the year, viz. from November till May, are employed in the importation of oranges into this kingdom from the Azores. This trade has, of late years, considerably increased; and during the present season has employed from 200 to 230 schooners, greater part of which are first-class vessels. We have engraved one of these schooners, the Azorian, as being a medium specimen of this class of vessels. She measures about 105 tons, N.M., and brings about 730 chests of oranges. Among the largest and finest in the fleet are the Susan, King Alfred, Queen of the West, Torch, and Quiver. Vessels of smaller tonnage, however, are principally sought after, since those of large burden, such as the above, fill the market too quickly when arrivals take place in close succession, which is very frequently the case.

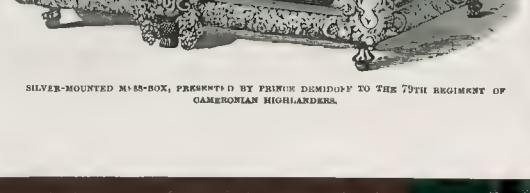
The orange-tree, being a native of warm southern latitudes, is a remarkable instance of one which gives employment to, and forms even an article of commerce from, the southern to the more northern European nations. Thus it is exported from Italy and Malta, as well as from the south of Spain and Portugal; but in very large quantities from the Azores. Its cultivation is profitable, not only on account of the esteem in which the fruit is held, but also from the extreme productiveness of the tree; so that the fruit is sold even in England at a price not much above, and sometimes even for less, than our own apples and pears.

Mr. Macculloch states the number of oranges imported into Great Britain in one year to exceed two hundred millions. They are chargeable with duty, which is thought questionable: they are very apt to spoil; and as no abatement is made from the duty on account of any damage, its influence on their price is much more considerable than might at first be supposed.

AMUSEMENT IN COLOUR.—Underwood and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, have issued a box containing a number of triangular coloured cards, the halves of two-inch squares, with which an infinite variety of coloured patterns and ornaments can be constructed. A sheet of many-coloured diagrams is given, to show the manner of combining the pieces. The simplicity of the forms, and the love that children have for bright colours, combine to make this an entertaining and instructive toy, while it appears well calculated to illustrate the elementary laws of colour for persons of all ages. So far as we know, this is the first attempt to bring down colour from the higher regions of art to the nursery or infant school.

A Treasury order, just issued, declares Runcorn no longer a port after the 5th inst., and that after the same date the limits of the Port of Liverpool "shall commence at the termination of the Port of Chester, being a place called the Red Stones, in Hoy Lake, on the Point Wirral, and so along the coast of Cheshire into the river Mersey, and all over the rivers Mersey, Irwell, and Weaver, and thence returning along the coast of Lancashire till it meets the termination of the port of Fleetwood, at a place called the Hundred-end-Water."

On Friday morning week a gentleman of Oxford University undertook to ride from Oxford to London and back, a distance of 108 miles, in six hours, unlimited to horses. He started from Magdalen bridge at five o'clock, and arrived in London at twenty-five minutes past seven, and returned to Oxford one minute before ten; thus completing this arduous task one minute under five hours.



SILVER-MOUNTED MESS-BOX, PRESENTED BY PRINCE DEMIDOFF TO THE 79TH REGIMENT OF CAMERONIAN HIGHLANDERS.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR JAMES BATHURST, K.C.B.

This eminent officer was the son of the late Dr. Bathurst, Bishop of Norwich, by his wife Grace, the sister of Henry Charles, Lord Castlecoote. He entered the army in 1794, as Ensign in the 70th Foot, and served in Gibraltar, the West Indies, Egypt, the campaign in Poland, the sieges of Stralsund and Copenhagen. He was afterwards in the Peninsula, and was present at the battles of Vimeira, Vittoria, Corunna, Talavera, and Busaco. He also filled the office of Military Secretary to the Duke of Wellington. He was latterly Governor of the garrison of Berwick. General Bathurst was created a Knight Commander of the Bath in 1831. He married, in 1815, Caroline, elder daughter of the first Earl of Castle Stuart. Sir James Bathurst died on the 13th instant, aged 68, at the residence of his kinsman, the Rev. E. Bathurst, M.A., of Kilworth, Beauchamp, Leicestershire.

JOHN C. CALHOUN, ESQ.

JOHN C. CALHOUN, an eminent American lawyer and statesman, was born in 1782. He was the descendant of an Irish family, which emigrated to America when his father was about three years old. He was educated at Sale College, where he graduated, in 1804, with distinguished honours; and, after studying the law at the celebrated Law School in Litchfield, Connecticut, he was admitted to the Bar in 1807. As an advocate, he rapidly attained high celebrity and large emoluments. He was elected a member of Congress in 1810; in 1817 he was appointed Secretary at War; and in 1824 he was chosen Vice-President of the United States, an office which he filled a second time in 1828, and which he finally resigned in 1832; he was then returned to the Senate by the Legislature of South Carolina. In 1844 he became Secretary of State, and so remained until the close of President Tyler's administration. After that he was re-chosen senator, and continued in the office until his death, which took place on the 31st ultimo. Mr. Calhoun enjoyed in America a reputation for vigour, boldness, and independence unsurpassed by any of his fellow-statesmen. For more than forty years his name has been a leading one in American politics, and he ranked, in his influence over the destinies of his country, with Clay, Benton, and Webster. In all the relations of private life Calhoun's character was beyond reproach. The loss of so great a man is very generally felt and deplored.

THE LATE J. C. CALHOUN, ESQ.

ADMIRAL HILLS.

ADMIRAL HILLS was born the 8th November, 1777; he was the only surviving son of Lieut. William Hills, R.N., of Buckland, Kent, who lost his life in a storm while commanding H. M. cutter Sprightly. Admiral Hills entered the navy the 13th June, 1792, and, after a distinguished career, attained his rank of Rear-Admiral in 1849. He had received a medal for his services. He married, in 1813, Diana, daughter of the late Thomas Hammersley, Esq., by whom he leaves three sons and four daughters. The gallant Admiral died on the 4th instant, at his residence, Asher Hall, Essex, in his seventy-third year.

THE REV. CANON EATON.

THE Rev. Joseph Eaton, a Minor Canon and Precenter of Chester Cathedral, was the eldest member of that ecclesiastical establishment. He also held the appointment there of Chapter Clerk, and in that character he was presented with numerous testimonials for the improvement he effected in the Cathedral property. The new gentleman possessed high scientific attainments, and was one of the best mathematicians of his day; he was among the oldest members of the Royal Society of Antiquaries. Besides his appointment of Canon, he held in the Church the living of Handley and the perpetual curacy of St. Michael's, Chester. The Rev. Canon Eaton died on the 8th inst., in the 82nd year of his age.

LIEUT. SKENE.

LIEUTENANT JAMES SKENE, R.N., was the son of Mr. Skene, a surgeon in the army, and the nephew of Captain Alexander Skene, R.N. Lieutenant Skene, during an active career, saw much service: he was present at the taking of Washington and the attack on New Orleans. He was several times severely wounded. He was made a Lieutenant in 1815.

Lieutenant Skene died suddenly at Gillingham, on the 3rd inst., aged fifty-three.

THE REV. JOHN ROWLAND BERKELEY, OF COTHERIDGE, COUNTY WORCESTER.

THE death of this respected gentleman, the descendant of the ancient and eminent house of Berkeley, of Cotheridge, occurred a short time since. Mr. Berkeley was eldest son of the late Rev. Rowland Berkeley, LL.D., rector of Writtle, in Essex, and succeeded to the family estates at the decease of his cousin, in 1840. He inherited also the distinguished honour of quartering, in his armorial shield, the Royal arms of Plantagenet, being sixteenth in a direct descent from King Edward I. Never having married, he is succeeded by his brother William.

WILLIAM BEER.

WILLIAM BEER, a well-known savant, was a native of Prussia, and brother of the famous author of "Le Prophète." William Beer early in life served in the army; but, having attained the rank of lieutenant, he quitted the pride and pomp of war for the peaceful occupation of assuding his father in his business as a merchant, and of devoting his leisure hours to the study of astronomy and the acquirement of other scientific knowledge. He became, in time, one of the first astronomers of the age. His celebrated Map of the Moon, "Mappa Selenographica," constructed by him and Medler, received the approbation of most of the learned men and societies of Europe. The Paris Academy of Science awarded their Lalande prize to the authors. Messrs. Beer and Medler jointly published many other eminent works, among them the "General Compared Selenography."

M. Beer obtained honours and crosses from various Sovereigns of Europe; and his firm adherence to his own government, in his position of Municipal Councillor, in 1848, procured for him a seat in the First Prussian Chamber. He was also Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce of Berlin. M. Beer died recently at Berlin, at the age of 53.

MADAME TUSSAUD.

THIS famous exhibitor of the greatest collection of wax-work ever known was a native of Berne, in Switzerland. At the age of six years she was sent to Paris to be placed under the care of her uncle, M. Curtius, an eminent professor of the fine arts, and artiste to Louis XVI. Instructed by this relative, she became a great adept in drawing and modelling, and she had numerous pupils among the French noblesse just previously to the revolution of 1789. The unfortunate Princess Elizabeth, who was so foully murdered by the Jacobins, was one of those to whom she imparted her knowledge. Madame Tussaud came to England in 1802; her well-known career in this country is familiar to every one as an exhibitor of the waxen effigies of the heroes and heroines of all ages, whether of good or evil fame. Her reputation is unrivalled. Her emporium of characters, historic, literary, and criminal, in Baker-street, is of cosmopolite renown. Madame Tussaud several years since published some memoirs of herself, which were by no means without interest. The distinguished lady died on the 15th inst., after an illness of five days, in her 90th year.

THE LATE MADAME TUSSAUD.

In the volume of Reminiscences to which we have alluded, Madame Tussaud tells us that during her stay with M. Curtius, his house was the resort of many of the most distinguished literati and artists of France: she well recollected Voltaire, Rousseau, Dr. Franklin, Mirabeau, and La Fayette; she was an especial favourite with Voltaire, who used to pat her on the cheek, and tell her what a pretty dark-eyed girl she was. The personal appearance of the célebrités is minutely described in Madame Tussaud's volume. At that time, modelling flowers, fruit, &c., in wax, was much in fashion; and to such perfection had this lady arrived in giving character and accuracy to her portraits, that, whilst very young, to her was confided the task of taking casts from the heads of Voltaire, Rousseau, Franklin, Mirabeau, and others; her cast from the face of Voltaire was taken only two months before he died.

The volume of Madame Tussaud's "Memoirs and Reminiscences," to which we have alluded, is a very curious and interesting book, not only describing the most striking events of the old French Revolution, but portraying the different characters of the period, and painting their costumes with the nicest attention to details; such, indeed, as might be expected from a woman of Madame Tussaud's turn of observation. Many a leader of the Revolution might be "dressed" from her clever descriptions, which have more than the exactness of the records of fashions in the present day.

THE REV. WILLIAM LISLE BOWLES.

THE family from which this distinguished poet descended is one of some note.

It springs from John Bowles, of Bristol, who was living in 1499; and whose great-grandson, Rowland Bowles, a volunteer under Sir Thomas Arundel at the siege of Gran, in Hungary, in 1595, received on that occasion the honour of knighthood, and the addition of the crescent to his arms. The poet counted Sir Isaac Newton among his nearest relatives; his own immediate parentage were clergymen for two generations; his grandfather was vicar of Brackley, in Northumberland; his father was also in orders; he was himself the eldest of seven children. One of his nephews is the present Mr. Justice Erle.

William Lisle Bowles (such was the poet's name) received his education at Winchester School, where he was placed in 1776. In five years he rose to be senior boy of that seminary, and won the particular notice and favour of the then master, Dr. Warton. Bowles, while at Trinity College, Oxford, obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin poem on the siege of Gibraltar. In 1792 he took his degree of M.A.; and his father dying, he quitted Oxford, entered into holy orders, and became a curate in Wiltshire. In 1797, Mr. Bowles married a daughter of Dr. Wake, Prebendary of Westminster, which proved a most fortunate and happy union. Lord Somers presented him, soon after his marriage, with the living of Dumbleton, in Gloucestershire. In 1803 he was made a prebendary, and afterwards a canon, of Salisbury Cathedral; and from Archbishop Moore he obtained the rectory of Bremhill, a beautiful and romantic spot, which he subsequently rendered famous in his verse. Bremhill is near Devizes, and near also to Bowood, the seat of the Marquis of Lansdowne, and to Slopeton Cottage, the residence of another, alas! now scarcely living poet, the illustrious Moore. The life of Bowles, like that of country clergymen in general, has been little diversified by incidents. One of the only occasions in which he came before the public in any other way than as a poetic or literary character, was as a magistrate of the county of Wilts, which he did good service to the cause of humanity by energetically and effectually remonstrating against a sentence of unparalleled severity inflicted by a fellow-magistrate on an unfortunate woman for a very trifling theft. His conduct at the time met with the approbation of Lord Lansdowne, then Home Secretary; as well as with that of every thinking and honourable mind.

Bowles's first publication was his "Sonnets," brought out, according to the fashion of the day, in quarto, in 1789. These were followed by "Verses on Howard's Description of Prisons," "The Grave of Howard," and "The Sorrows of Switzerland." "The Spirit of Discovery," probably his best work, came out in 1805. His edition of Pope, which gave rise to the celebrated controversy, was published in ten volumes in 1810. Bowles in this edition advanced certain doctrines respecting the "invariable principles" of poetry, which, if admitted, tended to lessen Pope's reputation as a poet. With the truth or fallacy of these principles the whole fame of that great poet was connected. Campbell first began the controversy on behalf of Pope; Byron also took the same view; while a host of pamphleteers on both sides of the question completely occupied the public attention, and kept alive the literary warfare. After a long contest, the combat may be said to have ended in a drawn battle. This renowned dispute, however, did infinite credit to the talent and perseverance of Bowles, who disputed the ground inch by inch, and was not dismayed by the lofty names and widely-extended arme of some of his antagonists.

THE LATE REV. W. LISLE BOWLES.

Bowles wrote much both in verse and prose. His poetry, always good in style and pure in sentiment, bears the stamp of a virtuous and reflective mind; its deficiency lies in the absence of passion or the stronger emotions of the heart; it has all the elegant evenness and cold correctness of the scholar, but elevation and novelty of thought are wanting. Nevertheless, the poems of Bowles will ever afford pleasure and satisfaction to the reader, whose kindlier feelings and social affections they will not fail to move and engage in their favour. The prose contributions to literature of Mr. Bowles are very valuable. His "History of Bremhill," his "History of Lacock Abbey," and last, not least, his delightful "Hermes Britannicus," are works which alone would establish for him a lasting reputation. In private life Mr. Bowles was much beloved: he was a man thoroughly amiable and virtuous the pleasantness of his manner, and the varied extent of his information, gave a charm to his society which few could resist, and which made him a universal favourite. Bremhill, his charming residence, formed a centre of attraction to a circle which included some of the highest in rank and the greatest in talent of the age. To numbers, indeed, high and low, came with heartfelt sorrow the news, some years ago, that this gentle poet was gradually sinking, under the accumulation of years, into a state of mental and bodily imbecility. From that condition the Rev. Canon never rallied: he died on the 13th instant, in the 88th year of his age. Bowles may be truly lamented as a poet of many virtues, and "to each fine feeling true."

The accompanying portrait is from a clever characteristic sketch which appeared some years since in Fraser's Magazine.

THE "ARCHAN," ORANGE SCHOONER.

THE GORHAM CASE.

The new features of the Gorham case are not unimportant. An old law has been disinterred, the 24th Henry 8, cap. 12, which enacts, in regard to the Church, that in any cause in which the Sovereign is concerned, the party grieved shall appeal from any court of the realm to the Upper House of Convocation: and this law it is affirmed, is yet in force. It is contended, that Brampford Speke being a Crown living, the case of "Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter" falls under this law, and that the appeal should have been carried before the Upper House of Convocation. It is, therefore, asserted that the law expressly vests the Privy Council, and all other courts, from jurisdiction, except the Convocation, and that the decision of the Privy Council is literally waste paper. The Bishop of Exeter has accordingly, by counsel, made an application to the Court of Queen's Bench to interdict all further proceedings under the order pronounced by the Queen in Council. The motion was made on Monday, and the Judges, who took time to consider the application, have, as yet, given no opinion on the question. It may be mentioned as curious, that it was the first motion Lord Campbell heard on taking his seat as Chief Justice, and that he was himself a member of the Privy Council, whose judgment, so contrary to law, was impugned.

The clergy of the rural Deanery of Hampton have petitioned the Bishop of London, that he would advise with his episcopal brethren as to the means of remedying the evils by which the Church is now menaced. The reply of the Bishop is not known; but in the House of Lords, on Monday, the right rev. prelate informed Lord Redesdale that it was his intention to proceed with the Clergy Offences Bill, which contains a clause constituting a new Court of Appeal in cases involving charges of false doctrine. It is understood that the late decision has made the right rev. prelate suppose that the existing clauses of the bill will not exactly meet the present difficulties, and he expressed a hope that he should be able to frame a clause that would give satisfaction to the Church and the country at large. It will be long before this crisis will be passed through at the expense of reviving obsolete and enacting new laws.

A body of the clergy and laity of his Lordship's diocese have deliberated as to the steps proper to be taken on the present occasion, and have resolved to remain quiet, thinking that time and patience will be the best cure for the divisions.

The Bishop of Bath and Wells, Dr. Bagot, taking a different view, has issued a declaration, dated the 12th inst., to his clergy, "on account of the great disquietude which prevails in the dioces in consequence of the decision of the Privy Council." He expects them to sign it. And it sets forth that "the construction put by that decision on the Articles of the Church of England, implies that the remission of sin to all who receive the rite of baptism is declared in the Church of England, although such remission of sin is held to be affirmed by an article of the Nicene Creed;" that the decision casts doubt on the doctrine of the Church Catechism, "that in baptism we are made members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven, in and by their baptism:" and the Bishop declares solemnly, "that it is the doctrine of the Church of England, as of the whole Church Catholic in all ages, that original sin is remitted to all infants by the application of the merits of our Lord and saviour Jesus, in and by the sacrament of baptism." The declaration was courteously sent by the Bishop to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

A numerous meeting of the "clergy and laity of the county of Dorset" has expressed dissatisfaction with the decision of the Judicial Committee, and a determination to take every lawful means for reversing it.

The Bishop of Peterborough has been entreated to take counsel with his right rev. brethren as to the best method of remedying the evils arising out of the late judgment of the Privy Council, and "especially to take steps for vindicating the Church's doctrine touching the sacrament of holy baptism."

The Bishop of Exeter has replied to the clergy of the Archdeaconry of Exeter—that de sate the highest value on the imitation of their "faithfulness, and zeal, and watchfulness, and determination, by God's grace, to stand by the Church of England in all her difficulties." "He believes that, though clouds and storms arise, the faithful ministers of the Church will never be driven from it."

Dr. Hook, the Vicar of Leeds, has addressed and published a letter to Sir Walter Farquhar, Bart., on the present crisis in the Church, in which he strongly dissuades his brethren from leaving the Church of England for that of Rome; points out that persons holding Mr. Gorham's opinions have been found in the Church for three hundred years; and that Protestantism, to which Dr. Hook belongs, are not placed in a worse position by the decision of the Privy Council than they were in before. He hopes that the decision may lead to explanations amongst those who have the light and the zeal to separate Romanism from Romanism, and increase the number of those who are determined to walk in the via media. Dr. Hook, by making light of the difference, attempts to reconcile the contending parties, and restore peace to the Church.

One of the most curious though trifling incidents that has grown out of the dispute, is the correspondence between Miss Sellon and the Lord Chief Justice Campbell. This lady is the director of the Plymouth Sisters of Mercy, a charitable association which has the reputation of doing a great deal of good. It receives contributions from charitable persons, and Lord Campbell had subscribed to the society. His name was on the list, when the committee, but, on the decision of the Privy Council being known, she wrote to Lord Campbell, requesting him to withdraw his name, "which, noble and honoured as it is, is connected most painfully with a decision which for the present brands the Church of England with uncatholic teachings." The noble Lord remitted the collection with but in a sensible letter, but the lady, though courteous, was stern and inexorable, spoke in her reply of the decision as endangering the Church; and the noble Lord, with more humility than was shown by the lady, submitted to her sentence, and withdrew his name from the committee. So a dispute, which Dr. Hook regards as merely verbal, separates those who were united by charity and benevolence.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.—At a congregation holden on Tuesday last, the following graces were offered to the Senate:—1. John Disney, of the Hyde, in the county of Essex, Esq., having offered to present to the University a valuable collection of ancient marbles and statuary, with the view of its being placed on one of the public buildings of the University, and that the same or such archæological collection bearing his name: to accept Mr. Dis[illegible] offer on the condition above specified.—2. To authorise the Syndicate appointed for the management of the Fitzwilliam Museum to receive the collection of Mr. Disney for the removal.

THE DEANERY OF SALISBURY.—This preferment has been conferred by the Premier on the Rev. Henry Parr Hamilton, M.A., the author of a recent able defence of the Committee of Privy Council on Education.

PRESENTMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. Henry Edward Abney, to the deanery of Derby; the Rev. R. Eldridge, to the rectory of Desford, Leicestershire; the Rev. J. H. Townsend, to the rectory of East Down, Devon; the Rev. John Miles Cox, to the rectory of Church-Knowle, Dorset; the Rev. Thomas Dix, to the rectory of Thwaite St. Saints, Norfolk; the Rev. William Wiltshire, to the rectory of Handscombe, Surrey; the Rev. Henry Butler, to the rectory of Llandysilio, Montgomeryshire.

VACANCIES.—Staverton Vicarage, Devon, diocese Exeter; value, £—, with residence, patron, Bishop of Exeter; Rev. W. Marshall deceased. Mastership of Durham United Blue Coat and Sunday Schools; salary, £100; testimonials before May 1. Aldenham Vicarage, Herts, diocese Rochester; value, £425, with residence; patrons, Trustees of R. Treslinson, Esq.; Rev. F. Benbow, deceased. Camberwell, Surrey, parish church, Surrey, diocese Winchester; value, £800, with residence; patron, Sir E. B. Smyth, Bart, Rev. Robert Rayner, deceased. Cradley parish church, county and diocese Worcester; value, £116; patrons, trustees; Rev. John Jones, deceased.

IRELAND.

THE ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY'S CATTLE-SHOW.—The spring show of cattle, pigs, poultry, farming implements, &c., took place on Tuesday, in the grounds attached to the Royal Dublin Society. A meeting of the society took place in the evening. Shortly after eight o'clock the chair was taken by the Lord Lieutenant. His Excellency was accompanied by his private secretary, Sir William Russell, Bart., Master of the Horse, Captain Bernard, aide-de-camp and Captain Robert Williams. Amongst the personages present were the Lord Chancellor, the Duchess of Newcastle, Lord Bishop of Meath, Sir Hercules A. F. Nugent, Lord Plunket, the Earl of Charlemont, Lord Talbot de Malahide, Viscount Bangor, the Lord Bishop of Tuam, Viscount Lorton, Viscount Monck, the Lord Bishop of Kilmore, the Earl of Mayo, Lord Garvie, Sir Percy Nugent, the Revs. Francis T. Gregg, Andrew J. Gregg, and T. A. Stopford, Colonel D. C. La Touche, the Right Hon. T. F. Kennedy, the Hon. Thomas Pelham, the Rev. John Warburton, Sir Edward Kennedy, Lieutenant-Colonel Shaw, Lieutenant-Colonel Hall, Baron Lefroy, the Lord Mayor, &c. The list of premiums having been read, Mr. Sproule and Dr. Allman read papers. Mr. Foote adverted to the objects of the society, and thanked his Excellency, on the part of the society, for being present on that occasion. His Excellency said, he begged to return his sincere thanks to the society for the kind and flattering expressions with which Mr. Foote, upon their part, had addressed him. He was very slender proficient of his knowledge in there is at evening. He then adverted at some length to the progress of agricultural industry in Ireland, and urged the increased cultivation of flax. Before he sat down he would take the liberty of congratulating them on their meeting and on their exhibition, respecting the object and utility of which he entirely agreed in the observations which had fallen from Mr. Foote. He wished all success to the exhibition, and he hoped they would become general and frequent in Ireland, because experience had demonstrated their advantage in bringing together in harmonious combination those whose interests, when rightly understood, were strictly identical, by stimulating that competition which was the greatest incentive to human progress. He trusted that they might be, at least, by axe taking altogether matters of political or sectarian difference (hear); for if there is a spot in the world where men of the most opposite sentiments may meet in friendly rivalry of opinion that is the Royal Dublin Society. (Hear, hear.) The proceedings of the evening then terminated.

The newspapers from the various provincial sea-ports describe emigration as going forward without intermission. The Waterford Mail says:—"More persons have left our port destine. for America than any other during the season. The great majority were of the better class of farmers." The Cork Constitution says: "A numerous body of respectable-looking farmers, with their wives and children, from the midland counties, arrived in this city on Thursday by railway, all intending to emigrate. Same day, the Woltron and Saxon sailed from Queenstown, with emigrants."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE LORD MAYOR'S GRAND BANQUET TO HER MAJESTY'S MINISTERS.

On Wednesday, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress entertained her Majesty's Ministers and their ladies and a large party in the Egyptian Hall, which was prepared for the occasion in a style of great magnificence.

Amongst the company present, which consisted of about 260, were:—Lord and Lady John Russell and Miss Lyster, Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord and Lady Palmerston, Earl and Countess Grey, Marquis of Breadalbane, Lady Grey, the Danish Minister and Countess Bille Brahe, the French Ambassador and Lady Mary Wood, the Netherlands Ambassador, Lord and Lady Langdale, Mrs Fox Maule, Lord and Lady Rosseberry, Earl and Countess Zetland, Earl and Countess Arundel, Earl and Countess Charlemont, Earl and Countess Morley, Earl and Countess Listowel, Miss Stone, the Earl of Essex, Lady Ann and Miss Tufnell, Lord Ebrington and Lady Ebrington, Lord Marcus Hill, Lord and Lady Clifford, Lord and Lady Canning, Sir Thomas and Lady Wilde, Lord Robert Grosvenor, Lord and Lady Dinorben, the Earl and Countess Mulgrave, the Earl of Grosvenor, Lord and Lady Alfred Paget, Lord and Lady Wodehouse, Lord Elphinstone, &c.

After the various loyal and complimentary toasts had been duly honoured,

The Lord Mayor gave the toast of the evening. He said: My Lords, ladies, and gentlemen,—The toast I am now about to propose to you I am quite sure will give satisfaction to every one present. I need not attempt to impress upon you the health of the eminent statesman who presides over the dignities of this kingdom, my Lord John Russell. (Loud cheers.) And in so doing, allow me to couple with that toast the name of her Majesty's Ministers. (Cheers.)

Lord J. RUSSELL: My Lord Mayor, my Lords, ladies, and gentlemen,—I rise to return to you my respectful thanks for the honour which you have done me. Permit me, in the first place, to say, that I greatly regret that the Lord Chancellor and the Lord President of the Council have been prevented from availing themselves of your kind hospitality. In receiving the hospitality of the City of London, I can never do so without reflecting upon the mighty changes that have taken place in the history of this country, and with what this great city is connected. With the institutions which have existed from its very beginning, we now behold that city uniting all the improvements of modern civilisation. I am happy to perceive that, in connection those pursuits of commerce which, while they add to the wealth of the country, are connected with every species of improvement which tends to unite us with the other nations of the globe in the bonds of amity, and tends to the improvement of mankind. My Lord Mayor, you have done me honour in the spirit in which those difficulties were met was no unworthy of Englishmen; it was worthy of the great country whose affairs we had to preside over. Let me assure you that we shall endeavour to conduct affairs in future in the same spirit, and that we shall consider that the institutions of the country are never so safe and never so honoured as when they receive those amendments from time to time of which they are capable, that we shall never throw aside anything as useless merely because it is old, that we shall never retain anything merely because it is ancient, and that we shall never reject anything as strange merely because it is new. It is, in my opinion, by combining a due reverence for antiquity, by preserving proper respect for the spirit in which our institutions were founded, and at the same time adapting them to the wants of the present day—it is by that combination of respect for antiquity, and a regard for all modern improvements, that the freedom and happiness of this country can be secured. (Cheers.) I am happy to say that I approach you on the present occasion at a time when peace from France, whom I have on former occasions heard say that his presence in this hall was a token of the intimate union between the two countries (Cheers.) May that union long subsist! May the two such mighty nations! I believe that the intimate communion of two such enlightened countries—countries which have so brilliantly proved their prowess in arms, and who have shown in their abilities in every department of the pursuits of civilisation—the union of two such countries cannot but lead to the peace of the world, and promote the welfare of mankind. (Loud cheers.)

The Lord Mayor then proposed "The health of the Foreign Ministers," coupling with the toast the name of the French Ambassador.

The toast having been warmly received, and M. Drouin de L'Huys, the French Ambassador, in a few words acknowledged the compliment, Earl Grey and Lord Palmerston subsequently responded to the complimentary toasts of the Houses of Lords and Commons, with which their names were associated.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

INDIA-HOUSE.—A special general court of directors and proprietors of the East India Company was held on Wednesday at the Company's house, Leadenhall-street. James Shepherd, Esq., chairman of the Court of Directors, presided. Mr. Sullivan moved four resolutions, in which he propounded the justice and necessity of admitting the right of adoption, on the part of the native Princes. He quoted and read sixteen different instances, in which he maintained that the Indian Government had acknowledged that right; but the late case of the Rajah of Sattara was an exception, and for that of becoming a general rule with the Government to refuse to the other native chiefs the same rights as they had done to the Rajah of Sattara, he had brought forward these resolutions to assert the undoubted right of appointing a successor, by adoption, on the part of the native Sovereigns of India. Colonel Dickenson seconded the resolutions. The chairman said, if the resolutions now proposed were to be carried, it would be by the votes of the proprietors, a question of the Indian Government. (Hear.) Mr. Sullivan said, if he stood alone, he would have the resolutions recorded in the minutes of their proceedings, and should therefore press for a division. Mr. Lewin opposed the resolutions, as being a waste of time, and not likely to lead to any practical result. Mr. Marshall begged to remind the court that the hon. proprietor was one of the republicans who had called the present court together. Captain Gordon supported the motion, as did also General Briggs. The resolutions were put to the vote seriatim, and negatived by considerable majorities, only six or seven hands being held up in their favour. The court then adjourned.

CITY COMMISSION OF SEWERS.—SANITARY IMPROVEMENT.—On Tuesday, at a meeting of the Commission in Guildhall, Mr. Deputy Peacock in the chair, Mr. Alderman Moon, pursuant to notice, moved—

That the medical officer of health of the City of London, who is employed in his report, that "it is absolutely necessary, for the present progress of sanitary measures within the City, to have accurate periodical statements of the sickness of the people, and the mortality which may ensue," that the Committee on Health appointed by the Commissioners having, in their report, expressed an opinion that it is quite indispensable that any committee of health should receive the largest and most accurate returns which can be procured of all sickness occurring among the poorer classes, and particularly in respect of all epidemic, endemic, and infectious diseases; and that the same recommendation be again contained therein; it is the opinion of the Court that Mr. Simon be, and he is hereby, instructed to put himself in communication with the members of the several boards of guardians of the City of London, so as to obtain the said information for the use of this commission, at a cost not to exceed the sum of £500 per annum.

He said that the last court having decided by a majority of one only against the recommendation of the committee which considered Mr. Simon's report, namely, that £2500 should be annually voted for the purpose of obtaining the information required by their medical officer of health, and that occasion having been very thin, he felt it due to the importance of the question that the subject should be re-examined in a fuller court that day, and therefore it was he had given the notice of motion. The object of the hon. alderman's motion was, that Mr. Simon's original suggestion for granting £500 for the same object be accepted instead of £2500. The Chairman seconded the motion. Mr. Whitmore moved an amendment that an annual grant of £250 per week, to the present salaries of the medical officers of the City unions be allowed to them for making out the requisite returns. This would altogether amount to £2345 annually, and would secure an approximation of that amount in proportion to the varying duties of the different medical officers. The motion was then seconded, and adopted the £250, that that amount would procure all the information that was wanted; otherwise they would never have recommended that vote. Mr. Rathbone seconded the amendment. After considerable discussion, the chairman put the question to a show of hands, when the motion for voting £500, and the amendment for granting £245, were both rejected—the majority against the former being 19 to 8, and against the latter 19 to 11. The effect of making only the requisite returns. This would altogether amount to £2345 annually, and would secure an approximation of that amount in proportion to the varying duties of the different medical officers. The motion was then seconded, and adopted the £250, that that amount would procure all the information that was wanted; otherwise they would never have recommended that vote. Mr. Rathbone seconded the amendment. After considerable discussion, the chairman put the question to a show of hands, when the motion for voting £500, and the amendment for granting £245, were both rejected—the majority against the former being 19 to 8, and against the latter 19 to 11. The effect of making only the requisite returns. This would altogether amount to £2345 annually, and would secure an approximation of that amount in proportion to the varying duties of the different medical officers. The motion was then seconded, and adopted the £250, that that amount would procure all the information that was wanted; otherwise they would never have recommended that vote. Mr. Rathbone seconded the amendment. After considerable discussion, the chairman put the question to a show of hands, when the motion for voting £500, and the amendment for granting £245, were both rejected—the majority against the former being 19 to 8, and against the latter 19 to 11. The effect of the foregoing is, that the decision of the previous court to make no grant whatever, remains unaltered. The court then broke up, leaving the concluding paragraphs of the Committee of Health's report for discussion at the next meeting.

ST. JOHN'S SERVANTS' SCHOOL.—The seventh report of the state of this school has been recently published; and as this valuable institution appears to be but little known in comparison with its great merits, we feel it only due to its patrons to state briefly the object of the establishment. It was founded in 1842 for the purpose of training young girls for the service of those who were old enough to be instructed in the different branches of household work. The children are admitted into the school on payment of a sum of money apportioned to their age, and are taught to read, write, and cast accounts for a less cost than would be required for board and lodging in a family, without including their clothing and education. The school was originally opened with one or two children. It is now in full working order, and the present time its numbers amount to 113. This great increase in the number of children has required corresponding exertions from those benevolent persons by whose subscriptions it has been supported. The distressing circumstances under which many families are left at a very early age, has led to the admission of younger children than was at first intended; but the institution is in a most efficient state, and only requires to be more extensively known to secure its sympathy and aid of the public. The school is situate at 22, Great Ormond-street, and an inspection or inquiry into its objects and results will afford ample gratification to every one disposed to promote the education and welfare of the working classes.

IONIAN BANK.—A special general meeting of the proprietors of this company took place on Thursday (last week), at the offices of the company, No. 6, Great Winchester-street, City, Oliver Farrer, Esq., in the chair. The chairman stated, that, as the present meeting was convened solely for the purpose of electing a director in the place of Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Hankey, who had retired, there would be no report, and it only remained for him to propose John Rankin, Esq., to fill up the vacancy. The resolution was carried unanimously; and after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

GREAT CENTRAL GAS COMPANY.—At a meeting of the trustees of the Essex and Middlesex Roads, at Old Ford, on Thursday, permission was refused to this Company to lay down mains from their proposed works at Bow along the line of road under the management of the trustees, for the purpose of supplying the City with gas.

BROMPTON HOSPITAL.—A special meeting of the governors and directors of the Hospital for Consumption was recently held in the board-room. The Rev. Sir Henry Foulis presided; and among the numerous influential noblemen and gentlemen present were the Earl of Germyn, M.P.; the Hon. Octavius Duncombe, M.P.; Captain Gladstone, R.N.; the Hon. Col. Damer, M.P.; the Hon. Admiral Percy; the Hon. J. W. Percy, &c. Business relating to the standing rules of the institution was entered into, and the report of the committee appointed to revise the same was presented; after which a power of attorney to the treasurer, John Labouchere, Esq., to receive dividends upon stock, received the seal of the Corporation; as did also a contract for the internal fittings of the new chapel. The meeting then adjourned until Thursday the 25th instant.

LONDON HOSPITAL.—The 110th anniversary festival of this charity was held at the London Tavern, on Thursday evening, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. It appeared from the statement made in the course of the evening, that the number of patients relieved at the hospital during the past year was 4402, of which number 3783 were discharged, 288 died, and 321 remained in the house on the 1st of January last. During the same period the number of out patients was 16,813, including a total of 20,906. The total number of patients, since the foundation of the Hospital in 1740, has been 99,946. During the evening a collection was made, amounting to upwards of £2300

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—A quarterly court of the members of this institution took place on Monday, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's, Lord Radstock (the president of the society) in the chair. The statement of accounts showed the receipts for the last year, including a balance of £902, amounted to £2153, and the disbursements to £666, leaving a balance in favour of the society of £1487. A resolution was made to the effect that £10 should be given to the widow of a Naval Female School, and on its vacancy for 40 votes to that institution. The motion was lost by a majority of five, and after a vote of thanks to the chairman and auditors, the meeting separated.

SOCIETY FOR THE RELIEF OF WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF MEDICAL MEN.—A general meeting of the members of this society took place on Wednesday evening, at the Gray's Inn Coffee-house, Holborn; Mr. Ware, vice-president, in the chair. Mr. Walker, the secretary, then read the report, which stated that the receipts amounted to £1308 14s. 10d., including a balance of last year of £276 7s. 4d. After discharging the necessary claims, there was a balance in hand of £221 12s. 2d., and a further sum of £200 stock, balance of £490, 4l 8s. 5d. invested. There were now receiving assistance from the funds thirty-seven widows and sixteen children of deceased members, while £39,978 had been distributed in relief by the society. The report was adopted, and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL, HAVERSTOCK HILL.—The anniversary festival of this charity, which was instituted in 1758, was celebrated at the London Tavern on Thursday evening; Mr. John Remington Miles presiding. The number of children now in the school amounts to 214. Altogether, 1414 children have been admitted to the schools, and most have been placed in situations, where, by their good conduct, they have been able to maintain comfortable positions in society. In the course of the evening, subscriptions and donations to the amount of nearly £800 were announced, including 200 guineas from her Majesty, who had promised to become patron of the society, and purchased a life nomination, which entitles her always to have a child in the school.

GOVERNESSES' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The anniversary dinner of the friends of this institution was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday evening, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge presiding, supported by the Right Hon. the Earl of Chichester, the Right Hon. the Earl Talbot, the Hon. George Rice Trevor, M.P., Sir Robert Gore Booth, Bart., Mr. Henry Bingley, the Rev. Joseph Brown, M.A., Mr. Frederic Percy Chappell, Mr. James William Gilbart, F.R.S., Mr. Charles Hindley, M.P., Mr. Charles Lushington, M.P., Mr. Charles Podmore, Mr. William Jesse Street, Mr. Joseph Webster, Mr. Williams, Mr. C. E. Wraisley, Mr. S. C. Hall, &c. The usual loyal toasts having been drunk, his Royal Highness rose to propose the toast of the evening, and in doing so expressed the great pleasure he experienced in being able to take the chair for the fifth time, notwithstanding the society had only been established about seven years. The objects were of such importance, that he almost wondered it had not been established at an earlier period. The success which the society had been enabled to attain, it had obtained an act of incorporation under Royal charter, and the same objects which it proposed to accomplish had been thus carried out:—

1. The Ladies' Committee had themselves investigated 778 individual cases. They had had 3160 applications from distressed ladies, and had had the pleasure of giving aid [illegible] with an amount of £9260 14s. 6d.

2. Besides this, the aged had been steadily increased, as fast as could be done from [illegible] capital, not from income, and there were now thirty-five ladies regularly receiving a weekly allowance, and had also granted [illegible] of these, twenty received only a year, but the kind exertions of the Honourable Mrs. William Ashley had [illegible] a-year, so that in a few months there would be no annuitant on the society's book with less than £30 a year. The sum invested was £4000 [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

PLUMSTREE-COURT RAGGED SCHOOL.—A public meeting of the friends and patrons of this society took place on Thursday evening at the Inquest-room, St. Andrew's-court, Holborn: John Buckmaster, Esq. (in the absence of Sir James Duke), in the chair. The report stated the gratification the committee experienced at the amount of good they had been enabled to perform from the adoption of these schools. An average number of 30 boys had regularly attended, while there were 89 names on the books; and 20 girls were constant, so, in their attendances, while there were 64 names on the books. The report was adopted; and several resolutions unanimously passed confirmatory of the advantageous results of these ragged schools. Several clergymen and gentlemen addressed the meeting, and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

WESTMINSTER AND NORTH-WESTERN LONDON PENITENT FEMALE ASYLUM.—A meeting of the friends and supporters of this institution was held on Wednesday night at the Music Hall, Store-street, Bedford-square, for the purpose of promoting the objects of the charity, of which the Duke of Argyle, the Marquis of Blandford, and the Hon. William Ashley are patrons. Mr. John Labouchere occupied the chair. From the report read, it appeared that during the last year twenty-nine females were received into the asylum, twelve were placed in situations of comfort and respectability, and five were restored to their friends. Since the establishment of the institution, in December, 1847, no less than 96 had been received, the average number of inmates is 91. The balance sheet showed that the expenditure during the year had been £719 1s. 8d., less 19s. 7d., which remained as a balance in hand. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Mr Brock, Mr. Longdale, M.A., Mr. D. W. Owen, the Rev. John Robinson, Lieutenant Blackmore, and others, and resolutions declaratory of the benefits of the institution, and in favour of its objects, were unanimously adopted. It was also determined that an appeal should be made to the public generally to further the interests of the institution, by contributing to its enlargement and subscribing to its support.

PROTECTION OF WOMEN.—The annual meeting of the Associate Institution for Improving and Enforcing the Laws for the Protection of Women, was held at the Hanover-square Rooms on Thursday; the Right Hon. the Earl of Talbot in the chair. A report was read, which stated that the act of Parliament which the Bishop of Oxford had caused to be passed last session, was found to be so surrounded with difficulties, as to render it almost impossible to be put in force for the protection of women, and the stopping of immorality. A step, however, had been taken in the right direction, and the committee proposed to follow it up by the introduction into Parliament next year of a measure which it was hoped would prove more efficient. The revenue for the past year had amounted to £1981 18s., of which there had been expended £683 17s.; the purchase of £500 stock, £191 10s.; and there remained a balance in hand of £606 5s. The report was adopted, and a series of resolutions in promotion of the objects of the association passed.

FREE boards, either in Government or other emigration ships, is given, with separate accommodation and a small gratuity. Communications have been made with ladies at Sydney, Port Philip, and other places, with a view to their co-operation with the society, but answers have not yet been received in general time. The report concludes by expressing every confidence in the success of the society. The balance sheet shows the total receipts of the society to be above £1150 8s. 10d., and the expenditures £1 6s. 6d., leaving a balance in hand of £148 2s. 4d. The report was adopted, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the noble chairman.

WHITELANDS TRAINING INSTITUTION FOR SCHOOLMISTRESSES.—On Wednesday a public meeting in aid of this institution was held at the Hanover-square Rooms. The Earl of Harrowby (in the chair) said that this institution was founded by the National Society in 1842, for the purpose of educating young women for the mistresses of parochial and national schools; but these and other similar establishments having become too heavy a burden on the society's funds, were now thrown on their own resources, and the object of this meeting was to enlist public support on behalf of the Whitelands Institution. Since its commencement, 163 young women had completed their education, and been appointed to schools containing from 30 to 200 children each, and the clergy under whom they were placed had borne the highest testimony to their conduct and qualifications: 75 young women were now in training. During the last three years the pupils had been annually examined by the Government inspectors of schools, and the certificates of second and general merit awarded to ADVERTISEMENTS.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 22, will be produced M Scribe's Popular Comedy, in One Act, entitled LA FAMILLE POISSON; ou, Les Trois Crispins, in addition to LA BELLE MERE ET LE GENDRE, and Sedaine's Popular Comedy of LA GAGEURE IMPREVUE, in which M Samson and Mdlle Dinah will both perform.

Its also respectfully announced that, in compliance with numerous applications, Molière's Celebrated Play of LE MISANTHROPE will be produced during the ensuing week, in which Mdlle Dinah will personate the character of "Celimene" (as performed by her with the greatest success at the Theatre Francais, Paris), and M Samson the character of "Alceste," during the Only Eight Nights that the Company can be given.

Mr MITCHELL feels particular gratification, also, in announcing that in the production of Scribe's celebrated Comedy of LA CAMARADERIE, the Principal Characters will be sustained by those members of the Theatre Francais, Paris. M Samson in the character of Du Mesnieux; Mdlle Denain, Cesarine. M Regnier (who will make his first appearance this season), Bernardet; Mdlle Nathalie (also her first appearance), Zoe, presenting a combination of talent which could not be witnessed at any other theatre in Europe, the arrangements for which have been most generously accelerated by the administration of the Theatre Francais, Paris.

M LAFONT will also have the honour of appearing shortly in the popular Comedy of LES DEMOISELLES DE ST. CYR, which is in active preparation.

Subscriptions for the remainder of the Season may be arranged at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open daily from 11 till 5 o'Clock

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager Mr. ANDREW ASTLEY. Decidedly the Last Six Nights of that Extraordinary American Equestrian YOUNG HERKANIDES, the Wonder of the World.—On MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1850, and During the Week, the Entertainments will Commence at Seven o'Clock, with Pitchalla's Enormously Successful New Grand Easter Spectacle of Equestrian Drama, (slightly increased in popularity), entitled THE FOUR SONS OF AYMON; or, the Days of Charlemagne. Most gorgeously produced, and including the Living Camels, Zebra, and all the vast resources of this theatre.—To be Succeeded by an Incomparable Routine of Horsemanship by HENRY THE HIPPODROME. Supported by the Accomplished Artistes of the Establishment.—To Conclude with the Melodrama, entitled MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS; or, The Fatal Glen.—On FRIDAY, YOUNG HERKANDES'S FAREWELL BENEFIT in LONDON, when he will appear, for the First Time, in the EQUESTRIAN SKETCH, entitled THE DEMI-CAMPAGNARDE, being most positively the Last Night but One of his performance.—Box-office open from Eleven till Four.—Mr. Maynard, Treasurer. First Price Half-past Seven o'Clock.

MUSICAL UNION.—THIRD MATINEE. WILLIS'S ROOMS, TUESDAY, APRIL 23.—Double Quartet, in E minor.—Spohr, Duet in D, op. 56, Piano and Violoncello—Mendelssohn; Nocturnes—Chopin, Op. 55; Quartet, C minor, No. 4—Beethoven. Artists: Salaton, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti; Goffrie, Watson, Mellon and Pilet. Pianoforte, Mr. CHARLES HALLE (his first performance this season in London). Strangers' Tickets, 10s. 6d. each; to be had at CRAMER and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street. Members can introduce visitors by payment at the Rooms

J. ELLA, Director

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed, the FOURTH CONCERT will take place, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 29, commencing at Eight o'Clock (M.S.) Potter: Concerto, Violin, Mr Sainton; Beethoven: Overture, "Ruy Blas" (MS.). Mendelssohn: Sinfonia in B flat. Herz: Duet, Pianoforte, Mrs Kate Loder, Bennett: Aria, Miss Fogg, Mozart, Vocal Performers, Miss C Hayes and Mr Wilsworth. Conductor, Mr Costa. Single tickets (with reserved seat), £1 1s.; double tickets (3 ditto), £1 10s.; triple tickets (ditto), £2 2s., to be obtained of Messrs. ADDISON and Co., 210, Regent-street.

EXETER-HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS WEDNESDAY NEXT, APRIL 24, will be held the EIGHTH of the LONDON WEDNESDAY CONCERTS (Spring Series).—The Programme will embrace the usual variety of Vocal and Instrumental Music, illustrated by eminent artistes. The First Part of the Programme will consist exclusively of the works of Beethoven, among which will be performed, for the first time in England, Goethe's Dramatic Poem, EGMONT, with the whole of the Incidental Music. The Poem will be recited by Mr JOSEPH STAMMERS, his first appearance. For Programme, see the "Times" of Monday, April 22. Tickets, 3s. and 5s. Reserved Seats, Numbered, 4s. Stalls, 7s. May be had at the Office of the Concerts, No 6, in Exeter-Hall, and of all Music-sellers.

MDLLE. MOUCHELY du Conservatoire de Paris, has the honour to announce that her CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 24, at Half-past Eight o'Clock, at the new BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 76, Harley-street, Cavendish-square. Vocalists: Mdlle Corbari. Mr de Beunier, Mr Wilsworth. Instrumentalists: Pianoforte—Mdlle Mouchely and M Sedlatzek. Violoncello, Mr Rousselot; Oboe, Mr Gratian Cocks.—Tickets, 7s; Reserved Seats, 10s; Family Tickets, £1 1s. To be had of all Musicsellers, and of Mdlle Mouchly, 4, Wellington-square, Chelsea.

MR. AGUILAR begs to announce that he will give an EVENING CONCERT, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS on WEDNESDAY MORNING, MAY 1, at Half-past Eight o'Clock. Miss Dolby, Miss Lucombe, and Miss Messent, Mr Sims Reeves and Signor Marras. Violin, Herr Ernst; Violoncello, Signor Piatti; Harp, Mr Aptommas; Pianoforte, Herr Pauer; Clarinet, Mr Lazarus; Horn, Mr Jarrett; Bassoon, Mr Baumann. Pianoforte, Mr Aguilar. Conductor, Mr Benedict.—Reserved Seats, 10s 6d. Tickets, 5s. To be had of all Musicsellers, and of Mdlle Mouchly, 4, Wellington-square, Chelsea. Upper Norton-street, Portland-road.

MR JOHN PARRY'S ENTERTAINMENT, CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate-street.—Mr. John Parry will give his Entertainment Comique Daily, at Eight o'Clock, on Monday evening next, April 22, commencing at Half past Eight. Stalls, Tickets, and Programmes may be had at the Hall; at the principal street, Kirk and Prowse, Cheapside, and the principal Musicsellers in the City.—The last performance in London of Mr. John Parry's present Entertainment will take place at WILLIS'S Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Monday evening, April 29.

MR. PLATT'S FAREWELL CONCERT will take place on WEDNESDAY NEXT, APRIL 24, at Two o'Clock precisely, at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, under the immediate patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN, H R H the Prince Albert, and H R H the Duke of Cambridge Mr Platt has had the situation of Principal Horn in the Orchestras of the Italian Operas, the Ancient and Philharmonic Concerts. He is now rendered unfortunately, no longer able to continue his professional duties having lost from great and continuous pressure, the whole of his front teeth. Many of the most eminent members of the profession, and a large body of amateurs, receiving Mr Platt's seal and pressure, during his long and arduous career, have formed themselves into a Committee of Management; Sir George Smart, Chairman; Sir Frederick Pollock, Q.C., &c; Treasurer, Mr T Chappell, Secretary, Mr S T Lyon.

The following celebrated Artistes have most kindly promised their valuable services: Vocalists—Mdlle Catherine Hayes, Miss Birch, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Bassano, Miss S Birch, Miss Eliza Lyon, the Misses Williams, and Miss Dolby; Mr Sims Reeves, Mr G Hobday, Mr H Phillips, Mr Machin, and Signor F Lablache. Instrumental Solo Performers—Pianoforte, Mrs Anderson; Violin, Mr Blagrove and Queen; Violoncello, Mr Lindley and Mr Lucas. Contra-Bass, Mr Hobday. Conductor, Signor Costa. Mr Platt will contact of the entire Staff of the Royal Italian Opera and the Philharmonic Concerts.

Tickets, Half-a-Guinea; Reserved Seats, One Guinea each; can be obtained at all the principal Music Warehouses; and of Mr Platt, 4, (late 6), Manchester-street, Manchester-square; and of the Committee, by whom donations will be received; and of Mr Platt, 7, Mount-place, Queen-square, Bloomsbury.

NILE.—GRAND MOVING PANORAMA of the NILE, comprising all the monuments of antiquity on its banks; to which is added the interior of the great rock-cut TEMPLE of ABOU SIMBEL; painted by MESSRS. GREENFIELD. Open from 10 till 5 and 7 till 10. EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, daily at Three and Eight. Stalls 3s. Pit, 2s. Gallery, 1s. Children and Schools half price.

INDIA.—OVERLAND MAIL.—GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATIONS, 14, Regent-street.—Mr. WARREN'S Original Moving DIORAMA, illustrating the Route of the Overland Mail to India, depicting every object worthy of notice on this highly-interesting journey from Southampton to Calcutta, is now open daily from 10 till 5, and every evening at 8 o'clock, and appropriate Music (which has been in preparation for the last three months), by Mr. JOHN BARNETT. Admission, 1st Floor and Right o'clock.—Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s 6d. (which may be previously secured). Doors open for the Evening Performance at seven o'clock. Descriptive Catalogues may be obtained at the Gallery

THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION for the EXHIBITION of MODERN ART, PORTLAND GALLERY 2 6, Regent-street (opposite the Polytechnic Institution).—The EXHIBITION of the above Association is NOW OPEN, from Nine till Dusk.—Admission, 1s. Catalogues, 6d. Single Season Tickets, 5s. BELL SMITH, Hon. Sec.

W. THOMAS'S UNIVERSAL NEWSPAPER, ADVERTISING, AND PUBLISHING OFFICES, 19 to 21, CATHERINE-STREET, STRAND.—The ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and all the LONDON, COUNTRY and FOREIGN NEWSPAPERS are forwarded from these offices to all parts of the globe with the utmost dispatch; and Advertisements, Births, Deaths, and Marriages inserted with the strictest punctuality

LIEUT.-GENERAL LORD VISCOUNT GOUGH, G.C.B.—Messrs. DICKINSON have the honour to announce, that, with the sanction of his Lordship's family, they are preparing for publication a first-class whole-length ENGRAVING of LORD GOUGH, to be engraved in the highest style of the art, by MR. YOUNGER, from the Picture now being painted by Mr. LOWES DICKINSON The dimensions of the Plate will be about sixteen inches by twenty-three, of the size of the Engravings of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Bloomfield, Lord Lyndoch, &c.—W. ROBERT and LOWES DICKINSON, 114, New Bond-street.

WANTED, a SITUATION as WARE-HOUSEMAN or PORTER, by a Young Married Man, who can have a Good Character from his last employers. Address, A. B., 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street.

GLOBES and ORRERIES by NEWTON and SON.—Patronised by her Majesty and Prince Albert.—The nobility, gentry, and public in general, are respectfully informed that Messrs. NEWTON have constantly on sale a large assortment of GLOBES of all sizes and kinds of mounting, varying in price from 2 or 3 guineas per pair smaller sizes, suitable for presents, to from 5s to 36s each; School Globes, 3 inches in diameter, at an improved principle, 2 guineas per pair.—Manufactory, 37, Chancery-lane.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

MR. CHARLES MACKAY'S NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.
Now ready, to fcp 8vo, price 5s., with Portrait of the Author,
EGERIA, or the SPIRIT of NATURE; and other POEMS. By CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D.
DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street.

NEW WORK BY MR. F KNIGHT HUNT
Just ready, in 2 vols post 8vo, price 21s.,
THE FOURTH ESTATE; A HISTORY of NEWSPAPERS and of the LIBERTY of the PRESS. By F. KNIGHT HUNT.
DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street.

NEW WORK BY MR ANGUS B. REACH.
Just ready, in 2 vols, post 8vo, price 21s.,
LEONARD LINDSAY; or, The Story of a Buccaneer. By ANGUS B. REACH.
DAVID BOGUE, Fleet-street.

CHEAP EDITION OF "JANE EYRE."
Just ready, in one vol, small post 8vo, price 5s in embossed cloth, the JANE EYRE. By CURRER BELL, Author of "Shirley"
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

Just published, price 1s 6d. in fancy coloured boards, Vol. I. of CHAMBERS'S PAPERS for the PEOPLE.—
CONTENTS: I. The Bonaparte Family. II. The Sepulchres of Etruria. III. Valerie Duclos; some Leaves from the Journal of a French Physician IV. Education of the Citizen. V. The Myth. VI. The Sunken Rocks. VII. Isle of the Mediterranean. VIII. Popular Causation of Music VIII Rhenecker Elbert
W. and R. CHAMBERS, Edinburgh; WM. S. ORR and Co., Amen-Corner, London. and sold by all booksellers

In Weekly Numbers, price 2d., Stamped 3d., Monthly parts (Five Numbers), 10d.
THE COTTAGE GARDENER; or, a Practical Guide in Every Department of Horticulture, and Rural and Domestic Economy.
Conducted by GEORGE W JOHNSON, Esq., Editor of the "Gardener's Almanack," "Modern Gardener's Dictionary," &c.; and assisted by a Staff of Able Contributors.
A New Volume, with new features, commences on the 4th of April.
WM. S. ORR and Co., Amen-Corner.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. AINSWORTH'S WORKS.
On Saturday, the 20th, will be published,
SAINT JAMES'S, complete in 1 Vol. Price 6s. bound, with Illustrations by CRUIKSHANK, Jun.
Windsor Castle—Rookwood Miser's Daughter—Crichton. Price 6s each, boards, or 6s 6d cloth. Now ready, the TOWER OF LONDON. Complete in 1 vol. price 6s. bound, with 40 Illustrations by CRUIKSHANK.
London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.
Sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen, and at all Railway Stations.

THE LIGHT of the PARLOUR.—No. I. is Now Ready of a new Weekly Periodical. 32 pages crown 8vo, price One Penny, entitled THE LIGHT OF THE PARLOUR.
Edited by G. FARRINGTON, 18, Bath-street, Newgate-street; and sold by all booksellers in town and country

"WANDERINGS of a PILGRIM in Search of the PICTURESQUE, during Four-and Twenty Years in the EAST; with REVELATIONS of LIFE in the ZENANA.—This interesting work was placed before her Majesty the Queen, at Windsor Castle, during the Easter Holidays. Her Majesty was pleased to receive it very graciously, and at the same time to honour the Royal Librarian with her commands to convey the expression of her Majesty's thanks to the author for her great attention in forwarding it for her Majesty's acceptance.

In 2 Great Marlborough-street

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
To be had of all Booksellers.

NOTES from NINEVEH and TRAVELS in MESOPOTAMIA, ASSYRIA, and SYRIA. By the Rev J P FLETCHER. 2 vols. post 8vo., 21s bound (Immediately.)

II.
MR. WARBURTON'S REGINALD HASTINGS: an Historical Romance.
"As a historical romancist, Mr. Warburton takes a first wrangler's rank. The present romance possesses all the value of a history. It is replete with power and interest."—Morning Herald.

III.
Miss BREMER'S "EASTER OFFERING."
Completing THE LIGHT-HOUSE, a Domestic Story; and LIFE IN THE NORTH. Translated by Mary Howitt, from the unpublished Swedish MS. 1 vol, elegantly bound, by the Queen's Binder, 6s.
"A charming—an exquisite book; full of pleasant thoughts and gentle sentiments. Full of love for our fellow-creatures, and, in fact, images of piety and peace into our domestic circles."—The Leader

IV.
SIN and SORROW; a TALE. 3 vols. (Just ready.)
"No gloom of woe or want
The radiance can abate
Where Heaven delights to haunt."—Christian Year.

V.
MADAME PULSKY'S MEMOIRS, with Interesting Details of the LATE EVENTS in HUNGARY. Dedicated to her Majesty Queen Victoria. 2 vols. 21s. bound.
"Madame Pulsky's narrative cannot fail to excite an interest in all classes of readers. Her book will be read by each in a manner as well as in those who look for something more enduring."—Edinburgh Evening Post.

VI.
DIARY of LADY'S TRAVELS in NORTHERN AFRICA. 2 vols. 21s. bound.
"These exceedingly interesting volumes contain a very lively and graphic narrative of Lady Duff Gordon's experiences, amongst the curiously mixed population of Barbary; with many important facts, and much useful intelligence."—Weekly Chronicle

Now in course of publication,
NEW EDITION of EVELYN'S DIARY AND CORRESPONDENCE
REVISED, WITH ADDITIONAL NOTES.
Uniform with the New Edition of PEPYS'S DIARY To be complete in 4 vols, price 10s 6d each, bound. Vols I and II, comprising the Diary, are now ready.
"Uniform with the recent edition of Pepys, this interesting and important work of the learned and courtly Evelyn will be a valuable addition to every library."—Post
"No library can be complete without this standard work."—Globe.
"The new edition of this valuable book will meet with a warm welcome. It is impossible to overrate the interest and value of a Diary and Correspondence kept by such a man as Evelyn, and in such times as those of Charles I. Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., James II., and William III."—Morning Chronicle.
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

JOHNSTON'S PHYSICAL ATLASES.
I.
THE PHYSICAL ATLAS. A Series of Maps and Illustrations of the Geographical Distribution of Natural Phenomena. By ALEXANDER KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., F.G.S. Geographer to the Queen in Scotland.
In Imperial Folio, half-bound Russia or Morocco, price £10 10s.
"The splendid work of Alexander Keith Johnston."—Tait's Edinburgh Magazine.
"Embodies the materials of many volumes—the results of long years of research and collection the most valuable thoughts of the great distinguished men of the age, pictured visibly to the eye."—Edinburgh Review.
"The book, before us is, in short, a graphic encyclopedia of the science—an Atlas of human knowledge done into maps."—Atheneum
"A gigantic monument of the genius of science of the present day."—New York Literary World

II.
THE PHYSICAL ATLAS. Reduced from the Imperial Folio. For the Use of Colleges, Academies, and Families. By A. KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.S.E., &c.
This Edition contains Twenty-five Maps, including a Paleontological and Geological Map of the British Islands, with Descriptive Letterpress and a very Copious Index.
In Imperial Quarto, handsomely bound, half-morocco, price £2 12s 6d.
"Of as enormous interest as it must be in extent, is the work of the judicious teacher or head of a family, information of the most varied nature, in all departments of Natural History, can be introduced and commented on in reference to its geographical bearing. Such a book gives extraordinary value to a map, and stimulate to energy the mind of the young."—Literary World (U. S.)

III.
THE NATIONAL ATLAS OF HISTORICAL, COMMERCIAL, AND POLITICAL GEOGRAPHY: from the Works of ALEXANDER KEITH JOHNSTON. A New Edition; with an Index of upwards of 14,000 Names of Places, compiled from the Maps. In Imperial Folio, half-bound, Russia, price £8 8s.

IV.
BY THE SAME AUTHOR
ATLAS To ALISON'S HISTORY OF EUROPE. Constructed and arranged under the superintendence of Mr. ALISON In Crown Quarto, uniform with the Seventh Edition of the History, price £1 1s 6d, bound in cloth; in Demy Quarto, to range with the Library Edition and the early Editions in Demy 8vo. The same in Royal Quarto, to accompany the Royal 8vo Library Edition; WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, EDINBURGH and LONDON.

NEW MUSIC.

Just published,
"THE BALCARRES WALTZES."—Dedicated to the Grenadier Guards. By MARIAN S. JACKSON Price 3s.
CAMPBELL, 33, New Bond-street.

DON PASQUALE.—The PIANISTA, No. 120, price 2s., contains the overture and airs in this comic opera. Post free, 30 stamps. Nos. 117 and 118, each 2s, contain Beethoven's "Prophète" No. 116, Halevy's "Val d'Andorre," with French and English words, 2s Nos. 96, 97, "Les Huguenots." Nos. 98, 99, "Lucia," and forty other numbers, 2s each. See Catalogue. Pianista Offices, 164, Argyll-street, Oxford-street; and 67, Paternoster-row. N.B.—Be careful to order the Pianista Edition, full music size

NEW SONG.—"JANE CAMPBELL'S WORTH," by ALEXANDER LEE, price 2s (sent postage free). This is one of the happiest efforts of this celebrated composer: the words, of a novel character, being character, have evidently inspired him to compose a song which will rival in public estimation his favourite ballads; "The Soldier's Tear," "I will be true to thee," "The Sweep's Bride," "The Gondolette," &c. It is in the range of most voices, the highest note being F.
London. DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC by COOP. CRAMER, BEALE, KUHE, &c.: Strauss'es on a Neapolitan Air, La Sonnia, and Pauline Lucca Rigoletto (Nocturne), three new compositions by Ernest A. L. Coop—Les Regrets; Nocturne by A. Ribbi—Reminiscence of Jetty Treffz on the admired air, to be regarded, in W Kuhe; Nocturne in A, by F. Spencer—Souvenir de la Bayadère; Morceau du Salon on an air by Madame Duchambge, by G. A. Osborne; and Bellini's Casta Diva, by C. Czerny.
London: R. MILLS, Musicseller and Publisher, 140, New Bond-street.

PIANOFORTES.—TOLKIEN'S splendid Pianofortes, with 63 octaves, Trichord, Metallic Plate, only 25 guineas. Parties requiring a first-class instrument for a little money will do well to purchase at TOLKIEN'S old established house, 27, 28, and 29, King William-street, London-bridge. Drawings of the Instruments sent post free. Old instruments taken in exchange.

PIANOFORTES for HIRE at CHAPPELL'S, 50, New Bond-street.—Every variety of Grand, Cottage, and Square Pianofortes, by Erard, Broadwood, Collard, Wornum, Oetzmann, &c.; and of Harps by Erard, for SALE or HIRE. Any one having a Piano for Sale can obtain one year's use (Pianos by Erard excepted) for the same amount as the interest of the purchase money. New Square Pianos, by Erard, Broadwood, Collard, and Wornum, from 50 guineas.

PIANOFORTES.—CHAS. HOLDERNESSE and Co., Manufacturers, 444, New Oxford-street, London, have always in Stock, Sale, at the very lowest prices for which a really good and warranted Instrument can be produced. Every description of Pianoforte, which, for elegance of design, beauty of tone, and durability of construction, cannot be surpassed at the present time, a variety of good Secondhand, by Erard, Broadwood, Collard, and other first-class makers, from £16—Every description of musical instrument tuned, repaired, and taken in exchange.

BARLOW'S PIANOFORTE INSULATORS. Important to all who value quality of tone; they beautifully develope all the harmonics, produce brilliancy, and increase the power, which can never be obtained (where the piano is used in a carpeted room) without them.—JAMES BARLOW, Patentee and Manufacturer, 14, King William-street, Mansion House. Price, 6s 6d the set.

DRAWINGROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM ORNAMENTS, consisting of Vases, Groups, Candlesticks, Tazzas, Pedestals, Bracelets, Inkstands, Paperweights, &c., Designed and manufactured by J. TENNANT (late Mawe), 149, Strand, London.

"GRAHAM and HEDLEY'S ROLL COCOA is perfectly pure, and so well prepared as to afford, with hot water or milk, a delicious beverage, unobtainable from the ordinary articles of diet.—(Signed) ANDREW URE M.D., F.R.S., &c., Analytical Chemist and Professor of Chemistry.—Sold by all Grocers and Tea-dealers; wholesale, at One, Swan-yard, Bishopsgate-street.

CAUTION.—FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., of 182, Piccadilly, and HEDGES and BUTLER, 155, Regent-street, London, agents for DR DE BARRY'S ORIGINAL and GENUINE HEALTH-RESTORING FOOD, the Revalenta Arabica, beg to inform the Public that they do not attempt any of the manufacturers limitations of that invaluable food, and it is entirely without their authority or consent that their name appears in connection with the Barometrical "Revalenta" one of those spurious imitations.—April 18, 1850

THE NICOLL PALETOT, or Patent Coat; and the original invention, the Registered Paletot (6 and 7 Vic., cap. 65), for the Winter season, are to be had only of the original and useful artists of dress, at No. 114, Regent-street, and extend from No. 114 to No. 116, Regent-street, and from 22 to 23, Vigo-street, Regent-circus, the shipping department being in the rear—viz. 'Change-alley. Many have assumed the name of Nicoll, and even of H. J. and D. Nicoll are the sole proprietors and patentees of either design or material. The prices are one, two, and three guineas, according to the climate or purpose for which they are required.

ABSOLUTE SALE of SHAWLS and MANTLES. TURNER and COMPANY, 37 and 38, Crawford-street, Baker-street, Portman-square. MONDAY NEXT, the STOCK of HENRY ROBERTS, of Ludgate-hill, Shawl and Mantle Warehouseman, at Half the Price charged by any Shawl House in London, viz—Rich Silk Scarf, worth 42s, for 21s; 36s for 18s; Rich Glossy Long Shawls and Squares, Lyons, Cashmeres, Printed Lama Shawls, Rich Brocade Shawls, Black Lace Veils, Blonde, Satins, Gro Royals, &c, at prices from 5s 11d to 1 guinea—really worth three times the money. TURNER and COMPANY, 37 and 38, Crawford-street, 37 and 38, Purchasers of Bankrupt Stocks.

GROSSMITH'S CHEST EXPANDER—Round Shoulders, Stooping, and Contraction of the Chest, in Children and Adults, will be removed by this elegant new elastic suspender, without inconvenience or restraint to the wearer, in a month or less. It can be worn under the clothes unseen, if preferred, and is the most powerful and effective remedy ever introduced to the public, forwarded by post from Grossmith's Anatomical Instrument Manufactory, 175, Fleet-street. Established 1760.

MANSELL, HORNE, and Co., Wholesale Tea and Coffee Dealers, No. 2, Bucklersbury, Cheapside, invite the attention of families, hotel-keepers, and other large consumers to the peculiar system of their establishment, which is to supply them on the same terms as the trade, at the lowest wholesale prices. Price lists and samples forwarded free. A single pound and upwards sent free within the limits of the London postal delivery. Country orders will be sent free to any part of England.—Address, MANSELL, HORNE, and Co., 2, Bucklersbury, Cheapside.

METROPOLITAN SEWAGE MANURE COMPANY.—The Directors of this Company having just received from the Commissioners of Sewers a notification which enables the Company to carry out their objects, HEREBY GIVE NOTICE THAT OF THE IR OPERATIONS, the Directors are ready to receive APPLICATIONS FOR SHARES

Full information as to the working of the Company, the Half-yearly Reports, and the Amount of Profits, may be had post free, or on application to the Secretary.

By order of the Board,
A. GREIG, Secretary

THE TEETH.—A very curious invention connected with Dental Surgery has been introduced by Mr HOWARD, of 17, George-street, Hanover-square; it is the introduction of a new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without spring, wires, or ligatures. They are self-adhesive by atmospheric action, and so to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will not change colour, decay, or ache, and will be found very superior to any tooth ever before used. This method does away entirely with pain in the operation, as they require no extraction, support and preserves the teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication in a manner of importance to many persons, and those interested cannot do better than apply personally to Mr. Howard.

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth-brush searches thoroughly into the divisions, and cleanses them in the most effectual manner. Sold wholesale and retail, at METCALFE'S Establishment for the Sale of Brushes, 130, Fenchurch-street, London. Price 4s 6d and 3s 6d. Sold by them, and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers

DU BARRY'S HEALTH-RESTORING FOOD for INVALIDS and INFANTS.—The REVALENTA ARABICA, a pleasant and effectual remedy (without medicine, inconvenience, or expense, as it saves fifty times its cost in other means) for dyspepsia, nervousness, stomachic, intestinal, liver, and bilious complaints, however deeply rooted; dyspepsia (indigestion), habitual constipation, diarrhœa, acidity, heartburn, flatulency, oppression, distension, nausea, and sickness of the stomach, nausea and sickness under all circumstances; debility in the aged as well as infants, and, indeed, every stage of human life, from the infant to the aged. N. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden," are also engraved on the Government stamp affixed to each canister and bottle. Price 4s 6d and 8s 6d. Sold by them, and by all respectable Chemists and Perfumers

DU BARRY'S HEALTH-RESTORING REVALENTA ARABICA FOOD, for the Cure, without medicine, inconvenience, or expense, of Indigestion, Constipation, Flatulency, Spasms, Sickness, Diarrhœa, Nervousness, Biliousness, Fevers, Inflammation, Hemorrhoids, Piles, Dropsy, Gout, Rheumatism, Diabetes, Coughs, Asthma, Consumption, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Nervous Irritability, Hysteria, Spleen, Blood to the Head, Palpitation, Nervousness, Hypochondriasis, Melancholy, Loss of Memory, Giddiness, Epilepsy, Tremblings, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Cramp, Spasms, Numbness, Paralysis, Fits, Sleeplessness, Low Spirits, Hysterics, Deafness, Blindness, Cataract, Gutta Serena, Weakness, Decay, Wasting away, Dropsy, Cancer, Tumours, Ulcers, Eruptions, Scurvy, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Sallowness, Impurities of the Blood

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SUPPLEMENT.

SUPPLEMENT TO No. 422.] SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1850. [GRATIS.

HUSYN-ABDAL, IN THE PUNJAB.

THE charming scene engraved at the foot of the page lies near the east bank of the Indus, and is so called from containing the tomb of a Mahometan saint of that name. It is situate in a delightful valley, watered by springs which gush from amongst the rocks—Burnes states, "some hundred springs," Von Hügel, three. This last writer denies that the place is a valley; he also reproves Moore and Hamilton for giving too flattering a description of it; but it is not to be forgotten that the glorious Akbar expressed the feelings excited in his mind on viewing the spot by exclaiming "Wah!" the usual interject on of admiration: hence the ruined garden is so named. Elphinstone styles it a valley; and the authorities to which we have referred, and even the Baron himself subsequently, are warm in their praises of the beauty of the place.

Husyn-Abdal is on the high-road from Lahore to Attock. It is thus mentioned by Mr. Moore, in his exquisite Oriental romance "Lalla Rookh!"—

"They were now not far from that forbidden river (the Attock) beyond which no pure Hindoo can pass, and were reposing for a time in the rich valley of Hussun Abdaul, which had always been a favourite resting-place of the Emperors in their annual migrations to Cashmere. Here often had the Light of the Faith, Jehangueire, wandered with his beloved and beautiful Nourmahal, and here would Lalla Rookh have been happy to remain for ever, giving up the throne of Bucharia and the world for Feramorz and love in this sweet lonely valley. The time was now fast approaching when she must see him no longer—or see him with eyes whose every look belonged to another; and there was a melancholy preciousness in these last moments which made her heart cling to them as it would to life. During the latter part of the journey, indeed, she had sunk into a deep sadness, from which nothing but the presence of the young minstrel could awake her. Like those lamps in tombs, which only light up when the air is admitted, it was only at his approach that her eyes became smiling and animated. But here, in this dear valley, every moment was an age of pleasure; she saw him all day, and was, therefore, all day happy—resembling, she often thought, that people of Zinge, who attribute the unfailing cheerfulness they enjoy to one genial star that rises nightly over their heads (the star Soheil, or Canopus).

"The whole party, indeed, seemed in their liveliest mood during the few days they passed in this delightful solitude. The young attendants of the Princess, who were here allowed a freer range than they could safely be indulged with in a less sequestered place, ran wild among the gardens, and bounded through the meadows lightly as young roes over the aromatic plains of Tibet. While Fadladeen, beside the spiritual comfort he derived from a pilgrimage to the tomb of the Saint from whom the valley is named, had opportunities of gratifying, in a small way, his taste for victims, by putting to death some hundreds of those unfortunate little lizards, which all pious Mussulmans make it a point to kill; taking for granted, that the manner in which the creature hangs its head is meant as a mimicry of the attitude in which the faithful say their prayers!"

In the first Illustration, the Artist has portrayed a party of Native Troops in Camp.

THE PUNJAB.—NATIVE TROOPS IN CAMP.

PRIZES FOR THE INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION OF 1851.

THE question of Prizes in the several classes of products at the Great Exposition of 1851 is a much more serious one than either the Society of Arts or the Royal Commissioners seem to think. At a first glance it is natural to suppose that prizes of some sort, and especially large money prizes, would be the surest attraction to exhibitors; that if twenty or thirty thousand pounds were to be given in absolute money prizes, it would afford the highest incitement both to Englishmen and foreigners to exercise the utmost enterprise, skill, ingenuity, and fertility of design in preparation for the Exhibition. The very contrary, however, is the fact; and, paradoxical as the assertion may seem, it is, nevertheless, perfectly certain that large money prizes would prevent the leading manufacturers of each class of goods from exhibiting at all; and it is even questionable whether prizes of any kind will not, to a considerable extent, have the same effect. The true prize is the lead of the market. All manufacturers of articles of taste, fashion, luxury, and even of common use, spare no amount of exertion and expense, to get the run of a season. In prints, silks, laces, shawls, ribbons, stuffs, or woollens, one such run of success would be of infinitely more value than the highest prize the Exposition could possibly afford. It would be a heavy loss to manufacturers, if they must turn from their regular trade to produce something purposely for the Exhibition; and, though standing deservedly high, if they exhibited merely the articles of their ordinary production, they might have the prize given against them, to some one who had produced especially for the Exhibition, and who, though absolutely inferior to them in the market, would, for a time, get the trade through the prestige of being a prize-holder. But, if there were no prizes, the Exhibition would have the character of a vast show-room. To exhibit would be an advertisement. Manufacturers of high standing would use the utmost exertion consistent with the ordinary progress of their business to keep their position in public opinion. They would not allow those behind them in the trade to have the show-room to themselves. But to no other judgment than that of their constant customers—the whole buying public, whether as traders or consumers—will they be content to submit any decision upon the excellence of their manufactures the fruit, it may be, of years of effort, immense expenditure of capital, and diligent study of the public taste. Such decision they will not find upon English soil—decision of any juries, however chosen. If we were beginners in manufacturing, with but a narrow market, there might be some use in prizes "for increased usefulness, permanency in form, improved forms and combinations of articles of utility, superior quality or superior skill in workmanship; new use of known materials; new combinations of materials; beauty of design in form or colour, or both; and cheapness and excellence of production." But, as we stand, competitors with all nations, in all the markets of the world, and with ports open upon equal terms to them all, prizes are quite a needless bone of contention. Like enough to give rise to ill-will and jealousies, both amongst Englishmen and between Englishmen and foreigners, but in no valid way to promote the completeness of the Exposition. The League Bazaar, held in Covent Garden Theatre in 1844, was, to a certain extent, like a prize exhibition: so far from there being any prizes, the goods were gifts; and yet manufacturers thought it worth while to produce purposely for the bazaar. It was an opportunity not to be lost, of showing the public what they could do. One table-knife manufacturer at Sheffield gave some attention for several months to selecting the most beautiful pieces of mother-of-pearl for the handles of a set of table-knives; another, with the lace cars, selected the choicest ivories and the most curiously-grained pieces of wood for the backs of his hair-brushes, workers of plated wares, electro-plate, and plate, also sent specimens of rare designs and superior excellence. Razor, scissor, pen-knife, tool, fender, stove and grate makers, all contributed articles of the best patterns and highest finish: even the file-cutters took a pride in showing their skill, by producing elaborate designs of Wentworth House and Windsor Castle in the cutting of the files; and one firm famous for their tools made in case-hardened steel, for the use of the Bushmen of almost every civilised, semi-barbarous, and savage people upon the face of the globe, sent a bar of iron, one end of which was in the first rough state in which it comes from the smelting furnace, and which showed, consequently the condition in which, for every purpose of tools and cutlery, it was brought by machinery or manual labour on to the most beautifully wrought burnished razor, which completed the series of the bar—an exposition in itself complete of the progress of iron from the ore to the keenest blade of most highly-tempered steel; and with the like spirit the manufacturers of Bradford and Halifax produced patterns of stuffs and carpets especially for the occasion; whatever they knew how to do in the way of design, or dye, or finish, they did, though there were no prizes. Galashiels made tartans of new design and especial fineness, for the occasion. One manufacturer at Paisley expended a thousand pounds in setting up a loom for the manufacture of a new description of shawl: there was no prize to be gained but the public approval to be expressed neither by medal nor money, nor decision of any jury, but simply by orders for the shawl. We might multiply instances as to Nottingham, Leicester, and Derby, with lace and hosiery, Manchester, with prints; Coventry, with ribbands and watches; Dunfermline and Belfast, with damasks; Birmingham, with lamps, glass, and paper machés; Staffordshire and Worcestershire, with porcelain; Colebrookdale, porcelain, iron, and ornamental castings; Crayford (Kent) and Norwich, with shawls; Clerkenwell, with watches; Durham, Glasgow, Kidderminster, and Axminster, with carpets; the North and West, with broad cloths; and so on through the whole round of the busy industry of England: from chain cables to carriages, something of almost every thing was sent, and the effort after excellence was general, although there were no prizes but the chances of attracting attention and gaining a customer. No one can doubt that this consideration would have tenfold importance with reference to the Exposition of the world's industry in 1851. There will be the new element of international emulation. We are, therefore, strongly of opinion that the Commissioners would act wisely to give up the idea of prizes, and to substitute some beautifully designed memorial to be presented to every exhibitor, as a testimonial of his having contributed to the excellence and completeness of the display, and for the design of this memorial let there be some large premium given. But if it be resolved to adhere to the system of prizes, at least let them have some variety and be of some artistic device, having appropriateness to the class of article for which they are given. We are not a medal-wearing people; medals to be thrown by in a case are useless.

HUSYN-ABDAL, IN THE PUNJAB.—FROM A SKETCH BY G. T. VIGNE ESQ

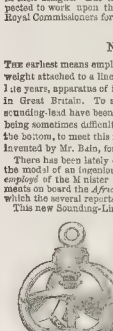
If prizes are to be given, there is ample field for the exercise of artistic taste in their designs. But the premiums for these designs, if real artists are expected to work upon them, must be at least five times the sum offered by the Royal Commissioners for the reverses of their medals.

NEW SOUNDING-LINE.

THE earliest means employed for ascertaining the depth of the sea was a leaden weight attached to a line. This primitive system was in use for ages; but, of late years, apparatus of improved construction has been devised for the purpose in Great Britain. To show to what extent the uncertainties of the common sounding-lead have been provided for in this country, we may mention that, it being sometimes difficult to ascertain the precise moment when the lead strikes the bottom, to meet this inconvenience the self-registering apparatus has been invented by Mr. Bain, for the instantaneous communication of the desired effect.

There has been lately deposited in the Naval Museum of the Louvre, at Paris, the model of an ingenious Sounding Apparatus, invented by M. Le Comte, an employé of the Minister of Marine, who in 1841 commenced a series of experiments on board the Africaine frigate for testing the accuracy of his invention, which the several reports of the officers concur in stating to be complete.



The new Sounding-Line consists of a hollow truncated cone, of copper brass, 19½ inches in height, about 5 inches in diameter at the base, and 2 inches at the summit. The metal is very thick, and upon one of the sides is placed a strip of glass, rubbing the copper away to read the scale, which is 11½ inches in length. An endless screw, which is the axis of the cone, acts upon an index, or traverser. This screw passes through the upper part of the cone; and to the protruding portion, or shoulder, are attached two little wings, or fans, perpendicular to each other. Their inclination varies according as it is found to obtain more or fewer divisions of the scale; i. e. to ascertain the depth in metres or fathoms. The little wings are protected by a pierced dome, immediately above which is a ring for the reception of the Sounding-Line. To the bottom of the cone is attached a cylinder of lead, of sufficient weight to carry it through the water. This lead is concave at the base, and is filled with grease, in order that the nature of the bottom may be ascertained from the portions which adhere to it. When the apparatus is cast into the sea, the resistance offered by the water from below upwards causes the little wings to open, and, from their vertical position, to revolve. The screw, of course, obeys the movement, and the index quits the 0 to point, and travels down the scale. As soon as the lead touches the bottom, all motion ceases. The instrument is drawn on board, and its result read off.

M. Le Comte's apparatus has been tried upon known soundings, and its results found to be accurate. It is considered by French naval men as being especially valuable, since it enables soundings to be taken either from steamers or sailing-vessels without decreasing the speed of the ship as on the old plan, and, in fact, while going at the rate of eight or nine knots an hour, and in any weather, even sub-marine currents not operating prejudicially to its effective working.

Respecting the value of this instrument in navigation, and the ingenuity manifested in its construction, there cannot be two opinions; and the following statement of some eighteen years since proves that M. Le Comte has been anticipated, at least, in an important portion of his invention.

In the Nautical Magazine, 1832, is described and figured a machine invented by Captain Massey, which differs from that by Mr. Massey, in not requiring the assistance of a line; but which, in various experiments, was found to give true depth of water precisely as that by the measured line. The parts of Massey's machine are a valve and flaps, connected by two rods with a perpendicular axis, carrying two wheels of different diameters, similar to those of Massey's; to which are suspended a float glass globe, a catch with shoulders, and clasps disengaged by arms connected with a rod sunk by a leaden weight, and terminating with a foot, in case of oozy bottom. When the weight is disengaged from the rest of the machinery by the opening of the clasps, caused by the rod striking the bottom, it will remain there, and the globe will carry the other part to the surface.

We add a few details of other sounding apparatus.

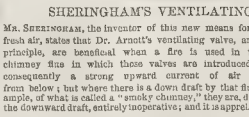
In 1839, Professor C. Bonnycastle, of the University of Virginia, made some ingenious experiments to ascertain the depth of the Gulf Stream. A powder-barrel fitted under-ship, measured by an instrument like a log, was the part of a second; but the experiments were unsuccessful.

In 1844, M. Lauriol, of Paris, invented a new apparatus, which, he says, was made to fall by the progress of the vessel. Pressure, he says, is the measure, way, as a side rises in the water. The lead descends, and the [illegible] action of the apparatus. [illegible] Union.

S. James C. Ramsden's apparatus consists of a solid cylinder of lead, 900 miles west of St. Helena, [illegible] 30,000 feet, the weight employed amounting to 450 lb. Another, made in lat 33°5, and long. 9° W, about 300 miles west of the Cape of Good Hope, occupied 45½ minutes, in which time 2226 fathoms were sounded. These facts are thought to disprove the common opinion, that soundings could not be obtained at very great depths.

SHERINGHAM'S VENTILATING VALVE.

MR. SHERINGHAM, the inventor of this new means for supplying rooms with fresh air, states that Dr. Arnott's ventilating valve, and the others upon that principle, are beneficial when a fire is used in the lower part of the chimney like in which those valves are introduced, and where there is consequently a strong upward current of air rarefied by the heat from below; but where there is a down draft by that fire, as in the case, for example, of what is called a "smoky chimney," they are, during the continuance of the downward draft, entirely inoperative; and it is apprehended that Dr. Chowne's plan is not free from the same objection. All those plans, therefore, are inoperative when a ventilator is much wanted. Dr. Arnott's valves and Dr. Chowne's syphon are not constructed for the admission of external air, but their proposal to accomplish the requisite supply of unvitiated air for the support of life, and other combustion, by drafts through the fortuitous cracks and crevices afforded by the imperfect fittings of our dwelling-rooms, or otherwise by open doors or windows. It is the design of Mr Sheringham's invention, that all the advantages of due ventilation shall be afforded without the agency of any such objectionable or adventitious draft.



SHERINGHAM'S VENTILATING VALVE.

Arrangements such as are sometimes introduced in the windows of churches resemble in some respects, it is conceded, the plan contrived by Mr. Sheringham, but they fail to satisfy the requirements of position, direction, cheapness, and susceptibility of general adaptation, without discomfort or defacement of internal decoration, which the exigences of the case, under its various aspects, demand.

The ventilator contrived by Mr. Sheringham is as follows: A flap, with quadrant ends at right angles to it, is constructed to fit into a frame in the form of a parallelogram: to each lower corner of the flap is a pin, which plays work in corresponding sockets at the lower corners of the opening of the frame. The flap, by mechanical arrangements, is susceptible of being thrown outward to an angle of about sixty degrees, or pulled up to any less angle, or the opening may be entirely closed by the flap, when it is pressed close to the frame for the regulation of all the above operations is brought within reach of the hand.

The flap proposed for a room about ten feet square is about nine inches long, by about three inches deep, working in a suitable frame.

A perforation is to be made in an external wall, fully as large as the ventilator, the upper part of which should be from four to eight inches below the ceiling of the apartment to be ventilated. Mr. Sheringham's Ventilator may then be fixed in the opening from within, so that the flap of the ventilator, when pulled into the frame, may be on the same plane as the inner surface of the wall. The whole face of the ventilator may be papered or painted in the same manner as the piece of wall which is removed for its introduction, but so that the flap may fall freely within the room, whenever an inlet of air is desired. If the dimensions or nature of the interior to be ventilated requires a larger opening, this can be externally closed by an air brick, or if the position of the building to be ventilated appears to demand an especial provision against the en rance of soot or other natant substances in the atmosphere, an iron frame, covered with perforated zinc, or grate work of adequate fineness, may be substituted for the air brick. The size and number of the ventilators will be regulated by circumstances.

It will be found that the oblique direction which is given to the flap of the ventilator, when opened, will induce an upward direction to the in-coming current of air admitted by it, and that this upward direction will be retained a sufficient length of time to enable it to become warmed, and dispersed through the warmer air within the apartment before it reaches the occupants; and hence there will be removed from such in-coming current of air, in sufficient time, all the injurious tendencies of a cold current of air frequently, and frequently severely, felt from an open window.

Mr. Sheringham's Ventilator may be left open in temperate weather, day and night, in reception-rooms, dormitories, and other internal structures, not only with perfect propriety, but with great economy and advantage to health. We can, from experience, recommend this improvement.

Mr Soerington's Ventilator, which is registered, is manufactured only by Messrs. Hayward, 196, Blackfriars-road.

SHAW'S PATENT INDIA-RUBBER AIR-GUN.

THIS invention, which presents a singular combination of the elastic powers of vulcanised India-rubber and air, has been invented and patented by Mr. John Shaw, of Glossop, musical instrument-maker. It will doubtless be gladly welcomed by those lovers of ball shooting, as enabling them to enjoy their favourite diversion at a fractional part of its former cost. Without any previous pumping, the requisite pressure of air for one discharge is procured instantly at the pull of the trigger, by a single stroke of a condensing syringe, actuated by a previously extended India-rubber spring. There is no separate pump, no reservoir of condensed air, nor valve of any kind. The whole apparatus is enclosed in a case, which, being stocked, has the appearance of a light and elegant fowling-piece without a lock. The invention possesses several advantages over the ordinary air-gun, one of which is its superior safety, owing to the absence of a large reservoir of highly condensed air, and to the extreme simplicity of its mechanism.

FIG. I.

FIG. II

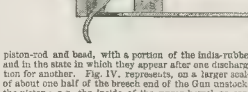


FIG. 3

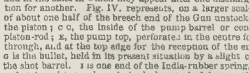

FIG. IV

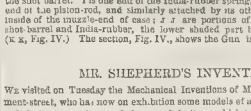

Fig I. represents the Gun complete. Fig. II. is an underneath view of the Gun unstocked, showing a slot (K K) in the case, through which are visible the piston-rod and head, with a portion of the India-rubber hereinafter described, and in the state in which they appear after one discharge, and prior to preparation for another. Fig. IV. represents, on a larger scale, a longitudinal section of about one half of the breech end of the Gun unstocked: A is the trigger; M, the piston; C C, the inside of the pump barrel or condensing syringe. B, the piston-rod; K, the pump top, perforated in the centre for the piston-rod to work through, and at the top edge for the reception of the end of the shot barrel, F; G is the bullet, held in its present situation by a slight contraction of that end of the shot barrel. H is one end of the India-rubber spring, attached to the hooked end of the piston-rod, and similarly attached by its other end to a hook in the inside of the muzzle-end of the stock. J J are the sides of the case, enclosing the shot-barrel and India-rubber, the lower shaded part being one end of the slot (K K, Fig. IV.) The section, Fig. IV., shows the Gun in act of discharge; the trigger being just pulled, releases the piston, which, by the reactive power of the India-rubber spring, rushes to the opposite end of the syringe, condensing the air therein, and which condensed air forcibly ejects the bullet.

To prepare the Gun for discharge, the ball, if the barrel be a rifled one, must first be rammed down; a charged hook must then be introduced into the slot (K K), between the head (H, Fig IV.) and the hooked end of the piston-rod, as plainly indicated by Fig. III. The butt-end of the Gun must then be placed against the top part of the thigh, and the hook pulled with both hands, in the direction of the breech, until the trigger, by means of the small spring at its back, catches the piston. With a smooth or unrifled barrel, 400 discharges per hour can be made; the bullet in that case requiring no ramming, it being drawn down by the partial vacuum caused by drawing down the piston. The spring consists of from sixteen to eighteen India-rubber bands.

MR. SHEPHERD'S INVENTIONS.

WE visited on Tuesday the Mechanical Inventions of Mr. Shepherd, 15, Parliament-street, who has now on exhibition some models of a new method of opening and closing gates, doors, windows, and shutters, which is certainly recommended by the facility and convenience of its action. It is, indeed, remarkably simple and effective. The doors, &c. open by the mere turn of a handle; and the arrangement is such as to add beauty to the apartment in which it may be adopted; so, when open, there is no appearance of doors, and when shut they can be converted into one. The invention is commended by some high authorities; and the inventor's testimonials include those of sovereigns, nobles, statesmen, engineers, architects, and persons of all classes. It is thus that the exterior of the mansions duly honoured; and the utility of Mr. Shepherd's mode must be especially apparent for railways, warehouses, and places where large gates are required; and there can be no doubt that it will be generally adopted.

IRON HOTEL FOR PORT NATAL.

MR. WALKER, of Gracechurch-street, has contracted for shipment to Port Natal, in a few days, of a spacious Hotel, of corrugated iron, one of the largest structures yet manufactured. It has a frontage of 78 feet, and a depth of 50 feet; and it contains twenty large rooms. The hall is 10 feet wide, 60 feet long, and 25 feet high. To the right is a club-room, 44 feet long, and 24 feet wide, which can be divided by folding-doors into two rooms. Behind this room are the three kitchens, 12 feet by 14 feet. To the left of the hall are the bar, bar-parlour, still-room for the family, and bed rooms. The principal rooms for the visitors: in all, fifteen rooms. At the extreme front of the building is attached the tap-house, a building 40 feet long, and 20 feet wide; behind which are two wash houses. The whole will be completely floored and ceiled when at Port Natal.

This building is very complete and compact in its arrangements, and has occupied a large gang of men some months in erecting.

THE MURDER OF THE COUNTESS GORLITZ.—This deeply interesting trial, at Darmstadt (Germany), which occupied the criminal terms of thirty-four days, was concluded on the 11th instant. It is scarcely possible to describe the intense anxiety with which the decision of the jury was looked for. The foreman of the jury, in answer to the several indictments, declared that the woman of the Count, Johannes Stauff, was guilty of the murder, of subsequently setting the dwelling on fire, of carrying off a quantity of the Countess' jewels, and afterwards attempting to kill the Count by putting poison into his tea. The Prussian sentenced Johannes Stauff to imprisonment for life, with payment of five-sixths of the costs. His father, Henry Stauff, was sentenced to six months', and his brother, Jacob Stauff, to three months' imprisonment for being abettors, and concealing the stolen property. The jewels were to be given up to the Count.

THE CONVICT HULK ESTABLISHMENT.—It appears by the annual reports of the manager of the convict hulk establishment for the years 1848 and 1849, just printed by order of the House of Commons, that the establishment consisted in the May of that year of five hulks, capable of accommodating 1760 able-bodied prisoners for employment in the public works. The prisoners were distributed as follows:—York hulk, Portsmouth Harbour, 400; Stirling Castle, ditto, 450; Warrior, Woolwich Dockyard, 450; Hebe and Wye, Woolwich Arsenal, 460. The daily average number on board was 1790, but was sufficient to supply all the demands for labour. The number at present is 1760. The total expense of the establishment in 1848 was £38,795 10s. 11d. The average number of convicts on board in 1849 was 1657; and the estimated value of their labour amounted to £17,851.

LAW OF PUBLIC MEETINGS IN SCOTLAND.—At the Edinburgh Police Court, last week, W. C. Sinclair, Esq., barrister, London, and Mr Russell, Edinburgh, were charged by the Lord Provost with [illegible] each of the panels, in a printed and secret circular amendments at a meeting called to oppose the Heritable Affinity Bill, of which he was chairman. The evidence showed that the meeting was on the side of the prosecution; but, for speaking without the consent of the chairman, Mr Sinclair was fined [illegible], and Mr Russell one guinea.

At Lutterworth (Northamptonshire), on Saturday last, a fire broke out in the premises of Mr. [illegible]. It was discovered about nine o'clock, and [illegible] the flames, it was [illegible] without doing any further damage than [illegible] the roof of the [illegible] attempt near that place was [illegible].

USE OF THE EAGLE DESK IN CHURCHES.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

I SEE that one of your querists desires to be informed the "origin of the use of the eagle as a reading-desk, and the date of its first introduction?" The last question cannot, I believe, be answered with any degree of certainty. A desk very similar to the lectern is represented in one of the illuminations of the Benedictional of St. Ethelwold, an Anglo-Saxon MS. of the latter part of the tenth century, in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire; and we have examples of the use of the lectern as a desk in churches as early as the reign of King John. There is one of great antiquity in Crowle Church, Worcestershire; another is preserved in the Abbey-house of Westminster, and a third in the ancient church of Ramsay, Huntingdonshire. Now, as to the first branch of the question. From Du Cange, and other authorities, it would seem that their use is of very ancient origin, and that some lecterns were made in the form of an eagle to designate St. John the Evangelist, whose symbol the eagle is. That noble bird afforded a type of the strength and activity required from those who would carry the glad tidings of salvation among mankind; and the shape of an eagle is thought to have been adopted not merely to designate St. John, but as symbolizing the Angel flying through the heavens bearing the mission of the Gospel. On the lectern the Epistle and Gospel were recited, and certain commemorative offices were performed; and in the Church of England, after the Reformation, the Lessons, or portions of Scripture appointed to be used during the celebration of Divine services, were read to the people from the lectern, which was frequently in the shape of an eagle, or surmounted by it. Before the great Rebellion, most of our parochial churches possessed their own eagle desk or lectern, generally made of wood; but these beautiful ornaments were obnoxious to the reforming zeal and church spoilers in the civil wars, and few escaped. In 1643, when the martial reformers came to destroy the ornaments of Peterborough Cathedral, they found "the great bible laying upon a brass eagle for reading the Lessons." (Gunton's Church of Peterborough, 8311)

In the "Account of the Antient Rites and Monuments of the Monastic Church of Durham," as they existed before the Suppression, written in 1593, we read:—"At the north end of the quire stood the goodly fare lectern of brass, where they sang the Epistle and Gospel, with a great pelecan on the height of it, finely gilt, biting her blood out of her breast to feed her young ones, and her wings spread abroad, whereon lay the book. . . . There was, likewise, one in the south, another between of brass, with an eagle on the height of it, and their wings spread abroad, whereon the monks laid their books when they sang their legends at matins or other times of service." Bishop Cevin gave "a fair carved lectern" to his cathedral at Durham. (Hegd. Historical Account of Cathedrals, p. 83.)

King's College, Cambridge, has a lectern of brass, which is perhaps the most beautiful in England; another is in the cathedral church of Wells; one of early English date in the church of Bury, Hunts; a fine eagle in St. Mary Redcliff, Bristol; another in the Church of the Holy Trinity, at Coventry; but it is unnecessary to enumerate further examples. There are instances in which ancient wooden eagles were used in some parish churches after the Reformation for the reading-desk at which the prayers were read. But the correct use of the eagle lectern is for reading the Lessons. Many upon ancient models, in wood and in brass have been presented to different parish churches within the last few years; and it is much to be wished that this appropriate and decorous ornament could be generally restored in our churches.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne. W. S. G.

A curious incident took place a few days ago at Magdeburg, in Prussia, which affords a very singular proof of the manner in which personal liberty is respected there. A sentry on the ramparts, [illegible] perceived a individual [illegible] sketching, and on the approach of the guard, the [illegible] was found, sundry sketches of fortifications—of which every military schoolboy has done a dozen pens—were found upon his person; and, what was still more criminal, an Austrian passport. He was carried off prisoner to the citadel, and there rigorously [illegible] examined. No one knew what to make of it, I know what was to be done with so dangerous [illegible], who turned out to be a young officer of rank travelling for his amusement and instruction. The reply was, that he might [illegible] of school, with an admonition to beware how he extended his studies to [illegible] and ramparts. It was afterwards ascertained that the delinquent was his Royal Highness Duke Eugene Augustus of Wurtemberg, a youth of two years of age, son of Duke Frederick Eugene, the well-known Russian general.

LITERATURE.

FARMING, ETC. ETC. SECOND SERIES. By HEWITT DAVIS. A. Redford and Sons Londonroad, Southwark.

Never did agriculture so much engage as now the attention of public writers; and if it were fully established that much writing on a given subject is the surest and best method of improving it, we should at once conclude that agriculture was certain to make a most rapid progress, and to be the most successful and profitable of all occupations. This principle, however, may be doubted; and in the particular case of agriculture it happens, as Mr. Hewitt Davis remarks, and as we believe he has proved in his own person and practice, that "nothing like unanimity prevails, even as to what may be termed first principles in farming, but that, on the contrary, opposing opinions exist on the most important points of husbandry." For twelve or fourteen years Mr. Davis has sedulously inculcated the advantages of thin sowing; but we gather from No. 44, in the present collection, that practical agriculturists like Mr. Baker do not agree on this point with Mr. Davis; and that rational old Jethro Tull's practice appears, it does not meet the unanimous approbation of working farmers. The fact, we believe is, that the soil, situation, including the inclination or flatness of the surface, previous mode of cultivation, nature of the crops, &c., make a different treatment applicable, on the great majority of subjects, to almost every farm. On this account general principles are very difficult of application, and the practice which is advantageous on one farm may fail on another.

It must be observed, too, that of all the operations to which individuals, under the present system of division of labour, exclusively dedicate themselves, none is perhaps more composite, or requires more knowledge, than that of the farmer. A carpenter is required to know only the strength of wood, and be skilful in working it. A knowledge of the properties of iron, and the effects of fire, is nearly all that is necessary for a good smith. If a capitalist be well informed of the prices of goods in different places, he may make his fortune as a merchant. But a farmer, to be successful, must be acquainted with the properties of plants and animals, which are not so uniform and simple as those of wood or metals. He must know something of chemistry. Even before the modern introduction of complicated machinery into the operations of the farm, he had to handle ploughs and waggons; and at present the machinery about a farm is as complicated as that of a cotton-mill; and a farmer ought to be, to a certain extent, a mechanician. His operations depend on the seasons, which vary considerably from year to year; and on the weather, which varies from day to day. To be successful, he must anticipate the signs of changes that are to come, and be prepared to take advantage of them. He must vary his practices on the same farm, as the soil of his different fields varies; and he must change his seed, his plough, and his animals, as he finds them deteriorate or be defective in the properties he particularly requires. He cannot set successfully by nature; he must continually exercise his judgment. Besides being something of a chemist, a botanist, and a mechanic, he must be a merchant, and must adapt his products to the markets. He must be a bit of a mechanic too, and be enabled to mend many a little derangement in harness and gear, and in waggons and carts. He must be a hedger and ditcher, as well as a drainer, a ploughman, and a thrasher. Now though few or no persons pretend to direct the carpenter, the smith, or the merchant, in his comparatively simple operations, almost every theoretical gentleman fancies that he knows all about farming, and can direct the "Jobberheads," or "Hodgepodges," as the farmers are called, in the performance of their own peculiar business. From all the literary fountains of the empire, accordingly, advice and objurgation are now poured on the farmers; but, as we are slow to credit the laxity of those who casually direct their attention to the means to guide men who devote their lives to it, and have to get bread by their labour, we are not so sanguine as many of our contemporaries in expecting great improvements in agriculture by the instrumentality of public writers. We are extremely glad to see literature applied to this valuable art, and the practices of one farmer or one country made known to every other; but when principles, practices, and recommendations are extremely numerous and contradictory, as at present, they are more likely to beget confusion than improvement.

The essay in the present collection which is the most immediately interesting, concerns the question "why corn is raised cheaper abroad than in England." The author is both a theoretical and a practical man, who has introduced improvements and seen them generally adopted, and he comes to the conclusion that "the cheaper cost of foreign corn is principally due to no expensive incumbrance existing to grow it, but to the small returns actually obtained for labour in Russia, Poland, Germany, Syria, America, Australia, that the greater supposed natural fertility of the soil and lower prices of labour do not enable those countries to undersell us. He allows, too, that it is not due to the lesser charges on land abroad. In his opinion it arises from "the heavy expenditure which the English farmer alone incurs for the maintenance of fertility, and which costs from four or five shillings to £6 or £7 an acre. The expenses," he says, "incurred by English farmers to raise manure, are so much, in many instances, as to be fatal to profitable farming. In his opinion, the average cost of making, applying, and returning actually obtained for labour in Russia, Poland, Germany, Syria, America, Australia, that the greater supposed natural fertility of the soil and lower prices of labour do not enable those countries to undersell us. He allows, too, that it is not due to the lesser charges on land abroad. In his opinion it arises from "the heavy expenditure which the English farmer alone incurs for the maintenance of fertility, and which costs from four or five shillings to £6 or £7 an acre. The expenses," he says, "incurred by English farmers to raise manure, are so much, in many instances, as to be fatal to profitable farming." In his opinion, the average cost of making, applying, and returning from the hand of Nature, for his bodily wants. Does he feel tired of sedentary occupations, there is his staunch nag grazing in the paddock, ready to afford him the means of taking a 'burst' after an 'emu,' 'kangaroo,' or 'dingo,' accompanied by his faithful hounds; or he may prolong his gallop, and visit a neighbour, where he is sure to meet with a hearty welcome and sterling hospitality. Does, perchance, care or 'blue devils' intrude upon him,

AUSTRALIAN EMIGRATION.

DRIVING HORSES TO THE STOCK-YARD.

> Or should, some wayward hour, the settler's mind
> Brood sad on scenes far ever left behind. CAMPBELL.

there is his never-failing remedy close at hand; seated before his large fire-place in the dim twilight of evening, with outstretched legs, the little 'black pipe' is made to do 'good service and true;' his eye watches the curling pyramids of smoke, as they gracefully ascend to his thatched roof; with every whiff he feels himself better, his thoughts are revelling in the fairy realms of imagination; when all his romantic ideas are suddenly dissipated by the boisterous chorus of his dogs, announcing the arrival of a neighbour, or traveller, and the necessity of providing for his wants in the shape of 'vulgar damper and tea.'"

We perceive, by the Shipping and Mercantile Gazette, that a new produce connected with the agricultural interest in Australia has lately been added to the export articles. Some beef of excellent quality, and perfectly preserved in tin cases, has recently been imported from Newcastle, near Sydney, New South Wales, in considerable quantities, into this country. Many masters of ships have used this Australian beef, and certified to its general fine quality; and with emigrant and passenger ships it must come into extensive use, because it does away with the necessity for taking such large supplies of live stock; but a powerful recommendation is found in the fact that the Admiralty, aware of the great utility in using preserved boiled beef for the crews of her Majesty's ships, have required tenders for the supply of 1,000,000 lb. To shipowners this beef is expected to prove a valuable substitute and charge for their crews, once or twice a week, for salt-beef and pork, especially as it will not involve any extra expence.

We may here mention, too, that, following up the almost ubiquitous fashion of illustrating Emigration and Travel, now so popular with our Panoramic and Dioramic artists in the metropolis, Mr. Skinner Prout has chosen Australia for his land; and his Views in the Colony, now exhibiting in Leicester-square, are well worth a visit. Some of the scenery in the harbour of Port Jackson is remarkably fine.

BUSHING IT.—CAMPED FOR THE NIGHT.

THE WALLERSTEIN GALLERY.

NO. 7.—BYZANTINE SCHOOL.—VIRGIN AND CHILD.

NO. 53.—JAN VAN EYCK.—VIRGIN AND CHILD.

Or the light which the relics of mediæval painting handed down to us have thrown upon the history of the art in Europe, there cannot be the slightest doubt; and it is equally true that these memorials of antiquity have risen in value in proportion to their capability of establishing links in the gradation from school to school. To those who are acquainted with the Continental galleries of ancient pictures, and with some few private collections in our own country, it is no difficult task to trace in unbroken succession the peculiarities of almost every master of importance from an early period down to the revival in the 16th century. But this is a disadvantage of which in England the masses are not possessed; and, as an attempt to obviate this deficiency, a collection of early German and Italian works (many of them of high merit in consideration of the periods during which they were executed) has been introduced into this country through the instrumentality of his Royal Highness Prince Albert; and, we trust, will be offered for sale to the trustees of the National Gallery. This is an occasion of rare and singular occurrence. The pictures are deposited for the present in two of the rooms of Kensington Palace. A catalogue of the pictures has been prepared though it is to be regretted that it is in some few respects wanting in accuracy; for instance, in the description of a picture which it ascribes to Raphael, but which is in reality of a totally different school. This catalogue is, however, at least a valuable appendage; because, besides being to some extent to be depended on, it conveys the idea which has long been entertained of the pictures abroad, and represents the opinion on the subject of the present illustrious possessor, his Serene Highness Prince Louis D'Ottingen Wallerstein.

The history of the Collection is, perhaps, best gleaned from the preface to the private catalogue, containing the following facts:—

When, at the close of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth century, a spirit of innovation threatened, in its first outbreak, to destroy not only customs and institutions, but also the monuments of science and art, some influential persons united to save what could be saved from utter destruction. Among those who so exerted themselves was Prince Louis of Ottingen Wallerstein, who already possessed a collection of antique paintings, which had been for centuries in his family, and which the convulsions of the times enabled him to enrich by many recent acquisitions.

"He arranged his Collection in four classes:—

"I. Paintings of the Byzantine school, comprising the productions of Eastern art between the tenth and the thirteenth century. This part of the Gallery was intended to represent that style which was adopted by Christian artists in the East after the time of Constantine the Great, and which, in consequence of the frequent intercourse between the East and the West under Charlemagne and his successors, through presents made by the Greek Emperors to the Carlovingian Kings, and by the Crusades and the pilgrimages in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, exercised so marked an influence on the fine arts of the West. To this class belong the pictures numbered from 1 to 9.

"II. Early Italian paintings, illustrating, by some eminent and characteristic specimens, the first steps of the art in Italy. To this class belong the pictures numbered from 10 to 26.

"III. A collection of the productions of early German art, comprising the principal masters of the schools of Suabia, Franconia, Saxony, and Upper Germany. This portion of the collection has passed into the possession of the King of Bavaria, who, by the acquisition of the celebrated Boisserée Gallery, has already completed his collection of the older ancient schools. To collection is, however, represented by a few specimens found under the numbers 27 to 49.

"IV. A collection of paintings of the ancient Flemish, Flemish, and Dutch schools, comprehending the remainder of the collection, from numbers 44 to 101, with the above exceptions."

As we have already spoken of other ancient pictures possessed on the Continent, it may be advisable to give a short list of the most celebrated foreign collections, to show how much connoisseurs abroad esteem these venerable artistic documents, and how much a collection of the kind as required by the British public to explain by what steps were realized the glorious efforts of Italy in the 16th century. The collection we have now under notice is the only private one existing that can enter into any rank of rivalry with the Munich Gallery. The Louvre still contains a fair sprinkling of these early painters. The King of Holland availed himself of his former position in Belgium to purchase every fine authenticated work of the early school of his country. These pictures are now at the Hague. The city of Bruges is also rich in such rarities, dispersed in a variety of civil and ecclesiastical buildings, and Ghent and Brussels contain in their museums much of great interest. The Museum of Antwerp possesses the most important in number and consequence of these schools, being the collection formed by one of the late burgomasters, Van Ertborn, who bequeathed the result of his acquirements, by the expenditure of a handsome fortune, to his native city. This splendid gift was not accepted until the learned in art had been consulted, and awarded their judgment upon the authenticity of the various pictures. Berlin, too, contains many capital performances of the same class, including the disreputable pillage of the Van Eycks from Ghent; and in England we possess a considerable number, entirely distributed throughout private collections, with the exception of the two specimens of ancient art from the pencil of Taddeo Gaddi, presented to the nation by Mr. Conyngham, and now placed upon the walls of the National Gallery.

From the Wallerstein collection we have selected four subjects for illustration, and these will serve to give a good idea of the general importance of the whole. The first is taken from the Byzantine class, and is evidently a work of very early date. The master is, of course, unknown. It represents a Virgin and Child, of a peculiar treatment, the drapery consisting entirely of black, edged with red, and heightened with gold. The usual monogrammatic contractions are introduced in the back of the picture, and both figures are provided with "nimbi." The painting is round and soft, and deeply toned in the flesh tints.

The next Engraving is from one of the marvellous works of Jan Van Eyck. This also is a Virgin and Child of exquisite execution, though slightly out of drawing. An artistic contemporary thus speaks of the work under consideration: "To offer a judgment upon the authenticity of works by the early masters which offer no other title than ocular examination, can only be safely done by those who are acquainted with the technical manipulation of the materials and an artistic acquaintance with their indisputable performances. Without presuming upon such qualifications in any high degree, we nevertheless fearlessly assert that the present picture is truly attributed to Jan Van Eyck; it possesses, independant of the analogy of its inventive qualities, precisely the same hints, the same mode of blending, touch, and pencilling the painter has employed in all the great works now existing in the several cities of Bruges, Ghent, and Antwerp, which we have recently investigated with the greatest attention. So little is Jan Van Eyck known in England, that, for many years, there has been before the eyes of all our connoisseurs, real and pretended, a picture by him in a public collection, frequented by all the lovers of pictures, and passed unnoticed under the designation of Leonardo da Vinci; it is called 'The Salvator Mundi,' and stands No. 277 in the catalogue of the Dulwich Gallery. No picture in the national collection invites the attention of the multitude, so much as the solitary example of this master there placed; a sterling proof that where the true qualities of art exist, they attract even those unlearned in its theories."

We now come to the remarkable specimen of Lucas Van Leyden, depicted in the centre of our page. The subject is a conversation between St. Peter and St. Dorothea, who stand in front of a magnificent curtain of green and gold embroidery, which is drawn before a column, over the top of which is seen a distant landscape. Nothing can be more wonderful than the perfect manipulation of this important production, which is upwards of four feet in height. St. Peter holds the Gospel and keys in one hand, and in the other a pair of spectacles, which reflect the quarried glass supposed to hold the position of the spectator. His beard and hair are short, grey, and curling, finished with a great degree of elaboration, and his face is square and broad, according to the usual type. The mantle of the saint is crimson over blue, while St. Dorothea is attired in an ample white robe lined with red and gold brocade over a dress of crimson and gold; her long fair hair, confined by a small garland of flowers, falls over her shoulders; in her right hand she holds a carnation, and the basket, shaped like a vase, which she has in her left, contains a variety of flowers. This painting, so remarkable for its technical skill, is one of a series, the three companion pictures being now in the Pinacotheca at Munich.

Our last illustration is from a long picture by Israel von Meckenen (Mecheln), and represents "The Presentation in the Temple." A dazzling performance. The scene takes place in front of an intricate and beautiful Gothic altar-piece of stone-colour and blue, supported by bronze figures. The background is of burnished gold, from which the groups stand out in clear and brilliant relief. The Virgin presents the infant Christ to the High Priest, who wears a cope of gold embroidery, presenting the subject of the Annunciation. Behind the Virgin stands St. Joseph, holding a torch, and searching his pocket for the money offering. On the same side are a youth and three women, the youngest of whom, perhaps St. Anna—with a torch in her hand, is speaking to him; on this side, also, the youngest of the women holds a dove. The whole picture strongly reminds of the manner of Van Eyck. The companion work, representing "The Marriage of the Virgin," is in the Royal Gallery of Munich.

Such are generalized descriptions of the four pictures we have selected from the Collection before us as being favourable specimens of the whole, and, at the same time, of less grotesque character than many of the pictures, which, it must be confessed, are, from other reasons, also interesting in their way.

We conclude our observations with a list of the entire Gallery, together with the masters' names appended to each picture:—

NO. 67.—LUCAS VAN LEYDEN.—ST. PETER AND ST. DOROTHEA.

MASTERS OF THE BYZANTINE SCHOOL.

1. "The Sudarium, with the Legend of King Abgarus."—2. "The Death of the Virgin." This picture was brought by a Crusader, Count Helfenstein, from the East, and was preserved in the treasury of a Sovereign German abbey until its secularisation.—3. "The Virgin as Queen of Heaven."—4. "Christ enthroned."—5. "Virgin and Child."—6. "Virgin and Child."—7. "Virgin and Child." This is the first of the pictures of which we offer an engraving. It is on copper. Size, 1 foot ½ inch by 9¾ inches.—8. "The Cloisters of Solowetzk, on the White Sea." 9. "The Nativity."—9a (36). "Virgin and Child."

EARLY ITALIAN MASTERS.

10. "Virgin and Child with St. Bernardino." Of the Siennese school.—11-14. "Subjects from the Legend of St. Margaret." Of the Florentine school. These pictures have been since the fourteenth century on the altar of the private oratory of the Abbesses of St. Margaret at Eichstadt.—15-23. "Coronation of the Virgin" By Gaetano of Padua, an early Italian master.—24. "Virgin and Child" By Bernardino Betti, called Pinturicchio; born A.D. 1454; died 1513.—25. "Virgin and Child." Ascribed (but we believe incorrectly) to Raphael Sanzio d'Urbino, born A.D. 1483; died 1520.

MASTERS OF THE EARLY GERMAN SCHOOL, COMPRISING THOSE OF SUABIA, FRANCONIA, AND UPPER GERMANY.

27. "The Holy Family." Master unknown.—28-30. "The Adoration of the Magi between rocks." Master unknown.—31. "The Death of the Virgin." Master unknown.—32. "Virgin and Child." Master unknown.—33. "The Holy Trinity." Master unknown.—34. "Virgin and Child in a garden." By Heinrich Aldegrever, born at Soest, A.D. 1502, died 1562, pupil of Albrecht Dürer. The whole composition of this picture is full of poetry and grace.—35. "The Martyrdom of St. Ursula and her Companions." By the same hand.—36. "Crucifixion." Master unknown, but probably of the school of Suabia.—37. "The Infant Christ learning to Walk." Master unknown.—38. "Holy Family, with Saints." By Sigismund Holbein, uncle of the celebrated Hans Holbein, according to Ch. de Mechein, born at Augsburg, A.D. 1456; flourished, 1500. This picture formerly belonged to the Hohenzollern family (a branch of which is the reigning family of Prussia), and contains several portraits.—39. "Virgin and Child." School of A. Dürer.—40. "The Daughter of Herodias with the Head of St. John the Baptist." School of Lucas Cranach.—41. "The Nativity." Master unknown, signed G. B.—42. "A Portrait." Master unknown, with monogram composed of M. and O.—43. "The Fall of Man." C. J. Behem; 1649.

MASTERS OF THE RHENISH, FLEMISH, AND DUTCH SCHOOLS.

44. "Virgin and Child." Master unknown.—45 to 47. "A Tryptych." Master unknown.—48 and 49. "The Annunciation." Master of the School of Cologne.—50. "Virgin and Child." Master of the Lombard school.

MASTER WILHELM OF COLOGNE, THE VAN EYCKS, AND THEIR IMMEDIATE FOLLOWERS.

51. "St. Catharine of Alexandria, St. Mathew, and St. John the Evangelist." By William Von Coeln, the Chief Master of the School of Cologne; flourished about A.D. 1370-80.—52. "Ecce Homo." By Hubert Van Eyck; born at Alten Eyck, A.D. 1366, died 1426.—53. "Virgin and Child." By J. Van Eyck; born A.D. 1389, died 1472. This is the picture represented in our second Engraving. The Virgin wears a blue tunic, supporting the infant Saviour on a white cushion. The Virgin alone has the "nimbus." On wood: size, 1 foot 4 inches by 11 inches. 54. "Virgin and Child." By Margaret Van Eyck, sister of the former two.—55. "A Pieta." By Hugo Van der Goes; flourished about 1460.—56. "Deposition from the Cross." By Rogier Van Bruges; flourished 1440.—57 and 58. "Ecce Homo," and "Mater Dolorosa." By the same.—59. "Portrait of an Ecclesiastic." By Memelinck; flourished about 1480.—60. "Madonna and Child in a Landscape." Master unknown.—61 to 63. "Coronation of the Virgin." As extraordinary performance, which ought, it appears, to be ascribed to Antonello de Messina.

DUTCH MASTERS, AND FOLLOWERS OF VAN EYCK

64. "The Presentation in the Temple." By Israel Van Meckenen, born A.D. 1440; died 1503. This subject has furnished our fourth illustration. It is on wood; size, 3 feet 7 inches by 2 feet 9½ inches.—65. "Portrait of a Lady of the maiden name of Hoferle." By the same.—66. "Virgin and Child in a Garden." By Cornelius Engelbrechtsen, born A.D. 1468; died 1533. 67. "St. Peter and St. Dorothea." By Lu. Van Leyden, born A.D. 1494; died 1538. On this picture we have already offered some comments in the description of our Engraving of it: size 4 feet 2 inches by 2 feet 4½ inches.—68. "Holy Family, with Angels." By Quintin Matsys; born A.D. 1450; died 1529—69. "Judith." By the same.—70. "Portrait of a Female." By Bernard Van Orley; born A.D. 1490; died 1560—71. "Mount Calvary." By Jan Van Mabux; died A.D. 1562.—72. "The Magdalen." By the same.—73. "Christ and Mary Magdalen." By the same.—74. "The Holy Family." By Jan Van Schoreal; born A.D. 1495; died 1569.—75. "St. John in the Isle of Patmos." By Joachim Patenier, born at Dinant, A.D. 1490.—76. "St. Christopher." By the same.—77. "The Crucifixion." By the same.—78, 1 "Virgin and Child with Two Saints." By Dierick Stuerbout, finished A.D. 1468 70. "Virgin of the Rosary." By Roger Van der Weyde; finished A.D. 1500; died 1529—30. "Adoration of the Magi." By Jan Van Beersen: born A.D. 1850—91 to 93. "Adoration of the Magi." By the same: completed 1891 to 94.—84. "Adoration of the Infant Christ." By Martin Van Heemskerk: born A.D. 1498; died 1574—85. "Portrait of Cosmo I., Grand Duke of Tuscany." By Antonio Moro; born A.D. 1519; died 1575.—86 to 88. "Adoration of the Magi." By Henri de Bles; flourished 1510.—89. "Portrait of a Young Man." By the same.—90. "The Circumcision." By Arnoudt Boghaert.—91 to 93. "Deposition from the Cross." By Michael Coxie (Coxcie); born A.D. 1497; died 1592.—94. "St. Francis receiving the Stigmata." Master unknown.—95. "Adoration of the Magi." Master unknown.—96. "Virgin and Child." Master unknown. 97. "Crucifixion." Master unknown.—98. "The Dead Christ Lamented by Two Female Saints" (formerly Magdalen and Mary. Master unknown.—99. "The Treachery of Judas." Master unknown: marked 'A. T., 1501.' 100. "The Archangel Gabriel." Master unknown.—101. "A Girl Writing." Master unknown.—102. "Virgin and Child." Master unknown.

NO. 64.—ISRAEL VAN MECHELN.—THE PRESENTATION IN THE TEMPLE.

We have now enumerated in full order the whole of the pictures in this important collection, and can only add our hope that so splendid and rare an opportunity of acquiring for the nation such a complete history of the art of painting from the earliest epoch to the 17th century, will not be lost.

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.

A very meritorious Exhibition of works of modern art has just been opened by a society of artists, twenty-six in number, calling themselves the National Institution. The Association originated with a number of artists, who felt that very inadequate accommodation for the exhibition of their works was afforded by existing institutions; that a society was wanting in which each artist might have the control, as far as practicable, of the arrangement of his picture, that every work should at least have the advantage of being well seen. The present Institution, it will perhaps be remembered, exhibited for the first time at the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly, and afterwards at the Hyde Park or Chinese Gallery, and that the first name was the "Free Exhibition of Modern Art." The expense, however, we are told, entailed by this primary arrangement, became so much more serious than was originally contemplated, that it was found necessary to abandon the principle in part, and to throw open the Galleries "free" for all the first period only. The Proprietary Institution, notwithstanding, will still retain the same leading principle for which it started, and the Galleries will, it is stated, "be opened at the end of the season for a fortnight, free of charge, for the benefit of the working classes." This is a step in the right direction, and one, moreover, which Lord John Russell the other night regretted that the Royal Academy had not adopted.

The National Institution consists of the following members:—W. Barraud (trustee), H. Barraud, H. W. Bave, Marshall Claxton, O. R. Campbell, T. C. Dibdin, L. W. Desanges, C. H. Dukes, A. D. Fripp, R. McM'an, R. S. Lauder (president and trustee), W. Lukeing, J. G. Middleton (treasurer and trustee), E. J. Niemann, Sidney Percy, James Peel, Samuel Rayner, Frederick Rumble, Bernard Smith (hon. secretary), J. Thomas, Godfrey Thomas, C. J. Underhill, W. Williams, G. B. Wilcocks, J. G. Waller, and E. C. Williams. The rooms are four in number, and have been built expressly for the Institution. The suite immediately opposite the Polytechnic Institution] is excellent, and the rooms are on the ground floor, large and admirably lighted.

The number of exhibitors is eighty four, and the number of works exhibited three hundred and seventy-three. In point of general quality, the president, Mr. R S Lauder, takes the lead, and is well supported by Mr. McLan, Mr. Desanges, Mr. Middleton, Mr. Percy, Mr. A. W Williams, among the members; and among the exhibitors, by Mr. A. Mutaar (celebrated for his pure portraits), Mr. J. E. Lauder, Mr. Deverell, and Mrs. M'Lan. The prices (an excellent practice) are stated to each picture in the catalogue. Some are high. There are two at £500; and twenty, in all, at prices ranging from £.00 to £315 inclusive.

As to general subjects, the principal contributors are by Mr R. S. Lauder and Mr. Armitage; the former sending (No. 240) "Christ Appearing to Two of his Disciples on his way to Emmaus;" and the latter (No. 57), a study of "Samson and a Firebrand to the Foxes' Tails." Mr. Lauder has the largest canvas and the most ambitious subject; but Mr. Armitage is broad and effective, and excels in colour.

Among the exhibitors from general history, the principal works are contributed by Mr. Desanges, Mr. Clax on, and Mr. Newenham. Mr. Desanges has sent a large, and in some respects clever picture, representing the accommodation of Robert, King of France, and Constance, his wife. Mr. Claxton's subject is "Marie Antoinette with her children escaping from Versailles, when the palace was attacked by the mob;" and Mr. Newenham's "The Princes in the Tower." Mr. Claxton has well represented the perturbation of hurry, joined with female terrors and strength; but Mr. Newenham has only given a couple of pretty boys, first fail to evoke a single feeling connected with their prison in the Tower and their uncle Gloucester.

In the class of subject pictures, the two Landers and Mr and Mrs. M'Lan bear away the palm of excellence. Mr. R. S. Lauder (the President) was seldom stronger than he is in No 45, "Gallerit, the Astrologer, showing Louis XI. the first specimen of Printing;" nor has Mr. J. E. Lauder ever had more advantage than in No. 179, "The Cradle and Spinning-Wheel," an interior, painted in a style something between Wilkie and Alexander Fraser. Mr. R. S. Lauder's second picture, from "Quentin Durward," is not equal to Mr. J. E. Lauder's "Mal-apropos, or One too Many," two female figures of the size of life, much to be commended for anything but its colour. Mrs. M'Lan has a most touching prison scene called "Constancy" (No. 114). A young mother in prison watching the swallows that fly within and without her prison walls. Mr. M'Lan, an able and ample contributor to the Hibernian, has a pleasing "Highland Ford" (No. 2), and an impressive prison scene (No. 55), called "Here's his Health in Water," representing a Highland gentleman of 1715 in Carlisle prison, receiving, the day previous to his execution, the last visit of his mother, wife, and children, and enabling into his cell (the future Highland gentleman of 1745) the principles of loyalty to the House of Stuart.

Among the painters who have sought for subjects in the vast body of English poetry, no one is more successful than Mr. Deverell in No. 143, a scene from "Twelfth Night," representing the Clown singing to the Duke. Amidst a certain odd lit. of treatment and hardness of manner, there is a right interpretation of the poet's drawing, and a minstrel and mediæval feeling not commonly seen in the works of English artists.

The stre gth of the Exhibition is in the number of excellent transcripts from English scenery. Mr Sidney Percy is contributed, for the first time, on a very large canvas, and shews his skill in rendering the beauties of vernal nature. Mr. G. A. Williams has a small but most exquisite circular picture (No. 170), "Barmar Church, Kent" marked "Sold, and, of course, "Sold." The elder Mr. Williams has a good moonlight scene on the Thames, at Putney (No 88); and a morning scene (still better), called "Hailing the Ferry" (No. 139), while Mr. T. C. Dibdin, in No 190 ("Sierra, Eas, the birth-place of Qualus the poet"), has transferred to canvas a scene which many have beheld with pleasurable feelings from the associations with which it is invested.

In portraiture there is a faithful full-length likeness of Sir James Duke, the late Lord Mayor, by J. Harris; and a three-quarter portrait of more than average merit, "Mrs. Gall" (No. 70), by F. Newenham. The best portrait in the Exhibition is a small half-length of the Rev. James White, the Canadist, by Mr. C. S. Lauder.

Some cattle pieces of average merit, and Mr. Barraud's Charity Children, "We praise Thee, O God," complete the notable lities of the Exhibition, which will be found to contain about 400 works.

We intend to give engravings of several of the works exhibited, at an early period.

FINE ARTS.

SCHEFFER'S "CHRISTUS REMUNERATOR."

This picture is an illustration of the text in Matth. c. iii, v. 12, and exhibits the Saviour in the act of gathering his Elect, by extending both his arms, to assemble them, as it were, "under his wings" while the Rejected, on a dark ground of the picture, are shewn in a state of despair. There are the crowned tyrant, the military assassin, with the rich and the powerful, in astonishment and terror, gazing at a distance on the poor and the afflicted, who are proved to be the favourites of the Messiah's promised care. The attitude of the Saviour combines majesty and grace, and there is much beauty in the repentant and suffering groups. A mother with her infant, and a child being taught the Gospel, are episodes well and expressively thrown in. As a companion picture to the "Divine Consolator," this picture of M. Airy Scheffer's deserves engraving, and is now on view for that purpose at Messrs. Colnaghi's, Pall-mall.

CHUMBAL AND CHILLIANWALLA.

Captain C. B. Young, of the Bengal Engineers, has painted two pictures connected with the British Indian army, which, from their truthfulness, are deserving great praise. Each picture is indeed their literal Sikhery; but there is a cleverness beyond, which nevertheless gives them claims to art. The first represents the Passage of the "River Chumbal" by the army under the command of Lord Gough; and has many points of attraction. The troops, baggage, and camp followers are shown in motion on the march, with a liveliness and reality which cannot fail to interest. The second exhibits the "Battle of Chillianwala," and presents the army as moving into position. Both are now on view at Messrs. Dickinson's, New Bond-street, who are preparing them for immediate publication in the best style of tinted lithography, as companion prints. The subjects will, no doubt, prove extremely interesting.

BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR.

A model of the Battle of Trafalgar, by Messrs. Sherrin and Haines, is now on view at 168, New Bond-street. It exhibits sixty-five of the ships that were in action that occasion, in the positions which they actually occupied during the first two hours of the engagement. These are mounted on a composition board resembling the sea; and the spectator has thus the preliminaries of this splendid victory real zed for him: while the scientific in naval warfare may su ject the whole arrangement to analysis. The accuracy of the diagram, we are told, may be depended upon; and the exhibition has claims on public attention for the information it so attractively conveys.

AMERICAN SCENERY.

Mr. Harvey, at the Gallery of Illustrations, in the Haymarket, has been exhibiting a series of what he calls "Atmospheric Landscapes," taken from American scenes, with which he has become so familiar, as to be able to depict their minutest changes under atmospheric influences. The detail in these sketches is wonderful for its literal truthfulness and picturesque beauty. The seasons and the times of day are here most exquisitely illustrated. The artist, with great judgment, has confined himself to what is really characteristic in his subjects; and, according y, in flat, and tame, and wearisome as all American scenery is to the slightest and least-heeded touch. An exhibition of such peculiar interest and novelty deserves encouragement.

PASTEL PAINTING.

M. Victor Roberts has now exhibiting, in the Gallery in Oxford street, a rather numerous series of portraits and fancy pieces, which, from their artistic character, are likely to bring the pastel style of painting into fashion. The pastel is the crayon brought by chemical means to the utmost perfection; and, as illustrated in these examples, is known with great effect as to extraordinary advantage. A portrait of the artist's wife, for instance, is particularly powerful and brilliantly coloured. A Watteau imitation, representing the Princess de Lamballe at Trianon, is also a favourable specimen; and the whole will repay an hour's careful inspection.

MUSIC.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The fourth concert took place last Monday, at the Hanover Rooms. The programme was exclusively made up of English compositions; the first part opening with Mr. H. Leslie's Symphony in F, and the second with Mr G. A. MacFarren's MS. Symphony in D, entitled "Malvern." The overture to Sir Bishop's "Castle of Lymon" and Wallace's "Maritana," and there was also, Mr G. A. Osborne's "Marche Characteristique." Between the instrumental selections four madrigals were sung—Mr. John Hullah's "Song should breathe" (renewed), J. Barnby's "Waits," Mr. W. Horsley's "See the chariot at hand," and T. Morley's "Now is the month of maying" (1595). The above schemes is an indication of considerable spirit on the part of the society; and so long as it refines the fastidious, and gives encouragement to all efforts good, but we trust the members will devote their services solely to their own arena; it would, indeed, be a pity to be regretted that the large body of struggling professors should be in the slightest degree injured by amateur aid being extended to public concerts

The Symphonies were conducted by their respective composers—that of Mr. Leslie is more steady played than on the former occasion. The latter was presented for the first time. The scherzo, in which Mr Nowlands's cornet playing was to be remarked, was encored; and the symphony altogether confirmed the favourable impressions entertained of the talents of the young musician. Mr. Macfarren's production, with the exception of the andante in A, a charming movement, is in C, nine eight time, was but a scramble, and it would be therefore unjust to pronounce any definite opinion on its merits, intricate and novel as were some of the minor working. Mr. L. Negri conducted the remainder of the programme with ability. The fifth concert will be on the 29th inst.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Next Monday will be the fourth Philharmonic Concert Mr. John Parry will give Albert Smith's entertainment of "Lights and Shadows" at Crosby Hall; and Mr. Milne and the Misses Smith their selection of Scotch melody at the Hanover Square rooms.—On Tuesday will be the third meeting of the Musical Union, at which Charles Hallé will perform.—On Wednesday morning Mr Platt's farewell Concert, at the Hanover Rooms; and Mr. Aguilar's concert in the evening.—On Saturday (the 27th), the Royal Academy of Music concert.—On Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre; and the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden; and English Opera every night, at the Princess's.——Miss Chandler's concert took place on Friday at the Music Hall, Fore street.——At Exeter Hall, last night (Friday), the London Sacred Harmonic Society performed Handel's oratorio, "Judas Maccabeus," conducted by Mr Surman, with the Misses A. and M. Williams, Stuart, Messrs. Young Reeves, T. Williams, and Weiss.——On the same evening, Messrs. G. and J. Case, the concertina players, gave their annual concert at the London Tavern.——Sir H. R. Bishop delivered a Lecture on Music, at Crosby Hall, on Thursday night, on "Dramatic Music." Mr. Lucas performed on the chief organ for the last time, next Friday (the 26th), at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, with Miss C. Hayes, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Sims Reeves, A. Mortimer, and Herr Formes as chief singers.—Frequenters of the two Italian Opera Houses are often puzzled to find out the friends they may recognise in the stalls or boxes, and seeking for them are frequently in the wrong direction. Messrs. Lander and Cock, of 308 Bond-street, have issued neatly engraved pocket-plans of the interiors of both houses; and the amateur, at a glance, will easily ascertain the box or stall he wishes to engage, or to look for his acquaintances. These plans are not new, but are given in a then enlarged form.——Mr. Balfe's opera in "musical life," of some interest, took place on Monday; Mr. Balfe's eldest daughter being married to Maximilian Behrend, Esq., a banker of Dantzic.

DEATH OF MADAME DULCKEN.

We regret to announce the death of Madame Dulcken, pianiste to her Majesty, who received at her residence in Lancaster-gate, on Tuesday morning (the 18th inst.), after a short illness, a husband and six children to lament her premature decease. She was suffering for some time from abscess in the ear, and a final attack of delirium proved fatal in a few hours.

Madame Dulcken was a Miss David, and a sister of the celebrated violinist David, of Leipsic. She first came to this country in 1839, and her brilliant style of playing ensured her from many years the first position in our public concerts, besides obtaining the honour of playing before the Queen every year were marketable for a classical selection of music, and her annual concert was regarded as one of the events of the season. Madame Dulcken was a universal favourite; she was intelligent and animated in conversation.

THE SHROVE-TIDE CARNIVAL AT ST. PETERSBURG

(From our own Correspondent. Continued from page 271.)

Besides the doings in the Admiralty-square, which I have already endeavoured to describe in such a manner as to make those who have never been at St. Petersburg as familiar with them as I am myself, there are various signs throughout the capital that betoken a holiday. The Carnival is an inundation which, beginning with the lower classes, mounts until it has covered the very pinnacles and peaks of society.

The Winter Palace is a wonderful edifice, as compact as a cottage and as large as a town, stands on the water's edge, or rather on the edge of the ice. Thereabout, and in view of its windows, races are held day over those diamond flats with which the ultimate has paved the broad waters of the Neva. There is no pretension in these daily races, which, however, are occasionally interspersed, during the course of the winter, with others of a more elaborate character. But to these you may ride a Russ race, or all is a little more exciting, any day, between sledges drawn by the light, nimble horses which are here so cheap and so abundant. Nor is there a deficiency of sledges. Yoked to tiny sledges, you see of all sizes coursing over the congenial field; and for a few kopeks in it you may take a drive. Along each side of the course a line of fir-trees seem to grow in the ice a temporary umbrage suited to the temporary scene. The streets seem more animated, the Gostinoi Dvor more busy, the quays and bridges more crowded, and the whole city more brilliant. Parties of pleasure are made, large coaches with four and six horses are hired, and families of every form projected and executed. The very costumes of the people out of doors are more variegated than at other times of the year. The ice-hills on the canals, the river, and the bay, yet the sun of spring, bright, joyful, conquering and to conquer, rises day after day, and already sheds a foretaste of its true temperature, in the warmth of its noon-tide beams, and a languor and perspersed with other dreams, that recall the thoughts towards the West, the dear West. In a short time a thousand signs remind us, the sea will arise and shake off its tyrant, navigation will be restored, and many a severed circle reunited.

Such circumstance particularly arrested my attention among the motley characteristics of the Carnival. I saw a splendid coach, English built and English appointed, drawn by four superb horses in the finest condition, and attended by several servants. I noticed the Imperial livries. This carriage was followed by another equipage, its very counterpart; this by another, till twenty coaches and their eighty noble horses had passed in succession. No one was inside any of the vehicles. A little time afterwards I again observed one of these returning at a quicker pace, and full of young girls, all dressed alike, in the prettiest attire, chatting and laughing like so many birds. It was charming to see how they enjoyed themselves, as it is always charming to see the enjoyment of the young and especially of elegant little girls. "What are these?" asked I. "School-girls from the Catherina Institute," was the reply. "But the Emperor's carriages," persisted I; "how came the little rogues who are, I see, so pretty pranket out, to be dirty in his sledges?" "Simply because they are his," was the answer. "No one was inside any of the carriages," said my friend, "he always does this sort of thing during the Carnival."

With respect to the out-door amusements of the Carnival, they consist chiefly in a multiplication of all sorts of parties, breakfasts, luncheons, dinners, and suppers. A species of mutual feasting prevails. People go to theatrical representations in the morning, and to others in the evening. Amusement is pursued with furious energy. As the season advances it is more and more frequented the nearer it is to its close for a season, and to its transference to London.

It may easily be imagined that no ordinary measure of eating and drinking accompanies this general burst of festivity. But to those it is one: and, perhaps, it is in some degree owing to the sharp transition from the Shrovetide repletion to the jejune austerities of Lent (which among the Russians is far from being a mere form) that the Russian Carnival is so full of riot, and then again the equally sharp transition from Lent to Easter-fare, that the visitation of the cholera has nowhere assumed so aggravated or malignant a form as in the capital of Russia. When at its height, there was not time or care left among the living to properly bury the dead; and the proportion of the latter to the former was, it is well known, more appalling than in any other city in Europe. Many moreremains were carried through the streets, the last summer but one, not inclosed decently in coffins, but wrapped up carelessly in sheets or blankets the same bed-clothes which had borne their last wretches. It is now supposed, thank God, that the plague in question has done its mission for the present, and that it will not this year re-visit St. Petersburg. But, as I was remarking, it is conceivable that while its power prevailed, the customs of the Russians themselves—their extreme austerity during Lent, preceded and followed by excessive indulgence—must have prepared them, before the arrival of summer, for receiving and fostering the disorder in their disturbed constitutions; a result which several dishes, universally popular here—such as the concombre (a kind of small cucumber, very pleasant and refreshing, but equally gelid and crude) may have contributed to aggravate. And yet, how many horrible stories of conspiracies among the doctors or among Poles and other foreigners, took possession of the people's minds! But this farce subject of stories and rumours, and even fact, is now far away from the festival of Carnival, which alone I have at present undertaken to describe. And if, amid all the scenes I have endeavoured in a general and light manner to sketch, you conceive the prevalence of a character half speaking of the simplicity of a fair and half of the brilliancy of a great town and great court, you will have the picture before you.

At present it is not otherwise before myself. We are now in the shady road of Lent; and the boisterous gaiety of Carnival is like the receding sound of a water-fall. Even the structures in the Admiralty square have disappeared as if by magic; for, though they will be rebuilt at Easter, the very sight of them, untenanted though they should be, is not allowed to profane the spirit of this penitential season. The laughing face of the capital is already changed to reserved, sober, and ascetic looks.

PORTRAIT OF KING CHARLES THE FIRST.—The original portrait of Charles the First, that was supposed to have been lost in the time of the Commonwealth, and to prevent the discovery of the portrait, they reduced it in size by cutting it, has been found in Barnstaple. It was painted by Vandyck in the year 1640, when the King was forty years of age, one year before the painter died. The picture, which is in excellent preservation, has been thrown about as valueless; it was so black it could scarcely be perceived what it represented, and the frame so rotten that it broke away as it hung. For the last ten years it was in the possession of Mr. Ward, at the Seven Stars, Anchor-lane; and when he left the house and sold off, Mr. W. Lewis, furniture dealer, Silver-street, bought it and took it home. It was thrown about for a long time under the heap of rubbish; at last it was picked up and ordered to be scrubbed with the scrubbing-brush, and the dirt washed off, when it was found to be very much injured. Several people passed a remark, who asked the price of it, but thought they would consider the matter; at last Mr. Taylor saw it, and bought it for 28s.; within a week he was offered £5 for it; that offer was refused, and it was sold for £10. He then took it to the National Gallery, to know if there was such a painting missing, and had an answer there was; but finding it had to go through a process to bring it to its original, returned to Barnstaple again with it, and since that he has been offered as much as £2000; but it is considered worth £20,000, being one of the most valuable paintings known.—Western Luminary.

THE GREAT SEA-SERPENT.—The following letter from a gentleman of Beaufort gives exciting news of what, by this time, be the 'seat of war.' The old fellow has got into close quarters, and if he does not make a sudden and desperate rush, he nothing else than offering himself as an oblation on the altar of science: 'Beaufort, March 15, 1850. The report of Captain Bankenship and passengers has been verified by many other witnesses. This formidable sea-monster has been seen again and again, and in our waters. When discovered by those on board the steamer, 'his eminence' was in Port Royal Sound, a distance of seven or eight miles from this town. Since that time he has been hardly making as way up Broad River, and was seen by a gentleman, we understand, to-day, in White Branch River, an arm of the Broad. He is reported to be making his way higher up still, when, perhaps, he may be killed. He is described as being from 120 to 150 feet in length, and of proportionate bulk; has the head of a serpent, which he carries, when in motion, five or six feet out of the water. About ten feet from his head is a hump, resembling a huge logshead, and as far as he could be seen out of the water a succession of humps was observed. He was pursued for several miles along the bank of the river, at times the party in pursuit coming very near to him. He was shot at with a rifle and shot gun, when he at once set to work making his head and tail meet. On the same evening, Messrs. G. and J. Case, the concertina players, gave their annual concert at the London Tavern.——Sir H. R. Bishop delivered a Lecture on Music, at Crosby Hall, on Thursday night, on "Dramatic Music." Mr. Lucas performed on the chief organ for the last time, next Friday (the 26th), at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, with Miss C. Hayes, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Sims Reeves, A. Mortimer, and Herr Formes as chief singers.—Frequenters of the two Italian Opera Houses are often puzzled to find out the friends they may recognise in the stalls or boxes, and seeking for them are frequently in the wrong direction. Messrs. Lander and Cock, of 308 Bond-street, have issued neatly engraved pocket-plans of the interiors of both houses; and the amateur, at a glance, will easily ascertain the box or stall he wishes to engage, or to look for his acquaintances. These plans are not new, but are given in a then enlarged form.——Mr. Balfe's opera in "musical life," of some interest, took place on Monday; Mr. Balfe's eldest daughter being married to Maximilian Behrend, Esq., a banker of Dantzic.

BUSTS OF MR. ALISON, AND MR. MACAULAY.

BY PARK.

Mr. Archibald Alison, author of the "History of Europe," is son of the author of the well-known "Essay on Taste." He holds the office of sheriff of Lanarkshire, and resides at Possil-house, in the county of Glasgow, where his official duties compel him to reside. Though educated for the profession of the law, and daily administering justice as the principal local judge of a populous district, Mr. Alison's tastes are entirely literary. Besides the "History of Europe," in 20 volumes—a work which, we believe, has exceeded in the pages of Constable's Annual Register,' long since discontinued—Mr. Alison has written a "Life of Marlborough," and various economic and political pamphlets. He is also a frequent contributor to Blackwood's Magazine. It is, however, upon his "History of Europe" that his fame principally rests. If Mr. Alison be not the most successful of modern historians, we know not to whom the palm can be justly conferred. His work is to be found in every library, and bids fair to rank hereafter as the most valuable historical production of the age in which he lived. This success is due not only to the importance and interest of his theme, but to the skilful, eloquent, and generally correct manner in which he has treated it. Many doubtless, have justly called in question the errors of opinion as well as of commission, as we have heard of a literary amateur whose chief amusement for some years past has been to make a list of his mistakes; but, after all deductions of this kind, enough of merit remains in the work to entitle its author to a place in the highest rank of contemporary authors.

The bust of Mr. Alison, of which we present an Engraving, from a drawing by Mr. Frank Howard, was executed by Mr. Patin Park in the year 1848, and presented in marble to Mr. Alison by a body of his private friends in Glasgow, as a testimonial of their friendship for him as an individual, of the esteem and respect due to him in his public capacity, and of their local judges; and of their admiration of his writings. It is considered a very excellent likeness, and one of the best of Mr. Park's recent works.

Mr. Macaulay, though ambitious at one time, and perhaps still, of a reputation for poetry—though an accurate, and a brilliant essayist—though a doubtless, high-minded and intellectual orator, who could command at all times the attention of an assembly that rather dislikes studied eloquence, seems at present inclined to build up his fame upon his historical writings. Most of his admirers consider that, in this respect, he has judged wisely. As a poet—however pleasing his "Lays of Ancient Rome," and some of his other ballads, may be—he could never have succeeded in retaining the affection of the public. Depth of feeling—earnest and far-seeing thought—fancy, imagination—a musical ear—a brilliancy of expression—and an absolute mastery of words, are all equally essential to him who, in this or any other time, would climb the topmost heights of Parnassus. Mr. Macaulay has fancy, but not high imagination; and though his ear is good, and his command of language unsurpassed by any living writer, he lacks the earnestness and the deep philosophy of all the highest poets. As a critic he is, perhaps, the first of his age; but his criticism is the best developments, is but a secondary thing to the art upon which it thrives. Mr. Macaulay has in him the stuff of which artists and originators are made; and we are of the number of those who rejoice that, in the vigour of his days, he has formed a proper estimate of his own powers, and that he has abandoned the poetical studies, in the prosecution of which he never could have attained to the rank of one of those critical corrections, which, however beautiful, must always have been placed in a lower scale of merit than the compositions upon which they were founded; and that he has devoted his life to the production of an original work in the very highest department of literature.

There was, at one time, a prospect before Mr. Macaulay of being one of the men who made, instead of those who wrote, history; but his recent retirement from Parliament and from public life has, for awhile at least, closed up that avenue. In cultivating at leisure the literary pursuits that he loves, we trust that he, as well as the world, will be the gainer; and that his "History of England," when completed, will be worthy of so high a title. As yet the field is clear before him. The histories that have hitherto appeared are mostly bad or indifferent. Some are good, but not sufficiently good to satisfy the wants of the reader, or to render unnecessary the task of more enlightened, more impartial, more painstaking, and more elegant writers. There never was a work of art, whether in painting, sculpture, music, or literature, in which lynx-eyed criticism could not detect a flaw, or something deficient which

(Continued on page 280.)

NEW BOOKS, &c.

SPRAYS from the HEDGEROWS. By Mrs. HADFIELD. Royal 18mo., elegantly bound with Engraved Title and Portrait of the Author. 4s. 6d.
London: LARTON and Co., 58, Holborn-hill.

THE COMFORTER: Dedicated to all Hospitals. By the Rev RICHARD CORBOLD, M.A., Author of "A Father's Legacy to his Daughters," "Visits from the Mount," "Z on the Martyrs," &c. "Who would not recommend such a book as this?"—Record. PARTS I. AND II.

CHESS MADE EASY. A Manual exclusively for Beginners. By GEORGE WALKER, Author of various Works on Chess.—WM. and THOS. PIPER, 23, Paternoster-row.

In cloth, gilt edges, price 3s. 6d.

LITERARY CLEANINGS, by an Invalid. "A real casket of jewels."—Church and State Gazette. "A very charming little book."—New Monthly Belle Assemblée. "A more unexceptionable Easter gift could not be recommended."—Morning Post.
W. NARTLEY, 5, Regent-street, Holborn.

Just published, price 6d., post free 8d.,

EPILEPSY; an Answer to the Question "What is the Nature of Epilepsy?" and a rational principle deduced on which the treatment of the disease ought to be conducted.—By JOHN JACKSON, M.R.C.S., &c.
London: S. HIGHLEY, 32, Fleet-street.

GOVERNMENT EDUCATION.
Just published, price 6d.,

A FEW FACTS; in Reply to the Animadversions of the Rev. F. CLOSE, and the Editor of the "Record," on the Principles of the British and Foreign Educational Meeting at Willis's Rooms; showing that some of their principal Statements are altogether opposed to the facts
By THOMAS J. GRAHAM, M.D.
"Speaking the truth in love."
London: Published by SIMPKIN MARSHALL, and Co.

Now Publishing,

THE LADY'S LIBRARY. In Monthly Parts, Price One Shilling each.
Part I. KNITTING and EMBROIDERY.
Part II. CROCHET and LACE-WORK.
Part III. POINT LACE and TATTING.
To be Published on the 1st of May!
And to be Followed by other Numbers, containing clear and practical Instructions in Arts hitherto little known, and now for the first time placed within the Public, with Explanations and Illustrations.
DARTON and Co., Holborn-hill, and all Booksellers, &c.

THE HOME CIRCLE. One Penny.—The NEW SERIES of FAMILY READING, conducted by Miss AGNES STRICKLAND, and other eminent writers, embraces Essays, Tales, Poetry, History, Science, Biography, Antiquities, Natural History, Domestic Economy, Knitting, Crochet, Embroidery, and Work Patterns, Columns for Boys and Students, Youth, Classical Quest ons and Translations, Solutions, Gardening, Fashions, Household Treasures, Receipts in Cookery, Chess Problems, Intercommunication, &c. &c. Weekly Parts, 64 pages, 1s., now ready. The First Volume handsomely bound, 4s.; and as 6d. gilt. Other, 6d., 8d., Marble-leaves, and all Booksellers.

Bound in a beautiful illuminated cover, price 8s. quarto, gilt edges (to 63 from by post),

THE LADY'S ALBUM of FANCY WORK. New Series. Containing novel, elegant, and useful Designs in Knitting, Crochet, Embroidery, Point Lace, Guipure, Tatting, Netting, Braiding, Plaiting, Cutting Paper, Flower Making, Wax Flowers, Columns for Boys and Students Youth, Classical Quest ons and Translations, Solutions, Gardening, Fashions, Household Treasures, Receipts in Cookery, Chess Problems, Intercommunication, &c. &c. Weekly Parts, 64 pages, 1s., now ready. The First Volume handsomely bound, 4s.; and as 6d. gilt. Other, 6d., 8d., Marble-leaves, and all Booksellers.

"The Album" takes higher ground than the works hitherto published, both as regards the size, the elegance of its exterior, and the beauty and useful nature of its contents. Needlework Lady's Magazine. "An extensive present useful, tasteful, and artistic. Illustrated London News. "The present volume is even more beautiful than the former." Standard of Freedom
D. MARCH and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE FAVOURITE LIBRARY.—A Series of Works for the Young, each with an Illustration by a well-known Artist, bound in an elegant cover, and as the uniform price of SIXPENCE.
1. ILLUSTRATED HERD-BOY. By Lady STODDART.
2. MRS. LEICESTER'S SCHOOL. By CHARLES and MARY LAMB.
3. MRS. TRIMMER'S HISTORY of the ROBINS.
4. MEMOIRS of DOG, the SPITTING TERRIER!
5. KEEPER'S TRAVELS in SEARCH of his MASTER.
6. THE SCOTTISH CHIEFS. By Lady STODDART. (On April 30.)
GRANT and GRIFFITH, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

PRIZE PATTERNS, GRATIS.—The LADIES' GAZETTE of FASHION for MAY, price One Shilling, contains Coloured Fashions, Full-length Figures, Patterns of unrivalled novelty and real practical utility. The grand Prize Pattern of Prizes, Five Full-length Figures, 50 Figures, 150 Patterns 30 Cloaks, 3s. Wedding Dresses, 50 Bonnets and Caps, Children's Dresses, Ball Dresses, &c., in a single Number. With full Directions. Post free for six stamps extra.—G. BERGER, Holywell-street, Strand; and all booksellers.

A NEW EDITION OF
WADE'S HANDBOOK TO THE PIANO-FORTE, containing Instructions and Exercises for the Practice of New Exercises, by JOHN BARNETT, price 6s., comprising an easy Introduction to the Study of the Pianoforte, that Instrument, and Music in general, the Art of Fingering, according to the modes of the best Masters, numerous Progressive Exercises, Scales, &c., for the Improvement of the Performer, and Directions for rehearsing from study, consisting of Airs, Duets, and Concerted Pieces, by Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Pleyel, Dussek, Steibelt, Cramer, Clementi, Moscheles, and others. And an easy Introduction to Harmony for Counterpoint, and a New Vocabulary of Terms.
Published by MAPPIN'S Music Warehouse, New Bond-street; and by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

AN ELEGANT PRESENT.
THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT. (AUTHORISED VERSION.)
Beautifully bound in morocco antique and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings. In paper cover, Half-a-Crown. With Sixty Splendid Engravings from drawings executed by Eminent Artists, expressly for this Edition. Notes, Historical, Explanatory, and Descriptive; and embellished by a novel Pictorial Picture of the Holy Land, as a Frontispiece, presenting at one view the principal Sacred Sites connected in the Old and New Testament, arranged by easy reference.
THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some fine bold and imaginative sketches. Much text has been shown in the choice of subjects; and even those which have been, as it were, pictorially used by many artists, are treated in a fresh and original manner.
A publication characterized by the spirit of the well-known producer of the Illustrated London News, and deserved, we doubt not, to promote far and wide. The illustrations are characterized by a daring originality, and finished with a boldness of outline that make them immensely attractive.—Wesleyan.
London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers.

Price Five Shillings, cloth gilt,
Printed in Black and Red Letters, with Illustrations, HISTORIC RELIQUES;
OR,
ARMS, JEWELLERY, GOLD and SILVER PLATE, FURNITURE, ARMOUR, &c.,
In Royal 8vo. Noble Collections, Galleries, and Public Institutions, &c., as well as FORMERLY BELONGED TO INDIVIDUALS EMINENT IN HISTORY AND ROMANCE.
DRAWN FROM THE ORIGINALS AND ETCHED
BY JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS.

Relics of antiquity, in themselves most interesting and instructive, have become still more so from the circumstance that many of them are now for the first time brought before the public, and in a form which does not look with jealous interest on a single production of the past. Here we have the "mighty victor, mighty lord," Edward the Third; the Black Prince; Henry VIII.; the imperious Elizabeth; the ill-fated Mary Queen of Scots; Lord Bacon; Oliver Cromwell, and most of their favourites, and of the illustrious men who have shed lustre on the various epochs of our history, and the delineations of many of them are made on the premises, and guaranteed to resist any amount of wear and tear. Price 5s. per Number. Specimens to select from.—W. BERGER, 98, New Bond-street, and 89, Cornhill (only).

GERMAN SPRING MATTRESSES, permanently elastic, very durable, and cheap.

3ft. 0 in. wide.....	£2	0	0	4ft. 6 in. wide.....	£3	0	0
3ft. 6 in. ditto.....	2	13	0	5ft. 0 in. ditto.....	3	10	0
4ft. 0 in. ditto.....	3	0	0	5ft. 6 in. ditto.....	4	0	0
6ft. 0 in. ditto.....	4	10	0

Top stuffing, Horsehair.

3ft. 0 in. wide.....	£3	10	0	4ft 6in. wide.....	£5	0	0
3ft. 6 in. ditto.....	4	0	0	5ft 0in ditto.....	5	10	0
4ft. 0 in. ditto.....	4	10	0	5ft 6in ditto.....	6	0	0

Or, if Hair Mattresses with a French Mattress at 6s. 6 a most excellent and healthy Bed, and SON'S LIST of BEDDING, with full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, of every description of Bedding, Bedsteads, Cots, Cribs, Bedding Manufactures, 198 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

MONTHLY PACKETS for PORT NATAL, per Ship, Tons Date of Sailing.

Dunnottar Castle	Master	Marcus	13.3	April 30
Lord Raglan	Smith	Carnatic	350	April 30
London	"	Cormandel	800	May
Liverpool	"	Bolton	800	May
Glasgow	"	Ontario	700	May

For Terms of Apprenticeship, and further particulars, apply to J. VANS and Co., 12 Pall-mall East, City Office, Sun-court, Cornhill.

AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, CAPE of GOOD HOPE, NATAL, &c.
PASSENGERS to the above Colonies may obtain their OUTFITS at WILLIAM WATSON'S, 53, Ludgate-hill, where every article of Clothing, Bedding, SILVER and Cutlery, &c. may be had of the whole of the articles comprised in an outfit to secure durability, as well as economy. Furniture may be had in Mahogany, Rosewood, or Walnut. Furniture on arrive, at the colony

They also engage PASSAGES, and give ship-sailing INFORMATION, but they neither receive nor pay a commission, their object being to give PASSENGERS the same choice as in their hands every benefit, and they forward small packages for their customers (gratis) through the AGENTS in the COLONIES.

SILVER and Co. give DRAFTS on AUSTRALIA, at sixty days sight, of £5 for every £100 paid here.

The EMIGRANT'S Handbook sent (post free) on receipt of Six Stamps for which or name, address, clothing, bedding, may be obtained for FOUR POUNDS.

A Branch of each at St. GEORGE'S CRESCENT, LIVERPOOL.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS VOLUMES.
The whole of these Elegant and Interesting Volumes have been Reprinted from the Commencement (May 14, 1842), with great care, and may be had in Complete Sets, at the following Prices:—
STRENGTH IN A WEIGHT OF FEATHERS.
Volume 1, Parts 1 to Volumes 2, 3, 4, &c., 13s. each.
IN CLOTH, ELEGANTLY LETTERED, WITH GILT EDGES,
Volume 1, 2, 3 Volumes 4, 5, 6, &c., 15s. each.
The Complete Sets of the Volume contain all the SPLENDID PANORAMIC DOUBLE PAGES that have been published with the numbers from 1842 to 1849, &c. Each Volume is rich in Engravings of the Choicest Works of Art and Scenes OF THE BACK NUMBERS are constantly kept in Print, and are SUPPLIED EACH, FOUR WEEKS AFTER the DATE of PUBLICATION.
OFFICE, 198, STRAND, LONDON.

SECOND EDITION.
THE GUIDE to WATER-COLOUR PAINTING. By R. P. NOBLE.
With an Illustration in Colours
Price 5s. 6d stitched, or 7s. bound in cloth, post free, 6d extra.
Sixth Edition.
GUIDE to OIL PAINTING.
By J. S. TEMPLETON.
Price One Shilling, or post free 1s 6d
THE FINE ARTS ALMANACK, or, ARTISTS' REMEMBRANCER for 1850.
Price One Shilling, post free, 1s 6d.
Containing 176 closely printed pages of valuable information connected with the Fine Arts not to be met with at any other publication.
GEO. ROWNEY and Co., 51, Rathbone place, London

NEW EDITION.
Price One Shilling, or, Post-free, 1s. 6d.,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK.
This work is rendered at first attractive by the EASY ARRANGEMENT of the SPELLING, which smoothes all difficulties experienced by beginners, and by the PLEASING ORIGINAL READING LESSONS, which entice the learner to advance of his own accord; while the whole is ILLUSTRATED by UPWARDS of ONE HUNDRED and SEVENTY BEAUTIFUL WOOD-CUTS of objects and scenes described, forming by far the most alluring introduction to learning ever published. The Work is
A few Copies are Coloured, Price Two Shillings.
The Trade supplied on Liberal Terms for Cash only.
Published at the Office of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London, and by all Booksellers.

Now Ready, Price Two Pence, Stamped,
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON READING BOOK.
Companion to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK.
Containing a Series of Le ons on the most amusing and instructive subjects, and selected with great care from the Reading Books of Prose and Verse. The whole beautifully Illustrated with above TWO HUNDRED Engravings on WOOD.
Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London; and sold by all Booksellers.

Just published,
THE MORISONIANA, or FAMILY ADVISER of the BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New Road, London, price 6d., or by post, and to be had of all the authorized agents for the sale of Mr. Morison's Vegetable Universal Medicine throughout the world.

AN ARTIST wishes for one or two YOUNG GENTLEMEN as PUPILS, to accompany him during the summer months to Sandown, Isle of Wight, Torquay, Torbay, &c., per letter, addressed, W. WEST, Observatory, Clifton, Bristol.

A LADY, residing in a healthy locality, near the sea, who is educating her own family, with the assistance of a Governess, wishes to meet with TWO or THREE YOUNG LADIES or TWO SISTERS to decide, to JOIN them in their STUDIES. Where they would derive many advantages.
Address, Mrs. BURTON, 59, South-side, Clapham-common, London.

TO PASTRY-COOKS and OTHERS.—A YOUNG PERSON wishes for a SITUATION in a Pastry-Cook's Shop, where good cooking is required. She would be allowed every consideration if comfort and kindness were shown.—Address, F. W. K., Post-office, Holborn.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—WANTED, by an ORNAMENTAL DESIGNER and LITHOGRAPHER, a well-educated YOUTH, about 14 years of age, as an Apprentice. He will be taught the Art of DRAWING on STONE and WRITING. A premium will be required. Address, W. H. WHITTY, 4, Newcastle-street, Strand, W.C.

TO the Secretaries of Literary Institutions, Clubs, &c.—A YOUNG PERSON Wishes for a SITUATION in a Pastry-Cook's Shop, where good cooking is required. She would be allowed every consideration if comfort and kindness were shown.—Address, F. W. K., Post-office, Holborn.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—WANTED, by an ORNAMENTAL DESIGNER and LITHOGRAPHER, a well-educated YOUTH, about 14 years of age, as an Apprentice. He will be taught the Art of DRAWING on STONE and WRITING. A premium will be required. Address, W. H. WHITTY, 4, Newcastle-street, Strand, W.C.

TO PASTRY-COOKS and OTHERS.—A YOUNG PERSON Wishes for a SITUATION in a Pastry-Cook's Shop, where good cooking is required. She would be allowed every consideration if comfort and kindness were shown.—Address, F. W. K., Post-office, Holborn.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—WANTED, by an ORNAMENTAL DESIGNER and LITHOGRAPHER, a well-educated YOUTH, about 14 years of age, as an Apprentice. He will be taught the Art of DRAWING on STONE and WRITING. A premium will be required. Address, W. H. WHITTY, 4, Newcastle-street, Strand, W.C.

DR. CHOWNE'S PATENT AIR SYPHON.—This novel and effective mode of Ventilation and Exhaustion of Apartments, Sewers, Gas Retorts, Steam Boilers, Drawing Rooms, Manufactories, and Domestic use, may be seen in operation at HUNGERFORD MARKET, Strand, Workhouse, Asylum, Hospital, Charing-cross Hospital.

BARLOW'S NEW INVENTED SYPHON TAP REQUIRES NO VENT PEG; prevents ale, beer, &c., from becoming sour, and will draw it as fine as required. Also Barlow's Patent Improved Bung, Bung Cutter, Bung Borer, Tap Borer, Tap Plate, Tap Cutter, Spile, Spile Cutter, Spile Borer, Shive William &c., Manson House-street, Moorgate-street.

LUCRATIVE EMPLOYMENT.—A favourable opportunity is now offered to Ladies and Gentlemen, by entering the commercial part of PAPIER MACHÉ WORKS, to realize from £3 to £5 per week. No canvassing. Female preferred, as the articles are manufactured in a few streets, and, who is perfect employment will be given. Apply, personally, at 3, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, where Papier Mache articles can be had cheaper than any other house in London. The Trade supplied. Wholesale Price List, 4s 8d per dozen. Ladies' work beautifully varnished and polished.

AN ACCOMPLISHMENT for LADIES.—The Art of forming Flowers of Human Hair for Brooches, Lockets, and Bracelets, so as to Artist in the above will give strict Instructions to Ladies by which they may convert the Hair of Friends into elegant Ornaments for the person or Dressing-room, the use of which can only be known to the possessor.—Address (enclosing 3s. 6d. and stamp) to E. STILES, 16, Exmouth-street, Commercial-road East, London.

BERDOE'S SUPERIOR LIGHT OVERCOAT, the WATERPROOF PALLIUM.—This well-known garment still claims the attention of those who appreciate a genteel and respectable article, at the lowest possible cost for such, and who require a garment that will resist the heaviest rain for many hours, and has been made on the premises, and guaranteed to resist any amount of rain. Price 2 guineas. Book of Patterns, and directions for self-measurement, with 18 engravings, sent free by post.
The following are a few of the many testimonials:—

"Dear Sir,—I have worn the Palliums you made for me during the late heavy rains, and I am happy to say they have proved perfectly waterproof, and I shall have pleasure in recommending them to my friends.—Yours truly, W. H. BARLOW, Esq."

"

BUST OF MR. ALISON, BY PARK. BUST OF MR. MACAULAY, BY PARK.

BUSTS OF MR. ALISON AND MR. MACAULAY.

(Continued from page 278.)

the lynx-eyed critic, and he alone, could have supplied. Mr. Macaulay's History has not escaped the ordeal, neither was it desirable that it should; but the real public opinion of the country has pronounced itself in his favour, and longs for the worthy completion of a task which has been worthily begun.

The bust of Mr. Macaulay, of which we have presented an Engraving, was executed shortly after that of Mr. Alison, by Mr. Patin Park, and is, we believe, in Mr. Macaulay's own possession. It is a very admirable likeness.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

BY THOMAS MILLER.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE ADELPHI ARCHES AND THE OLD STRAND.

Those noble streets which open into the Strand, now known as the Adelphi, are built above the ground formerly occupied by Durham House and its princely gardens, from whence Lady Jane Grey, the "nine days' Queen" (as our old chroniclers call her), was led, with loud acclaim, to the Tower, and then—in tears, to the scaffold. The ground itself on which she walked, and meditated, and saw her garden-flowers blow, is at noonday overhung with midnight darkness, excepting where, here and there, a gaslight throws its dim rays, and feebly illumines the cavernous gloom: where her youth and beauty once threw their sunshine a melancholy blackness now reigns—deeper and more solemn than what our Artist hath here pictured. To us this dark land is filled with associations; and, though the grave hath long since closed over those who placed the crown upon her head, and then left her to bleed upon the block, we never walk through these sounding arches without thinking of their treachery.

Thousands who pass along the Strand never dream of the shadowy region which lies between them and the river: the black-browed arches that span right and left, before and behind, covering many a rood of ground on which the rain never beats nor the sunbeam sleeps, and at the entrance of which the wind only seems to howl and whine, as if afraid of venturing further into the darkness. Many of our readers will, no doubt, conclude that such a dreary place as this must be deserted and tenantless: such is not the case. Here many of those strong horses which the countryman who visits London looks upon with wonder and envy, are stabled—strong, broad-chested steeds, such as may be seen dragging the heavily-laden coal waggons up those steep passages which lead into the Strand, and which seem "to the manner born."

Cows are also kept here, which, rumour says, never saw any other light beyond that of the gas which gleams through their prison bars, or, by way of change, the cheering rays from a lantern, when they are milked or fed; that here many of them were calved, and have lived on, giving milk to a good old age—buried like the main-pipe that supplies us with water, and finding its way into our houses, without our once enquiring how. We have often pitied the London cows, which we have seen driven up one street and down another, and have fancied that what little milk they had must have been churned into indifferent butter, as they run on, to escape the stones thrown after them by boys, while mongrels were ever sallying out, and either biting or barking at their heels; but we had not then seen those which are doomed to dwell in the unbroken darkness of the Adelphi arches, without ever breathing any other than the sepulchral air which stagnates in this murky purgatory. Assuredly, they ought to be taken out for a little fresh air now and then, and be led by the horns to for we can readily conceive how pleased and patiently they would go "blinking" along, compared to those horned blackguards who come with a butt and a "boo" at us as they return from Smithfield, and, before we have time to say "Now, stupid!" pitch us over the battlements of one of the bridges, and leave us to sink or swim.

Fresh fields and pastures new;

The Adelphi arches form a little subterranean city; there is nothing like it in England: in some places you catch a glimpse of the river, a small loop-hole that lets in the light like the end of a railway tunnel, yet seeming to diminish more than these tunnels, on account of the steep descent, until one of the steamers, in passing, appears to fill up the opening like a half-closed door. Beside these arches there are narrow passages which go dipping down to the water-side, where on either hand houses stand looking at one another in the opening between the darkness. There is a dismal and solitary look about these tall imprisoned houses, you cannot conceive how they are entered, for there appears to be no way to them, and you conclude that they are empty. Or, if they are inhabited, you wonder if the people ever look out of those dim, dirt-encrusted windows at the dead-looking walls opposite. We have turned back, and hunted up and down looking from below, but nowhere could we obtain a view of the entrance to those murderous-looking houses. We once saw a butterfly which had lost its way, and got into the little light which had stolen out to look at the entrance of these arches: it went up and down, and hither and thither, seeming to become feebler every moment, as if it had given up all hope of ever winging with folded wings, like a pea-bloom, on the flowers again, and we doubted not but that it found a grave amid the green decay of some rotten water-butt.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON.—THE ADELPHI "DRY ARCHES."

But we must turn backward, and endeavour to obtain a view of this ancient neighbourhood, as it looked when the Roman city stood upon the hill; and this, as it is still called, was a low, waste, and ready Strand, over which the tide came and went, and rocked the tufted reeds which waved over many a surrounding acre. Something like what it was in ancient days may yet be seen in those reedy and willowy inlets above the Red House, at Battersea; and could we have stood and looked across the river while the spot on which Westminster now stands was an island, covered with thorns, and down to the water-edge green flags and rushes, we should have seen far below what was called the Long Ditch, where the river divided, beside a low, lonely shore, on which the waves went lapping and surging, as they still do about those dreary bends that skirt the marshes of Woolwich: the fisherman—in his wicker coracle, covered with skin—would have been the only figure that moved beside the sedgy margin of that trackless river, over which the piping of the tufted plover would be heard. Such was once the now busy Strand of London; such the scene we should have gazed upon had we lived a few centuries ago.

Compared with these remote times, the period when a petition was presented for the repairing of the highway between Temple-bar and the Palace of Westminster, and in which the petitioners complained that the foot-road was so overgrown with thickets and bushes that the wayfarer had difficulty to get along—compared with these ancient days, the briery and entangled pathway seems to belong to modern history. Besides the brambley and thorny footpath there were three old bridges to cross between Temple-bar and the village of Charing, which spanned the sweet streams that came tinkling all the way from Highgate hills, passing along and edging the velvet green of many a pleasant meadow, like braids of silver, before they sent their sailing foam-bells into the bosom of the Thames. Ivy Bridge-lane and Strand Bridge-lane still mark the sites of two of these old bridges. The third was only discovered a few years ago; and, as it was but eleven feet long, every ancient stone might have been preserved and built up again over the Lee or some narrow water-course, so that we might have had another relic of bygone days to have looked upon, a bridge over which conqueror and captive had passed tears and triumphs, from the Tower to Westminster, and from thence to the Tower again. Bolingbroke weeping—the hero of Agincourt—what a chapter could we have written on that old bridge, which was discovered while making a sewer near the Church of St. Clement the Dane! It had been buried so long that not an antiquary mentions it—nowhere is it recorded by our old historians. When it was discovered, it was broken up, removed, and no one seems to know what became of the fragments. Perhaps Alfred himself might have crossed that ancient bridge when he pursued the daring Sea-King Hastings; perhaps——But it is gone; and we should like to know the name of the surveyor who allowed it to be destroyed; in these pages he should have a "local habitation and a name" such as he deserves.

There are still standing in Holywell and Wych-street a few houses which bring before the eye the old London our forefathers inhabited when Bluff Hal beheaded a wife before he breakfasted; and Queen Elizabeth measured not her words to her ministers if they offended her, and thought nothing of fetching a nobleman a "buck hand rip," as she did the Earl of Essex, when not in a loving mood. In her endearing moments, we often picture her like a grim lioness, at play with the king of the forest. We often wonder where Shakspeare was during the Sunday Essex broke out, and locked up the Queen's officers. We dare wager a silver groat, that he looked on that stormy scene in the Strand, and that, were he here to answer, we could point our pen to passages in his works which were suggested by what he either saw or heard on that memorable day.

Who has not heard of the May-pole that stood in the Strand—how it was removed by command of the stern Protector Cromwell, and how, at the restoration of Charles, a new one was erected, amid the beating of drums and lond-sounding music, and the cheers of assembled thousands, who were weary of the puritanic gloom which had so long hung over Merry England. What a buzzing there would be in that neighbourhood on the occasion, while May-garlands hung across the streets, as we have often seen them in our day, in a few out-of-the-way old-fashioned towns, where the manners and customs of the people have undergone but little change during the last two centuries.

In contrast to these ancient merry-makings, we must introduce another picture—London with its gibbet-posts, and Temple-bar with its human heads "grinning horribly" from the high poles on which they were stuck, as Horace Walpole saw them in his day; while the street itinerants reaped a harvest by charging one halfpenny for a peep through their spy-glasses to the sight-seers, who congregated to gaze upon the revolting spectacle. Add to these horrors the moveable gallows, which came rumbling through the thoroughfares like the fire-engines in the present day, when the criminal was executed at the very door where he had committed the crime for which he was doomed to suffer death.

The history of the old Savoy Palace, and other residences of the nobility, which formerly stood in the Strand, would each form a subject for a separate article were we to recount the scenes which have been enacted in "these little theatres," but they are too important to come within the limits of a series of light and picturesque sketches like these. The homes of our ancient nobles are all swept away with the exception of Northumberland House, and in place of them we have Waterloo and the Suspension Bridges, spanning over and opening into those once quaint trim pleasances—spots where the summer-bowers of many a departed beauty formerly stood.

How the warlike old Barons would stare in wonderment, if it were possible that they could again "revisit the glimpses of the moon," and see the rent-roll produced from the ground on which their towered and loop-holed palaces stood—could peep at the productions exhibited at the Society of Arts, in the Adelphi, and look back again upon the days when a flexible gauntlet, that could guard the hand, yet give freedom to the grasp—or a visor, through which they could see, yet with the bars so tempered as to resist the point of a lance, were considered as the greatest wonders of art. How they would rub their dim old eyes at the sight of an express-train; stare at a steamer, and think what a smash and a crash a couple would have made, to have run into each other at their water quintains. Then, to send a message from Tilbury Fort to Eachworth by the electric telegraph, where the amorous old Queen was coquetting with Leicester, and the ignorant of such an invention, to tell her that the Spanish Armada was coming, would have consigned the messenger who came from the station to something like the Spanish Inquisition, if not a stake at Smithfield. Oh, that we had a photographic portrait of the dear old lady, with all those nicely marked shadows to which she had so great an objection, down to the "cunning wrinkles round her eyes." But we have again reached

"The outmost shore, so drop our little sail."

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 20 1850.—SUPPLEMENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 423.—VOL. XVI.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1850. [SIXPENCE.

RETURN OF THE POPE.

THE return of Pius IX. to his disconsolate, but somewhat volatile subjects, is a remarkable event. It is impossible for Protestant Europe to peruse the graphic accounts of his triumphal progress rom Portici to Rome without curiosity, or even without solicitude; while in Roman Catholic Europe, or at least in those portions of it where the religious feeling is still in existence, the event becomes one not of interest merely, but of political and religious importance. The Papacy seems a little stronger than was expected. Italian faith and French bayonets have propped it up for awhile; and Pius IX. will probably, if his Cardinals will allow him, continue to sit in the chair of St. Peter, without repeating any of the more remarkable or egregious of the errors which drove him into exile. His subjects—as is usual in the restorations even of Monarchs less deserving of popular regard than Pius IX.—are quite enthusiastic in their expressions of love and loyalty. Amid the firing of guns and the waving of flags, the "Man of Peace" has returned to the wolves of Rome. It remains to be seen whether their loyalty is founded upon impulse or upon reason—upon the volatility of an excitable people, or upon the well-considered judgment of their own wants, and his means of satisfying them.

The history of the Pope for the last three years has been a revival, on a grand scale, of the history of the poor fellow who studied magic under Albertus Magnus. In the absence of the sorcerer, the young adept got hold of the grimoire, or magic-book, and commenced reading. The ghosts and demons came readily to his call; but, unluckily, he was not in possession of all the secrets of his craft—he knew not how to send them back again to the Red Sea, from whence they had issued. They gibed and chattered in his face; they laid irreverent and violent hands upon his person; and he was powerless to bid them be still. In vain he entreated them to depart, or at least to behave themselves peaceably if they stayed. He knew not the right word; and they would have torn him to pieces, had not aid opportunely reached him in the person of a real conjuror, who knew something about demons. Such has been the fortune of the benevolent and inquiring Pope. In 1847 he let loose upon Europe the ghosts and demons of the revolutionary grimoire; and, after parleying with them in vain, at the most imminent personal hazard, he was only relieved from them by precipitate and undignified flight, and by the bayonets of General Oudinot, that came at a moment when he was well nigh exhausted. France, like himself, had raised a similar swarm about her ears; but France knew the secret of laying them by the sword and the cannon-ball. It is to be hoped, therefore, that Pius IX. will try no future experiments—that he will not attempt any more magic tricks; and that he will try to govern his people, without conjuring before them any visions of the Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity which well nigh lost him his tiara, and imperilled for ever the throne upon which he sits. It will be well for him if he have discovered in adversity that reforming and ultra-liberal Sovereigns are always unfortunate; and that, although they may, in the outset of their career, gather about their heads the intoxicating breezes of popular adulation, the breezes have an unlucky tendency to become ungovernable storms, from whose bosoms fly the thunderbolts of death. The true business of a chief magistrate is to originate nothing, but to yield in due time to the reason of his people. Nations always expect too much of Sovereigns who make promises before they are called upon to do so, and who commence great and astonishing projects of reform and amelioration before the minds of the public are sufficiently educated to appreciate their full value. In this respect it is likely enough that Pius IX. will not a second time be led astray. He ought to know the value of a popular cheer too well, to barter his power for it a second time; and the reforming Pope, if he speak his people in those fair unmeaning terms which prudent Sovereigns cultivate the art of expressing, but promise them nothing for the future, will do all that can reasonably be expected of him.

It is likely, however, that, after the first evanescent bubble of their enthusiasm has collapsed, the sensible people of the Roman States will debate seriously upon their own wants, and upon the future form of their government. If it be the business of the Pope to be quiescent, it is their business, after the disasters of their country, to consider well the basis on which their liberties are to stand, and the weight of liberty which they are able to bear. Any reaction attempted by the camarilla of Cardinals, or any endeavour to govern wholly by means of the priesthood, will inevitably lead to a renewal of past calamities; but the moderate and sensible men of the Papal States have it in their power to prevent any return to an antiquated and erroneous system, by insisting firmly and temperately upon the partial secularization of the administration—the extension of municipal freedom, the oblivion of past offences, and the gradual training of the people in the difficult art of self-government. If this party—however small it may be at present—have learned wisdom from past events, they will immediately commence operations in this conciliatory spirit, and act as mediators between the obstinacy of the Cardinals on the one hand, and the hot-headed violence of the Red Republicans on the other. It is in their power, and in theirs alone, to save the Papacy. Without their patient, persevering, and judicious support, notwithstanding all the enthusiasm of the present hour, and the benedictions which the Pope and people mutually lavish upon each other, the temporal sovereignty of the Pope will not last. It is a system opposed to common sense, and to the true interest of the Roman people, however convenient it may be to the Papal Sovereigns of Europe. It cannot outlive the present generation, unless it be modified and made accordant with the secular wants of the lower, middle, and upper classes of Rome—all equally at variance with a government administered entirely by priests. If such men be good priests, they cannot be good administrators of secular law, of finance, of police, and all the general affairs of a trading or industrial people. The whole world knows that fact; and if the moderate men in the Papal States will urge it zealously yet discreetly upon the Pope and his advisers, they will prevent, in all probability, the renewal of violent revolution in their country. Both they and the Cardinals must remember that France is not likely to repeat the part which she has lately played in their affairs, should the Italian Red Republican party succeed a second time in goading the country into insurrection; and that, in any future struggle, the Pope possibly will have no other friend than the Emperor of Austria. It remains for them to decide the future fate of their country. Should they fail the Pope during the next few months, the present season of festivity and rejoicing at Rome will be but halcyon days, to be succeeded by a storm of greater intensity than that which preceded it.

REMAINS OF THE SUSPENSION BRIDGE AT ANGERS, AFTER THE LATE ACCIDENT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

FALL OF THE SUSPENSION-BRIDGE AT ANGERS.

In our journal of last week we recorded this lamentable catastrophe. We have engraved the sad scene, and select the following details from the Journal de Maine et Loire of the 16th:—

"At eleven o'clock this morning, a squadron of Hussars, coming from Nantes, had crossed over the suspension-bridge of the Basse Maine without any accident, although the wind blew very heavily from the west, and the river was much agitated. The last of the horses had scarcely crossed the bridge when the head of the column of the 3d battalion of the 11th Light Infantry appeared on the other side. Reiterated warnings were given to the troops to break into sections, as is usually done; but the rain falling heavily at the time, the warning was disregarded, and the battalion advanced in close column. The head of the battalion had reached the opposite side—the pioneers, the drummers, and a part of the band were off the bridge, when a horrible crash was heard; the cast-iron columns of the right bank suddenly gave way, crushing beneath them the rear of the 4th company, which, with the flank company, had not entered on the bridge. To describe the frightful spectacle, and the cries of despair which were raised, is impossible. The whole town rushed to the spot to give assistance. In spite of the storm which was raging, all the boats that could be got were launched to pick up the soldiers in the river; and a great number who were clinging to the parapets of the bridge, or who were kept afloat by their knapsacks, were immediately got out. The greater number of them were, however, found to be wounded by the bayonets or by the fragments of the bridge falling on them.

"The suspension-bridge was built 12 years ago, but a year since underwent repairs which cost the town about 30,000f. The suspending chains at first gave way on one side only, when this accident on the bridge, feeling the movement of the floor of the bridge, naturally rushed to the other side, when the chains there also gave way, and the whole floor of the bridge fell. From one bank to the other the river was completely blocked up with the soldiers struggling to reach the shore. If the weather had been calm, the greater number of them would in all probability have been saved. The wind, however, blew a perfect hurricane, and the waves were very rough. Masses of men might be seen clinging to each other, the waves every moment washing away some of them, until only one remained. Beams of wood, planks, and every article that could be laid hold of, were launched to enable the men to keep themselves afloat until further assistance could arrive."

The 11th Regiment was on its way to Africa, not for punishment (as has been stated), but in its regular routine of duty. Lieutenant-Colonel Simonin, of the above regiment, miraculously escaped; and it is mentioned that the same officer survived the terrible catastrophe which occurred at the battle of Leipsic, where Poniatowski and so many others were drowned in the Elster.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The great topic of interest for the week in Paris is the approaching election. As far as the opinions of the electors can be calculated upon, they are decidedly in favour of M. Eugene Sue, who, it was said in the early part of the week, could not take his seat if elected, as he was under a judicial interdiction which his family had some years ago sued out against him, on account of his extravagant dissipation of property; but M. Sue has removed all doubt respecting his eligibility for the vacant seat, by proving that the interdiction imposed upon him by the judicial authorities was taken off two years afterwards, which act restored him to the full exercise of his civil privileges.

The Socialist newspapers having aspersed the character of the Conservative candidate, M. Leclerc, and denied that he had shown at the barricade of June the heroic conduct attributed to him, the officers and privates of the battalion of the National Guards to which that gentleman belongs, have drawn up a letter, to which they append their names, attesting the fact of that individual returning to the conflict in June, 1848, with his second son, after removing the dead body of his eldest boy from the scene of carnage. A meeting of electors, friends of the National Assembly, of National Guards, and of the representatives of the Moderate press, held on Monday evening in the Rue Bergère, it was decided that the letter before alluded to, in reply to the articles in the Voix du Peuple, should be placarded on the walls. M. Gratiot, director of the paper manufactory at Essonne, paid the highest compliment to the probity and honour of M. Leclerc, and declared that the reports that had been spread of his having at one time stopped payment were calumnious. He could also say that M. Leclerc's affairs were in good order, and that he was in possession of a modest fortune, honourably acquired.

The Chamber has voted, by 451 to 41, an extraordinary credit of 200,000 francs, for the celebration of the second anniversary of the proclamation of the French Republic by the National Assembly, on the 4th of May next

Frequent instances have lately occurred in the hasty dispositions of the Government of the Republic to the Opposition newspaper press of Paris. But this week the Prefect of Police "out-Herods Herod," by issuing an order that no evening papers should be sold in the streets in the early part of the week, until not take his seat if elected, as he was under a judicial interdiction which his family had some years ago sued out against him, on account of his extravagant dissipation of property; but M. Sue has removed all doubt respecting his eligibility for the vacant seat, by proving that the interdiction imposed upon him by the judicial authorities was taken off two years afterwards, which act restored him to the full exercise of his civil privileges.

The Socialist newspapers having aspersed the character of the Conservative candidate, M. Leclerc, and denied that he had shown at the barricade of June the heroic conduct attributed to him, the officers and privates of the battalion of the National Guards to which that gentleman belongs, have drawn up a letter, to which they append their names, attesting the fact of that individual returning to the conflict in June, 1848, with his second son, after removing the dead body of his eldest boy from the scene of carnage. A meeting of electors, friends of the National Assembly, of National Guards, and of the representatives of the Moderate press, held on Monday evening in the Rue Bergère, it was decided that the letter before alluded to, in reply to the articles in the Voix du Peuple, should be placarded on the walls. M. Gratiot, director of the paper manufactory at Essonne, paid the highest compliment to the probity and honour of M. Leclerc, and declared that the reports that had been spread of his having at one time stopped payment were calumnious. He could also say that M. Leclerc's affairs were in good order, and that he was in possession of a modest fortune, honourably acquired.

The Chamber has voted, by 451 to 41, an extraordinary credit of 200,000 francs, for the celebration of the second anniversary of the proclamation of the French Republic by the National Assembly, on the 4th of May next

Frequent instances have lately occurred in the hasty dispositions of the Government of the Republic to the Opposition newspaper press of Paris. But this week the Prefect of Police "out-Herods Herod," by issuing an order that no evening papers should be sold in the streets in the early part of the week, until not even the Government papers, the Patrie and the Moniteur du Soir. The consequence is that the Evénement and the Estafette are no longer to be procured. Intimation has been given to all those who sell papers, that, if they should contravene the new order, they will be deprived of their licenses.

A characteristic anecdote is related in connexion with this oppressive regulation: On Monday night M. Emile de Girardin went, at half-past ten, to the woman who sits before Tortoni's, and asked for a copy of the Evénement. She said she had not the Evenement, and could not sell it. The editor of the Presse then demanded the presence of a sergent de ville, to take note of the refusal; a crowd collected, and soon after two sergens de ville arrived. In their presence M. de Girardin imperatively repeated his demand, and at length the poor woman sold a copy of the Evénement. The sergens de ville having made some observations to M. de Girardin, he replied "I am Emile de Girardin, arrest me, and take me to the Prefecture of Police." "If you be M. Emile Girardin," replied one of the sergens de ville, 'you must know your way to the Prefecture, and do not require to be taken there." M. de Girardin then went away, crying with much excitement, "I made Cavaignac pay dear for my eleven days' imprisonment; and I shall know how to make those who have done this, pay also." The subject was taken up in the Assembly, where M. Dupont (de l'Eure), head of the tyrannical conduct of M. Carlier, the Prefect of Police, in forbidding the newsmen to sell the Evénement, the Estafette, and the Democrâtie, while he permitted the sale of the Gazette de France, the Patrie, and the Moniteur du Soir. He had also prevented the wine-dealers from sub-letting their shops to newsvenders. M. Duprat concluded by wishing to ask the Minister of the Interior some questions upon this subject, but the request was not allowed by the Assembly to be answered.

On Tuesday evening the Boulevards presented a scene of great animation, the people who had purchased one or other of the forbidden journals reading the contents aloud to the listening crowd. The police looked on with apparent indifference, and no disturbance of the peace took place.

M. Flaers is going to quit Paris for Italy, for the benefit of his health. This is the alleged reason; but there is good ground for thinking that he finds himself distrusted by his former friends, and therefore deems a short retirement from public life indispensable.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—We noticed last week the return of the Pope to Rome on Friday, the 12th inst., from the Neapolitan dominions. His reception by the country people along his route, from the time he entered his own states until his arrival at the Eternal City, is described as being most enthusiastic and affectionate. Within the city itself the feeling exhibited at his Holiness's entry is said to have partaken rather of curiosity to witness the gorgeous pageantry of the military and ecclesiastical cortège, than of any other sentiment. On his entrance within the city walls his Holiness proceeded to the basilica of St. John Lateran, and after staying a short time in the performance of his devotions, he proceeded by the Colosseum, the Piazza of Trajan, and the Strada Papale to the Vatican Palace. The cortège was composed as follows:—A company of papal dragoons, one of Velites, one of French chasseurs of Vincennes, a squadron of French dragoons, a company of French gendarmes; Brigadier General Sauvan, commandant of the place, and his staff; a detachment of noble guards; his Holiness, in company with Monsignor d'Ornano and Monsignor Gazzoli. To the right of the carriage was General Baraguay d'Hilliers, to the left Prince Altieri. Next followed the French general staff, a squadron of French dragoons, Cardinals Patrizi, Della Genga Sermattei, Vannicelli-Casoni, Antonelli, Dupont, Castracane, Pallotta, Financial Minister Commission, and the diplomatic body. All the houses were decked out, and an immense crowd filled the street. The Pope was received at the basilica of the Vatican by the Chapter of St. Peter, by a chaplain of the Sacred College, which accompanied him to the altar. The oration of St. Austin was then recited, the Ambrosian hymn was sung, and the benediction given; after which the holy Father kissed the foot of the statue of St. Peter, and retired to the palace. In the evening the cupola of St. Peter's, the Capitol, the Strada di Borgo Nuovo, the Monte Pincio, the Piazza del Popolo, and the Via Condotti were illuminated. Not the slightest disturbance took place.

On the 14th there was a "Te Deum" sung in the churches to return thanks for the return of his Holiness. The illuminations were continued on the nights of the 13th and 14th also.

The Republic of Chili has sent the Pope a loaf of gold, value £6000; and the Prince de Monthelon has offered his Holiness a gold ink-stand adorned with precious stones, value £1000.

GREECE.

The latest accounts from the Piræus announce the failure of the mediatorial offices of the French Minister to effect an amicable adjustment of the demands of England on Greece, on account of the complicated nature of the case.

Since the arrival in London of this intelligence, it is stated that a special messenger has been dispatched by Lord Palmerston from the Foreign Office to the British representative at Athens, with instructions so to the course to be pursued under existing circumstances; and we understand they are of that conciliatory character which are calculated, on their arrival, to alter materially the threatening aspect which our relations with Greece assumed on the 8th of this month.

WEST INDIES.

The accounts received this week from the West Indies convey tidings of disaster. From Nassau we learn, that on Saturday, the 30th of March, a terrific tornado passed over the Island, sweeping strong buildings and gigantic trees from off the earth. Every vessel in the harbour, although they had not a shred of canvas on, was blown down, and literally buried in the water, while the tornado was rushing over them. Even a new vessel that was on the stocks was turned completely over. Such was the extreme rapidity of the tornado in passing over the island, that, from the moment it was experienced approaching, to the instant it had vanished, scarcely one minute had elapsed. In the twinkling of an eye, as it were, it had swept over the island with a fell and fatal swoop, and had prostrated houses, devastated fields, and destroyed human life.

For three days before the tornado happened, the weather had been rainy at Nassau; and on the 30th the rain, about mid-day, fell in torrents. At a quarter to one in the afternoon there was a sudden lull, the horizon became darker than before, the barometer fell to 29.74, and suddenly there was a rush "as of a mighty river." On it came in irresistible and destroying strength from the south-west. Bain's Town first felt its fatal influence. A great many of the frail houses of the poor industrious labourers and artisans residing in that locality bent and fell beneath the penetrating blast, carrying in their ruins the male and vigorous man and the weak and tender child alike. In Grant's Town, also, many substantial buildings were partially demolished, and considerable damage occasioned to life and property. At the departure of the mail steamer, eight dead bodies had been found, and eight or ten persons had been discovered dangerously wounded.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE ST. HELEN'S SAVINGS-BANK.

On Monday Mr. J. Tidd Pratt, barrister-at-law, held a public court in the Townhall, St. Helen's, for the purpose of deciding upon the liability or otherwise of the trustees of the late St. Helen's Savings-Bank, which may be due to the depositors, in the event of the present available proceeds not being sufficient to meet al. the demands.

Mr. Aspinall, barrister, of Liverpool, appeared on behalf of the trustees and managers. Messrs. Ansdell and Haddock, solicitors to the bank, and several other professional gentlemen, were present, as also many of the trustees.

Since the last meeting, Mr. Tidd Pratt had been engaged in a private investigation of the books, for the purpose of deciding upon the legality or illegality of those claims in cases where more than the sum of £30 had been deposited in one year, any excess over that sum being an illegal deposit, according to the Savings-Bank Act

The report of the official accountant employed to investigate the affairs of the bank, together with a statement of the accounts, was submitted. It stated that, as was shown by the balance-sheet and the abstract, the defalcations had gone on continually from year to year, without any intermission whatever, from, at the latest, 1833, down to the close of the year 1849.

The accounts showed that the total sum invested with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, on the 20th of January, 1850, was £11,938 3s. 8d., and the defalcations, £12,113 6s 10d. The amount due to depositors on the 20th of January was £20,051 0s. 3d.

In reference to the alleged liability of the trustees,

Mr. Jackson, who appeared as the representatives of a friendly society, in whose name certain deposits had been made, strongly urged upon Mr. Pratt that all the trustees were liable for any deficiency.

Mr. Aspinall, for the trustees, denied that the trustees must be held liable. He promised that they would do all they could to see the depositors fully paid; but would not acknowledge that they must be held accountable if the funds available should prove to be insufficient.

Mr. Pratt intimated, that, having gone through the accounts, he should place them in the hands of the depositors on the footing of bankruptcy claims, providing for all the legal claims under £30 to be paid first in full.

Mr. Gaskell Taylor having spoken warmly in favour of Mr. John Johnson,

Mr. Tidd Pratt said, there could be no doubt either one or both of the Johnsons had committed a robbery on the bank to the extent of £12,000 or £13,000. With two exceptions, this amount, which was in the handwriting of William Johnson, was absconded with. Mr. Pratt then referred to the cases of depositors, and the liabilities of the trustees, in which he had been called upon to arbitrate; and, after referring to his conclusions named in the foregoing, said that his had received a dividend of 5s. at once, and would be paid 4s. 6d. in the pound, and suggested the appointment of joint committees of the depositors and trustees, hoping from that, that the full amount of the deposits might eventually be paid.

After some discussion, this was agreed to, and the Court broke up.

During the time of proceedings, the court was much crowded with depositors and others interested in the question.

CLOSING OF THE LEWES SAVINGS-BANK.—On Wednesday, the town of Lewes was thrown into a state of considerable excitement by the publication of the following notice:—"Lewes Savings-Bank.—Notice to Depositors.—In consequence of the continued illness of the actuary, Mr. Henry Bartlett, and some unexplained recently discovered errors in the accounts, the bank will be closed until further notice, and the committee will take immediate steps to secure the more early payment of depositors' balances, which at present, from accident, have not yet been produced. For the present they may be left with the treasurer, G. Molineux, Esq., at the Lewes Old Bank. Lewes, April 23, 1850." It appears that, at the time the above notice was issued, there was in the hands of the depositors' pass books were not brought in. (At the last annual meeting it appeared, by the statement submitted by the auditors, they were 2125 ordinary depositors, whose accounts amounted to £46,575 18s. 10d.; 62 charitable societies, to £3060 2s.; and 3 friendly societies, £481 13s. 8d.: making a total of £50,417 12s. 6d.) The great feature in this transaction is the doubt which it throws on the trustworthiness of the late annual statements in every savings-bank throughout the kingdom. In every instance advertisements were issued of a similar character to that put forth by the examiners in Lewes; and should it prove that there is any defalcation in this instance, the result must be a fresh and more serious inquiry into the accounts of these important national institutions.

VACANCY IN THE REPRESENTATION OF LYMINGTON.—A writ was moved for on Wednesday for a new election for the borough of Lymington, Hants, in the room of the Hon. Colonel Keppel (late private secretary to the Premier), who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. We understand that Captain Yelverton is likely to be a candidate for the borough on Free-Trade principles. At the general election, Colonel Keppel was returned by a majority of sixteen only; and, in the event of a Protectionist candidate starting, a sharp contest is likely.

THE CHARGE AGAINST THE CREW OF THE "JOHN R. SKIDDY."—On Saturday, several of the passengers who were on board the John R. Skiddy, lately wrecked on the Irish coast, appeared before his worship, the Mayor, at the Town-hall, Liverpool, in support of the charges preferred against the crew, by whom it was alleged the passengers had been shamefully ill-used and plundered. It is stated in the memorial that the sailors, including the mates, were very abusive to the female passengers and children, some of whom were knocked down and trodden on with the utmost brutality on deck, particularly the females A portion of the crew went below and broke open the boxes and other packages belonging to the passengers, their object being to possess themselves of the cash, in doing which much property was destroyed. The memorialists further state, that, so far from the inhabitants of that part of the Irish coast being the abandoned set of villains described by the captain, they behaved with kindness, many signal acts of which were experienced by the passengers. The memorial is signed by a dozen people, who represent their losses at sums varying from £20 to £60. A number of the parties complaining were examined by the Mayor and Mr. Rushton; but their statements were confused and indefinite, no single case of the nature complained of being spoken to; and eventually the matter was left for the investigation of Lieutenant Hoddon, the Government emigration agent.

COLLIERY STRIKE NEAR ST. HELEN'S.—The colliers in the employment of Messrs. Johnston, at their colliery at Laffock (Lancashire), numbering fully 200 hands, have, within the last week, turned out, in consequence of the masters having recently appointed a person named Smith as manager or under-viewer of their mines, who is disliked by the men. The proprietors have issued large placards, informing and cautioning the public against rubbying the mines. The colliers state that they have no complaint to make, at Upholland, have been upon strike for several weeks past. Upwards of 100 colliers have turned out from the collieries at Rainford, on account of a dispute about wages, and petty depredations are becoming so frequent in the immediate neighbourhood of the collieries as to call for an extra number of police to be sent to the neighbourhood to protect the property of the inhabitants. Several riotous meetings have been held by the men on Sunday-brow, to which the colliers had been summoned by the beating of the cans. Sometimes have been to the extent of upwards of 1000 persons at the work. Several of the ringleaders have been apprehended and brought before the magistrate, who has ordered them to find bail for their future good behaviour.

STAMP DUTIES.—A return ordered by the House of Commons, on the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, gives the gross produce of the duties on conveyances in the year ending January 5, 1849, at £473,345, and the estimated produce, under the proposed scale of duties, at £206 249, making an est.mated loss to the revenue by the new scale of stamp duties £267,096.

One of our leading Brazilian houses shipped a quantity of Manchester goods, some months ago, to Buenos Ayres. Finding the market closed up, and no sale for the articles, they were re-imported, and the shippers recently sold them in Manchester at a profit of 12 per cent, after paying freight and all other charges

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Smoke Prohibition Bill and the School Districts Contribution Bill severally passed through committee.

DISEASED CATTLE.

The DUKE of RICHMOND moved for the appointment of a committee to inquire into the operation of the act for the better prevention of the importation of sheep, cattle, and other animals, for the purpose of preventing the introduction of contagions or infectious diseases, with the view of rendering its provisions more efficient than at present. The noble Duke having made a few general statements to justify his motion, said, that, in order to prove that he had no party object in view, he would leave the nomination of the committee to the Government.

After a remark from the Earl GRANVILLE, the committee was agreed to.

On the motion of the Marquis of WESTMEATH, the committee on the petition complaining of the conduct of the vice-guardians of the Carrick-on-Shannon Union was nominated.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

Mr. BLACKSTONE gave notice of a motion, in committee of supply, for a committee of the Lower House to consider the act imposing the additional ten per cent. on the assessed taxes.

Colonel DUNNE gave notice, on the part of an hon. member, of his intention to move a direct negative to Lord J. RUSSELL'S promised motion for leave to bring in a bill to abolish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

SAVINGS-BANKS

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER gave notice that he would, on next Monday, move for leave to bring in a bill for the future regulation of savings-banks, when he promised to make an explanatory statement of the measure, and hoped to be allowed to introduce the bill without discussion.

Mr. DISRAELI did not think it was likely a bill of such importance, and one that had been so long delayed, could be permitted to be brought in without some comments.

STAMP DUTIES.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, that the course he had resolved to take with respect to the Stamp Duties Bill. The actual proposition carried by the vote in committee the other night was that the stamp on bonds for sums below £50 should be 1s. But that principle should be adopted throughout on an ad valorem scale. It would lead to a loss of revenue that he could not sanction; and, therefore, should the House persist in carrying out the principle adopted with respect to bonds under £50, he would be obliged to abandon the bill. He had received a report from the Board of Inland Revenue which he would lay on the table; and from this it would be seen that, unless he could obtain a stamp duty of 5s. per cent. on the great body of bonds, transfers, &c., he could not maintain the revenue. What he proposed to the House, then, was, that, while he abide by the decision come to in committee, and to leave the duty on bonds for sums under £50 at 1s. But between £50 and £200 he proposed that an additional duty of 1s. 6d. for each £50 should be imposed, so as to raise the duty on £200 to 10s. From £200 to £100,000 he proposed a stamp duty of 5s. per cent., which, on £100,000, would be £250; and here he would stop short; all sums above £100,000 to pay only £250; and to be charged no more. The right hon. Baronet had the report of the Board of Inland Revenue on the table, and gave notice of his intention to proceed with the Stamp Duties Bill on Thursday next.

To a question put by an hon. member, Lord PALMERSTON stated that the Government had received, some time ago, a representation from the Government of the United States, complaining that the Hudson's Bay Company had supplied the Indians with spirits; but the Hudson's Bay Company denied having supplied the North American Indians with spirits as an article of commerce, although they might have given some to the hunters.

In reply to Mr. Ricardo, Lord PALMERSTON stated that negotiations were going on with the French Government in consequence of the repeal of the Navigation Laws, relative to the restrictions on British shipping; but he was not able to report any conclusions to these negotiations.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES BILL.

The House resumed the committee on the Australian Colonies Government Bill.

On the 13th clause, Mr. E. DENISON moved an amendment, the effect of which was to give power to the Legislature of the separate colonies to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of waste lands of the Crown in each separate colony. This amendment gave rise to a lengthened discussion; but it was ultimately withdrawn, on the understanding that it should be again brought forward on the report.

Mr. LUSHINGTON moved the omission of such parts of clauses 16 and 17, as provided for the signification of her Majesty's pleasure on every bill which shall be passed by the Council in respect of the colonial revenue, by altering the sums allotted for the sustentation of public worship as mentioned in the third part of any of the schedules A, B, and C.

On a division, there were—

For the amendment	.. ..	.. 54
Against it	.. ..	.. 203
Majority against the amendment		.. 149

Progress was then reported, and the Chairman obtained leave to sit again on Thursday.

The Metropolitan Interments Bill was read a second time, and the committee fixed for the 3rd of May.

The Railways Abandonment Bill was read a second time.

On the motion of Lord J. RUSSELL, the select committee on official salaries was nominated, after a protest against it from Colonel SIBTHORP.

Adjourned at a quarter before one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

On the motion of the Duke of RICHMOND, a committee was appointed to inquire into the sums received by the officers and messengers of the Great Seal from 1846 to 1849.

The Smoke Prohibition Bill was passed.

The Earl of HARDWICKE presented several petitions complaining of agricultural distress, and observed that if Parliament did not retrace the steps which had recently been taken in the direction of what was called Free-trade, neither the Government nor the country would be safe.

The Duke of RICHMOND said that there never had been a time when the burdens and depression upon agriculture were more universal and more intolerable than at present. No measure but a return to protection could remedy the evils which had been brought upon the country by recent legislation.

The Duke of RICHMOND, after presenting several petitions against Sunday labour and other subjects, gave notice that on a future day he should present forty petitions on the subject of protection.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

UNIVERSITY REFORM.

Mr. HEYWOOD brought forward the motion of which he had given notice some time since, on the subject of the Universities, the purport of which was to pray her Majesty to appoint a commission to inquire into the state of the Universities and Colleges of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, with a view to assist in the adaptation of these important institutions to the requirements of modern times. The hon. gentleman directed his arguments to illustrate the position that all institutions had undoubtedly a tendency to decline, and hence arose some modification, from the change of external circumstances, the progress of opinion, and the intellectual advancement of the people; and suggested the formation of better means for the examinations of the students and the granting degrees, to diminish the exclusiveness of the university libraries, and to provide for a fairer distribution of the rewards of scientific and literary merit; to extend the permission to marry in addition to facilities for the migration of electors to the universities, with some other alterations of minor importance. He complained of the obsolete character of the laws and statutes of these institutions of learning, and of the want of adaptation between the sciences and languages, strongly urging the necessity of some improvement in the curriculum of collegiate learning in this country.

Sir R. INGLIS, without denying the right of the Crown to inquire, or of the Legislature to interfere in the management of the Universities as seminaries of learning, demanded that a fair primâ facie ground of investigation and interference should be first established. Treating the question, however, as primarily referring to the properties of the institutions in question, the hon. Baronet drew a distinction between the incomes of Universities and those of the individual colleges; alleging that the funds belonging to the former were extremely limited, and that to apply them to the general University purposes—such as completing museums or libraries—would be an undue interference with the rights of private property. Many of the charges brought forward by Mr. Heywood he declared to be unfair. Many were founded, he said, upon some statutes still remaining upon the books of one or two colleges, but obsolete even there, and not existing at all elsewhere. The real object of the motion lurked, he suspected, in a stray sentence proposing to facilitate the registration of electors for the Universities, which would have the effect of placing Dissenters upon the polling lists. Sir R. Inglis concluded by an elaborate defence of the professorial system as practised at Oxford.

Mr. FAGAN contended for the necessity for University reform. At present those noble foundations could not fulfil the purposes for which they were established.

Mr. FAGAN took up the case of the Roman Catholics, remiuding Sir Robert Inglis that nearly every one of the colleges of Oxford had been founded by them; and if the conditions attached to the foundations of many of them were strictly and legally carried out, none but Roman Catholics could be educated in them. He also complained of the exclusive character of the Dublin University, which debarred the Roman Catholics from any share in its honours or emoluments, although in some of the great Universities of the Continent we any religious test applied to candidates. He pointed out the large revenues which the Dublin University enjoyed, while so little liberality was evinced in the system of education inculcated there, that only 30 Roman Catholics annually entered Trinity College. He showed that, by original intention and present policy, the Catholics ought to be admitted to a full participation of the advantages offered to students at Trinity College, Dublin

Mr. NAPIER, combating his argument chiefly to the Irish part of the question, gave a brief history of the Dublin University, which he traced back no earlier than the time of Elizabeth, and treated, therefore, as a strictly Protestant foundation. Nevertheless, Catholics were admitted to many benefits in the way of education, though not allowed to take professorships in that institution, although the grant out of the public taxes for Maynooth was larger in amount than the whole land revenues of Trinity College. He was unwilling to disturb the present arrangement, which he thought satisfactory, but should prefer the exclusion of the Roman Catholic altogether, to their admission as professors and scholars in absolute equality with the Protestants. As to the general question, he contended that the universities themselves, and the Dublin University in particular, were not merely anomalous, but most successful, in rendering their course of education fit for the improved intelligence of the times.

Lord J. RUSSELL separated the motion as it stood for the reform of the universities from the question relative to the admissibility of Dissenters. This cleared of the great source of discordance, he saw no objection on principle to the appointment of a commission to inquire into the administration of, and education afforded in, the Universities. The expediency of issuing such a commission was another question. Twenty years since there would have been less doubt on that point; but many improvements had lately been introduced in making more strict the examinations in the older branches of instruction, as also by introducing many new subjects of study, embracing the modern languages, the practical sciences, political economy, &c. Some practical modifications, especially as related to the professorial emoluments, were, however, necessary to carry out these improvements to their full extent, and these modifications the Universities themselves were legally incompetent to accomplish The existing disabilities he considered a great waste of power, and which he believed could be repaired without infringing on the due respect for the original intention of the founders. Without assenting, therefore, to the comprehensively warded motion of Mr. Heywood, it was the intention of the Government to advise the appointment of a Royal Commission to institute inquiries, in a friendly spirit, into the condition of the British collegiate institutions.

Mr. GOULBURN pleaded that if the intention was to benefit the Universities, a commission was the worst means of carrying it out. The question had been much, and could do everything by themselves, and their career of improvement would only be thwarted and probably defeated by the appointment of a commission of inquiry. Altogether he repudiated the idea of any legislative interference with the proceedings of those learned bodies.

Mr. R. PALMER moved that the debate be adjourned.

Some members persisting to demand a division,

The House divided :

For adjourning the debate	..	..	..	273
Against	..	..	..	31
Majority	..	..	..	242

The debate was accordingly adjourned.

On the motion of Mr. KNOX, leave was given to bring in a Bill to amend the law relating to the Administration of the Personal Property of deceased persons in Ireland.

Mr. ROEBUCK moved for a select committee to inquire into the defalcations of the late Sir Thomas Turton, the Registrar of the Court of Bengal.

Sir J. C. HOBHOUSE consented to the appointment of the committee, which was agreed to.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL obtained leave to bring in a Bill amending the process for the collection of Fees in the Court of Chancery.

Adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

Mr. M. MILNES moved the second reading of his Juvenile Offenders Bill, the objects and provisions of which he detailed at length. The principle of the bill was to lay down clear and distinct punishments for juvenile offenders, and to provide industrial schools of reform for them.

Sir G. GREY agreed in many of the propositions made by the honourable member, and approved of his intentions generally, but he felt it to be his duty to give a decided opposition to the measure. The right honourable baronet discussed the clauses of the bill seriatim, and contended that, however well-intentioned and however commendable in point of principle, the bill would be wholly inoperative for good, and would certainly be productive of much mischief.

Sir G STRICKLAND moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. SIMEON, Mr. HEADLAM, Colonel THOMPSON, Mr. TRELAWNY, and Mr. RICE spoke in favour of the principle of the bill, though they would not pledge themselves to debate it.

Sir J. PAKINGTON objected to it.

Mr. MILNES rose to reply (amid loud cries of "Oh" and "Divide"); but the Speaker decided that, having spoken when the amendment was proposed, he had deprived himself to his right of reply. The hon. gentleman had intimated that it was his intention to withdraw the bill, and was evidently desirous to explain his views, but cries of "Order" and "Divide" prevailing throughout the House, he was obliged to assume his seat.

The SPEAKER then put the question on the amendment, and decided that it was carried in the affirmative.

AFFIRMATION BILL.

Mr. P. WOOD moved the committal of the Affirmation Bill, the principle of which was, he said, to extend the privilege of making affirmation instead of oath, now confined to Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists, to all persons who had a conscientious scruple to the taking of an oath.

Mr. GOULBURN was opposed to the bill altogether, and should resist it in every way, as he had resisted the bill brought in last year. He did not think that because Parliament had passed a bad act for the convenience of Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists, that therefore the House should extend a bad law, and abolish in an underhand way the taking of oaths altogether. The right hon. gentleman moved, as an amendment, that the bill be committed that day six months.

Mr. COCKBURN came to the conclusion to vote for the bill, but after much hesitation. Courts of justice should not compel persons to take oaths, and thus the benefit of necessary testimony was frequently lost, and the rights of individuals were often sacrificed.

Mr. NEWDEGATE opposed, and Sir E. BUXTON supported the bill.

The House then divided—

For going into committee	..	..	..	129
Against it ..	..	..	..	148
Majority against the bill	..	..	..	—19

The bill was consequently thrown out.

The Smoke Nuisance Rating Bill was re-considered, and some amendments made in it.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

TITLES OF RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

On the motion of the Marquis of BREADALBANE, this bill passed through committee, and some verbal amendments were introduced.

The Alterations in Pleadings Bill passed through committee.

PIRATES HEAD-MONEY REPEAL BILL.

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, the House resolved itself into committee on this bill.

The Earl of ELLESBOROUGH objected to the stigmatizing persons as pirates until they should have been convicted of piracy. The words of the bill should have been "alleged pirates." The noble Lord concluded by proposing a verbal amendment calculated to meet this objection.

The Earl of MINTO defended the wording of the clause.

After a few observations from the Earl of MAYO and Lord COLCHESTER,

Earl GREY said he had no objection to adopt so much of the amendment of the Noble Earl (Ellesborough) as would make the bill applicable to the capture of pirates once as well as at sea.

The bill then passed through committee, and was ordered to be reported. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

KIDDERMINSTER ELECTION.

Mr. BOUVERIE, the Chairman of the Kidderminster Election Committee, appeared at the bar, with the report of the committee appointed to try the petition presented against the return of the sitting member. The committee reported that Mr. John Best was duly elected a burgess to serve in this present Parliament for the borough of Kidderminster.

NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

Lord HARRY VANE asked the member for Lancaster (Mr. Greene), whether he was aware that extensive alterations were proceeding in the New House of Commons? It appeared to be now discovered that there was not sufficient accommodation in the house for the members—(a laugh) and he understood there was to be a gallery which would greatly take away from the symmetry of the house. He would ask the hon. member whether those alterations were to be of a permanent character?

Mr. GREENE said, that the arrangement of the seats on each side of the house had been found so defective, that it would very much diminish the number of members who could sit in the house. (Laughter.) It had been determined, therefore, to erect a gallery at the end of the house which should be appropriated to the use of members, so that the house would accommodate a much larger number of members than it ever had done. An order had been issued, therefore, to get up the house for a temporary manner, so that members might occupy it for a few days this session, and judge of its accommodations, and if the arrangement were found suitable, then the arrangements would be carried out with more facility, but the alterations could be made with less expense. The present arrangement was, therefore, quite temporary.

Lord HARRY VANE wished to know if any estimate had been made of the expense ?

Mr. GREENE said there had, and it amounted to £500.

Mr. HUME wished to ask whether the architect was to continue to have a percentage on all the blunders he committed?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER denied that he had ever received a percentage.

Mr. GOULBURN hoped that hon. members, in asking questions on the subject in future, would not make use of such terms.

Sir J. PAKINGTON gave notice, that, on the next occasion of going into Committee of Supply, he should ask a question of which he had given notice with regard to the King's road, Pimlico.

THE STAMP DUTIES

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, he regretted to find that the alterations which he suggested in the Stamp Duties Bill had not reconciled the differences of opinion which existed on the subject, and, with the view of reconciling those differences with the line of policy which he thought it desirable to pursue, he would postpone the bill for a week.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES GOVERNMENT BILL.

The House having resumed the committee on this bill, passed the remaining clauses, and the bill was ordered to be reported.

SECURITIES FOR ADVANCES (IRELAND) BILL.

The adjourned debate on this bill was resumed, and

Lord NAAS moved as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.

After considerable discussion the House divided, rejecting the amendment by a majority of 186 to 41. The bill was then read a second time.—Adjourned.

CONFERENCE OF THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

In accordance with the recommendation of a meeting of reformers held in the metropolis on Dec. 20, 1845, a conference of the friends of reform from all parts of the kingdom was opened on Tuesday, in Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate-street, and eleven o'clock.

The objects of the Conference, which sat several days, were to receive reports from delegates in reference to the progress of the reform movement, to devise means of carrying out with promptitude and vigour the objects of the Association, and to complete the arrangements for realising the fund of £10,000 required for the present year's operations. The large hall was very numerously attended, and there were 130 delegates from different parts of the kingdom present. On the platform were Mr. Cobden, M.P., Mr. Hume, M.P., Colonel Thompson, M.P., Mr. George Thompson, M.P., Mr. W. J. Fox, M.P., Mr. J. Kershaw, M.P., Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart, M.P., Mr. Feargus O'Connor, M.P., Mr. J. Williams, M.P., Mr. L. Heyworth, M.P., Mr. J. B. Smith, M.P., Mr. B. Wilcox, M.P., the Sheriff of Norwich, the High-Bailiff of Southwark, Admiral Gordon, &c. Sir J. Walmsley, president of the Association, presided.

The proceedings consisted of the delivery of speeches and the passing of resolutions in support of the objects stated.

Amongst the latter were the following

That this Conference, convened for the purpose of concerting the best means of carrying out the principles and objects of the National Reform Association, feels it incumbent, at the commencement of the proceedings, to express its strong sense of the necessity of Parliamentary and financial reform. Its satisfaction at the progress already made in extending the operations of the association, and its appreciation of the energetic measures adopted by the council to that end. It further declares its conviction, that, as a properly instructed and well-directed public opinion is fully competent to effect any change that the circumstances of the country may require, the work of reform, in all instances, rests with the great body of the people; and, therefore, the Conference invites every friend of reform, numerously represented, with the various political and financial reform associations, to become members of the National Reform Association, and thus to avail themselves of its organization.

That it is desirable that the Council should appoint a sub-committee in each of the counties of England, Scotland, and Ireland, whose duty it shall be to form such branches as the funds may enable it to establish, and to take such other steps as may be necessary to carry out the principles and objects of the Association, or forming local committees in connexion with the Association, organizing public meetings for enrolling members, and otherwise promoting the principles and objects of the Association, and, as special efforts already made in some of the farming districts have been attended with signal success, it will be well for the council to direct part of its labours specially to the agricultural districts

At the meeting of the Conference, on Tuesday, among the principal speakers were Messrs. Cobden and Bright, who both ably advocated the principles of the Association.

Mr. Linslington, M.P., having proposed the following resolution

That, as the freehold land sodalities have been proved to be powerful auxiliaries to the cause of reform, or adding to the number of voters in the constituencies, it is the duty of the Association to adopt every means of promoting thrifty and provident habits among the working classes, this Conference is of opinion that they are worthy of the earnest support of every reformer, and may be made greatly instrumental in promoting the reform movement.

Mr. G. W. Reynolds, author of "The Mysteries of London," said he had submitted two resolutions to the "Business Committee," one in favour of manhood suffrage and payment of members of the House of Commons, but they had rejected them. He therefore took the liberty of appealing to the delegates assembled in conference, whether the business committee had acted right in so doing.

Mr. Tillett, of Norwich, the chairman of the committee, said, the resolution had been rejected on this ground—this Conference was assembled for the purpose of considering the best means of carrying out the principles on which the National Reform Association was founded. They were not met for the discussion of those principles. Every one present must be assumed to approve of them; and if Mr. Reynolds did not, he had better withdraw his name from the books of the Association. (Cheers.)

The Conference having, at the call of the chairman, approved of the rejection of the resolutions by the committee,

The discussion of the resolution was resumed, and it was ultimately adopted, as also were the following :—

That it be a recommendation to the Council of the National Reform Association that a periodical Association be established and circulated in connexion with the Association, and that an editor or literary assistant be appointed to conduct the same.

That the Council be respectfully requested to prepare a plan, including the plan of reform proposed by the Association, with a view to its introduction in that shape to Parliament.

With respect to the latter, it was explained that the plan of the Association was not identical with that laid down by Mr. Hume for extending the franchise; there was a great difference between the two plans. The plan of the Association would give the franchise to 4,000,000, whilst that of Mr. Hume would only include 3,000,000.

On Thursday the Conference again met, when it was resolved that the members of the council should be chosen by ballot, without reference to pecuniary qualifications; that the business committee should be instructed to issue a report of the results of the Conference; and that the meeting recommended that a constant communication should be kept up by their constituencies with the members of the House of Commons, giving their views on important measures brought before the Legislature. In the course of the meeting the sums of the subscriptions to the £10,000 fund were announced from the provinces, and many more promised. A grand soirée in celebration of the meeting of the Conference took place in the evening, when the principal topics were discussed on which were addressed on the subject of Reform by all the leading men of the party.

IRELAND.

THE OFFICE OF LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.—Sir John Jervis, Attorney-General for England, has given an opinion in the case of the Lord Mayor of Dublin, coinciding with that given by the English Solicitor-General and by Sir Colman O'Loghlen. It is as follows :—"I am of opinion that Mr. Reynolds may, whilst in possession of the office, legally appoint a locum tenens, whose acts will be valid. I am of opinion that the deputy so appointed will not be subject to any penalties; but I am inclined to think that Mr Reynolds will be liable for the act of the deputy so appointed. Mr. Reynolds can only be removed from his office by judgment of ouster upon a quo warranto."

TERRIFIC HAILSTORM.—On Thursday week, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, a storm of wind and hail, accompanied with thunder and lightning, broke over Dublin with tropical violence. It had all the suddenness, also, of a West India hurricane, for the preceding forenoon had been very fine. The local papers say, that immediately previous to the commencement of the storm the wind shifted a few points to the south, and continued souther while the first part of the thunder-storm and the heavy rain continued. It then suddenly, and with a violence that strained the cables of the largest vessels, and threatened the destruction of masts and rigging, veered round to N.N.E., and from it, a point of the compass directly and diametrically opposite; and from this point of N.N.E there poured a tempest of wind such as has never, perhaps, been equalled in violence in this climate, accompanied by volleys of hail that were swept with resistless force in the direction of the gale, shattering windows in myriads, and reducing to ruin everything within the sphere of atmospheric influence or exposed to the fury of the tempest. The enormous size of the globules of hail (as large as grapes) was a subject of intense interest and even curiosity, scarcely repressed by the terror of the awe-stricken people. From an official return made by the police of the damage to property and estimated loss in the divisions within their jurisdiction, it appears that the number of squares of glass broken amounted to 388,635, and the damage to property about £30,000.

VISCOUNT GOUGH.—Mr. Kilburn has just taken two photographs of Lord Gough—one portraying the veteran soldier in full regimentals; the other, as a civilian. The likeness is admirable, and their delicacy and finish have never been surpassed.

DEATH OF THE EMPRESS DOWAGER OF CHINA.—By a remarkable coincidence—sufficiently so, at least, to be worth recording—the news of the decease of the Queen Dowager of Great Britain arrived at Canton on the same day with an express from the Board of War at Pekin, announcing the death of the Empress Dowager of China, also eminent for her virtues, departed this life (lit. went to seek the spirits) upon the 16th day of the 12th moon of the 29th year of Táukwang (18th January). Officers, civil and military, are required enjoined to array themselves in white, and perform ceremonies proper for such occasions They are also to affix a blue stamp to all public documents, and are not to permit drums to beat or theatres to play in front of their doors. The Peking Gazettes bear witness to the devout respect with which the Empress Dowager was ever formly treated by his Imperial Majesty; which, however, was no more than proper gratitude on his part; for it was her preference of him over her own offspring that induced Kia-king to nominate Tán-kwang as his successor.—China Mail.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—The Lords of the Admiralty intend visiting the whole of the vessels now fitted for the Arctic Expedition at Greenhithe, on Monday next, and they expect to leave the river on the following day, for the northern regions.

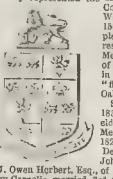
GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—April 25 : Special Meeting : London : C. Russel, Esq., in the chair.—It was resolved to create an additional capital of £3,800,000 to be applied to the completion of the lines referred to in the report of the Consolidation Committee, and to the purchase of the Birmingham and Oxford, and Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour and Severn, as well as to pay off a portion of the existing debt of the company—such capital to bear a preferential dividend of 4½ per cent. per annum, subject to the conditions that the holders may exchange it into saleable stock of the company within the next seven years, or the company pay it off at par within a further period of seven years. It was also resolved to give the directors the power of issuing £1,000,000 of the capital as a perpetual 4½ per Cent. Stock, if found necessary. The consideration of the report of the directors on the recommendations of the Committee of Consultation, which opposes undue reductions of fares, was postponed until the 16th May

A FINE HOOPOE was shot by Mr. Gooddin, at Campton Dundon, near Glastenbury, on the 3rd inst., and has been preserved.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR JOHN EDWARDS, BART.

THIS respected Baronet died on the 19th inst., at Bryn-y-Fys, near Overton. He formerly represented the Montgomery Burghs in Parliament, and was Lieut.-Colonel of the Volunteers and Local Militia of the Western Division of Montgomeryshire. He was born 16th of January, 1770, and had consequently completed his 80th year. Naturally, his family was of respectability and antiquity, seated at Talgarth, county Merioneth : maternally, he derived from the Owens of Garth, of whom was Richard Owen of Garth, who, in 1650, was placed by Charles II. on the list of those "fit and qualified to be made Knights of the Royal Oak."



Sir John Edwards, who was created a Baronet in 1838, married first, 28th January, 1792, Catharine, eldest daughter and co-heir of Colonel T. Browne, of Mellington Hall; but by her, who died 21st January, 1821, he had no issue. He married secondly, 7th December, 1825, Harriet, daughter of the Rev. Charles Johnson, Prebendary of Whitchurch-on-Tern, and widow of J. Owen Herbert, Esq., of Dolvorgan, and by her was father of an only child, Mary Cornelia, married, 3rd August, 1846, to Viscount Seaham.

By Sir John's death the baronetcy becomes extinct.

ALEXANDER SETON, ESQ., OF MOUNIE, J.P. AND D.L. FOR ABERDEENSHIRE

THE death of this venerable gentleman occurred at Leamington, on the 16th instant, at the advanced age of eighty. He was the son and heir of the late James Anderson, Esq., of Cobenshaw, who assumed the surname and arms of Seton in right of his wife, Margaret Seton, sister and heiress of William Seton, Esq., of Mounie, and daughter of George, second son of Sir Alexander Seton, Bart., Lord Pitmedden. The family of Seton is of great antiquity. At the earliest time of authentic records, we find its ancestors settled as lords of the soil, at their Baronial residence in East Lothian, where the chiefs continued to hold their principal seat, through the period of nearly seven centuries, until attainted for their attachment to the exiled house of Stuart, in the person of George Seton, fifth Earl of Winton, in 1715.

The gentleman whose death we record, married, in 1810, his cousin, Janet Skene, daughter of the Rev. Skene Ogilvy, D.D., and has left three surviving sons, all military officers, and one surviving daughter.

SIR GEORGE DRINKWATER.

SIR GEORGE DRINKWATER, KNT., an eminent merchant, died very recently at the age of 70. He and his father were Mayors of Liverpool, the latter in 1810, himself in 1830. The only two chief magistrates who received knighthood on the accession of William IV. were Sir George Drinkwater and Sir James Eyre, M.D., a circumstance that suggested Abernethy's advice to a corpulent patient, who applied about the time for his advice :—"You must live lower and drink weaker potation," said the eccentric physician. "You must go into the country, take exercise, and drink of the two new mayors that have been knighted—Eyre and Drinkwater."

THE REV. LORD FREDERICK BEAUCLERK, D.D.

HIS Lordship was fourth son of Aubrey, fifth Duke of St. Albans, by Catherine his wife, daughter of William Earl of Bessborough. He was vicar of Redbourne and St. Michael's, in St. Albans, Herts. His death occurred at his residence, in Grosvenor-street, on the 22nd instant. He married, 26th June, 1813, Charlotte, daughter of Charles, twelfth Viscount Dillon, and has left two sons and two daughters.

THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

CHARLOTTE-AUGUSTA, Duchess of Marlborough, was born Nov. 26, 1818, the only child of Henry-Jeffrey, late Viscount Ashbrook, by Emily-Theophila, his second wife, second daughter of Sir Thomas Metcalf, Bart. Her Grace wedded the present Duke of Marlborough on the 16th of June, 1840, and has left issue one son, a merie-Athelstan, born in 1847, and one daughter, Clementina-Augusta, born May 6, 1846.

Her Grace was confined with a stillborn infant some five weeks ago, and was considered to be rapidly progressing to recovery. A severe mental shock which she unfortunately experienced about a fortnight ago, took such a powerful hold of the nervous system, that her Grace never rallied from it, and final y sank under its baneful influence at an early hour on Saturday morning.

ELIZABETH LADY THROCKMORTON.

THIS lady, distinguished for her piety and her many amiable qualities, who died on the 4th instant, was daughter of the late Sir John Acton, Bart., for many years Prime Minister to the King of the Two Sicilies, and representative of the very ancient family of Acton, who received baronets in the year 1644. She married, in 1822, Sir Robert George Throckmorton, Bart., late M.P. for Berks; she was sister to Sir Ferdinand Richard Acton, Bart., who married the heiress of the Lineal House of Dalberg, Countess Granville, and mother of Sir John Acton, Bart.; the lamented lady was also sister of the late Cardinal Acton.

A RARE PURCHASE.—At the sale, last week, at Northwood Park, Isle of Wight, the property of the late George Ward, Esq., Lot 112 was purchased by Messrs. Emanuel, goldsmiths to the Queen, Portsmouth; and it is reported that it will probably be moved to Osborne House, Isle of Wight. The lot was a truly beautiful Egyptian statue of Antinous, in dove-coloured marble, the size of life, displaying the finest symmetry and proportion. It is a splendid specimen of sculpture, and in fine preservation, 5 feet 4 inches high, and stood on a stone pedestal. This noble and unique statue was sent by Napoleon Bonaparte as a present to the King of Naples. The vessel having been intercepted and captured by a British ship, the captain claiming the statue was taken to Guelfar, at which place it was purchased by the late George Ward, Esq., and removed to England. An offer of 1000 guineas for this exquisite work of art was made to the late proprietor, and it has been valued by a nobleman of the highest repute as a virtuoso at double that sum.

SPRINGBOK HUNTING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A CORRESPONDENT (an officer in H.M. 6th Royals) has favoured us with the accompanying Sketch of the very interesting chase of the Bontebok, or Springbok Hunting, in South Africa, which we prefer describing in the words of the sportsman :—

"Swellendam, Feb. 16.—Up at three o'clock in the morning. After having partaken of a slight refreshment, my friend ——— and myself started in a cart and team of six horses, driven by 'Totties;' our steeds fastened behind, to be ready on the first emergency. We hasted for breakfast at 'Klein Sée' (little Kwak), a farm belonging to M. F. du Toit, we then proceeded to 'Nacht Waght' (night watch), the residence of Mr. Alexander Van der Spuy, from thence we went, and had some excellent runs after the Bontebok. It is a most magnificent animal, larger than the gazelle, equalling, I should think, the speed of the fastest race-horse, and requiring the hardest riding and most intimate knowledge of its ways to enable the sportsman to get a fair shot. Having discovered a troop of Bontebok, we got out of the cart and mounted our horses, sending a Hottentot attendant far to leeward, in order to divert their attention, and drive the animals towards us, we all the while keeping parallel, but well to windward of them, knowing full well by experience, that, after sundry burnings and twistings, the leading bull will always make a rush against the wind; the whole troop follow, and nothing stops them but a ball from your rifle. Away you go—keep firm in your saddle, and grasp your gun tightly; your eyes peeled for possible service—and then your reining, winding in various turns; the other, on the look-out for porcupine mole-holes, and several other agreeable openings which are liable on the shortest notice to send you and your gun flying over your horse's head. Away you go at full speed—they head to the wind; no—another turn: keep a sufficient distance between them and yourself, as the grand rush will soon take place. At last this occurs: the leading one heads and takes head in the wind's eye. Now is your time; there is no mistaking the troop's intention. Select your victim, and bestow all your attention upon it, as you now little heed the ground you are flying over. When sure of your distance, pull up short, take your aim and fire. Should the first shot only wound, dismount and finish him with your second barrel. A good-sized one will measure from upwards of 300 lb. Before evening we had safely lodged three fine animals in our carts, besides numerous pheasants, hares, and partridges, which we had shot in the morning."

In the illustration, the sportsman, having dismounted, is taking a second shot at a wounded animal. His cap is decorated with ostrich-feathers; the horse is quite estranged with the long chase. To the left is the cart which carries the game; and in the background several ostriches are scampering off.

The Springbok, or Bontebok (Antilope euchora), is larger than the gazelle: the general colour of its upper parts is fawn; the under surface is white, abruptly bordered along the sides with a rich chestnut band: the horns are moderate length, and lyriform. When pursued, Springboks frequently take an extraordinary bound (hence their name), rising with curved or elevated backs high into the air, generally to the height of about 8 feet, and appearing as if about to take flight. Mr. Pringle says he has seen them literally whiten the face of the country, "as far as the eye could reach over their far-stretching plains." He says, also, to the migrations of these animals, Captain Stockenstrom, chief commissioner at the Cape, thus writes to Mr. Pringle :—"It is scarcely possible for a person passing over some of the extensive tracts of the interior, and admiring that elegant animal (the Sprin.bok), to figure to himself that these ornaments of the desert can become as destructive as the locusts themselves. Incredible numbers, which sometimes pour in from the north, distress the farmer inconceivably. Any attempt at numerical computation would be vain."

SPRINGBOK HUNTING IN SOUTH AFRICA.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

CHASE OF A JACKAL, IN THE NEW FOREST

ON the morning of yesterday week (the 19th inst.), the quiet little town of Lyndhurst, which lies in the New Forest, was the scene of great excitement, from the report that a pack of harriers—the joint property of Mr. B. Powell and Messrs Hay and William Morant—were about to hunt a Jackal, of great size and ferocity, which was known to have arrived at Lyndhurst on the Wednesday previous.

The meet was the New Forest Union, and a large muster was expected; but, unfortunately, the day was most unfavourable, though many superior and valuable horses were to be seen at the meet, including those of Mr Shedden (Master of the New Forest Hounds) and some friends, and a tolerably large muster—including the Marquis of Worcester, Sir Thomas Moncrief, F. Lovell, Esq., Mr. William Morant, and many others well known in different hunts in the county. As the rain was fast falling, the muster trotted off at once to the place where the Jackal was to be enlarged, which had been kept a profound secret, in consequence of the crowds of foot people. The pack at once took up the scent, and after one or two short turns settled to their work in earnest. Now occurred an incident not unusual in the New Forest: a herd of some twenty fallow deer crossed the railway; and so frightened were they, that they turned with the hounds, and the pack and deer, as it were, mutually pressed on the line of the fugitive.

The hounds now ran at their best pace up to the Beaulieu-road, on the top of the hill above Matley Moor, down to which they flew through the Alders and up the opposite hill through Denny Wood; leaving Denny Lodge on the right, up through Woodfidley, with Stubby Copse about half-a-mile to the right. Up to this point they had run perfectly straight, without a check, and the ground terribly severe. The Jackal here encountered the South-Western Railway, and turned short to his right down Frame Heath, between New Copse and Stubby Copse, through Pignel Wood, to the Buck-pen, at the corner of Ramnor, across Balmer Lawn, by Holland Wood, to a crossing of the brook called Buck's Ford, where a short check arose, the foot people rushing out of the village of Brockenhurst. The Jackal, however, crossed before them, and the hounds being cast over, instantly hit it off, and resumed the pursuit, the time up to this point being thirty minutes, and with scarce anything to call a check. Jackey now made towards Black Knoll Heath, by Wilds Corner, up by Rhinefield to the Christchurch-road at the fifth mile-stone from Lyndhurst; up to which he ran for two or three hundred yards, and then turned suddenly to the right into some strong gorse, over some heath, where he was viewed going into another piece of gorse, in which he was secured without much damage, except fatigue, and it is hoped that he may yet survive to show another such a spitter

About seven or eight finished with the hounds, including the Marquis of Worcester, who never left them throughout: Sir Thomas Moncrief went as usual in the first flight; and Mr. Francis Lovell, Mr. Mott, and Mr. Burton went well throughout. Mr. Powell and Messrs. Hay and William Morant were of course with their hounds. The distance from start to finish, by the milestones, was eight miles; the run described will be allowed by any person who knows the Forest to be from twelve to thirteen miles; and the time by the Marquis of Worcester's watch was fifty-seven minutes.

CHASE OF A JACKAL, IN THE NEW FOREST.

GREAT PROTECTIONIST MEETING ON BARHAM DOWNS.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

ANTHONY'S DOUBLE-ACTING PATENT CHURN.

This new apparatus consists of a strong dovetailed box, with a close-fitting lid, and a top to admit of the milk being drawn off at pleasure. In the interior is the dasher, consisting of a square wooden frame, with a floor in the middle, and divided into partitions (or air-cells, as they are termed), as shown in the Engraving; and to which motion is given by turning the handle.

CHURN—SHOWING THE DASHER.

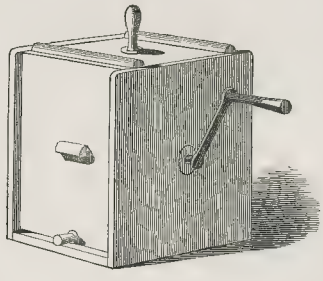
The accelerative properties of this invention have already been tested in public, and established.

The Churn is described in the American journals as the invention of Messrs. Anthony and Emerson, of Fulton-street, New York. The Daily Sun says:—"We have seen butter made by it in three minutes, from milk bought in our streets, which was not likely to be very pure."



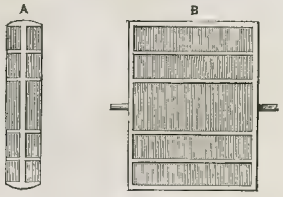
ANTHONY'S DOUBLE-ACTION PATENT CHURN.

One of its recommendations is its great simplicity. It operates on a beautiful principle; the mechanical action of the air, which is mingled with the cream in such a manner that a thorough separation of the particles takes place, preventing the cream from frothing on the surface, and doing its work with astonishing rapidity, and in the most thorough manner.

Butter is produced by this Churn in twelve minutes from cream, and in five minutes from milk; and so perfect is the operation, that more butter, and better quality, is obtained from the same quantity of cream than by any other method ever yet tried.

The butter may be washed in the Churn, by pouring off the milk, putting in cold water, and pressing the butter against the sides of the Churn, moving the dasher backwards and forwards, and changing the water until it remains clear.

These Churns are made of various sizes: the dimensions of the one we have engraved is 18 inches deep, 18 inches long, and 14 inches wide.



A. SECTION, B. FRONT, OF DASHER.

All applications respecting this invention should be addressed to 97, Newgate street.

On Wednesday, this new churn was exhibited to the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, at their rooms, 12, Hanover-square, the Duke of Richmond in the chair; when the churn produced from 5 quarts of cream 1½ lb. of butter of excellent quality and flavour, in 8 minutes. The room was crowded by noblemen and gentlemen, many of whom are experienced agriculturists, who were highly gratified at the result.

PLOUGHING BY STEAM—TRIAL AT GRIMSTHORPE BY LORD WILLOUGHBY D'ERESBY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

GREAT AGRICULTURAL MEETING ON BARHAM DOWNS.

On Tuesday was held on Barham Downs, near Canterbury, a great meeting, stated in the Kentish Observer to have been "the most influential" ever held in this locality; the object being to discuss questions bearing on the present agricultural distress, and to adopt an address praying her Majesty to afford remedial measures, and dismiss her present Ministers. A large circle was formed by twenty-eight waggons, in which the assembly congregated; and by one o'clock, the time appointed for the commencement of the proceedings, there were not fewer than from eight to ten thousand persons present the dense mass in the circle being hemmed in by the piled-up masses of human heads from the waggons and other vehicles in the outer circle. In addition to the twenty-eight waggons, was a line of seventy-five horsemen—some portions two-and-two, others three deep; the waggons contained, on an average, thirty-two persons: the rest of the ground was scattered over with refreshment booths, orange carts, &c.; many private carriages, and stage coaches, and a vast number of horses and carts. Besides the usual characteristics of such meetings, were a couple of boats rigged, upon waggons, and surmounted with masts and flags, one of the crew casting the lead from the side, and taking soundings upon the feet of those who stood in the way.

Among those present were the Right Hon. Lord Sondes, the Right Hon. S. R. Lushington, Sir Norton Knatchbull, Bart., Sir B. W. Bridges, Bart., Sir E. C. Dering, Bart., J. P. Plumptre, Esq., M.P., W. Deedes, Esq., M.P., M. Bell, Esq. (High Sheriff), &c.

The High Sheriff first came forward, and proposed that Sir Brook W. Bridges should preside over the meeting.

S. M. Hilton, Esq., having seconded the proposition, Sir Brook Bridges was voted to the chair amid acclamation, and addressed the meeting at some length upon the great object for which it had been convened, and, in conclusion, maintained that the only mode of increasing their means of meeting the demands of taxation was by reverting to Protection.

The Right Hon. S. R. Lushington then proposed, and E. Holtum, Esq., seconded, a resolution condemnatory of the repeal of the Corn Laws, and the duties on the import of foreign cattle, as a most grievous injury upon the tenant-farmer, and maintaining—

That, if the present system of Free Trade in grain be persevered in, the difficulties and distress under which that important class is now labouring must be increasing till they result in the ruin not only of those who are directly engaged in the cultivation of the soil, but of all those classes which are collaterally interested therein.

The resolution was carried with only four dissentients.

Sir Norton J. Knatchbull, Bart., proposed, and E. Hughes, Esq., seconded, the next resolution:—

That no exertions towards agricultural improvement, on the part of the tenant farmer, combined with all his skill that the most liberal landlord can by possibility afford him, will ever enable him successfully to enter into competition with the unlimited resources of foreign countries—many of them far more favoured by nature than the United Kingdom.

Sir N. Knatchbull concluded his address as follows:—This being St. George's day, I call upon all present to join me in the cry of "St George for England, and may God preserve us in the midst of these most serious difficulties!" (Loud applause). The resolution was carried unanimously.

Sir Edward Dering, Bart., moved the third resolution, seconded by the Rev. George Moore:

That a dutiful and humble address be presented to her Majesty, setting forth the severe and increasing distress of that numerous class of her faithful subjects engaged in agricultural pursuits, and earnestly praying that her Majesty will be graciously pleased to cause the same to be her immediate consideration, to dismiss her present Ministers, and to summon to her Councils men prepared to foster native industry, thereby affording an opportunity to the people of electing representatives who will adopt measures consistent with that object.

Captain D'Aeth then proposed the address, which was seconded by Mr. C Neame; and the same having been read to the meeting by the Chairman, was carried with only two dissentients.

Upon the proposition of F. B. Dyne, Esq., seconded by R. Potter, Esq., the Right Hon. Lord Sondes was then requested to present the address to her Majesty, to which his Lordship acceded, adding that he would "endeavour to do what he could to command her Majesty's attention to it, by representing it as emanating from so large a meeting, which was unsurpassed for unanimity and order."

Mr. J. J. Plumptre, M.P., then proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was seconded by Dr. Carter.

Mr. S. Swinford then came forward in a waggon at the opposite side of the circle, and addressed the meeting at some length; and after some severe animadversions upon what he termed the drones of the nation, who only sought to rob the bees of the fruit of their toil, concluded with an assurance of a warm devotion to the cause of agriculture and Protection.

The meeting was then addressed by Mr. H. Ward and Mr. W. Deedes; and the vote of thanks to the Chairman having been carried with a round of cheers, that gentleman briefly acknowledged the compliment, and declared the meeting dissolved.

Rounds of cheers were then given for Sir Brook Bridges, Lord Sondes, the members, Mr. Richard Oastler, and others.

Mr. Oastler was about leaving the ground, but, on hearing the compliment paid him, came forward and addressed the assembly in a most energetic and emphatic manner. He stated, that, having heard of the meeting, and that it was probable Mr. Cobden would be present, he had come over from Broadstairs, where he had been staying for the benefit of his health, and attended the meeting, in the hope of being able to confront the Anti Corn-law Leaguer. Mr. Oastler said that he took the chair for the poor Yorkshire factory girls and boys, whose cause he advocated. He then attacked the great Industrial Exhibition and the master manufacturers, and assured the men of Kent of a strong reactionary feeling in the manufacturing districts. Mr. Oastler, in the course of the remainder of his address, stated that the delegates from the trades in London had directly denounced the principles of Free-trade. Mr. Oastler concluded his address amid loud cheering.

The meeting then dispersed.

As the assembly left the ground, a noble sight it was to see the living stream pouring down the one hill and up the other, in a line a mile in length.

In the evening, a respectable party of some thirty or forty tenant farmers met at the Rose Hotel to dine, by special invitation of Mr. S. Swinford, who also placed a baron of beef on the table.

We are prevented by their extreme length from giving the several speeches, the topics of which were of the usual description, in favour of Protection to Agriculture.

PLOUGHING BY STEAM.

VARIOUS interesting experiments have been made from time to time, with the object of adapting steam-power to the working of the plough. The scene here engraved represents a trial recently made in this way, at Grimsthorpe, in Lincolnshire, by Lord Willoughby D'Eresby. The machinery employed consisted of a small locomotive engine, with a capstan attached, moving on a portable railway. An ordinary plough, followed closely by a subsoil plough, was drawn by a chain from the capstan, working with perfect precision, and at a greater depth and speed than usual. Several gentlemen and farmers, who were present, expressed a favourable opinion of the experiment.

THE TRACY PEERAGE.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS*)*

"Ἐχθὸς γὰρ μοι κεῖνος ὁμῶς Ἀΐδαο πύλῃσιν
"Ὃς χ' ἕτερον μὲν κεύθεῖ ἐνὶ φρεσὶν ἄλλο δὲ βάζει.

SIR,—I read in your last week's paper that Patrick Holton, the principal witness examined before the House of Lords as to the tombstone story in the Tracy Peerage claim, was sentenced, at the last assizes in Borris-in-Ossory, to two years' imprisonment for cow-stealing. It would be as well that the public should be informed that this convicted thief appears for the Crown, and his evidence was to the effect that he served his apprenticeship to a man who was dead, that he followed the Tracy hounds in conjunction with one Pat Hagenals, in two nights, by candle-light, with the shutters fastened, to a window that never had any; that he afterwards broke the stone in five pieces with one blow of a sledge-hammer, and broke out a triangular piece, which, unfortunately for the credit of his testimony, was accidentally burned off in the chimney-piece of Castlecock, in the parish of Donaghmore; that he subsequently smoke-burnt the stone in a fireplace "built up square in the wall,"—no such fireplace ever having been to existence.

Conscience-stricken. The only apology I can offer for my long letter is that it is the truth. I am, Sir, yours most obediently, 28, Royal Exchange, 25th April, 1850. JOHN ROBERT WYLDE.

ROYAL PALACES.—On Wednesday, an interesting Parliamentary paper was printed, in the shape of a return of the sums of money already voted for the different Royal palaces for the last three years, and the amount due. In the year 1847-48 there was £43,301 voted, and in that year £44,891 3s. 2d. was expended; in 1848-49, £40,097 was voted, and £36,831 6s. 2d. expended; whilst, in 1849-50, £42,595 was voted, and £22,172 15s. 5d. expended. The amount due to the 10th April inst. could not be ascertained with accuracy, but the sums voted to the last were expected to be sufficient to complete the contemplated expenses to that period, and the total amount voted will, it was believed, fully cover the total expenditure. With respect to "Buckingham Palace completion and improvement," the sum of £50,000 was voted, and so much as £52,019 9s. 1d. expended in 1847-48; in 1848-49, £30,000 was voted, and £35,883 18s. 11d. expended; and in 1849-50, £14,200 was voted, and £13,314 15s. 9d. expended. Already £150,000 has been voted for this enlargement and improvement of Buckingham Palace, and there will be a further sum of £40,076 12s. 1id. required for that purpose.

DEATH OF THE GOVERNOR OF BERWICK.—This sinecure situation is again vacant by the death of Sir James Bathurst. Throughout the whole period of his appointment, Sir James was never known to have been within the walls of the town he was presumed to be governor of; and the knowledge of him here in that capacity was only maintained by his name appearing in the list of subscribers to local charities. Berwick Advertiser

QUIT AND CROWN RENTS (IRELAND).—The net amount of Irish quit rents and Crown rents received and applied by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests in each year from 1846 to 1850 was as follows:—1846, £55,781; 1847, £54,814; 1848, £59,722; 1849, £61,531. The expenditure during the same period was—1846, £19,957; 1847, £19,533; 1848, £18,679; 1850, £13,310.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 28.—Fourth Sunday after Easter.
MONDAY, 29.—London University founded, 1827.
TUESDAY, 30.—Battle of Fontenoy, 1745.
WEDNESDAY, May 1.—St. Philip and St. James. Duke of Wellington born, 1769.
THURSDAY, 2.—Day increased 7h. 5m.
FRIDAY, 3 Invention of the Cross.
SATURDAY, 4.—Sun rises 4h. 29m., sets 7h. 26m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 4, 1850.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
h m / h m	h m / h m	h m / h m	h m / h m	h m / h m	h m / h m	h m / h m
3 10 / 3 30	3 45 / 4 0	4 20 / 4 40	4 55 / 5 10	5 30 / 5 50	6 15 / 6 35	7 0 / 7 25

CHARLES DICKENS AND THE PRESS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—GRAND EXTRA NIGHT, combining the talents of Madame Sontag, Mdlle Catherine Hayes, Madame Giuliani, and Mdlle Piccolomini, Signori Bosanquet, Calzolari, Sims Reeves, Galletti, Belletti, and Lablache; Mdlles Carlotta Grisi, Maria Taglioni, Amalia Ferraris, and M'lle Paul Taglioni, will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, MAY 2, 1850.

On which occasion will be presented, for the first time, a new and original grand Pas de Trois, composed by M. Paul Taglioni, and entitled The Music by Meyerbeer, Auber, and Donizetti, by Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Marie Taglioni, and Mdlle. Amalia Ferraris.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office of the Theatre. Doors open at Seven, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven o'clock.

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On MONDAY Evening, APRIL 29 will be given Scribe's popular Comedy of BERTRAND ET RATON, in which Mons Regnier will perform.—WEDNESDAY next, May 1st, will be produced (for the first time in this country), Scribe's celebrated Comedy of LA CAMARADERIE. With the following distribution of the principal characters:—De Mirecourt, M. Regnier; Senneterre, M. Bernard; Mdlle. Denain (for first appearance this season); Cesarine, Mdlle. Denain Jeune; Mdlle Nathalie (her first appearance this season); principal scenes of the Theatre Royal Gymnase. Tickets: Agents, Mdlle Rachel (for first appearance in this country). Mr. Mitchell respectfully announces, that, owing to the unavoidable departure of Mons Samson and Mdlle Denain, after the six Comedy nights, he proposes on Friday Evening, May 3, on the occasion of their last Appearances in London—Subscriptions for the remainder of the Season may be arranged at Mr MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open daily from Eleven till Five o'clock.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. James Anderson.—MISS VANDENHOFF begs to announce that she intends to appear on the public stage, as Mrs. Wodehouse, on MONDAY next, May 1st, will be produced Sophocles' Lyric Tragedy of ANTIGONA, with the grand choruses by Mendelssohn, which has produced so extraordinary an effect on the Royal Stage of Denmark. Creon (King of Thebes), Mr. Vandenhoff; Antigone, Miss Vandenhoff (as originally represented by them on the first production of this celebrated Tragedy at the Theatre Royal Copenhagen); after the Tragedy will be followed by the Gorgeous Spectacle of the DEVIL'S RING, or Fire, Water Earth, and Air. This evening's performances will conclude before half-past Eleven o'Clock. Private Boxes and Stalls can be secured at Mr. Vandenhoff, 30, North Bank, Regent's Park; and at the Box-office of the Theatre.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. Charles Dibdin.—Engagement of the Great Equestrian Comedian of Roshaimond. Re-appearance of that extraordinary and accomplished artiste, Mdlle GARDONI, on the Tight Rope.—On MONDAY, April 29, 1850, and during the Week, the Entertainments will commence, at Seven o'Clock, with Fuzbo..'s magnificent Spectacle of the FOUR SONS of AYMON; or, the Days of Charlemagne: produced with great splendour, and introducing most of the Artists of the Establishment, including the beautiful Steed, together with Carno.a, Zobras, &c. &c. To be succeeded by an entire change of Bally's ENTIRE of the CIRCLE, supported by the talented male and female artistes of the Establishment. To conclude with the interesting Melodrama of MEG MUNNOCH; or, the Fatal Gun.—Box-Office open from 11 till 4.—Stage Manager, Mr. W West.

EXETER HALL.—WEDNESDAY CONCERTS.—WEDNESDAY NEXT, MAY 1st, will be held the NINTH CONCERT, when Herr Stigelli, and the renowned Pianiste HERR DREYSCHOCK, will appear together, with other Eminent Artists in Programmes well chosen, amongst a variety of Selections from the Works of BEETHOVEN. BEETHOVEN'S Grand Symphony in C MINOR will be performed for the second time in England. The Poem will be recited by Mr JOSEPH STAMMERS. Tickets, 1s.; Area (Reserved Seats, 2s.; Numbered), Stalls 3s.; may be had at Mr. STRIDE (Agent), 37*2*, Strand, at the offices of the Concerts, 4, in Exeter Hall, and of all Music Sellers.

MR. HENRY WYLDE.—The Directors of the Blackheath Classical Subscription Concerts beg to announce that the SECOND CONCERT of the series, under the direction of Mr. HENRY WYLDE, will take place on SATURDAY MORNING, MAY 4, Mr. Ernst and Mr. Henry Wylde will perform the Kreutzer Sonata of Beethoven, and, with M. Hausmann (violoncello), Beethoven's Trio in G, and also the Trio in E flat. The vocal music will be sung by Madame Lockey, Mr. Joseph Barnett, and Mr. Charles Durrad.—Single Tickets, 7s.; Family Tickets for Three, 1*l*s. To be had of the Secretary.

MR JOHN PARRY'S ENTERTAINMENT.—LAST PERFORMANCE AT WILLIS'S ROOMS of the present Entertainment.—Mr. JOHN PARRY will give his Musical Entertainment entitled "Twice Round the Clock," at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-Street, St. James's, on MONDAY EVENING NEXT, APRIL 29, commencing at Half-past Eight.—Stalls, Tickets, and Programmes to be had of Messrs. OLLIVIER, 41 and 43, New Bond-street, and the principal Music-sellers.

THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS is NOW OPEN at their GALLERY, 53, PALL MALL, near St. James's Palace, daily, from Nine till Dusk.—Admission 1s.

EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—Incorporated by Royal Charter.—The TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this Society is NOW OPEN, from 9 A.M. till Dusk.—Admittance, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East. J. W. ALLEN, Secretary.

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.—Illustrated by a Grand Moving Diorama, with scenes of the most charming scenery in that country, including the new line of Railway, now open from Dublin to Kingstown, at the Chinese Gallery, Hyde Park Corner. Daily at 2, Evening at 8. Admission 1s., Reserved Seats 2s. An interesting historical account of this event may be had at the Gallery.

NEW PANORAMIC PICTURES on a grand scale.—309, REGENT-STREET, adjoining the Royal Polytechnic Institution.—The BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE, the VICTORIA BRIDGE, SNOWDON, CHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, COVENTRY, WOLVERHAMPTON, &c.—Open daily at Nine and Closing at Dusk. Morning and Evening, Half-past Seven and Nine o'Clock. Music by Mr Wallis. Admission, 1s. Children half-price.

HARVEY'S ROYAL GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, next door to the Haymarket Theatre.—Mr. HARVEY has the honour to announce to the public the exhibition of his Original Illustrations of ENGLISH and AMERICAN SCENERY, which have received great commendations from her Majesty and H.R.H. Prince Albert, as well as from many other distinguished persons. The pictures on the walls, and those designed expressly for his Evening Lectures, amount to 12*h* Illustrations, and serve to convey more definite and copious information, when accompanied with the pamphlet or lecture, than any work relating to America hitherto published. The framed Pictures are now, for the first time, placed before the British Public, together with the more recent Views of the HOMES and HAUNTS of the BRITISH POETS, being part of a Series designed to illustrate a course of Lectures for the full protection of authors, now in the Gallery Open daily from Ten till Six o'Clock. Admission, 1s.—Descriptive pamphlets to be had at the door.

INDIA OVERLAND MAIL.—DIORAMA.—GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT-STREET, Waterloo-place.—A GRAND MOVING DIORAMA, ILLUSTRATING the ROUTE of the OVERLAND MAIL to INDIA, depicting every object worthy of notice on the slightly interesting journey from Southampton to Calcutta, accompanied by appropriate and appropriate music (which has been in preparation for the last nine months), is now OPEN DAILY, at Half-past Two and Eight o'Clock. Admission, 1s. Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d (which may be previously secured at the Box-Office). Two, and Half-past Seven o'Clock. Descriptive Catalogue may be obtained at the Gallery

NILE.—GRAND MOVING PANORAMA of the NILE, Comprising all the Monuments of Antiquity on its banks, to which is added the Interior of the great Temple of Abou Simbel, painted by Messrs. Warren, Bonomi, and Fahey; also a collection of Egyptian and Nubian Curiosities. EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly. Daily at Three and at Eight.—Stalls, 3s; Pit, 2s; Gallery 1s. Children and Schools, half-price.

TRAFALGAR.—A Large and Interesting MODEL of the BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR is now exhibiting at 168, NEW BOND-STREET, next to the Clarendon Hotel. The whole work of art is modelled to a scale of 2*l* feet to the inch, thereby rendering it perfectly di-tinct. Is also possesses this great advantage over all paintings on the same subject, that visitors can walk round and minutely examine it, as the action was brought into operation during at the same time a series of beautiful pictorial effects. Open from 10 in the Morning till 10 in the Evening. Admission, 1s.—Saturdays, 2s. 6d. Children, half-price.

FREMONT'S OVERLAND ROUTE to OREGON, TEXAS, and CALIFORNIA, across the Rocky Mountains, made by order of the United States Government, illustrated by a Grand Moving Panorama from Washington City, portraying the striking scenes that occurred to Colonel Fremont and his party, and painted by Messrs. Hammond Stewart and party, while crossing the Rocky Mountains, and discovery of the great Utah Mines, will open EVERY MORNING at the EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, on MONDAY, APRIL 29, and be exhibited every morning at Half-past Two; evening, Quarter to Eight.—Admission, 1s.; Stalls, 3s.; Children half-price.

GREAT EXHIBITION in 1851.—NOTICE to EXHIBITORS.—In pursuance of the directions of her Majesty's Commissioners, the Westminster Committee request that all persons resident in the City and Liberties of Westminster, desirous of becoming Exhibitors, will, on or before the 1st day of May next, send to the Secretary of the Committee, Mr. G. H. DREW, 28, Parliament-street, a notice of their intention, with a general description of the nature of the articles to be exhibited, and the space required for its exhibition. Printed forms for the return may be obtained on application to the Secretary, and any further information from the undermentioned gentlemen, who have been appointed Local Commissioners:—

Mr. J. Brown, 236, Regent-street.
Mr. J. G. Crace, 14, Buckingham-street.
Mr. P. Graham, 37, Oxford-street.
Mr. Stephen Lewis, 125, Regent-street.
2nd April, 1850.

Mr. T. J. Miller, 7, Millbank-street.
Mr. W. H. Rogers, 10, Carlisle-street, Soho.
Mr. R. Snell, 27, Albemarle-street.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A CORRESPONDENT, Kingstown.—The latest "trade edition" of "Chesterfield's Letters," 4 to be had, by order, of any bookseller.

R. S. Islington.—Admission to the United Service Museum may be obtained by tickets, granted by members of the Institution, for a list of whom see the printed reports.

DEBAUCH.—The height of the Apollo Belvidere is upwards of seven feet; of the Venus de Medici, 4 feet 11½ inches.

CALTIOUS.—We cannot make inquiry as to the solvency of either of the companies named. Apply to a stockbroker or agent for his investments.

THE WALLENSTEIN GALLERY.—(See page 277) Mr Windus states the first engraved picture to be the work of Martin Rota (circa 16th century)—a conclusion confirmed by the monogram M. R. and the wheel on the right shoulder of the Virgin, Rota being Latin for wheel, which this painter frequently added as a cognizance

AN OCCASIONAL READER.—All applications respecting the Great Exhibition of 1851 should be addressed to the Secretary, 1, New Palace Yard

J. W. H. Falmer(h).—The drawing is from a Pal sikar piece for Bengal, struck in the 37th year of the reign of Shah Alum.

A CORRESPONDENT to Biddle's Self-Supplying Pencil.—I use the fresh leads do not drop in, but the chamber in which they are contained is gradually diminished in size as each is used

A SUBSCRIBER.—Marlborough College was opened Aug. 26, 1843: a view of it appeared in No. 71 of our Journal

E. A. D. is informed that the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the Bishop of London were not members of the Judicial Committee of Privy Council, at the late trial: the Bishop of Exeter, but, by direction of her Majesty, (we quote the official report), the "hearing was attended by any Lords the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the Bishop of London, who are members of her Majesty's Privy Council." The committee further say, "We have the satisfaction to state, that the assistance of the Archbishops of Canterbury and of York, after having perused copies of this judgment, have expressed their approbation thereof. The Bishop of London does not concur;" from which it is evident that they did not sit like the members of the Judicial Committee

AN OLD REPORTER.—Taylor's "Shorthand," improved by Harding.

T. C. CARRICK.—It was originally designed to suspend the tubes of the Britannia Bridge by chains, as will be seen by reference to the Nos. 320 of our Journal.

J. T. Sheffield, had better apply to the Female Emigration Society

L. L. Horsham—Saltbrook Park, near Twickenham, where apply for particulars

F. L. W. C. Edinburgh.—We cannot advise you in the matter of Admiralty law

CLERICUS RUSTICUS.—The charge for our Journal is 2*d* per annum, payable in advance. (Stamp, No extra)

BULL.—The highest temperature in the shade, in 1848, was 86 deg; in the sun, 109 deg. In 1849, in the shade was 84 deg; in the sun, 104 deg

EUGENE.—Nineveh and Nineveh are used synonymously for the metropolis of the great Assyrian empire

J. W. H., Roundaditch.—We are not in possession of the information required respecting Chinese antiquity

AUTEOS, Birmingham.—Books on New Zealand, recently published by Parker, 445, West Strand

H. W. L. and L. O'TRIGGER should apply to the patentees of the inventions

HOROSCOPOS.—(How to set up a sun-dial).—The angle between the horizon and the inclined side of your gnomon must be equal to the complement of the latitude of your residence

W. R. Walton.—A copy of the Large View of Horse will be delivered with each double Number of our Journal of next week, price 1*s*. The View cannot be had otherwise

J. L., Newcastle.—See the notice to Lord Byron's "Vampire."

FLOWER-SELLER'S SONG.—Declined

ARTIST.—Has the school been just rebuilt?

J. H, Liverpool, is thanked for his suggestion

W. E. A. Allsaton.—The price will be 10*s* 6*d*

J. B. C.—We do not understand the question

C. W. T. Ely

GEORGE should apply to the secretary

G. W. K, Gloucester.—The age is twenty-two

* * Replies to several Correspondents are deferred, from want of room

* * In our report of the proceedings at Rugby, last week, we omitted to state that the plate presented to Dr. Tait was from the establishment of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, late Storr, Mortimer, and Hunt, of New Bond-street.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

The Light Dragoon.—Duty of the Rich.—The A B C of Colonization.—Memorials of Edinburgh Castle.—Sick Calls.—The Rev. W. Bruce on Marriage.—Flowers, by H. G. Adams.—Dr. Thomson on Temperance.

MUSIC.—Pianista ("La Prophète"), 117, 118.

ROME ILLUSTRATED.—On the 4th of MAY will be published an ADDITIONAL NUMBER of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, devoted exclusively to the HISTORY AND TOPOGRAPHY OF THE CITY OF ROME.

Comprising an Historical Memoir on the varied fortunes of the "CITY OF THE CESARS," and the RISE of MODERN ROME under the POPES; together with Notices of the PRESENT APPEARANCE of the CITY: its BASILICAS, CHURCHES, PALACES, VILLAS, OBELISKS, FOUNTAINS, RUINS, &c.; and accompanied with ILLUSTRATIONS of St. Peter's, the Capitol, the Castle of St. Angelo, the Pantheon, the Arch of Titus, the Arch of Drusus, the Churches of Sta. Maria Maggiore and of St. John Lateran, the Piazza del Popolo, the Piazza di Spagna, Monte Cavallo, the Farnese Palace, the French Academy, the Column of Trajan, the Fountain of Trevi, the Circus Maximus, as it stood in ancient Rome; the Ruins of the Colosseum, of the Forum, of the Baths of Caracalla, of the Basilica of Constantine, of the Ponte Rotto, and the Temple of Vesta, and of the Tomb of Cecilia Metella, Obelisk, the Dying Gladiator and Michael Angelo's Moses, Views of Remarkable Localities in the Siege Operations of last year; subjects illustrative of modern Manners and Costume, viz. Pifferari, Models, Students of the Propaganda, the Games of Morra and Bowls, the Café Greco, &c. The whole forming, with the LARGE VIEW of ROME, a COMPLETE PICTURE of the "ETERNAL CITY" in the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

THE LARGE VIEW OF ROME, GRATIS.

THE DOUBLE NUMBER, price ONE SHILLING.

RETURN OF THE POPE TO ROME.

Next Week we shall ILLUSTRATE the POPE'S RETURN, by Engravings in the Number to be published with the ILLUSTRATED MEMOIR on ROME, and the LARGE VIEW of the CITY.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1850.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL took the House of Commons by surprise on Tuesday night, by the sudden announcement, during the debate on Mr. Heywood's motion for a Reform of the Universities, that her Majesty's Government were prepared to recommend the Crown to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the present state of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. His Lordship added, that the inquiry would be conducted in no unfriendly spirit, and expressed his belief that the result would be beneficial to the education of the people of this country. It does seem somewhat extraordinary that in a matter of this importance the Government should take such a hasty leap; the more especially as a Royal Commission will have no power to compel evidence, to call for charters or documents, or to acquire any information which the authorities of either University may not feel disposed to give. As the Attorney-General informed the House, compulsory powers to inquire into the state of the Universities can only be conferred by act of Parliament; so that if Lord John Russell have any real object of University reform in view, he has not announced any plan by which he can attain it. The opposition which the Ministerial proposition has already received in the House, and the still greater opposition which it is sure to receive in the country, predicts that, in this as well as in other matters of interest and importance, the present Government will make a failure; and that it will convert a few more of its friends into enemies, and inspire its enemies with a still greater portion of distrust than they have hitherto felt towards it.

GREAT BRITAIN is in possession of one of the finest districts in the whole Continent of America—a district teeming with natural resources of every kind, blessed with a soil of unsurpassable fertility, and with a climate which is considered one of the most healthful and agreeable in the world. That possession is British Guiana. Unfortunately, however, the colony is not able to turn her immense resources to profitable account. Her estates are untilled for want of labourers, and the whole country is going to ruin. Of 329 estates in Demerara and Essequibo, which were in profitable cultivation in the year 1838, we learn from a document signed by the Chairman of the West India Association of Liverpool, that 111 have been sold under execution sale, and 71 altogether abandoned. The remaining 76 struggle on, their owners being in anticipation of the fate of the rest, in one or other of the two forms above cited. The principal, if not sole reason of this deplorable state of things, is the want of labourers. "If," said Sir C. J. Smith, the late Governor of the Colony, "I live to get a regular stream of immigration from India into this magnificent province, with a moderate supply from Africa and elsewhere, I will make it the first colony under the British Crown. I will make it a second India." These were strong words; but those who know most of British Guiana, are of opinion that they express no more than the simple and plain truth of its immense resources, and its immense want of labourers to turn those resources to account. Guiana formerly produced, and would again produce, excellent cotton—a matter of the utmost importance to this country, and which threatens to be of still greater consequence, should crops fail in the United States; or should a day arrive, which we hope may be long averted, when any disagreement between ourselves and that country might lead to a suspension of commercial relations. But Guiana is prevented from growing cotton, or, indeed, anything else of marketable value, by the want of labour already alluded to, and is positively forbidden by the Home Government to draw labour from the most available source, the coast of Africa—"a country," says a memorial from Liverpool addressed to Earl Grey, "filled with an unemployed population, within twenty days' sail of Guiana, enjoying a climate of the same temperature, but more healthy." The reason is the fear entertained that such an importation of Africans to any portions of the West Indies would be slavery under a new form. Now, it by no means follows, that, if British merchants or planters, settled in Guiana, imported Africans for five or seven years into Guiana, and bound themselves to restore the whole of those Africans to their own country, or such of them as wished to be transported home again, at the expiration of that period, that these Africans would become slaves, either in name or in fact, during these five or seven years, or afterwards. Nevertheless, the dread entertained in England by men in power, that such would really be the case, seems to be so great, that Guiana and our other colonies in the West Indies are sacrificed to it. Upon this altar of fear and mistrust, these colonies—of which the United States envy us the possession, and which they would speedily turn to good account, if they had them—are to be offered up as to a heathen idol.

"Gentlemen acquainted with the African coast, and in no way connected with the West Indies," says the memorial from Liverpool already alluded to, "state, that, by encouraging a free interchange of the Negroes between Africa and the West Indies, a stop would be put to the Slave-trade, and the people of Africa would be civilised." The document adds, that "fifty large vessels trade between Liverpool and Africa, which enter into contracts for five years with labourers on the Kroo Coast to go to the British factories on Bonny River, from which place they return at the end of the time, greatly improved by their association with British subjects." It also states that "a small vessel, 163 tons, arrived in Liverpool lately, which had carried 63 Negroes from Bonny River to the Kroo Coast, a longer voyage than to Demerara. This vessel, however, would not have been permitted to convey these Negroes to Demerara."

Surely it is high time, that, in a matter of such importance, not simply to the colonies themselves, but to the Home Government and our manufacturing and general interests, an investigation should take place, with a view of ascertaining whether there be or be not a possibility of introducing free Negro labour into this and other colonies, with mutual advantage to the Negroes and to the planters. The world is witness of the noble efforts made by this country to extinguish slavery; and Britain will lose no portion of her high fame in that respect, if her statesmen set themselves seriously to consider whether her present conduct in reference to her colonies is not of a nature to deprive her of her character for common sense.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty the Queen continues, we rejoice to state, in excellent health. Her Majesty, during the past week, has taken daily carriage exercise, accompanied by the Prince Consort, and generally by some of the Royal children.

On Saturday, Prince Kamehameha, elder brother, and Prince Liholiho, the heir apparent, (Sandwich Islands), attended by Mr. James Hamilton Wyndham, were presented to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, at an audience at Buckingham Palace, by Viscount Palmerston, G.C.B., her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. The Princes afterwards conducted through the Palace, and also the Royal stables, by Lieutenant-Colonel F. H. Seymour, the Equerry in Waiting on Prince Albert.

On Sunday morning, Prince Albert, her Royal Highness the Princess Royal, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended Divine service in the private chapel in Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Sydney Godolphin Osborne officiated. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent was also present at the service.

On Monday, after returning from a carriage-drive with her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour.

On Tuesday the Queen walked in the garden of Buckingham Palace. In the evening the Duchess of Kent dined with her Majesty.

On Wednesday the Duchess of Sutherland visited her Majesty. There was no addition to the Royal dinner party on Wednesday evening.

On Thursday, the birthday of the Princess Alice, the Duchess of Kent paid an early visit of congratulation to the Queen. In the afternoon her Majesty received a small juvenile party, comprising the juvenile members of the families of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, Lord and Lady Ashburton, Madame Van de Weyer, and Colonel the Hon. C. B. and Mrs. Phipps. The Queen received the youthful visitors in the saloon, where the juveniles danced, and afterwards partook of refreshments in the library. The juvenile party left the palace about seven o'clock. In the evening the Duchess of Kent and the Prince of Leiningen (who arrived in town in the morning) dined with the Queen.

The Marchioness of Douro has relieved the Viscountess Canning in her duties as Lady in Waiting to her Majesty. Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon has relieved Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Hugh Seymour in his duties as Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

ARRIVAL OF THE QUEEN OF THE BELGIANS AND THE DUCHESS OF ORLEANS AT CLAREMONT

The Queen of the Belgians, accompanied by the Duchess of Orleans, with the Count de Paris and the Duke de Chartres, and attended by a numerous suite, arrived at Dover on Friday last by her Majesty's steam-packet Vivid, Captain Smithett, from Ostend, and proceeded by special train to Guildford, en route for Claremont. At the Esher station the Royal party were met by the Count and Countess de Neuilly, the Duke and Duchess de Nemours, and the Duc d'Aumale, with whom they returned to Claremont.

FASHIONABLE ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Duke of Devonshire commenced the hospitalities of the season on Wednesday night with a grand ball at Devonshire House, which was attended by nearly all the leading members of the aristocracy at present in town. The festivities of the evening were preceded by a grand banquet, which was served to a distinguished circle of the nobility in a princely style of magnificence. Their Royal Highnesses the Infante Don Juan (of Spain) and the Archduchess Beatrix of Este were among the exalted visitors. It is the intention of the noble Duke to give a series of similar receptions.

The Earl and Countess of Jersey entertained the Earl of Powis, Viscount and Viscountess Jocelyn, Viscount and Lady Blanche Duppin, Viscountess Castlereagh, Lord Alexander Gordon Lennox, Lord Brooke, Lord Norreys, Sir Hume and Lady Hume Campbell, the Hon. Mrs. J. Villiers, Captain George Bagot, and a select party at dinner on Monday evening, at the family mansion in Berkeley-square. Her Ladyship afterwards received a "small and early party."

The Viscountess Palmerston re-opened the magnificent saloons of her mansion in Carlton-gardens on Saturday last, for the first time since the Easter recess. Her Ladyship, as usual, was honoured with the presence of a brilliant assemblage of fashionable company, including his Grace the Duke of Wellington and about 300 members of the aristocracy. Her Ladyship will have another reception this evening (Saturday).

The Countess of Bradford gave a grand ball last evening (Friday), at the family mansion in Belgrave-square.

Lady Kerrison gave a grand ball on Wednesday night, at the family mansion in Great Stanhope-street, at which about 300 leading members of the fashionable world assembled.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer gave a Cabinet dinner on Wednesday evening, at his official residence in Downing-street.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester completed her 75th year on Thursday. Her Royal Highness received congratulatory visits during the day from the Duchess of Kent and other members of the Royal family, and also from a large circle of the nobility and gentry.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge attended divine service on Sunday morning at the chapel of the Founding Hospital, when the anniversary sermon was delivered by the Rev. William Harrison, M.A. The handsome collection of £201 was made after the service. His Royal Highness honoured Mr. Burford's Panorama of the Arctic Regions with a visit on Tuesday. On Monday the Royal Duke paid a visit to Queen Charlotte's Lying-in-Hospital.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent took a carriage airing on Wednesday. The Duke and Duchess de Nemours visited her Royal Highness during the day at Clarence House. The Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Count and Countess de Neuilly have also paid visits to the Royal Duchess during the week.

The Count and Countess de Neuilly, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess de Nemours and suite, have returned to Claremont from Kensington.

We regret to learn that the Marquis of Clanricarde is suffering from an attack of illness.

The Earl and Countess of Kinnoull and family have arrived at Hampden house for the season.

The Countess of Longford and the Ladies Fakenham have arrived in Brunton-street, from Fakenham Hall, Ireland.

Viscount Goderich has just left London, on a Continental tour.

The Count and Countess de Flahault have removed to their new mansion in Grosvenor-square, formerly the residence of the Countess of Bridgewater.

Lord Holland has arrived at Holland House from Paris. His Lordship, we are sorry to learn, is suffering from indisposition.

Caboudy Effendi, the first secretary of the Turkish Embassy in London, has been decorated by the Sultan with the second class of the Order of the Government functionaries, and decorated by him with the order of the rank.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—The marriage of the Hon. Philip Sidney, only son of Lord De L'Isle and Dudley, to Mary, only child of the late Sir William Foulis, of Ingoldsby Manor, in the county of York, Baronet, was solemnised on Tuesday, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, in the presence of a very numerous circle of the connexions of both families. The bride arrived at the church, in company with her mother, shortly after eleven o'clock, and having received the congratulations of her friends, was led to the altar by her cousin, the Marquis of Kildare, attended by a train of six bridesmaids—the Hon. Adela Sidney, the Hon. Rosanna Sidney, the Hon. Philippa Sidney, Miss Geraldine Rose, Miss Augusta Somerset, and Miss Olivia Henry. The bride was attired in a rich white satin dress, trimmed with Brussels point lace flounces. The head-dress consisted of a wreath of orange blossoms and a magnificent point lace veil. The bridesmaids were white embroidered muslin dresses, with pink glace silk mantilles and white crape bonnets trimmed with white and pink roses. The ceremony was performed in a very impressive manner by the Rev. P. Dodd, Rector of Chisbury, who had the honour of officiating, some twenty-five years since, at the marriage of the noble father of the bridegroom to a daughter of the late King William IV. At its conclusion, the bride and bridegroom left the church in a travelling carriage and four, for Theobalds, in Hertfordshire, from whence they proceed to the Continent.

THE GORHAM CASE.

The following paragraph exhibits a proof of the good sense of the clergy, and a proper appreciation of the difficulties in which the Church may be involved by contention:—

"A meeting of the clergy of the east of London not under archidiaconal jurisdiction was held on Thursday, the 18th instant, at the Rectory, Stepney the Rev. R. Lee, rector of that parish, in the chair—to consider the propriety of addressing the Bishop of London in reference to the late decision of the Committee of Privy Council on the Gorham case. It was moved by the Rev. T. T. Bazely, Rector of Poplar, and seconded by the Rev. Bryan King, Rector of St. George's-in-the-East, 'That an address be presented to the Bishop expressive of gratitude to his Lordship for having withheld his concurrence in the decision; as well as of a desire that a purely spiritual court of appeal might be established, and that the Church be permitted to meet in convocation for the determination of doctrinal questions.' The following amendment was moved by the Rev. W. W. Champneys, Rector of Whitechapel, and seconded by the Rev. J. Williams, Incumbent of St. James's, Ratcliff:—'That, considering the present agitated state of the Church and of the world, this meeting is of opinion that it would be most conducive to charity and peace to abstain from any expression of sentiment by an address to the Bishop of the diocese or to the Archbishop of the province.' A division having taken place on this amendment, the numbers were 25 on each side. The amendment was declared lost; but, on the original resolution being put from the chair, it was negatived by a majority of one, the numbers being 25 for, and 26 (inclusive of the chairman's vote) against the proposed address."

The Rev. Alexander Watson, M.A., Curate of St. John, Cheltenham, has published a "Letter to all members of the Church of England, containing words of common sense for common people, on the one baptism for the remission of sins." We are rather surprised at such a title, for Mr. Watson tells us in the body of his work, "The forgiveness of sin in baptism is the one thing that is beyond the grasp of the natural reason of man;" and we do not comprehend how that which is beyond the grasp of the natural reason, altogether supernatural, and only to be known and appreciated by faith, can be explained in an explanation in words of common sense, that is, of natural reason, for common people, i. e. people who have natural reason. The pamphlet would have read just as well without those catch-words on the title-page, which direct the mind to a totally erroneous source for the origin of Baptism, and which, we say, are but a straw than direct aright. They seem intended partly to guard the people against being "ensnared by the cry of priestcraft and of the overbearing tyranny of Church authority, which is set up." Mr. Watson says, "theological terms of the day," which are dogmatically asserted. This is the bugbear with which the press will try to frighten you. An effort will be made to persuade you that this is a matter in which the clergy of the Church, instead of being the guides, are the misleading to have dominion over your faith. You will be told that this doctrine of regeneration in Baptism is imposed on your consciences by Church authority." To guard against such a charge, which, of course, he knows he will be wholly unfounded, he describes his pamphlet as containing words of common sense for common people

We do not understand Mr. Gorham to deny "one baptism for the remission of sins." He administers that sacrament, as well as other clergymen. The point, as it appears to us, on which he differs from his opponents is, at what time, and by what means, baptism was made efficacious; and he asserts, as we understand, that the act of peace in grace to the administration of baptism took place when Christ was sacrificed for the whole human race, and baptism could convey no grace but for that stupendous event. To us, it seems erroneous to represent Mr. Gorham as denying the baptismal regulations for the remission of sins, because he denies its efficacious—he calls it "the sign or seal, either of the grace already given, or of the repentance and faith which are stipulated, and must hereafter be exercised." If he did not regard it as necessary, in the case of infants, why baptise?

Mr. Watson is well aware of the crisis impending over the Church, and tells his readers, "You see and feel that a great work—a great strife, it may be—is before you. Brace yourselves to meet the emergency with a calm and holy spirit, and for the peace of Jerusalem." But, while he is aware of this, and prays for peace, he seems not to be animated by the conciliatory spirit displayed by the majority of East London clergymen. He says—"A high judicial tribunal of laymen gives a non-natural sense to our most solemn formularies; deprives words of their plain and obvious meaning; confounds services as distinct in all their circumstances as the office of Baptism of Infants and the order of Burial, dishonours the memory of the Reformers; misquotes standard divines; takes the staff from the hands of a living Bishop, and orders that, when he has closed the door of the fold against one who teaches heresy, it shall be opened to let the sheep become the prey of the ravening wolves of false doctrine. To such a judgment none possessed of common sense can for one moment, with the creeds and offices of the Church in their hands and hearts, render the obedience of faith, or even ordinary confidence. Nay, if instead of having the concurrence of the two Archbishops, it had the praise of the whole Bench of Bishops, it would still have no weight with those with whom God's Word is paramount, with whom the creeds of the Church are standards of appeal, and which no man can gainsay without abandoning the one faith." After thus setting in direct opposition the decision of the Privy Council and the creeds of the Church, and preaching disobedience to the former, Mr. Watson tells his readers to give their prayers and personal co-operation in every possible way; "if need be, to be ready in support of him who needs all our sympathy and all our prayers—the Bishop—whose office, as a guardian of the one faith, is, it appears to us, unconstitutionally interfered with." Mr. Watson backs the Bishop against the Privy Council, and thumps the drum ecclesiastic "to summon the people to side with him. Mr. Watson may be very zealous, very conscientious, very learned in church matters, but he is not a lawyer.

On Tuesday afternoon, a meeting of metropolitan clergymen and laymen was held at St. Martin's Hall, to take into consideration the report of a committee appointed to decide upon the best steps to be taken in consequence of the decision on the recent decision of the Privy Council. The report recommended a preliminary course of inquiry. A proposition was made to summon a meeting of the clergy and laity of London, to express the opinion of the members of the Church; but this proposition was not followed up; and, after some earnest discussion, the report was agreed to. An inquiry is to take place, communications are to be held with other bodies, and moderation may be suspended.

On Thursday, the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment, on the application on the part of the Bishop of Exeter to stay the proceedings. Lord Chief Justice Campbell said:—"This is a motion made in the name of the Bishop of Exeter for a prohibition should not go against the Dean of the Arches and the Archbishop of Canterbury, to prohibit them from presenting the Reverend Mr. Gorham to the Vicarage of Bampford Speke. Having sat as a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, I should have abstained from giving any opinion on the question as to the propriety of granting or refusing this rule, if the points upon which it is moved had been raised before the Privy Council; but, as the Lord Bishop of Exeter in his affidavit states that he was not a party to the time when the matter was before the Privy Council, aware of the objection now made, and as I certainly did not hear anything of it in the course of the argument before that tribunal, it is as new to me as to any of my learned brethren who sit on the bench with me. The objection is, that Mr. Gorham had no right to bring the appeal from the decision of the Judge of the Arches Court to the Privy Council. After a very attentive consideration, we are all of opinion that the objection is unfounded." After referring to the statutes of 24th of Henry VIII., c. 12, and 25th of Henry VIII., c. 19, under which the prohibition was moved for, Lord Campbell said: "By the latter statute, passed in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of Henry VIII., which enacts that appeals from the decisions of the Court of Arches shall be always to his Majesty in the High Court of Chancery, and that right of appeal applied to all spiritual as well as temporal matters connected with the Church. Such has been the construction put upon the statute for three centuries without any doubt having been started upon it. There have been many suits in the Archbishop's Court with respect to tithes under these statutes, and the appeals have invariably been to the King in Council, and there is no case of an appeal to the Upper House of Convocation. By the 3 and 4 of William IV., it was enacted that all appeals which could formerly be made to the Upper House of Convocation were transferred to the Privy Council. If questions, arising under the statutes to which he had referred, were to be left to divines, they must suppose that all the lawyers and statesmen of the last three centuries had acted in error; and if they assumed that, there would be no safety for property or liberty. Sitting here, we can only administer the law as it is; and, as no reason has been established against the sentence on the ground that the Privy Council had no jurisdiction, we think the rule ought not to go."

Lord de Tabley, Mr. Mainwaring, and several more of the laity, with a number of the clergy of the diocese of Chester, have prepared and signed an address to the Bishop, requesting him to take counsel with his reverend brethren for the adoption of means to enable the Church to declare its doctrine touching the sacrament of baptism.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.—On Tuesday the forms of examination statute, tit. ix. sec. 3 (substituted for those portions which were proposed to Convocation, Dec. 7, 1849, but not approved), were submitted to convocation in distinct portions, with the following result:—Vote 6 was withdrawn by the Vice-Chancellor; Vote 1, placeted; Votes 2 and 3, non-placeted; Vote 4, withdrawn by the Vice-Chancellor; Votes 5 and 7, placeted. By this decision, chairs of Modern History and Jurisprudence are to be established. Convocation was attended by upwards of 250 members, including most of the heads of houses, resident professors, fellows, &c. Dr. Pusey was present, and appeared to take great interest in the proceedings. Amongst the non-residents were Dr. Hessey, Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School; Dr. Tait, late Head Master of Rugby School; Mr. Saunders, Head Master of the Charter-house; G. E. Strickland, Esq.; Hon.—Talbot, &c.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION (IRELAND).—The total receipts of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland for the year ending the 1st of August, 1849, were £99,642 17s. 1d., and the disbursements to £84,000, £25,726 of which was expended on the rebuilding, enlarging, and repairing of churches.

PREFERMENTS.—Rev. T. Williams to Flint Perpetual Curacy; diocese St. Asaph; value, £225; patron, Bishop of St. Asaph. William Holt Beever, B.A., to the Head Mastership of Cambridge Grammar School, Glamorganshire. Rev.—Dennis, to be Chaplain of the Military Prison, Forton, Gosport. Rev. Algernon Wm. Perkins, Vicar of Odiham, Hants, to Basingstoke Deanery House; diocese Winchester.

VACANCIES.—Stoke-Climsland, Cornwall; diocese Exeter; value, £621, with residence; patron, the Crown: Rev. Wm. Garwithen, D.D., deceased; whose death also vacates the chaplaincy to East Fortescue. Redbourn Vicarage, Herts; diocese Rochester; value, £296, with residence; patron, Earl of Verulam: Rev. Lord F. Beauclerc, deceased.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently been presented with testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev. George Radcliffe, Rector of St. Edmund's, Salisbury, from some of his parishioners; the Rev. C. W. Grafe, Incumbent of Pendlebury, from the inhabitants of Pendlebury-with-Newton; the Rev. John Mee, Curate of All Saints, Derby (who is about to leave), from the scholars and teachers of the school; the Rev. John R. Conor, Garrison Chaplain, from the officers of the 46th regiment, stationed at Liverpool.

PRESENT TO THE QUEEN FROM THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO

One of the many reasons which induced the Emperor of Morocco to send these presents to our Queen, might, probably, be in acknowledgment of the kindness and medical assistance received by a Shereefian Prince, a favourite cousin of his Imperial Majesty, from the British Government at Gibraltar; who caused the most prompt, and, as it turned out, successful, treatment to be afforded to that distinguished personage, whose life was considered to be in imminent danger.

These presents were, in the first instance, brought from the interior of the Emperor's dominions to Tangier, whence they were conveyed to this country in two of her Majesty's ships of war, Rosamond and Bulldog: the former landed her freight at Plymouth, consisting of a young lion and lioness, panther, four cutchies, and six gazelles, in charge of two Moors, named Hadj Abdallah and Hassam. The Bulldog landed her freight at Portsmouth, consisting of five entire horses and four mares, rising four years old, with their splendid Moorish saddles and trappings, also in charge of two Moors, named Kaid Abdekrim and Boojemar.

On landing the horses at the Clarence Yard, one of them, unfortunately, broke loose, and immediately attacked his neighbour with all the fury of a high-bred barb. They were with difficulty separated by the united efforts of the Moors, who unmercifully belaboured the poor brutes, calling curses down upon their great-grandfathers—the force of which language the Moors conceived to have more effect even than the blows they so unsparingly dealt.

Many of our readers may, no doubt, image the Moors, on the opposite coast to Gibraltar, to be black Shakspeare, however, rightly described his Othello as one "swarthy Moor," in contradiction to the Black-a-Moor, who struts upon the London pavement, whitened as much as coal. Some description, therefore, of our present visitors may not be out of place. They are of no darker hue than the English gentlemen who were formerly accustomed to return from India, after four or five years' service, with riches sufficient to entitle them to the appellation of Nabobs; or the gallant tars of the present day, who may be known by the bronze from the western coast of Africa, after a short cruise off Sierra Leone, not inaptly termed the White Man's Grave. These Moors certainly have somewhat of an undue quantity of colour in our streets; though one cannot but be struck at the sight of their stately figures, wrapt in flowing cream-coloured garments, turned Bournouses, Sultanas, and Caffans—their bare legs (which, by the by, they have been prohibited lately by the police to allow to be covered with long white cotton stockings on the present occasion)—their bright yellow slippers of an original shape, and which they have a wonderful trick of keeping on their feet, although they wear them when at bed—and their whole costume surmounted with an ample white turban, enclosing the peculiar red Fez cap

Hadj Abdallah (the title "Hadj" is alone prefixed to the name of those of the faithful who have performed the religious pilgrimage to Mecca, the Tomb of their Prophet) is a tall, well-made man, very prepossessing in appearance, and was, no doubt, purposely selected by our energetic Charge d'Affaires at Tangier to accompany the Imperial presents, in order that he and his companions might inform with favourable impression of the country. The Abdallah is a man of some consequence in the immediate neighbourhood of Tangier, being himself possessed of a village and sundry herds of cattle. He is there treated with great respect by the natives, who, when they accidentally encounter his path, turn to kiss his stirrup, in token of submission. The Hadj is, moreover, a notable hunter of wild boars, which frequent the woods and marshes of that part of Africa.

Hassam is an independent merchant, trading between Tangier and Gibraltar, where the auction-room on market-days presents a motley group of Spanish and other merchants, of various nations, dotted here and there with the graceful white turban of the Moor.

Kaid Abdekrim (the title Kaid is synonymous with captain) is an athletic man of stout, and is the military soldier or guard attached to the British Consulates at Tangier. He formerly held great command in the Emperor's army, but by some misfortune lowered himself in the eyes of his superiors, and consequently fell to a lower grade. The other day he rode one of the barbs in the presence of the Queen, in the Riding-school of the Royal mews, and in galloping across the stable-yard, the horse became unmanageable and rushed head foremost against the iron gates leading into the Pimlico-road, broke several of the iron railings, and even displaced the stonework; and yet neither was the horse apparently hurt, nor was the rider unseated.

Boojmar is the groom of her Majesty's Charge d'Affaires at Tangier, and has been from boyhood attached to the British Consulate. He lately had under his charge a donkey not higher than a Newfoundland dog, though six years old, a peculiar breed, from the lower range of the Atlas mountains, in the Reefian district. He is a well-set, active man, and a most agreeable companion.

The Queen has, with her accustomed generosity, been pleased to present the Imperial presents of wild beasts between the Zoological Society in the Regent's-park and that of the Surrey, retaining only two of the gazelles for herself

The Moors have been treated with the utmost kindness and consideration at the expense of her Majesty's privy purse, having been lodged in most respectable apartments in St. James's-street, and conducted to all the sights of London, attended by an interpreter and an intelligent messenger of the Royal mews establishment. The following is a list of some of the places they have visited; viz. —Three times to Astley's Theatre, twice to Drury-lane Theatre, twice to the Princess' Theatre, Lyceum Theatre, Colosseum, the three Panoramas in Leicester-square, Egyptian Hall, Madame Tussaud's, Thames Tunnel, Cosmorama, Royal Mint, Tower of London, Epsom Races, Overland Route to India, and Windsor Castle.

Their astonishment at what they have seen can scarcely be described. Although lost in amazement, and even frightened at the unexpected and sudden appearance of devils and angels at Drury-lane Theatre (having, of course, no idea of trap-doors or other machinery), they were the more struck with wonder at witnessing a real lady standing on one leg on a real horse at full gallop at Astley's; for though the men in their own country perform similar feats in what they call powder play, such as standing on their head on a horse at full gallop, firing off their guns, making a somersault in the air and coming down on their saddles, yet their ladies are seldom seen out of their houses unless wrapt up in many folds, displaying but one piercing eye to vulgar gaze. They were shown, at the Colosseum, the admirably-painted bird's-eye "View of Paris," they were so impressed with the apparent reality of the scene that they turned back and giddy. We were gratified in witnessing the sense of disgust on being introduced into the Chamber of Horrors, at Mdme. Tussaud's Exhibition: it told as well for the exact representation of what we would go a thousand miles to avoid seeing, as for the talent on the part of the modelleress. The inclemency of the Arctic Regions was lost upon them, as they have no idea of excessive cold. They hurried from the Tower of London, imagining the figures in armour to be living men. On the morning of the races at Epsom, they were engaged to appear for the fifth time in the presence of the Queen; but her Majesty graciously dispensed with their attendance, in order that they might witness the sport, which they did; and, from their knowledge of horse flesh, pointed out as the winner the horse that eventually came in second.

They were, of course, astonished at the splendour of Windsor; and, instead of their usual exclamation, "There is only one God, and Mahomed is his prophet," they simultaneously cried out "There is no other Queen than the Queen of England!"

We must not forget to mention that the Moors, having seen the Life Guards' barracks, in the Regent's-park, and the dray-horses at Calvert's brewery, expressed a strong desire to see the Cavalry barracks at Windsor, whither they accordingly proceeded, and were received with marked attention and civility. They expressed great interest in all the details of saddles and bridles, witnessed the manual exercise of sword and carbine, and were yet more delighted at the game of foot-ball, in which the privates were indulging. The Moors delight in anything of a manly character, and for that reason we cannot doubt their admiration of the English nation. Though last not least, we should mention that they have, through the kindness of an eminent London banker, been afforded an opportunity of seeing English farming on a great scale, and been shown our mode of ploughing, harrowing, sowing grain, thrashing the same, and preparing it for the mill. Of all the sights they have witnessed, perhaps they will turn the last to the best account.

BARBS PRESENTED TO QUEEN VICTORIA BY THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO.

We regret that the short period of the Moors' visit to this country would not allow of their availing themselves of the facilities offered to them, of seeing one of our hospitals and one of our prisons. The care of the sick poor in the former, and the cleanliness, ventilation, and even too much comfort in the latter strangely contrasting with their own filthy dungeons, where a prisoner, before conviction of crime, is liable to be thrown in to starve unless supported by his friends, a singular instance of which occurred some years ago at Tangier, where a good Mahomedan was cast into prison upon slight suspicion, and, having no friends, would literally have starved, had not a young widow compassionated his miserable plight, and suckled him from her own breast through the bars of his prison, from which the man eventually lived to be released; and, as one would expect to find at the closing scene of a drama of fiction, married his preserver.

The Lords of the Admiralty have ordered the Moors to be provided with a passage to Gibraltar in H.M.S. Superb, 80 guns. They will return to their own country highly gratified, and laden with munificent presents, carefully selected to suit their tastes and wants, by command of, and at the private expense of, her Majesty. The Illustration is from a beautiful Photograph, by Claudet.

LAIRD'S PATENT SECTIONAL BOATS.

A NOVEL description of Boat has just been completed at Liverpool, for the use of her Majesty's Consul at Fernando Po, on the west coast of Africa. This Boat of which we give a drawing, is the invention of Mr. Macgregor Laird. The peculiarity of construction consists in her being built in sections, which can be put together, and made perfectly secure, without mechanical or skilled labour.

The official report from Commander Bayis, R.N., to the Secretary of the Admiralty, dated Liverpool, 7th March, 1850, states her dimensions and efficiency as follows, viz.:—Length, 68 ft.; beam, 12 ft.; depth amidships, 4 ft.; forward and aft, 6 ft.; tonnage, builder's measurement, 45 tons; total weight of iron-work, 4½ ditto; ditto with wood-work, masts, sails, rigging, anchors, cables, and all complete, 8 ditto. Displacement at 2 ft. draught of water, 20·89 tons.

There are eight sectional pieces—the heaviest of which is 16 cwt.—joined together by angle iron joints, lined with vulcanised India-rubber; the whole being secured by screw bolts and nuts, so that her own crew, of forty-five or fifty men, can carry her over any neck of land and set her up again. "Her light draught of water is estimated at one foot, with her crew; with provisions, water, &c., for the same, at two feet. She is to pull thirty-eight oars, double-banked, fitted with three schooner sails and square-sail, having for night protection iron stanchions covered with thin felt. She is also to be fitted with air-tight galvanised tubes as a life-boat."

"From her light draught of water and general lightness, she is particularly well adapted to take the bars on the coast of Africa, where there is a short breaking sea; and for proceeding up the rivers, or to go in chase of slavers, as, from her construction, she must pull and sail very fast."

This Boat has also been surveyed by Lieut. Hodder, R.N., the gallant and experienced Superintendent of Emigration at Liverpool, who reports most favourably on the application of the sectional principle of construction for life-boats on board emigrant ships.

"The appalling accidents that are constantly occurring on board emigrant vessels, make this report an exceedingly interesting testimony, coming as it does from a gentleman who has the greatest transmarine emigration movement the world ever saw going on under his supervision; and we give the Drawing of a Boat, constructing by Mr. Laird for an emigrant vessel, from which our nautical readers will see that in a few minutes an ordinary-sized ship's cutter of 26 feet can be converted into a boat 50 feet long, capable of saving the lives of 150 people. Two such boats would have saved the lives of the hundreds who perished in the Ocean Monarch and Caleb Grimshaw; the one burnt within a few miles of the Welsh coast, the other eighteen days on fire in the middle of the Atlantic.

The preference that emigrants would naturally give to vessels carrying boats capable, in case of need, of saving the lives of the crew and passengers, will probably bring this simple plan of construction into general use; as the cost will amount to a very small percentage on the passage-money, which would be more than compensated by the decided advantage it would give the ship carrying them in the competition for passengers.

LAIRD'S PATENT SECTIONAL BOAT, BUILT FOR HER MAJESTY'S CONSUL AT FERNANDO PO.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—"JOAN OF ARC."—PAINTED BY JOHN ABSOLON.

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.

We have this week engraved Mr. Sidney Percy's finest picture in this collection, in the catalogue, No. 207, "A Woodland River:"—

As from the face of heaven the shatter'd clouds
Tumultuous rose, the interminable sky
Sublimer swells, and o'er the world expands
A purer azure.

This is a very charming work, in composition and in colouring: the atmospheric effect is remarkably fine, and the whole scene is full of the poetry of art.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

The sixteenth Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in Water-Colours, opened to the public on Monday last, is one of more than average excellence. Fifty-eight different artists have contributed three hundred and twenty-nine works to the collection; but there is little to justify a belief that the Society is advancing. The best-known men, Haghe, Warren, Webnert, Vacher, and Davidson, have not made any advance in excellence; while, among the ladies, Miss Setchell is stationary, and Miss Fanny Corbaux unusually good.

In point of size and prominence, the great work of the Exhibition is contributed by the President, Mr Warren (No. 75), "Christ with the Disciples in the Corn-field." The general arrangement of the composition is happily conceived some of the heads are painted with dignity and truth; but the principal figure—the Saviour—is sadly deficient in divinity of look, and that meek grandeur of demeanour so essential to the due execution of the subject. The landscape portion is nicely felt and rendered.

Mr. Haghe contributes three works in all—No. 39, "The Miseries of War;"

EXHIBITION OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTION.—"A WOODLAND RIVER."—PAINTED BY S. R. PERCY.

No. 52, "Camel's-Head," and No. 53, "A Sketch," Public Resorts for the Gratuitous Supply of Water." We shall refer to these works next week.

In Mr. Wehnert's "Cartoon" reading the first proof sheet from his Printing Press in Westminster Abbey," we have the whole interest of the picture properly concentrated in Caxton and Caxton's labours. The hero of the picture carries his proper position; the object sought has been ever uppermost in the artist's mind, and a well-considered and a well-told story is the result. The "Caxton" is by far the best work on a large scale that Mr. Wehnert has yet done. It is full of care and real merit, and exhibits an extension of the usual limits and resources of water-colour art. Some of the heads are fine, and full of character. There is no authority, we believe, for the likeness of Caxton, but the head in Mr. Wehnert's picture is true to the received portrait of the father of English printing. We observe, in quitting Mr. Wehnert, that he has made two mistakes—one in his picture, the other in his description of it. Caxton's first book, "The Game of Chess," was a much smaller book than it is represented by Mr. Wehnert; and the "Armory of the Abbey," which it was printed, did not occupy the site of what is now Henry the Seventh's Chapel. The Almonry was to the west, not to the east, of the Abbey.

Mr. Vacher's best work is No. 44, "The Bazaar of Algiers." Equally wonderful for its fidelity and finish. There is truth and nature in No. 48, by the same artist, "A Caravan crossing the Plain of the Metidjah."

There are few water-colour artists who can, when they please, throw more delicate beauty into their works than Mr. E. H. Corbould. He has a fine sense of female loveliness, and a keen eye for the refinements of colour. But he loves exaggerations, and too frequently attempts too much. In the present exhibition we see him to advantage in No. 12, "Louisa," a female portrait so called; full of elegance and beauty. His "Elgiva in the hands of the creatures of Odo. Archbishop of Canterbury," a wonderful example of his beauties and defects, of his truth to nature, and his violent exaggerations.

In "The Cæsar's Tower, Warwick Castle," Mr. Robertson has sustained the reputation of his contributions last year, and has been very successful.

In the landscape branch of water-colour art, the new society has made a stride forward. Mr. Bennett rivals Mr. Davidson in transferring to paper the green delicacies of moonlide groves and evening colonnades; and Mr. Fahey, in his view near Kite's Coty House, has caught the character of Kentish scenery with a master's pencil.

Of the nine lady contributors, the palm of excellence is due to Miss Fanny Corbaux, for No. 47, "The Convalescent," two sisters, in many respects—one in the full enjoyment of beauty and health, the other of beauty and returning health. The contrast is admirably delicate. Health seems to return to the convalescent as you watch her countenance. The execution merits particular praise.

After Miss F. Corbaux we must mention Miss Setchel, for her "Jessie and Colin," from one of Crabbe's tales. The passage Miss Setchel has sought to represent deserves quotation:—

> The youth embolden'd, yet abash'd, now told
> His fondest wish, nor found the maiden cold.
> His mother, sure (ing. whisper'd—"Let him go
> And seek the license?" Jessie answer'd "No!"
> But Colin smiled, "I know all they love
> With all the comforts wealth and pomp give;
> But, with pure joy, to envious souls denied,
> To significant meanness and auspicious pride:
> And village maids of happy couples say,
> 'They live like Jessie Bourn and Colin Grey.'"

Colin is too big, and somewhat violently out of drawing, but there is earnestness in the mother, and great beauty of mind and face in Jessie. The colouring is warm, and the peep through the cottage door full of English rusticity of the best character.

In painting flowers and fruits, Mrs. Margetts still continues to reign supreme.

FREMONT'S DIORAMA.

THIS Diorama was submitted to a private view on Wednesday, at the Egyptian Hall, and represents the Overland Route to Oregon, Texas, and California across the Rocky Mountains, while crossing which Colonel Fremont and his party underwent many perils and sufferings. The painting (stated to have been made for the United States Government) consists of four parts or sections, and comprises an immense variety of eminently characteristic scenes, commencing with those inhabitants of the wolf and bear haunts over the plains, and proceeding with the Upper Missouri Indians of which are profusely and variously depicted —until the junction of the Platte therewith. The most remarkable objects on this course, after passing the Yellowstone River, are the ravines and bell-crowned rocks. At the junction of the latter and the broad prairie, which (in the result of a buffalo-hunt) is exhibited on fire, that surrounds the emigrants and trappers: while the indians, in strangely-illuminated groups, watch the progress of the conflagration. From this scene the change to a moonlight scene is exceedingly picturesque and beautiful; and the Chimney Rock, two hundred feet high, with which the first section concludes, is as curious as it is prominent.

The second section includes Fort Laramie, the Sweet Water Valley, the fine valleys beyond, with other scenes, such as the watch-fires, war-paths, councils, and encampments of the Indians. Perhaps the finest part of this section is a spirited drawing of a battle between Indians and a large number of buffaloes on the Platte and Beaver rivers, and scenes beyond, lead to the Great South Pass, where it is designed to establish a railroad for connecting the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and also to a prospect of the Rocky Mountains with their snow-capped peaks, including the Great Salt Lake, described as "the only view of it ever presented to the public, and the greatest curiosity in the world," with the Mormon city.

In the third section, we have the American Falls of Snake River, and still more magnificent the Columbia River, with its cascades. We must not, however, forget the Big-Tree Creek, with its titanic specimens of wood and timber, in the wonder with which we contemplate the vast accessory of primeval talent and mountains snow-capped, through the difficulties and dangers of which the Fremont party threaded their way with great loss of life both to man and beast. Happy, however, the survivors who reached the "Pleasant Valley," and the river-head, "where gold is found in abundance."

The concluding series of pictures is occupied with the specialities of California—the valley and river of the Sacramento, the bay and town of San Francisco, and the missions established by the Catholic priesthood and mysterious Astecians; the forest and the mines, with representations of emigrants labouring in hope or dying of despair and agues; terminating with the isthmus of Panama. The whole effect of the painting is exceedingly grand, and the exhibition cannot fail of being generally attractive.

CATLIN'S FAREWELL LECTURE.

Mr. Catlin delivered his farewell lecture on Thursday evening. The principle topic was the advantage of the Valley of the Mississipi to the emigrants. Such a field of enterprise exists not elsewhere, whether to the theorist or the practical man. Before long it must support the hundreds of a large portion of the human family. Such another spot is not to be found on the face of this planet. The whole of the river should have been called the Missouri. Such are a few of the statements made by Mr. Catlin, the whole of whose discourse was full of information, illustrated with a numerous series of maps and landscape pictures painted by himself. The subject included an interesting account of the Rocky Mountains and the gold regions of California. The audience was numerous, and the lecture, as it deserved, well received.

THE RECENT WRECK OF THE "ROYAL ADELAIDE" STEAM-PACKET.—From all the examinations that have been made of the ill-fated wreck, and from all inquiries that have been instituted, there remains little doubt that the fearful loss of life on board the Adelaide occurred by the blowing up of the vessel. The persons who were directed to assert this theory are those who had charge of the boilers; and they have reported that in the upper part of the back of the boiler, on the port side, there is a large hole, the edges of the iron forced outwards, which can leave no doubt of their having exploded, and forced up the port-quarter, deck, and after-deck, which may account for only one rocket having been thrown up from her, as rockets on board steamers are frequently kept tied up under the deck beams in the after part of the cabin. The stern frame, with the vessel's name, "Royal Adelaide, Dublin," with the sternpost and upper part of rudder-post, with iron tiller, all attached together, also the greater part of the after-deck, and the whole side of a boat, have been picked up on the Essex coast, and taken to Ramsgate. Very little cargo has been saved. The divers have been at work whenever the weather would allow of their operations; and there has been a revenue cutter on the spot to prevent plunder as much as possible.

MEDICAL DISCOVERY.—EPILEPSY.—Some time ago, we mentioned that a medical gentleman, named Jackson, had announced the discovery that the paroxysms of this fearful malady are owing to the disordered action of an important blood-vessel, and which vessel, in the case of every death he had been informed that the conclusions to which he has arrived are the following: 1. That the function or use of this vessel—of which the spleen is merely the roots, and the branches of which are the pancreas and the liver—is to intervene between the two—is to receive the drink and digested food, as well as the blood from the stomach and bowels, and propel them slowly and gently through the liver into the heart. 2. That in persons subject to epilepsy this vessel has lost its healthy tone and action; and, therefore, during the interval between the last attack and the one approaching, becomes by degrees unduly distended; and that, when in this state of over-distension it presses upon its contents, it gives rise to the epileptic paroxysm by causing an inordinate rush or flow of blood to take place through the liver into the heart, and which, meeting another current coming in an opposite direction, and bringing the blood to the heart from the head and other parts, arrests it; and by causing the very little blood or none at all, which of the blood through those parts, produces insensibility and convulsions, livid ity of countenance &c., and, in short, the symptoms observable during the paroxysm. 3. That the principle of treatment deducible from the foregoing explanation of the cause and nature of epilepsy is, to restore the tone and prevent the undue distension of the vessel in question—roots, trunk, and branches; for so long as no over-distension of it exists, the paroxysm cannot take place. As the "knowledge of a disease is half its cure," this doctrine, it it be true, is highly important, and holds out cheering hopes to the so afflicted with epilepsy a disease at present so seldom cured as to be amongst the opprobria of medicine. Whatever may be the practical results of this discovery—it discovery it be—it certainly possesses some of the chief characteristics of truth. It is simple, intelligible, and rational, which is more than can be said of all medical doctrines.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

CITY COURT OF SEWERS.

On Tuesday the Commissioners assembled in Guildhall, Mr. Deputy Peacock in the chair.

PROPOSED IMPROVEMENTS ROUND ST. PAUL'S.

Mr. Daw, the chief clerk to the Commissioners, read a letter, of which the following is a copy, from Mr Hodgson, the clerk to the Dean and Chapter of St Paul's:—

[illegible] April 18 1850.

Sir,—I am directed to inform you that the Dean and Chapter of St Paul's have given their most careful attention to the plans submitted [illegible] of Freedom and [illegible] at their last meeting, and I am directed to state that they [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL.—On Sunday morning last, a sermon in aid of the funds of the Westminster Hospital was preached from the pulpit of Westminster chapel, James-street, Buckingham Palace, by the Rev. Samuel Martin, A.M. From a statement circulated among the congregation, it appeared that, owing to the extent of sickness during the past year, and particularly during the raging of the fearful pestilence last autumn, this claim upon the benevolent was urgently needed to meet the liabilities and current expenses of the Institution. On the evening of the same day, the same rev. gentleman further advocated the cause of the Westminster Hospital; and at the conclusion of an eloquent appeal a second collection was made, making the total amount realised upwards of £46.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL AND ENDOWMENT FUND.—The Committee for the Building and Endowment of the new Hospital, in connexion with King's College, with the view of raising the necessary funds to carry out their design, have arranged to hold a festival, consisting of a public meeting, a dinner, and a concert, during the ensuing months of May and June, to which especial attention is invited. The number of those seeking relief in this hospital has become so considerable, that the present building is totally inadequate to the purpose for which it has hitherto been used. More than 12,000 poor persons have received relief during the past year. Under these circumstances, it has become absolutely necessary to add to the building, and, at the same time, to increase the funds for the permanent endowment of the charity.

LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY.—The Rev. H. Melville, Principal of Hailey-bury College, Herts, has most kindly consented to preach a sermon for the benefit of the London Truss Society, on Sunday, the 12th of May, at St. Philip's Church, Regent-street, the Rev. Mr. Repton having liberally given his pulpit for the occasion.

THE METROPOLITAN COMMISSION OF SEWERS.—The total receipts of the Commissioners of Sewers between the 5th of January and the 31st of December, 1849, was £71,623 13s. 10d. Of this sum £56,105 was raised by rates, £13,518 by "contributions," and £3000 by loan. The payments during the same period amounted to £65,345. The general cash account of the Commissioners shows that they had a balance in hand on the 31st of December, 1849, of £9234 13s. 11d. The total sum expended on works commenced and completed under contracts and agreements during the year 1849 was £49,606; £10,573 of which was paid for new sewers, £5577 for "openings," £3946 for repairs to sewers and gulleys, and £18,396 for cleansing, flushing, and repairs caused thereby. The moneys owing to the commissioners on the 31st of last December were £58,171, and their debts £100,739.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—A paper on the supply of water to the metropolis was read on Wednesday evening at the Society's rooms, in the Adelphi, by Mr. Penn, in which he recommended the working shafts on the north side of the Thames, for the admission of water to the chalk basin, and other shafts for raising it in a thoroughly filtered state, this plan adding to the natural supply through the country of the Kings. The 12th of May, at St. Philip's Church, Regent-street, the Rev. Mr. Repton having liberally given his pulpit for the occasion.

THE HOSPITAL AT VICTORIA-PARK.—The committee of the newly formed City of London Hospital have selected a design for the erection of a suitable institution for the treatment of diseases of the chest at Victoria-Park, where a piece of ground has been secured to the charity by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests.

THE FORFEITED RECOGNISANCES FOR LOLA MONTES.—It is understood now that in a few days final proceedings will be taken in the case of an order made by Serjeant Bingham, Esq., the magistrate at Marlborough-street Police-office, for the payment of the amount of a recognisance for the appearance of Maria Dolores, Comtesse de Landsfeld, (Lola Montes), on the charge of bigamy. The particulars of which are familiar to the public. Messrs. Henry Daniel Davis and Daniel Davies are the parties responsible for the sum.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—On Tuesday morning, shortly before ten, an accident, which had well nigh proved fatal to several workmen, occurred in the great central hall of the new Houses of Parliament, in that part leading to the crypt in connexion with St. Stephen's-hall. Several men were engaged in raising massive stone weights by means of cords, intended to form part of the central arch of the hall, by means of hand machinery, the pullies being suspended from three pillars, technically called "shear legs." The scaffolding, in consequence of the enormous weight of the stone, had been erected very strong, and the men had been cautioned to work it slowly and carefully. After three hours' labour the men had succeeded in raising the mass of stone to a height of between fifteen and twenty feet, and they then commenced to lower it to keep it steady working; the pressure upon the blocking was hardly gone through, when the ponderous weight of the stone, which was then resting on the two ropes of the hand pulley, caused the wheels of the block to snap from the rollers, the "shear legs" fell at the same time giving way, and the stone with the cumbrous machinery suddenly fell to the ground with a tremendous crash. Fortunately the workmen, with the stone commencing to descend, had withdrawn from the spot, those only remaining who were engaged in raising it. In the course of the fall of the "legs" three men were seriously injured, being knocked down and jammed between the "legs" and stones. Assistance was immediately rendered, and they were drawn out in a senseless condition, and conveyed to the hospital, when it was found that they had sustained most extensive injuries, Carse, one of the sufferers having received a compound fracture of the skull, and Michael Donoghue and the foreman, Webb, having received internal injuries; the effects of which may prove fatal to both. Carse and Donoghue remain in the hospital, Webb being, at his earnest request, conveyed to his own house. The escape of the sufferers from being crushed to death is most miraculous, as, had it not been for the "shear legs" forcing them out, the stone must have fallen upon them, and certaindeath would have been inevitable.

GREAT CENTRAL GAS CONSUMERS' COMPANY.—On Tuesday, the first stone of the works of this company was laid by Mr Dakin, the chairman of this company, at Bow, assisted by the various officials, and the proceedings passed off with great éclat. In the evening the shareholders and friends of the company dined at the London Tavern, Mr. Dakin presiding, when, after the usual loyal and patriotic toasts had been drunk, Mr. Pearson M.P., proposed "Prosperity to the Great Central Gas Consumers' Company," and pointed out that the company had already saved £50,000 to the public by the reductions effected in the price of gas. The Chairman returned thanks, and presented to Mr. Pearson an elegant silver claret jug, as a present from the directors, following the usual precedent. "Presented to Joseph Pearson, Esq., M.P., late Chairman of the Great Central Gas Consumers' Company, by his late colleagues, in testimony of their great estimation of his able services in the formation of the company, thus destroying the gas monopoly that had existed in the city for thirty years, and, by reducing the price, effecting a saving to the city of nearly £50,000 annually. The directors have great pleasure in recording their sense of the encouragement with which they received from their late chairman whilst joined with them in the administration of their arduous duties, by which their labour was lightened, manist opposition and difficulties of no ordinary kind; and they desire to express their fervent wishes for his health, prosperity, and long continuance in his course of public usefulness." Mr. Pearson acknowledged in suitable terms the receipt of the testumonial; and a variety of appropriate toasts having been drunk, the meeting separated.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The Registrar-General's return for the week ending Saturday last gives the births as 1471. The deaths were 866; thus exhibiting a continued decrease in the mortality of the metropolis. During the two previous weeks the deaths registered in the metropolitan districts were 1000 each week, 1124, 893; they have now declined to 866. In the corresponding weeks of ten previous years (1840-49) the average number was 837, which being raised in the ratio of probable increase of population becomes 1021; compared with which the number now returned shows a decrease of 155. In the same week of last year, before cholera became predominant, the deaths were 1089; the mean temperature, which was then unusually low, was 2 degrees higher than in last week by 12 degrees. Last week the deaths of 5 children and 2 adults were registered from small-pox (of which 3 occurred in the Small-pox Hospital, Camden Town), indicating rather an increase in the disease, though it has not yet quite attained the average 17 children died of measles, which is exactly the average of the period of hooping-cough, and 18 children and 1 adult of scarlatina, both complaints being less fatal than usual; 8 children died of croup, about the usual number; 30 persons of typhus, and 8 of erysipelas, both of which are near the average. Ten women died after childbirth, to 7 of whom "puerperal fever" is assigned as the cause of death. 22 persons, of whom seven children died of diarrhœa and dysentery, exhibit a number is double the average, and also exhibits an increase on each of the three weeks immediately preceding. A woman died of "puerperes hæmorrhagica?" and again, two persons of chorea. The two cases of poisoning by opium are, as seldom fatal, occurred, are thus recorded:—At 8, Jeff's-place, St. John, Marylebone, on the 13th of April, the daughter of a coachmaker, aged sixteen years, died from the effects of a the London Hospital, to which she had been thrown. Despite, a female servant, aged nineteen years, died of chorea. It is worthy of remark, that nine deaths have been registered in London from this cause during the last six weeks, which is nearly double the number that usually occur in a year. Amongst diseases of the respiratory organs, pneumonia and asthma now show a decrease; bronchitis has also declined, if compared with the amount of corresponding weeks in the last three years, but is still in excess, in comparison with the mortality of the seven previous years.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean height of the barometer in the week was 29.564 inches. The daily temperatures varied little throughout the week; the mean temperature was 4 degrees of higher than on the same day on an average of seven years, the mean of the week was 48.9 degrees, and was about three degrees higher than the average.

HONOUR TO LITERATURE.—The Emperor of Austria has conferred upon Captain Duckett the Gold Medal of Austria, as a mark of his approbation of the German part of his "Technological Military Dictionary."

IMPROVEMENTS AT TOOTING.—The premises formerly the pauper establishment of the parish have been sold, and they are now being pulled down for the purpose of making a new road, building a terrace &c. Thus, we hope, will be effaced all recollection of the fearful events that happened at Drunch's, at Christmas, 1845, and which handed to future the village, innocuous as, prior to those events, Tooting was highly esteemed as a locality enjoying pure air and many other advantages. The registrar proved, at the time of the inquest, the Tooting was one of the healthiest districts in Surrey.

HAILSTORM IN DUBLIN.—A Correspondent has sketched the size and shape of some of the hailstones which fell on the north-east side of the city of Dublin, on the 18th inst. From one to three h urs after they had fallen, they measured from three-quarters of an inch to one inch in diameter: they were mostly flattened at the sides, and rough at the edges; and had radiated, spike-like centres, imbedded, as it were, in clear, hard ice.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MATE-MATICIAN, Boulogne Sur-mer.—Despite your confidence, you are positively wrong. No 311 cannot be solved in your way. If, indeed, it could be, your communique is excellent would have been very much misplaced. Let Black for his 2d move take Q P with Pawn, and then how can you prevent five mate?

J. C. ZETA.—The same attempt to solve Herr Ries's admirable diagram 321, has been sent us by at least a hundred and fifty correspondents; but it is, notwithstanding, wrong, as you will find on carefully going through the variations again.

ROPER.—Black at his second move may take Pawn with K's Pawn; how, then, is mate in four moves to be effected?

J. D. KIRK.—He could claim a second Queen. See the Ivan 91, page 38 of the "Chess-Player's Handbook."

E. R. You had an unquestionable right to Castle under such circumstances

JUVENILES.—No 7 is too crowded, and sadly wanting in polish. One or two of the earlier ones shall appear

T S. You cannot seriously intend the diagram in question for a Chess Problem

G Y H; PAWN; P T L; W F.—We believe mate may be deferred to five moves

O W.—The next move would obviously be—2. Kt to K 4th (ch), and then 3 P takes P—mate

SIR C S.—On looking again, you will find, that even in the preliminary diagram, White may mate easily in three moves, after Black retreats his Kt to Q R sq

R D M.—Bestow a few weeks' attention to the insoluable problems of D'Orville and Bolton, before you attempt to "improve any yourself"

WIS E. The 10th law declares that a player cannot Castle in the following cases.—1. If the King or Rook have been moved; 2. If the King be in check; 3. If there be any Pieces between the King and the Rook; 4. If the King pass over any square attacked by one of the adversary's Pieces or Pawns PATIENCE, BATH UNIV, W N, T—See the notice above to Argus, for J. P.

J. P. Hythe.—The key move to column No 308, are—1. P takes P (ch), and 2 Kt to K 4th (ch)

SECUNDUS FATUUS.—In diagram No 16 of the "Text-book" the white's side should be black, and vice versâ. To understand this, place the men as they stand there, and then turn the board round. The white king will then be as he ought, at his Q R 8th sq

R W F.—In a drawn game neither party wins.

STUDIUS.—We are acquainted with the game of "Jare." You will find it fully described, no doubt, in Bohn's comprehensive "Hand book of Games," just published SOLUTIONS by ST EDMUND, C S, Rose-Cot Chess-Club; JUVENILES, G Y H, CARTHUSIAN, F G R, R W F, M P, Rev C L, Rev R V, F R S; P, Holden; J A W, F G M, Milo, Perseus, W D M A, Oxford; J P, Hythe, F G, are correct. All others are wrong.

CAMILLA, Eaton-square.—The "Chess-Player's Handbook," and the other works named, together with the "famous" new Chess-men, may be got, if we mistake not, at Westerton's well-known Library, Knightsbridge.

W G.—A striking advance on your former efforts

D O W.—If the conditions were, that mate should be accomplished in four moves, a solution in five moves is, of course, of no avail. You seem, however, to have solved it perfectly, according to the stipulations

ARGUS, LYNN, and Others.—In Problem No. 325, mate can be effected very cleverly in five moves, as it stands; but, as a four-move problem, it requires that the White Pawn at K Kt 6th should be a Black one

HIGHLANDER.—You will see the whole of the correspondence on the subject of the "Edinburgh match," which has lately appeared in the Scotch papers, in last month's number of the Chess-Player's Chronicle. In reading it we were somewhat embarrassed by an error of the printer's, a transposing the last two of the letters, whereby "Spentsor's" reply, dated 6th March, is given before his opponent's letter of February 27th

BELGRAVIA.—The "Staunton Chess-men," in the beautiful material called "Cerara," are manufactured at Messrs Wedgwood's celebrated "Etruria," in Staffordshire. They are obtainable in London, at the Polytechnic Institution, and at 97, King William-street, Charing-cross

MARCUS, JUVENTUS, AMATEUR.—See notice to ARGUS, LYNN, &c

A. A. A. &c, Hammersmith.—In all problems the men are to be placed on the squares they are described to stand on. Your solutions are all wrong

J. S. S, Newark.—Want of space prevents his insertion in our columns, but we should think it would prove acceptable to the Chess-Player's Chronicle

G—l. The match between Messrs Staunton and Medley has not yet terminated. 2. The fault perhaps rests with your bookseller, our copy came duly to hand early in the month

SHEFFIELD GRIFFIN.—Your solution of the famous Knight-art Problem was extremely creditable to you

A MEMBER OF THE WORKING MAN'S CHESS CLUB, Leeds.—We suspect you will find a few in your collection of No 325, on examination. Suppose, for example, Black play—1. P to K R 4th, now could you proceed? You are quite right respecting No 315

B W.—They shall be examined. [6 B P.—Note under consideration

* * The replies to numerous Correspondents on Chess are unavoidably deferred until next week

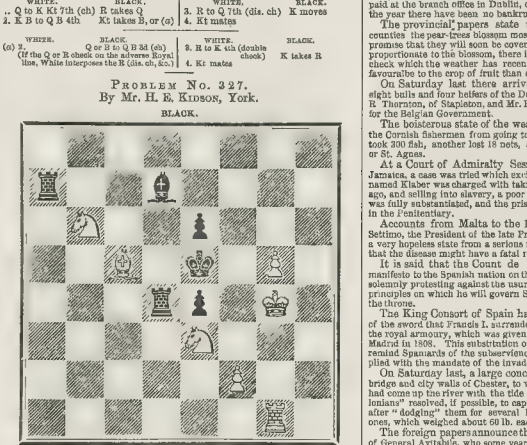
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 326.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
.. Q to K Kt 7th (ch)	R takes Q	3. R to Q 7th (dis. ch)	K moves
2. K B to Q B 4th	Kt takes B, or (a)	4. Kt mates

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
(a) ?	Q or B to Q B 3d (ch) (If the Q or R check on the advance of Royal line, White interposes the R (dis. ch, &c.)	3. R to K 4th (double check)	K takes R
		4. Kt mates

PROBLEM NO. 327.
By Mr. H. E. KIDSON, York.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to move, and checkmate in three moves.

SECOND MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBES.

WHITE (London).	BLACK (Amsterdam).
5. Q Kt to Q B 3d
Amsterdam to play.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

Game in the Match between Messrs. HOWITT and GREENAWAY, the former giving the Pawn and two moves

(Remove Black's K B P from the board.)

WHITE. (Mr Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr. Horwitz.)	WHITE. (Mr. Greenaway.)	BLACK. (Mr Horwitz.)
1. P to K 4th		11. K B P takes P	B takes B
2. P to Q 4th	P to K 3d	12. K Kt to K 2d	Q to K 4th
3. K Kt to Q 3d	Q Kt to Q B 3d	13. Kt to K Sq (ch) (a)	K to K 2d
4. P to K 5th	P to K Kt 3d	14. R to K B 7th (ch)	K to K sq
5. P to K R 4th	P to Q 3d	15. Q takes Q	B takes Q
6. P to Q B 4th	K B to K Kt 2d	16. R takes K R P	B takes R
7. P to K B 4th	K B to K R 3d	17. B takes R	Q Kt to K 2d
8. Q to K Kt 4th	P takes P	18. Kt to Q 2d	B takes Kt (ch)
9. P to K R 5th	P takes K R P	19. K takes B	B to Q 3d
10. Q takes P (ch)	K to K B sq

And the game was ultimately won by Mr. Horwitz.

(a) But why not have Castled, giving check? It would have been next to impossible for Black then to have escaped from the attack.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 563.—This ingenious little stratagem is extracted from the Berliner Schachzeitung.

White: K at Q sq, Q at her Kt 3d, R at K R 2d, Kt at Q 3d.
Black: K at his 6th; Ps at K R 4th, K Kt 5th, K 6th, and Q 5th.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 564.—Clever termination of an actual game, by Mr. ROLL.

White: K at Q R sq, Q at her 7th, Rs at K Kt sq and Q sq; Ps at K R 2d, Q Kt 2d, and Q R 2d.
Black: K at K R 2nd, Q at her B 5th, Rs at K B sq and Q B 2d; Ps at K Kt 2d, K B 3d, K 5th, Q 4th, and Q R 2d.
White, having to play, announced mate in four moves.

No. 565. By Mr. J. B. KNOTT.

White: K at his Kt 5th, Q at her Kt 8th, Kt at Q 3d; Ps at K 2d, Q 3d, and Q B 5th.
Black: K at Q 5th, Ps at K 3d and Q B 3d.
White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 566.—By Mr J. R. EDNEY.

White: K at his 2d, Rs at Q 6th and Q Kt 7th, Kt at K 3d; Ps at K R 3d, K Kt 5th, K 6th, Q 3d, and Q Kt 2d.
Black: K at Q 5th; Ps at K R 4th, K Kt 3d, and Q Kt 6th.
White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 567.—By Sir G. S.

White K at K 8th, R at K R 8th, B at K 2d, P at K B 3d.
Black: K at K R 3d, B at K R 4th, Ps at K R 5th and K Kt 5th.
White to play, and mate in five moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has subscribed £50 towards the erection of a chapel for the use of the inmates of the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum.

The Royal Irish Academy are making preparations to organise a general system of meteorological and tidal observations in Ireland, which neither the Government, the British Association, nor the Royal Society of London has yet attempted to form.

Henceforward the sale of postage stamps of the value of 10d. and 1s. will be extended to all post-offices throughout the United Kingdom. Postmasters will make the necessary application to the chief department for the supply which they may require of these stamps.

Already the merchants and citizens of Belfast have raised a fund of £500 for the purposes of the Exposition of 1851.

Several of the provincial papers of Ireland describe specimens of new potatoes which have been produced as exhibiting a very healthy appearance.

A subscription list has been opened at the Chamber of Commerce Dublin, for the sufferers by the loss of the Royal Adelaide.

Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., who has been recently elected a vice-patron of the Royal Naval School, has presented a donation of £20 in aid of the funds, this being his twelfth contribution to the institution.

It is understood to be in contemplation to erect a monastery on an extensive scale near the Roman Catholic Chapel in Rugby, land having been purchased for that purpose.

On last Saturday forenoon the new church of St. Bartholomew, situate in Moor-lane, Cripplegate, was consecrated by the Bishop of London. An ancient edifice is erected out of the materials which formed the church of St. Bartholomew, in Broad-street, which was taken down for the improvements adjoining the Royal Exchange. The Rev. Mr. Denton, senior curate of Bloomfield, is the incumbent.

Lord Brougham is about to convert some of his fine lands near Brougham Hall into a deer-park, the high walls of which are making rapid progress towards completion. It will be stocked by deer from Lowther.

At a recent meeting held at the Vernon Arms, Sudbury, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of erecting a suitable memorial to the late G. E. Anson, Esq., it was determined that the clerestory windows of the church of Sudbury, the parish whence Mr. Anson resided, should be restored and illuminated, for which two hundred pounds will be required. Before the meeting separated nearly £50 of that sum was subscribed and handed to the treasurer, H. Chawner, Esq.

The Prussian Gazette announces that the manufacturing firm of Gruman, of Elbing, which employs more than 1000 workmen, had been obliged to suspend payment. The liabilities exceed 1,000,000 thalers; but the creditors had accorded every facility, and the failure is stated to the town had solicited an advance from the Government. The failure is stated to be one of the consequences of the war with Denmark. At Memel, also, houses engaged in the timber trade have greatly suffered from the same cause.

The journal Le Suisse, of Berne, confirms a statement already published, that the Neapolitan Government had given orders to stop the progress of all Swiss commercial travellers through the Neapolitan states, and to expel all and action of the Swiss consul, M. Morekofer, refused to give caution. This measure dates from the moment when the great German powers assumed a hostile attitude towards Switzerland

A shock of an earthquake was felt at Smyrna at half-past 3 A.M., on Wednesday, the 3rd instant, which caused the greatest alarm. The noise which preceded the shock is described as most terrific.

By the report for the year 1849, made to the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, it appears that during the past year 134 joint stock companies have been provisionally regt tered, at a total cost, including the fees paid at the branch office in Dublin, of £2027. The return mentions that during the year there have been no bankruptcies of joint-stock companies.

The commercial papers state that in Herefordshire and the adjoining counties the pear-trees blossom most abundantly, and the apple-trees, too, give promise that they will soon be covered with bloom. Should the crop of fruit be proportionate to the blossom, there is no doubt but it will be abundant; and the check which the weather has recently given to the trees is considered rather favourable to the crop of fruit than otherwise.

On Saturday last there arrived in Ely Hall, by train, from Darlington, eight bulls and four heifers of the Durham breed, from the eminent breeder Mr. R Thornton, of Stapleton, and Mr. R. Emerson, of Eryholm, which were shipped for the Belgian Government.

The boisterous state of the weather during the past week has hindered the Cornish fishermen from going to sea. Of three boats on Monday night, one took 300 fish, another lost 18 nets, and the third was obliged to go to Newquay or St. Agnes.

At a Court of Admiralty Sessions recently held in Spanish Town, Jamaica, a case was tried which excited a good deal of interest. An aged woman named Kilaber was charged with taking to Cuba with her, upwards of 25 years ago, and selling into slavery, a young woman, named Nelson. The charge was fully substantiated, and the prisoner sentenced to three years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

Accounts from Malta to the 14th of April announce that Ruggiero Settimo, the President of the late Provisional Government of Sicily, was lying in a very hopeless state from a serious malady, and great fears were entertained that the disease might have a fatal result.

It is said that the Count de Montemolin contemplates publishing a manifesto to the Spanish nation on the confinement of the Queen; in which, after solemnly protesting against the usurpation of his rights, he will proclaim the principles on which he will govern Spain if ever Divine Providence call him to the throne.

The King Consort of Spain has ordered to be made an exact model of the sword that Francis I. surrendered at Pavia, to replace the original one in the royal armoury, which was given up to Murat, at his demand, when he entered Madrid in 1808. This substitution of the ideal for the real will only serve to remind Spaniards of the subserviency to France of the functionaries who compiled with the demands of the invader and were always ready to flatter.

On Saturday last, a large concourse of persons assembled on the old bridge and city walls of Chester, to watch the gambols of some porpoises, which had come up the river with the tide as high as the causeway. Several "Scylinians" received, if possible, to capture these monsters of the salmon tribe; and after "dodging" them for several hours, they succeeded in netting two young ones, which weighed about 60 lb. each.

The foreign papers announce the death, at his native place, near Naples, of General Avitabile, who some years ago organized the army of Runjeet Sing, at Lahore, and who defended Peshawur against our troops.

The Duke de Bordeaux has subscribed 1000f. to the fund raising for the relief of the wounded, and the families of those who perished in the catastrophe at Angers. The Earl of Pembroke has subscribed a similar sum.

Several papers state that Cardinal Dupont is definitively nominated ambassador from France at Rome to the Holy Father. This is not the first time that the cardinals have been designated to represent France at the Court of the Pope. Cardinal d'Ossat, under Henri IV., caused to be recognized the protectorate of France, and its great political and ecclesiastical liberties.

The City of London Union Board of Guardians have resolved to throw open their doors to the public press. The discussion prior to this decision was of considerable duration.

A correspondent in Scotland as a strange anomaly, that, although prices of cattle are no longer low than is agreeable to parties interested in agriculture, some farms lately out of lease in Ayrshire have found tenants readily; one very recently, at an advanced rent. Grass parks, too, are at as high rates as formerly.

A strong effort is about to be made by the Welsh and Lancashire members to induce the Government to lend their assistance to remove the Swilly Rock, which renders the navigation of the Mersey straits so dangerous.

The municipal committee has just given its approbation to a proposition for continuing the boulevards from the Madeleine to the Bastille. It has also authorised the names of the Rue du Faubourg St. Martin and the Rue du Faubourg St. Denis to be changed into the Rue de la Porte St. Martin and the Rue de la Porte St. Denis, the inhabitants being of opinion that the term faubourg injured their interests.

Accounts have been received of the death of Mr. Retemeyer, the Colonial Receiver-General, Demerara. Mr. Retemeyer, we understand, at the time of his decease was 68 years of age, had held 30 or 32 years of which had been passed in the service of the Crown and the public as Colonial Receiver-General of British Guiana, and about forty as an inhabitant of that colony.

The Lord Chancellor continues in perfect health. His Lordship is now strong enough to hear counsel at his house, in Park-lane, on such matters as are represented to be of pressing interest; but no day has yet been named for the commencement of the public sittings.

The increase which has taken place within the year 1849 in the number of persons employed, or in the salaries, emoluments, allowances, and expenses in all public offices or departments, is as follows:—Increase in number of persons employed, 703 (638 in the Post-office); salaries, £20,603 7s. 2d.; emoluments, £689 7s. 9d.; retired allowances, £47,384; expenses, £7152 16s. 2d.; total, £75,876 11s. 1d. The diminution within the same period was as follows:—Number of persons, 1003; salaries, £26,890 14s. 8d.; emoluments, £17,129 7s.; retired allowances, £3566 2s. 11d.; expenses, £24,078 14s. 9d.; total, £143,653 18s. 4d.

In Cephalonia (one of the Ionian Islands under British rule), at the court-martial recently held after the insurrection of last year, there were 44 persons sentenced to death, 2 to transportation, 7 to imprisonment, 11 to corporal punishment, 2 were acquitted, and 1 discharged by reason of a void trial. Of the number sentenced to death, 21 were executed, and 16 had their sentences commuted. The number flogged was 80, and the total number of lashes inflicted 2987. During the same period, one policeman officer and two constabulary were expelled from the island.

On Thursday week, a pike weighing 14 lb was shot by Mr. Stewart, in the Loch of Forfar; on Saturday, another, weighing 22½ lb., and on Monday another, weighing about 22 lb. When a pike shows his tail above the water, Mr. Stewart instantly fires one of the barrels of his gun. The fish, on being struck, leaps almost entirely out of the water, and with this position receives the contents of the other barrel.

THE EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

(Continued from page 252.)

ORNAMENT FROM STAFF OF HALBERD. HENRY VIII.

HINGE, OF GERMAN WORK.—(MR. PRATT.)

THIS collection presents an inexhaustible source, whence our Artists continue to select subjects for their pencils; and the owners of these works of art, so far from evincing any jealousy or uneasiness respecting the illustration of their property, willingly offer us facilities of which in numerous instances we regret our inability to avail ourselves. Although we have not been able to illustrate the Exhibition so fully as we could wish, our Artists have pictured some of the most striking records of this very interesting collection. "Life is short, art is long;" and the attempt to elucidate the page of history by actual reference to many of the masterpieces of artists whose reputations have survived the ages in which they flourished, has proved eminently successful; for, although the primary object of this Exhibition was doubtless to institute a comparison between Ancient and Modern Art (in which, by the by, the latter does not always appear to the greatest advantage), it must be confessed that it owes its interest principally to the historical associations which the inspection of rare works of antiquity never fails to call up. We confidently predict, therefore, that, should the Archæological Institute carry their project into effect next year, of forming an antiquarian museum on a large scale (not confining the Exhibition exclusively to works of art), such a scheme will be attended with the happiest results; and be the means of conveying much real information to the utilitarian, as well as much general gratification to the archæologist.

Of no very high antiquity, nor yet possessing any strong claims to notice on account of its merits as a work of art, is the very curious Cup presented to the Barber-Surgeons' Company, in 1678, by Charles II., of which we subjoin a representation. Its stem is formed of the trunk of an oak tree, and the cover is surmounted by a huge crown. On what occasion the fraternity was honoured with this Royal gift is not exactly known; but it is not improbable that it was presented by the King after the Restoration, in testimony of service rendered by the Company to the cause of Royalty during the civil wars. The acorns depending from the boughs in a quaint and not inappropriate device, and possibly the whole design, bears some fanciful allusion to the story of King Charles in the oak.

There is also in the collection another cup of silver gilt, given by Henry VIII. to the Barber Surgeons' Company, in 1540. It is richly embossed with ornaments, in the style of Holbein, among which occur the rose, fleur-de-lis, and portcullis. Four lions' masks are on the bowl, from which hang bells; and in the interior are the arms of the company, &c.

Another illustration is a fac-simile of a Jewel of the fifteenth century, attributed to the celebrated Cellini. The setting is ormed by various figures, and a large pearl depends from it. This elaborate piece of bijouterie, which is the property of Mr. Farrer, was exhibited at the meeting of the Archæological Institute at Lincoln; but, in the absence of any direct testimony to that effect, it is difficult to conceive it to be a production of this great artist; indeed, if only one half the works said to have been wrought by Cellini were really executed by him, he must not only have been one of the most wonderful, but also one of the most industrious of men. In fact, but very few of this master's works can be identified in the present day; but there is a cup (in the possession, we believe, of the Earl of Ilchester) which, with the precious vessel preserved in the Ambras Museum at Vienna, and some other things, can be distinctly recognised by the allusion made to them by Cellini himself in his autobiography.

NO. 172.—ETUI, IN PERFORATED STEEL.

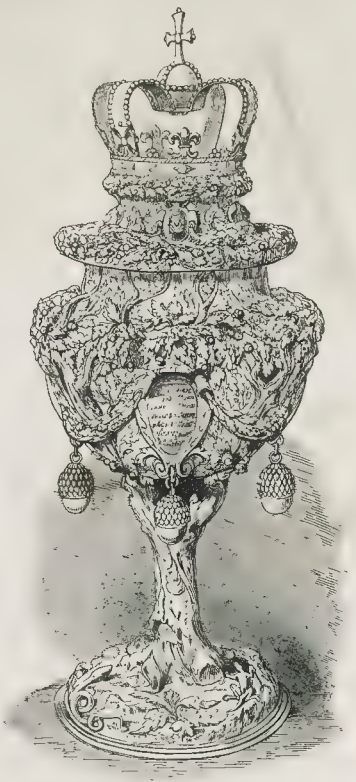
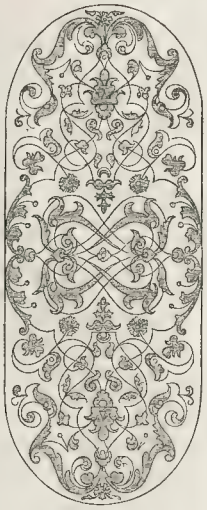
The small perforated steel etui, which we have engraved, is the property of Mr. Baring Wall, M.P. It has the arms of the Medici family wrought on the cover, surmounted by a cardinal's hat: from which it may be inferred that it originally belonged either to the famous Leo X., who became Pope in 1514; or to Clement VII, who ascended the Papal throne in 1623; or to Ferdinand de' Medici, who, although a Cardinal, became Grand Duke of Tuscany about 1590: but, in either case, at least one hundred years greater antiquity can be claimed for this relic than the date assigned to it in the catalogue. We have before alluded to the beautiful case of mathematical instruments, formerly in the Stowe collection, as presenting one of the most delicate examples of the Milanese damascene-work in gold and silver, of the sixteenth century. We are now enabled to subjoin some of the pattern in detail, which combines an extreme degree of finish with a perfect unity of design. We have also engraved a pattern from one of the halberds from Windsor Castle, of the time of Henry VIII., which will convey a fair idea of the cost lavished on their arms by the dandy Halberdiers, or Body-Guardsmen of those days.



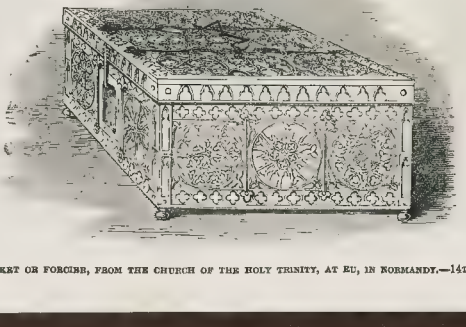
NO. 67.—SILVER CUP GIVEN BY CHARLES II. TO THE BARBER-SURGEONS' COMPANY.

Our last Engraving is a representation of a casket, or forcier, from the Church of the Holy Trinity, at Eu, in Normandy. We have already alluded to the great peculiarity in style exhibited by these early Christian reliquaries; and this one, which is of the date of the fourteenth century, does not differ materially, in its design and ornamentation, from many others of the same period, which are adorned externally with the usual Gothic tracery, and painted internally with some Scripture subject, generally having reference to some passages in the life of the saint whose relics they contained. It is the property of Mr. S. Hodgkinson, and probably has experienced the common fate of a vast number of things dedicated to religious purposes, and has been removed from its original depository at Eu, during the French revolution. Amongst the numerous objects of interest, we particularly observed a case of miniatures, belonging to the Duke of Buccleugh, containing portraits of Henry VII., Henry VIII., Catharine Howard, Catharine of Arragon, Prince Edward, Edward III., Queen Elizabeth, Mary Queen of Scots, Sir Walter Raleigh, James I., Sir T. More, Baron and Baroness Ellesmere, and Princess Elisabeth. But perhaps the whole Exhibition does not contain a more curious historical relic than the staff of the High Constable of England—an office which was exercised by one of the Stafford family in 1483, but which has for ages fallen into disuse. This staff, which is of silver, having a gilt coronet at its termination, with the Stafford arms engraved on it, is exhibited by Lady Stafford.



NO. 182.—ARABESQUE FROM INKSTAND. 16TH CENTURY.

NO. 376.—GOLD PENDANT, ATTRIBUTED TO CELLINI.



NO. 214.—CASKET OR FORCIER, FROM THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY, AT EU, IN NORMANDY.—14TH CENTURY

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

The fourth Philharmonic Concert was given last Monday evening: the rooms were quite filled, the Duke of Cambridge again being present. The Symphonies were Cipriani Potter's MS. in D, and the familiar No. 5, in B flat, of Salaman's set. Mr. Potter's work is that of a musician who is thoroughly versed in the mechanism of his art, and who adheres to the received forms, without any spasmodic attempt at experimental harmony—the besetting sin of our younger musical writers of Symphonies. The scherzo was encored; but we preferred the andante, the lovely theme in which was beautifully led off by Charles Harper on the horn, and was equally delicately handled by Mr. A. Nicholson on the oboe. In the presto finale there was fire, and variety of contrapuntal treatment: but the motivi were too nearly pantomimic. There was but one overture—Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas," superbly rendered, and unanimously encored. This composition bids fair to be one of the most popular overtures, now that its design is better comprehended, and its execution is becoming more firm and precise. The Beethoven Violin Concerto, executed by Sainton, created a great sensation. It partakes more of the attributes of the symphony than of the concerto, so picturesque and massive are the tutte; and, whilst it taxes the powers of a violinist in the highest degree, it is still ungrateful for him, as the conclusion of almost every long series of intricate passages is an anti-climax. Of Sainton's truly masterly interpretation, nothing in the way of praise can be exaggerated; never before has he taken such high ground: his breadth of tone, correct intonation, freedom of bowing, and spirited style, were always his recognised qualities; but, on this occasion, he displayed a degree of intensity, exquisite refinement, and finish of execution that quite electrified the auditory: his two cadences were admirable, the first especially, from its skilful working of the leading motif of the allegro. In place of a second overture to conclude the programme, there was an adagio and fugue of Mozart, a portion of which, it was bruited, was written by Sechter: the point is immaterial; it is but a scholastic exercise, which, deprived of Mozart's name, would be regarded as a nonentity. The vocalists were Miss Catherine Hayes, who sang the "Der Freyschütz" grand scena very expressively, although the time was too much dragged, and the difficult "Non mi dir" of Mozart; and Mr. Whitworth, who sang artistically the "Addio" of Mozart, and an air by Paer. Miss Kate Loder performed cleverly W. S. Bennett's "Caprice" with orchestral accompaniments—a thoroughly Mendelssohnian piece. Mr. Costa conducted with his usual energy and precision. The next concert will take place on the 6th of May.

The third meeting of the Musical Union took place at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday afternoon. The programme comprised Spohr's Double Quartet in E minor, No. 3, Op. 9, played by Sainton, Deloffre, Hill and Piatti, Goffrie, Watson Melon and Pilet; Mendelssohn's duo for piano and violoncello in D, Op. 58, performed by Herr Hallé and Piatti; and Beethoven's

SCENE FROM "ZORA," AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Quartet in C minor, No. 4, Op. 18, executed by Sainton, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti. M. Hallé, who will be in town for the season, also played Chopin's Nocturnes for piano, Op. 32, and Polonaise in A, Op. 40. Hallé ranks as one of the finest interpreters of classical music, and his playing was worthy of his great reputation.

The amateurs who were not present at Mr. Platt's Farewell Concert, on Wednesday morning, lost one of the greatest musical treats of the season. The C minor Symphony of Beethoven, and the "Oberon" and the "Jubilee" overtures, were gloriously played by the Royal Italian Opera band; Mrs. Anderson performed the first movement of Hummel's pianoforte concert in A minor, in admirable style; and the appearance of the patriarch Lindley to play, with Lucas and Howell, in Corelli's trio, created a sensation that will not be easily forgotten. The members of the orchestra surrounded the venerable violoncellist in groups, anxious to catch the last notes of his instrument, from which he drew tones of matchless purity. He was encored with acclamations; but he descended from his rostrum seemingly conscious that it was the last time he had played. It must have been a consolation to him to know that he had struck the lyre for the final period on behalf of a brother artist in distress. The vocalists were Miss Catherine Hayes, Miss Birch, Miss Louisa Pyne, Miss Bassano, Miss Ellen Lyon, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Benson, Machin, and H. Phillips, who sang with their well-known ability. Costa was the conductor. Mr. Goodwin supplied the music-books gratuitously, thus aiding in the good cause. The members of the committee will continue to receive donations up to the 1st of May.

Mr. Aguilar, a pupil of Mendelssohn, who has long resided in Frankfort, where he has gained distinction as a pianist and composer, gave an evening concert on Wednesday, at the Hanover-square Rooms. He played in Mozart's quintet in E flat, with Nicholson (oboe), Lazarus (clarionet), Jarrett (horn), and Baumann (bassoon), and in Mendelssohn's trio in C minor, Op. 66, with Ernst and Hausmann, and as a classical player established himself in the good opinions of the auditory. In Chopin's second scherzo in D flat he proved that he was not to be startled by the most complex intricacies. The vocalists were Mdlle. Schloss, Miss Lucombe, Misses C. and S. Cole, Mdlle. Graumann, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Signor Marchesi, a young barytone of great promise, with a fine voice and excellent style. Mr. Benedict was the conductor.

—Mdlle. Moulin, who has studied in the Conservatoire of Paris, and is a pupil of Sterndale Bennett, gave a soirée at 27, Queen Anne-street, on Wednesday. In the execution of the works of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, this accomplished pianiste displayed a poetic touch and finished execution. She was assisted by Deloffre and Rousselot, violin and violoncello; and Mr. Gratian Cook (oboe), and Mr. Drayton the bass.

Musical Events.—On Monday last, Mr. John Parry gave his musical entertainment at Crosby Hall; and next Monday, at Willis's Rooms, his "Lights and Shadows" will be presented.——Mr. Milne and the Misses Smith at the Music Hall, and Mr. Henry Phillips, at St. Martin's Hall, also gave their respective entertainments last Monday.——The eighth of the spring series of the London Wednesday Concerts took place on the 24th, when Beethoven's "Egmont" was performed; the poem recited by Mr. Stammers. Herr Dreyschock, the famed pianist, made his début at this concert.——The third and last performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, took place at Exeter Hall last evening (Friday).——On the same evening Signor Schira's new opera, "The Orphan of Geneva," was produced at the Princess's Theatre, a notice of which will appear in our next Number. This morning (Saturday) will be the second Royal Academy of Music Concert.——M. Billet commenced a second series of evenings for classical pianoforte music on Friday, at St. Martin's Hall.——The fifth concert of the Amateur Musical Society will be given next Monday.——Miss Hinckesmann's concert will take place the same evening, in the City; and there will be a grand musical entertainment at the Highbury Barn Tavern.——On Wednesday will be the second meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society.——Madame Viardot made her appearance in the German Grand Opera, at Berlin, on the 14th, as Valentine, in Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," with immense enthusiasm. Herr Titatschek was the tenor, and Mdlle. Tuczek the Queen.——The "Prophète" is rehearsing under the composer's direction, and will be ready at the end of this month. It was produced at Cologne on the 17th, with the same success as at Vienna, &c.——Madame Léonard (Antonia de Mendi), the cousin of Viardot, appeared at Copenhagen recently, with distinguished success; as also her husband, M. Léonard, the famed Belgian violinist.——Auber, the composer, has just lost his mother, at the age of ninety-three.——Aiboni is to appear soon at the Grand Opera, in Paris, in the "Favorita."——Tomaschek, the celebrated professor of the Prague Conservatoire, is dead, in his seventy-sixth year. He was the master of Dreyschock, Schülhoff, Fidesco, &c.——M. de Glimes, from Brussels, M. Jael, a pianist, and M. Eckert, the composer, &c., are amongst our musical arrivals of late.——Mr. Lisabe, whose merits as a flautist we have already spoken of, appeared at a concert at Cheltenham, on Saturday last, with great success.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Rossini's "Mosè in Egitto," originally composed for Naples, in 1818, in three acts, and which he remodelled as a four-act lyric drama for the Académie Royale de Musique, in Paris, in 1827, was first heard in this country at the Covent Garden oratorios in 1829; and, in the same year, at the King's Theatre, under Mr. Ebers's management, called "Pietro l'Eremita." In 1833, a version of the opera was represented at the Covent Garden Lenten Oratorios, under M. Laporte's les seashp, with dresses and scenery, entitled "The Israelites in Egypt, or The Passage of the Red Sea;" and in this adaptation, by Mr. Rophino Lacy, the "Hallstone" and "Horse and his Rider" choruses, and the air, "Sing ye to the Lord," from Handel's "Israel in Egypt," were introduced. The Lord Chamberlain, the following year, prohibited the performance of oratorios in character. The Italian adaptation on Saturday night, at Covent Garden Theatre, was a close translation of the French poem: the scene of action is the same, in Egypt; the only variations are, styling the Israelites Bactriana, a nation subject to the Persian empire some two thousand years before the Christian era, and changing the names of the characters.

The most complete success attended "Zora," which was thus cast: Merimane and Sinaide (the King and Queen of Egypt), Tamburini and Mdlle. Vera; Amenophi (their son), Tamberlik; Osiris (Grand Priest of Isis), Tagliafico; and Anfelde (Captain of the Guards), Soldi. The antagonistic characters of the captive

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

Next week we shall present our readers with a selection of new costumes. We now engrave two specimens of a revived taste, which promises to be very popular.

We quote a paragraph on Parisian novelties from our tasteful contemporary, the New Belle Assemblée:—

Longchamps this year has disappointed the Legitimists and the Democrats; it was not sufficiently brilliant for the first, and too much so for the latter. The weather was too cold for any great display of summer dresses, though there were a few elegant ones; but the chapeaux and capotes were all of a summer kind, and remarkably tasteful. The equipages were in general brilliant, particularly those of the English; but, indeed, their equipages always bear away the palm. The English ladies' dresses were also, in general, in excellent taste. There were a good many on horseback, whose costumes were much admired: that of Lady S—— excited the most attention: it was in the Moldavian style—a petite veste of dark green cloth, entirely covered with an embroidery in passementerie, imitating guipure royale, and displaying the shape to the greatest perfection. The skirt, very ample, and cut in a novel manner, fell in long folds, like an antique drapery. A grey beaver hat—the brim low in front and turned up at the side—was ornamented with a long twisted ostrich feather; cambaie colour and maroon, each closed by a double button of rubies. The cravat, plaided in red and green squares, was tied negligently, and fell in festooned ends. I think Lady S—— has set a fashion that is likely to be followed by the élite of the haut ton. The Summer Fashions are now settled, with the exception of those modifications that every month take place.

Tomb of Alfred the Great.—We have made inquiry as to the existence of a tomb in memory of Alfred, stated by some of our contemporaries to be at the Old Bridewell, Winchester, lately sold by auction; and we are assured by the purchaser of the property that no such tomb exists, although it is traditionally said that Alfred's remains were removed to the Bridewell

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

Bactrians are Zora (the High Priest of Zoroaster, the God of Fire), Zelcer; Babaas (his brother), Lavh; the Oracle, Polonii; Amanda (a Persian Princess beloved by Amenophi), Madame Castellan, and Nicotra (her mother), Madame D'Orsolati.

The encores were the Quattior and Chorus "Nume possante," in the first act; the duo between Tamberlik and Tamburini, "Parlar, spiegar," in the second act; the round "Mi manca la voce," sung by Mdme. Castellan, Mdlle. Vera, Tamberlik, and Lavih; and the finale in the third act at the end of the latter piece. All the principal singers were called for, and then Costa had a special ovation. The effect of this finale rivals that in the third acts of the "Huguenots" and "Robert;" and is a most masterly combination of contending emotions. The new tenor, Tamberlik, has achieved the most signal triumph in Zora; Mdme. Castellan was never heard and seen to better advantage. The new basso sings impressively, although it is made a too high for him in portions; and the rest of the cast, save the contralto, which was very disagreeable, was admirable. The opera was repeated on Tuesday, and the house was crowded with Royalty, rank, and fashion. Some judicious curtailments were made. There is a pretty divertissement in the third act, in which Louise Taglioni dances with exquisite grace. There is but one opinion—that "Zora" is Rossini's masterpiece; and that, by its magnificent execution, the leading artists, the choral and orchestral forces, under Costa's direction, have gained fresh laurels. The gorgeousness of the spectacle is unprecedented.

On Thursday night Rossini's "Donna del Lago" was revived, followed by the second and third acts of "Masaniello." In the former work Grisi and Mario retain their original parts of Elena and the King; but Mdlle. de Meric appeared for the first time in Malcolm, Tamberlik in Rodrigo Dhu, and Zelger in Douglas of Angus. The opening recitative made a highly favorable impression, both in the aria, "Oh, quanto legrime," and in the duo with Grisi, "Vivere io non potro;" but she omitted, for some unexplained reason, the air with chorus, "Ah, si perai." Subdued, however, as were the remainder, altogether, seeing that "the whole of Rossini's opera" was specially announced in the bills, Marie left out the "Aurora, si sorgeral," but she was rapturously encored in the interpolated air of Pacini, "Come sei calmar." Zelger sang carefully, and was a great gain on Marini in Douglas, for the former sang in tune. Tamberlik made another hit. Nothing could be finer than his aria d'entrata—the cabaletta of which was from Rossini's "Zelmira" and which was re-demanded with enthusiasm. Grisi was in superb voice. All the artistes appeared at the fall of the curtain

"La Donna del Lago" will be repeated to night. Next Tuesday, "Zora," for the third time; and on Thursday the revival of the "Huguenots."

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

As we predicted, the great event of last week was the debût of the new tenor, who at once ascended to the highest pitch as a vocalist of his register of voice. Some account of him may interest our readers. He is rather under than above the middle height, broad-chested as Italians and Germans are wont to be, with a wide forehead, large and expressive eyes, and a no less expressive mouth. His face would be perfect were it not for his nose, which is too retrousse. His voice is fresh and powerful, and has the two qualities which the Italians so much admire, and which they so aptly characterise by the epithets sincere and sympathetic. He sings exclusively from the chest, reaching with facility that sol de pourrai, which, of late years, with the extraordinary scarcity of tenors, had become as fabulous as "the philosopher's stone"—every one said it existed, and no one could detect it. Signor Bancardé is a very young man; he was born at Florence, in 1827. His father, who was a native of Brest, in Britiany, and was officer of the French navy, came to Italy with Napoleon; and, being an excellent engineer, was engaged there in one of those works in which Buonaparte endeavoured to emulate his great predecessor. In conquest, the Bancardés became. Having for his head-quarters Florence, where he settled after the fall of Napoleon, he there married a Florentine lady, by whom he had several children, all gifted by nature with remarkable musical taste. Our tenor was destined by his parents to become a painter, and he pursued the study of that art until twenty-two months since, when, his father having died, and left him unfettered, his love for the lyrical stage overcame all other. He at once sought and obtained an engagement for the Italian Opera. Although not so unfortunate as Rubini was at the same period of his career, when he was refused 20 francs for three months' singing, Bancardé had the utmost difficulty to obtain quarters gagement. Even several months after he had appeared at one of the secondary theatres, he was refused £200 for his services for the whole year. A Neapolitan impresario having, however, heard him sing, lost no time in tempting him by a suitable salary to come to Naples, where he rose from one theatre to another until he became the star of San Carlo, and the object of enthusiastic admiration, and of contests betwixt all the great empresarii of Europe, who sought at once to secure his services.

The opera selected for Signor Bancardé's début on Saturday was Verdi's "I Lombardi." His triumph was certain from the singing of his first air, "La mia Letizia," in which the excellent quality of his voice and the deep pathos of his singing were warmly recognized. He was encored in this piece, as also in the trio which ends with the death of Oronte. Bancardé's voice is of such compass that he never appears to have required the slightest assistance in "high notes," says a contemporary, "are of equal quality throughout the whole range, and are distinguished by a singular combination of power and sweetness, while he turns his great natural advantages to account chiefly by the passionate expression of his manner." Coletti was an effective Pergamo.

On Tuesday, "Il Barbiére di Siviglia" presented Madame Sontag as Rosina, and Lablache as Bartolo; with Belletti as Figaro, and Calzolari as Conte. Sontag never sang more charmingly; and the entire opera, with Cattina Grisi in a divertissement from "La Esmeralda," and the ballet of "Les Plaisirs d'Hiver," gave the highest satisfaction to a full house.

On Thursday took place the second appearance of Bancardé, although on this occasion his performance was confined to the duet "Si miseri," and to the celebrated trio finale of "I Lombardi," which he sang with Giuliani and Lorenzo; but the quality of tones, so powerfully sustained throughout his aria, and the register of voice, the purity of his style, and the faultless nature of his intonation, confirmed all that had been conceived at first anudition as regards his right to one of the highest positions in his profession. His reception was beyond measure enthusiastic—neither encore nor recall were spared nothing was wanting in the mode and manner in which the approbation of the audience was conveyed to him. This was a fortunate day, indeed. The "Nozze" so perfectly cast, down to its most secondary characters, and with Madame Sontag, the chief star of the galaxy, was encored almost throughout. Such was, likewise, the reward of Carlotta Grisi's dancing of the "Esmeralda" and of Amalia Ferraris' most execentric new pas. In this step, with inimitable grace as well as originality, she mimics the buttocks fabulous feat of swimming in the air. In the "Seguidille" the young Marie Taglioni bid defiance to her rivals undismayed and to the last the numerous pas that followed, and the ice scene, met with the most unqualified success, although the performance was thus prolonged to a most unusual hour.

On Thursday next, the entire force of the Opera and Ballet celebrities will appear. Independently of operas and musical selections, a new feature is forthcoming, in the shape of a new pas de deux, to be called "La Graces," to be executed by Carlotti Grisi, Marie Taglioni, and Amalia Ferraris.

ST. JAMES'S.

M. Samson continues to delight, not only as actor, but as author. His "La Belle-Mère at le Gendre" was represented on Friday. As the public is already familiar with the plot of this passing comedy from the English version, called "My Wife's Mother," it is unnecessary to do more than say that Monsieur Duchesne differs from Mr. Farren's Uncle Footle in its being less demonstrative, and trusting more to mere natural expression.

On Wednesday "Le Misanthrope" was performed. The house was full.

HAYMARKET.

On Monday, Mr. Macready was prevented by severe illness from performing Macbeth. In consequence of this unlooked-for event, his final appearances are postponed to next october. Shakspere's comedy of "Much Ado about Nothing" was presented instead; Mr. Wallack performing Benedick, and Mrs. Warner Beatrice.

DRURY-LANE.

This theatre is at last devoted to the legitimate and classical drama. "Othello" has been performed more than once this week, and Sophocles' "Antigone" is announced.

SADLER'S WELLS.

On Friday week Mr. Milman's fine tragedy of "Fazio" was revived. Miss Glyn performed the part of Bianca for the first time. It was marked by a peculiar freshness of conception; and, in execution, it was distinguished by extraordinary passion and power. The actress exhibits in it more physical force than in any of her previous assumptions, and brings out the various situations with a reality that spoke of terrible experience. Since that she was positively sublime, and her countenance became as it were transfigured with the emotion of the scene. The part, fortunately, allows play for the strongest impulses; and by giving freedom to Miss Glyn's passionate temperament, produces triumphs in this character. She was deservedly applauded, and received, at the conclusion of the performance, her ovation before the curtain.

THE ROYAL SCOTTISH SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The grand fête appointed to take place at Holland-park during the ensuing summer, under the superintendence of the Society, promises to be one of unusual splendour and brilliancy. The 20th of June is, we believe, the precise day fixed for the commencement. In order to be prepared to receive her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert on the occasion, due notice has been given to the gathering, a Highland guard of honour is now in the course of formation. By a further regulation, the gentlemen forming the guard will be permitted to wear such tartans and accoutrements as they may feel inclined to adopt; but, with regard to arms, the claymore and target will be indispensable. There will be a case for ladies in the archery division. The Royal Scottish Society of Archers shoot for the distinguished honour of captain next week. The establishment at Peckham is most beautifully situate in Hanover Park. The grand banqueting hall looking into the grounds is emblazoned with the arms of the Marchis of Breadalbane, K.T., President of the Society, and with those of the Vice-President. The walls are also hung with the tartans and other insignia of the Highland clans.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A day's sport at Bath on Thursday, the day after the flat (very) racing, brought the steeple-chase campaign to a close. We have now, in fact, commenced the regular season in earnest; but seeing that both the Craven meet and the two days on Lansdown were comparative failures, not with the vigour that could have been wished. The meetings next week are the Newmarket First Spring, commencing on Monday, and terminating on Friday, and the Liverpool hunt and Pymoonth on Wednesday. The first of the trio engrosses the attention of the racing fraternity, chiefly from the interest attached to the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes, run for on the second day, and for which Pirate, Harding, Idas, Conlan, Gibb, Nutcracker, all in the Derby, and See-hunter, are likely to come to the post: it will be the "crack" event of the week. The One Thousand Guineas Stakes, on Thursday, is an open race, but from the nominations it will be a match between Mrs. Peck's Filly, will bring out Nutshell, Cariboo, and two or three other Derby nags, and on paper is a certainty for Nutshell. The cricketers' season commences at Carlisle on Thursday, with eleven of All England and twenty-two of Carlisle and district, the only fixture for the week. The aquatic register is as yet "blank."

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—The only feature in the betting this afternoon was the reckless manner in which Ghillie Callum was peppered. Had not his admirers been very stanch, there is no knowing to what price he would have gone: he left off with rather an improving appearance. There were no other changes worth notice.

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

6 to 4 agst Pirate	3 to 1 agst Harding
5 to 1 —— Pitsford	20 to 1 —— Any other

CHESTER CUP.

10 to 1 agst Prep-o'-Day Boy	12 to 1 agst Ghillie Callum	12 to 1 agst Ellerdale
13 to 1 —— Escodorius	17 to 1 —— Chanirey	25 to 1 —— John Cosser
The others as before.

5 to 1 agst Holingbroke	12 to 1 agst Ghillie Callum	25 to 1 agst Penang
6 to 1 —— Clinker	15 to 1 —— Rubies	25 to 1 —— Pitsford
8 to 1 —— Mavors	15 to 1 —— The Nigger	30 to 1 —— Knight of Avenel
11 to 1 —— Voltigeur	20 to 1 —— Nutshell	40 to 1 —— Delcon.
	20 to 1 —— Mildew

1000 to 15 agst Captain Grant.

BATH AND SOMERSET RACES—TUESDAY.

THE LANSDOWN TRIAL STAKES of 15 sovs each, and 50 added.—Mr. Roll's Collingwood (Pickman), 1. Mr. Jenkinson's Miss Harkaway (Byrne), 2.

THE SOMERSETSHIRE STAKES of 25 sovs each.—Mr. Drinkald's Sauter la Coupe (Rodney), 1. Duke of Richmond's Halo (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES, of 10 sovs each, and 50 added. Capt. Petiat's Eagle's Plume (Wakefield), 1. Mr. Saxby's Paquita (W. Treen), 2.

BATH AND SOMERSET RACES—WEDNESDAY.

THE DURHAM PARK STAKES of 15 sovs each.—Mr. Gannon's Delocon (J. Sharp), 1. Mr. Jenkinson's Miss Harkaway (A. Day), 2.

THE WESTON STAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Howard's Prestige (A. Day), 1. Mr. Waring's Gleon (T. Carlisle), 2.

The City Cup of 100 sovs, in specie.—Sir J. Hawley's Fernhill (A. Day), 1. Mr. Fowler's John Dory (Whitehouse), 2

MALTON RACES.

THE CLARET STAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Hesseltine's Timothy, 1. Mr. G. Barton's Sir Philip, 2

THE CONVIVIAL HANDICAP of 10 sovs each.—Sir C. Monk's Gulliver, 1. Col. Anson's Ivy Treacle, 2. Mr. Hesseltine's Lucy, 3.

THE FAREWELL STAKES.—Bastinado, 1. Galileo, 2.

THE TALLYHO HANDICAP.—Leonidas, 1. Little Queen, 2.

DESTRUCTION OF SARAGOSSA CATHEDRAL.—On Sunday the 7th of April, the cathedral of Saragossa, in Spain, was struck by lightning and took fire. This accident happened at the moment when the procession of the Holy Sacrament was coming out of the church with the vaticum for the sick. The crowd was great; for the people thronged to see the procession, which was headed by a band of musicians and a picket of grenadiers. Presently a thick cloud overcast the sky, and darkened the city like sudden nightfall; the heavy rain which fell obliged the procession to face about and take shelter in the church. No sooner had the priest and his assistants reached this movement, than a loud clap of thunder, which shook the ancient cathedral to its foundations, was preceded by a violent crack, as if the building had been rent. The tower had been struck by lightning. The electric fluid had first escaped with a smart shock; but his father was suffocated, and precipitated lifeless from the belfry to the pavement of the church. The roof caught fire, and a violent wind fanned the flames, so that all efforts to extinguish them were vain, and by three in the afternoon the dome was burned.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market has been dull during the past week, from the combined effects of a plentiful supply of money, and little reaction on the part of the public to purchase. Consols opened on Monday at 96 ½, afterwards declining to 95⅞ for Money, and 96-⅛ for Account. This depression continued on Tuesday until nearly the close of business, when a favourable reaction made the last prices 95⅞ to 96 for Money, and 96 to ⅛ for Time. The Market on Wednesday opened with greater firmness, Consols quoting 96 to ⅛ for Money and Account, an improvement that was now, fully supported, for, on Thursday, prices quoted were 95⅞ to 96 for Money, and 96 to ⅛ for Account. Exchequer Bills are a shilling or two cheaper than last week, nor is this extraordinary, considering the rate of interest at which the paper can be had. The heavy stocks have scarcely varied. Money continues as plentiful as it has for some months past, nor is any probability of change in its value apparent. The closing quotations of the week are—For Bank Stock, 207; Reduced, 96; Consols, 96; New Three-per-Cents, 96; Quarter per Cent. Annuities, to expire Jan., 1860, 8⅞; Ditto, 1860, 8⅞; Ditto, 39 years, Oct. 10, 1859, 8; Ditto, 30 years, Jan. 5, 1860, 8 7-16; India Stock, 267; India Bonds, £1000, 93 p; South Sea Stock, Old Annuities, 94; Consols for Account, 96; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 70 p; £500, June, 68 p; Small, June, 68 p.

The only event of interest in the Foreign Market during the week is the fall in Spanish Bonds. On Thursday, a Friday's rise was put forth, in the shape of a proposition to fund, and pay interest on the existing amount of debt, entirely rejecting, however, any claim for the overdue dividends, amounting to about fifty per cent. This is, however, only "a beau ideal" No. 2, and should not be considered worthy of spending breath upon in the shape of argument. Many propositions of very much the same character will be made before anything assuming tangibility is effected. Unfortunate holders must be, therefore, prepared to be deaf to a host of these tricks, or become the victims of a set of speculators. The Active Stock, which quoted on Monday 18⅞, declined on Thursday to 17; and the Three per Cents, from 37⅞ to 36⅞. Mexican is firmer since the arrival of the mail, which brings the intelligence of a favourable report on the part of the Venezuelan Government to arrange for the payment of the over-due dividends. An agency is also appointed in London, to consist of the Venezuelan Consul in London, and two persons nominated by the committee of South American bondholders. With regard to other securities, Russian Scrip is rather improved; but the changes generally have been merely the difference between buying and selling prices, as the close of the week. Brazilian Bonds, 6 per Cents., 97⅛; Danish, Scrip, 4⅞ p.; Equador Bonds, 3⅞; Grenada Bonds, 16½; Greek Bonds, ex-Over-due Coupons, 5⅛; Mexican, 5 per Cents., ex Jan. Coupons, 19½; Peruvian, 6 per Cents., 1849, 81; Ditto, 1847, 81; Ditto, Deferred, 30½; Russian Scrip, 2¼ p.; Spanish, 5 per Cent., 1840, 17; Ditto, Account, 16⅛; Ditto, Passive, 3⅛; Ditto, 3 per Account, 36⅛; Venezuela Bonds, 8¼ per Cent., 34⅛; Belgian, 4½ per Cent., 89⅛, Dutch, 4 per Cent., Certificates, 86⅞.

Railway stock, although somewhat better than last week, is still heavy, with a declining tendency. The last prices are—For Aberdeen, 9⅛; Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, 19½; Birmingham, Bristol, and Thames, 21; Bristol and Exeter, 64; Caledonian, 7; Ditto. New, £10, Preference, 5⅝; Eastern Counties, 7⅛; Ditto. Extension, 2 per Cent., No. 1, ⅞ pm.; Eastern Union, Class A, Scrip, 6 per Cent., 15⅛; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Guaranteed, 6 per Cent., 127; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 26½; Great Northern, 5⅞; Ditto, ⅛ B, 6 per Cent., 4; Ditto, 5 per Cent., Preference, 10 x.l.; Great North of England, 216; Great Western, 69; Hull and Selby, 94; Lancashire and Yorkshire 143; Leeds and Bradford, 89; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 78½; London and North-Western, 101⅛; London and South-Western, 58 x. Midland, £50 Shares, 9⅛; Ditto, Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, 6 per Cent., 119; North British, Preference, 4½; North Staffordshire, 7½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 5½; Shrewsbury and Chester (Near W. Mon.), 8 per Cent., Preference, 11⅞; Shropshire Union, 2½; South Staffordshire, 4; South Eastern, 13, Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 3¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 14; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 8½; Ditto, 6 N. E., Preference, ½. York and North Midland, 14½; Boulogne and Amiens, 6; Great Indian Peninsular, 5⅛; Namur and Liege, 6½. United Mexican Mines, 9.

On Friday the amount of business doing in Consols was compartively small, yet prices were supported. The Three per Cents—money—were done at 96⅛; and the New Three-per-Cents, 97½; for the Account, 96⅞. Exchequer Bills, Indias Stock, 267; Exchequer Bills, 69s to 70s pm. Spanish Bonds gave way to some extent. In other foreign securities, as well as Railway Shares, next to nothing doing.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrival of English wheat up to our market, coastwise, has been on the increase, and several runs came fresh to hand for this morning's market. Notwithstanding that the attendance of both town and country millers was but moderate, the demand for all kinds of wheat of home produce was steady, and a total clearance of the stands was easily effected, at prices fully equal to those obtained on Monday. The imports of foreign wheat are under 5000 quarters. Selected samples moved off steadily, at full rates of currency. In the middling and inferior parcels a moderate business was doing, at full prices. The total supply of barley, including 3400 quarters of foreign, was extensive. Fine malting, as well as grinding parcels, were more in request; but distilling qualities ruled dull. Malt was in good supply and limited request, at last week's quotations. Very few English oats were offering; but the supply of foreign was large. The oat trade was heavy, and prices were the turn in favour of the buyers. Beans, peas, Indian corn, and flour, very slow in sal

ARRIVALS: English: Wheat, 2270; barley, 2010; malt, 4970; oats, 890; flour, 5082. Foreign: Wheat, 2273; barley, 8400; oats, 38,150.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 30s to 40s; ditto, white, 35s to 44s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 32s to 38s; ditto, white, 38s to 43s; rye, 26s to 28s; grinding barley, 18s to 20s; distilling ditto, 22s to 24s; malting ditto, 22s to 25s, Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 45s to 48s; brown ditto, 43s to 44s. Kingston and Ware, 46s to 48s; Chevalier, 53s to 54s. Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 15s to 16s; potato ditto, 16s to 17s; Youghal and Cork, black, 15s to 16s; ditto, white, 15s to 15s; tick beans, 30s to 34s; ditto, old, 32s to 35s; ditto, new, 32s to 34s; maple, 32s to 36s; white, 29s to 33s; boilers, 34s to 36s, per quarter. Town made coals, 21s to 23s; Suffolk, 17s to 3 s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 17s to 21s, per 20 tons.

Foreign: Danzig red wheat, 4 to —s, white, 4 t —s; barley, —s to —s, oats, 2 to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; rye, —s to —s. Egyptian beans, 22s to 23s per quarter.

The Seed Market. The season for sowing being now over, our last week's quotations remain almost nominal

LINSEED, English, for sowing, 70s to 72s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 38s to 44s; hempseed, 36s to 38s per quarter; coriander, 16s to 22s per cwt; rosa mustard seed, 8s to 11s; white do, 6s 6d to 8s 6d; tares, 3s 6d to 4s 6d per bushel. Trefoil, 18s to 24s; red clover, 28s to 34s per cwt; carraway seed, English, 22s to 24s; foreign, 18s to 20s; coriander, 8s 6d to 9s; canary, 56s to 60s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, 30s to 44s; white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread. The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis range from 6d to 6½d; of household ditto, 4d to 5d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 37s 10d; barley, 22s 8d; oats, 15s 3d; rye, 21s 6d; beans, 23s 8d; peas, 24s 9d.

Tea. No public sale.

Coffee. Although the supplies of foreign butter are large, the demand rules heavy, at further depressed currencies. Fine hay Friesland, Cork and Holstein, 72s to 75s; and inferior and surplus, 54s per cwt. Old Irish butter, nominal. Cork, landed, 74s to 76s; and Limerick, 72s to 74s per cwt. New Irish, 68s to 70s per cwt, delivered in London. Fine English butter is in moderate request, at last week's prices; but all other kinds are neglected. Fine new Limerick, 72s; fine new Waterford, 70s per cwt; fresh, 6s to 12s per dozen lb. Irish bacon, especially fine parcels, is firm, at a further imp ovement in value of 2s per cwt. Prime small Waterford, 54s to 56s per cwt; fine ditto, 50s; heavy, 44s to 46s; prime small Limerick, 42s to 46s per cwt. On board, Waterford was sold at 4s to 5s per cwt. Hamburgh bacon, and prime hams and lards, are quite as dear as last week.

Tallow. Our market is very quiet. P Y C on the spot is selling at 36s 9d to 37s 6d, and for the last three months, 38s to 38s 6d per cwt. Town tallow, 33s 6d to 36s per cwt to 24 lbs. Rough fat, 2s 2d to 2s 3d.

Oils.—As the consumption is falling off, the general quotations must be considered a shade lower than last week.

Spirits.—Very few transactions have taken place in brandy, yet prices are fairly supported. Middling qualities of rum have given way 1d per gallon. Geneva and corn spirits dull.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 8s to £3 10s; clover ditto, £3 0s to £4 10s; and straw, £1 1s to £1 4s per load

Wool.—Public sales of 24,000 bales will commence on the 4th proximo. By private contract nothing very important is doing, and the late rates are with difficulty supported.

Potatoes.—Selected qualities are in fair request, at from 90s to 120s per ton. All other kinds are very dull, and somewhat cheaper.

Coals (Friday).—Townley, 13s 6d; Wylam, 13s 3d; Hedley, 15s; Hilda, 14s 6d, Lambton, 12s; Caradon, 15s 3d; Tees, 17s 3d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Fine colouny hops are in somewhat improved request, at fully last week's prices. In all other kinds no little is doing, the quotations are almost nominal:—

New Mid and East Kents, £4 to £5 5s; New Weald of Kent ditto, £3 5s to £4 5s; Old ditto, £2 5s to £3 5s; New Sussex ditto, £3 5s to £5 10s; New Farnhams, £12 0s to £13 0s; Yearling Kents, £3 0s to £4 5s; Yearling Sussex, £2 5s to £3 5s; Old ditto, £2 0s to £3 0s.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was very heavily supplied with beasts, the number being nearly 1200 head, nearly of prime quality. As the attendance of buyers was small, the beef trade ruled heavy in the extreme, and, in some instances, prices had a downward tendency, without effecting a clearance. The supply of sheep was on the increase. All breeds were in fair request, and Monday's currencies were well supported. the primest old Downs in the wool se ling at 4s 6d per 8 lb. Lambs were in good supply, and heavy inquiry, at barely last week's currency. Calves were in full supply, with 340 head came to hand. In calves, the supply of which was large, next to nothing was doing, at a fall in value of 2s per 8 lb. The pig trade ruled very dull. Most sorts were sold at from £1 4s to £1 8s each, including their small calf

Per 8lb to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d. second quality ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 4d to 3s 6d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d; prime coarse woolled ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime Southdown ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large oxgs, 3s 2d to 3s 6d, neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d, lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; sucking calves, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; and store pigs, 6s to 20s each. Total supplies. Beasts, 1154; cows, 135; sheep and lambs, 3240; calves, 340; pigs, 250. Foreign supplies. Beasts, 218; sheep, 360; calves, 180; pigs, —. Scotch: beasts, 319, sheep, 80.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday). These markets were somewhat inactive to-day. In pork, however, we have to report a good trade.

Per 8lb by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime large ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; veal, 3s 10d to 4s 8d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 6d to 5s 6d.

HORT. HERBERT.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

FRIDAY, APRIL 19.

LORD CHAMBERLAIN'S OFFICE, APRIL 19.

The Rev Lord Wriothesley Russell has been appointed by the Queen's command, one of the Deputy Clerks of the Closet to her Majesty, in the room of the late Dean of Hereford.

WHITEHALL, APRIL 17

The Queen has been pleased to grant to the Rev Henry Parr Hamilton, M A, the Deanery of her Royal Free Chapel of St George, within the Castle of Windsor, void by the death of the Very Rev Francis Lear, late Dean thereof

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Thomas Hesketh Fleetwood Hesketh, Esq, having resigned his commission as Exon in her Majesty's Body Guard of the Yeomen of the Guard, Edmund Hook Wilson Bullens, Esq, is hereby appointed.

WAR OFFICE, APRIL 18

6th Regiment of Dragoon Guards: Capt R Thompson to be Capt, vice Holder. Lieut C P Johnstone to be Capt, vice Nicholson, who exchanges. The Lieut, vice Johnson

3d Light Dragoons: Cornet S Mannell to be Lieut, vice Cooker. J N Preston to be Cornet, vice Mannell.

Scots Fusilier Guards. Capt C Holder to be Lieut and Capt, vice Lord R Taylor

Lieut Hon Evelyn Pepys to be Ensign. The Lieut of Ensign to be Lieut, vice Sandys. 31st: Lieut C J O Swaffield to be Lieut and Capt, vice Ellershaw; Ensign R J Lesson to be Lieut, vice Swaffield. 42nd: Lieut-Gen Sir J Douglas, K C B, to be Colonel, vice Lieut-Gen Sir J Macdonald, K C B, deceased. Ensign Longmore to be Lieut, vice Longmore. 49th: Lieut J Lovett to be Lieut, vice Windows. 49th: Lieut and Capt Lord R Taylor to be Captain, vice Thompson. 50th: Ensign W B Lowe to be Lieut, vice Hamilton Bruce. 97th: Capt J H Askins to be Captain, vice H M Smyth, Lieut G B V Arbuckle to be Lieut, vice Kenny. 98th: Lieut Lord C G Kenny to be Lieutenant, vice Arbuckle. Ensign F B Lesage to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]. 97th: Assist-Surg R S O'Brien, 9 d: Assist-Surg R S Pelle to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Munro. 72nd: Major Lord W Powys to be Colonel, vice Lieutenant-General Sir J Douglas, K C B.

HOSPITAL STAFF—Assist-Surg W Munro, M D, to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Fraser; Acting Assist-Surg R M'Gregor to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice Pelle

BANKRUPTS.

S J JACKSON, Richmond buildings, Soho, picture dealer G WINTER, Granville-square, Pentonville, publican J WHITEHEAD, Wrexham, Denbighshire, Hampshire, grocer JOHN ARNETT, [illegible] tobacconist J STORMONT, Shifnal, Shropshire, iron manufacturer. W K SMITH, Skelton, Yorkshire, innkeeper J MEYOY, Holme, Lancashire, grocer and tea dealer. E HART and M HART, Northwich, Cheshire, drapers. G VEALE, Hitchin, Devonshire, baker. JOSEPH CRANWELL, Glamorganshire, grocer T W ALFORT, Bristol, Gloucestershire, builder. W THOMPSON, Leeds, Yorkshire, plumber. J HOLROYD, Batley, Yorkshire, worsted dyer. W HAWSON, Market Rasen, Lincolnshire, seed-merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

T MOFFATT, Portobello, bookseller. G A HOPE, Glasgow, merchant. D PHILLIPS, Govan, Lanarkshire, [illegible] LANING, Glasgow, hatter. J and S GIBB, Glasgow, manufacturers. D W LAIRD, Leith, watch-maker. J and A [illegible] Glasgow, manufacturers. A [illegible]

TUESDAY, APRIL 23

WHITEHALL, APRIL 20.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Francis Twigg, of Barsden, in the county of Stafford, Gent, to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, APRIL 22

Royal Regiment of Artillery: Sergeant-Major T Hassal to be Quartermaster, vice Porter

Corps of Royal Engineers: First Lieut Hon Arthur Lyttelton to be Second Captain, vice Miller; Second Lieut F H De Vere to be First Lieut, vice Gibb

BANKRUPTS.

W WALDEN, Park-place, Mile-end New Town, ship-manufacturer S BROWNING, Farringdon, Berkshire, nurseryman. J and W POOLE, South-street, Spitalfields, builders. J R WEST, Bedford-row, bookseller. R MOSELEY, Bangor, Carnarvonshire, victualler W SHARMAN, Holme, Manchester, butcher.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

J RUSSELL, Balquhatstone Colliery, Bannanock, coal-master J M GALBRAITH, Edinburgh, musicseller

BIRTHS.

At Allahabad, East Indies, the lady of Major Fenwick, H M 10th Foot, of a son.—The wife of Robert Thompson Crawfurd, Esq, of a daughter.—At 2, Lansdown-terrace, Cheltenham, the wife of Major Hastings Reid, late Captain 42d Royal Highlanders, of a daughter.—At the Rectory, Hertingfordbury, Herts, the wife of the Hon and Rev Godolphin Hastings, of a daughter.—At 20, Stratford-place, the wife of the Rev Thomas Dyke Acland, Rector of Broadwood Kester Gurds, of a son.—At the Rectory, Hope Mansell, Herefordshire, the wife of the Rev W Swift, of a daughter.—At the Vicarage, Great Waltham, Essex, the wife of the Rev James Hardwicke Dyer, of a son, still born

MARRIAGES.

At St Peter's Church, Pimlico, by the Rev Henry Hildyard, Charles Wilton Good, Esq, 8th Dragoon Guards, to Esther Sophia, third surviving daughter of the late Colonel Hildyard, of Hall, Yorkshire.—At Hull, county Notts, and Winestead, Yorkshire.—At the parish church of Ingleton, Sussex, the Rev William Steward Rockstro, M A, rector of Terwick, in the same county, to Louise, second daughter of S Sandeman, Esq, London.—At Byfleet, Surrey, the Rev William Calder, incumbent of the church of the Holy Trinity, Portsea, to Kate Sennett, youngest daughter of the late Henry Francis, Esq, of Minster-hill, Greenwich.—At St George's, Hanover-square, Edward Bengough Bengough, of Castle-street, Sussex, to Louisa, second daughter of Captain W B Deshwood, R N, of Lyndhurst, Hants.—At St Paul's Church, Bedford, Bedfordshire, Frederick Thomas Chamberlayne-Gosnell, only son of Digby Thomas Barnard Carpenter, of Hawks House, Sunbury, Esq, to Emma, second daughter of Thomas Barnard, Esq, of Bedford.—At Great Barrington, Gloucestershire, Charles Reynolds, Esq, to Alice Wilson Northwich, so Miles, eldest daughter of Robert Wrench, Esq, of Wiscbeam View, near Ryde.

DEATHS.

At his residence, South Lambeth, aged 81, Richard Brook, Esq, of the Poultry, Deputy of the Ward of Cheap, and senior member of the Corporation of the City of London.—At his house in Grosvenor-street, the Right Hon and Rev Lord Frederick Hamilton, D D, youngest son of Anne, fifth Duke of St Albon's.—At Boulogne-sur-Mer, in the 58th year of his age, Major Malcolm Nicholson, late of the Bengal Army.—John Dennis Brooke Esq, of the General Register-Office, somerset House aged 68.—At Brighton, Frances Isabella, second daughter of the late Francis Hardcastle, Esq, aged 56 At Stanhope, John Margey Peacock, [illegible] Tracy, [illegible] on Tuesday evening, the 16th, sudd[illegible] Hon Grace Liverpool, Lady Emily, eldest daughter of Captain Walker, of the ship Monarch.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

CHEAP EDITION OF "JANE EYRE."

In a few days will be published, in one vol. small post 8vo, price 6s in embossed cloth, the fourth edition of

JANE EYRE. By CURRER BELL, Author of "Shirley."

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill

This day is published,

MEMORIALS of the CASTLE of EDINBURGH. By JAMES GRANT, Author of "Memoirs of Rorkaldy of Grange," &c. With Twelve Illustrations. In small octavo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE BRITANNIA BRIDGE.

With a large Tourist's Map, and 1 handsome plate, price 8s,

THE BOOK of NORTH WALES. Scenery, Antiquities, Highways and Byways, Lakes, Streams, and Railways, with Notes on Mineralogy, Botany, and Geology. By CLIFF. Author of "A Month among Mountebanks, and Other Sketches," &c. Lately appeared, DEEP SEA SOUNDINGS. SHORE AND LONGMANS.

On the 30th inst. will be published (to be continued Monthly, with the Magazines), price 2d, or stamped, 3d,

THE HOUSEHOLD NARRATIVE of CURRENT EVENTS. Conducted by CHARLES DICKENS. Being a Monthly Supplement to "Household Words."

Offices, 16, Wellington-street North, Strand; where Prospectuses may be had, and all Booksellers.

Just Published, Third Edition, price 7s.

THE LITTLE ENGLISH FLORA; or, a Botanical and Popular Account of all our common Field Flowers, with Engravings on Steel of every species, and numerous Wood-Cuts. By G. W. FRANCIS, F.L.S.

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; Stationers'-hall-court. D. FRANCIS, 21, Rideout-road; and all Booksellers.

TAIT'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE for MAY, Price 1s., will be ready on the 30th inst., containing—

I. Party Dissolutions
II. The Canon of St. Paul's
(By the Author of "London Lyrics")
III. Savings-Banks
IV. The Letter to Napoleon
V. The Bath Dream
(By Francis Brown)
VI. Revolutionary Revelations
VII. The Maiden of Sorrento
VIII. The Rykilt's Daughter
(By Percy B. St. John)

Literary Notices, Political and Commercial Registers, &c.

Published by JAMES HOGG, 112, Princes-street; and by SUTHERLAND and KNOX, Edinburgh.

PAPER MODELS, GRATIS.—THE LONDON AND PARIS LADIES' MAGAZINE OF FASHION for MAY, price 1s., containing Paper Models, expressly from Paris, with an immense DOUBLE PLATE in addition to the usual Plates, showing the Costumes for Morning, Evening, Walking, and Dinner Dress. Cloaks, Bonnets, Caps, and Patterns; including the Instructions.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., and all booksellers.

On the 1st of May will be published, price 2s,

THE WHITE CHARGER, that cost me £200; but was Cheap at £70,000: drawn me from Society; overtaxed the Imperial Purse of my Friends, and finally compelled me to quit the Service. By the Author of "The Horse Guards," "The Days when we had Tails to our Coats," &c. With Two Coloured Illustrations, etched on Steel by ALFRED ASHLEY. "Opportunities make us known to ourselves and others."—SHAKSPEARE.

London: J. and D. A. DARLING, 126, Bishopsgate-street Within.

Second Edition.

LIFE and LETTERS of THOMAS CAMPBELL. Edited by WILLIAM BEATTIE, Esq., M.D. (one of his executors). With a Portrait of Campbell, after a Painting by Sir THOMAS LAWRENCE, a fac-simile of the Poet's last writing, and an Engraving of the proposed Monument in Westminster Abbey. In 3 vols. (Vols. I. and II. ready), 21s.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Athenæum.

"Dr. BEATTIE has done his work well."—Spectator.

"Dr. BEATTIE has performed his task with great skill."—Examiner.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Britannia.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Morning Chronicle.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Morning Herald.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Morning Post.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—Morning Advertiser.

"Dr. BEATTIE has executed his task with great skill."—*Morning Star

DEATH OF THE POET WORDSWORTH.

It is with feelings of deep and sincer regret that we announce the death of William Wordsworth, one of the last and most illustrious of a race of poets now all but extinct. The melancholy event, which had long been expected, occurred at noon on Tuesday, the 23rd instant, at the poet's residence, in Westmoreland, upon the shores of that lovely lake, which, by association with so many poetic reminiscences, has already acquired a classic fame.

Full of years and of honours, the venerable bard has passed from amongst us to rejoin his illustrious friends and contemporaries, Coleridge and Southey. We have no wish, now that the tomb is about to receive his mortal remains, to submit to the cold analysis of criticism the inspirations of his genius. In the full est and noblest sense of the word, he was a poet. Like his writings, his life was blameless, and, meet ending of such a life, his death was calm and happy.

William Wordsworth was born in 1770, of a respectable family, at Cockermouth, in Cumberland. His early education he received at the Grammar-School of Hawkshead, where he evinced peculiar taste for classical studies, and was remarkable for his thoughtful disposition and poetic genius. In 1783 he made his first attempt in verse, and in 1787 was removed to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in Arts. In 1793, he published a poetical account of a pedestrian tour on the Continent, entitled "Descriptive Sketches in Verse;" in 1798 he gave to the world the first volume of his ballads, followed, in 1807, by the second volume; and, in 1809, he issued his only prose production—an essay concerning the relations of Great Britain, Spain, and Portugal to each other. In 1814 appeared his most celebrated work, "The Excursion;" and in 1815, "The White Doe of Rylstone." In addition, he was the author of many exquisite sonnets and minor poems.

Wordsworth married, in 1803, Miss Mary Hutchinson, of Penrith, and settled at Grasmere, in Westmoreland. At the death of Southey, he succeeded to the office of Poet Laureate; but William Wordsworth needed no such Court distinction or decoration. "His name" (we quote from an eloquent tribute in the Times) "will live in English literature, and his funeral song be uttered amidst the spots which he has so often celebrated, and by the rivers and hills which inspired his verse."

We annex a View of the picturesque retreat of the lamented poet, at Rydal Mount, between Ambleside and Keswick, a place which, as Dr. Mackay, in his "Scenery and Poetry of the English Lakes," well observes, "long has been, and ever must be a classic spot, unless the day should come when English literature shall be forgotten." And in his late visit to the Laureate, Dr. Mackay further says, "long and fervently did I admire the beauty of the scene from the lawn before his window, and the calm philosophy and true love of nature that had led him to make choice of such a place, and keep himself in such happy and long seclusion from the busy world."

The Mount is, as Mrs. Hemans describes, "a lovely cottage-like building, almost hidden by a profusion of roses and ivy;" and the view from the grassy mound in front of his house is very fine. Loughrigg Fell is seen immediately in front, with Nab Scar rising behind. There are several terraces at the back, from which the view becomes beautifully extended, overlooking the house, Windermere, as well as Rydal Water and Grasmere, is to be seen from the beautiful spot.

Our Artist's view is taken from the grounds in the rear of the house.

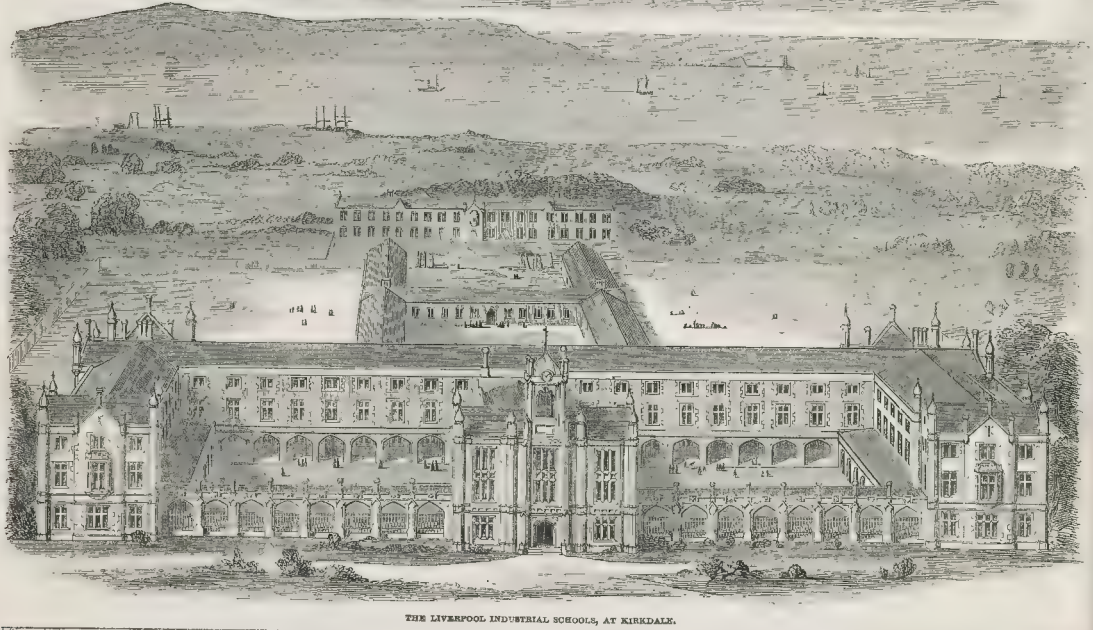
A portrait of Wordsworth appeared in No. 50 of our Journal.

RYDAL MOUNT, THE RESIDENCE OF MR. WORDSWORTH, FROM AN ORIGINAL DRAWING.

THE LIVERPOOL INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS AT KIRKDALE.

The erection of this handsome and spacious building, situated in Booth-lane, Kirkdale, near Liverpool, was commenced in June, 1843, and completed at a cost of upwards of £32,000. The style is Elizabethan, and the building (from the design of Messrs Lockwood and Allom, of London) is considered one of the principal architectural ornaments of the vicinity of Liverpool. The whole cost of the erection was borne by the parish. It was found, or some years prior to its establishment, that the juvenile pauperism of Liverpool was so largely on the increase as to be incapable of being accommodated in the workhouse. It was accordingly determined, after long and anxious debates in the vestry, that Schools should be erected at some short distance from the town, where the young children thrown upon the parish should be located apart from the adult paupers, and instructed, not only in the elements of a plain education—reading, writing, and arithmetic—and in their religious duties, but in the most common and useful trades. The institution was opened May 1, 1845, and commenced with 300 to 400 scholars: at present it contains 1123 children, of whom 640 are boys, and 483 girls: the number is limited to 1150. The annual cost to the parish for their support and education is £10,483 1s. 9d. The result of this experiment has been highly favourable in extending education among the destitute children of the town; but it has not been to relieve, as was intended, the workhouse from an overflow of juvenile pauperism. The workhouse still contains upwards of three hundred children, which is almost as many as it did before the Industrial Schools were founded. The trades which the boys are taught are tailoring, shoemaking, and carpentering. The girls are instructed in knitting and needlework, in washing, ironing, mangling, cooking, and general household work, to qualify them for domestic servants. For such of the boys as exhibit an inclination to go to sea, instruction is also provided. A ship has been erected on a portion of the grounds, where an old sailor teaches the aspirants for a maritime life the work required of young sailors on their first few voyages—everything, in fact, except steering, and such other matters as can only be performed upon the water. The boys generally seem to consider it a privilege to learn to be sailors; and many of them, under the tuition thus acquired, have been qualified for, and have obtained, good situations on board ship. No compulsion is exercised upon them as to the trade which they shall learn. It is found, that, next to the sea, the tailoring business is the most popular among them. On the day of our visit we were introduced to an assemblage of about forty young tailors, sitting cross-legged, in the approved fashion, and all being engaged, under the superintendence of a foreman, in mending clothes for the whole establishment. Their labour is not sufficiently skilled or valuable to be employed in making their own garments. The labour of the female part of the establishment is turned to greater account; and the girls not only mend, but make, the shirts and other articles required in the schools. What effect the annual training of so many tailors and sempstresses at the public expense may have in future upon the slop trade of the town, we shall not inquire; although there are not wanting many who assert that its inevitable tendency is still further to overstock a labour market, so cruelly overstocked already as not to afford a bare subsistence to men and women who labour for eighteen hours a day. The establishment, however, is admirably conducted, and is a model of order and cleanliness. The boys have an excellent band, and have made such proficiency in music as to be able to perform several favourite airs and other pieces in a very creditable manner. The schools offer so many advantages to poor children, that it has become an object of ambition among many people, who are not paupers, to get their children introduced into it. This is an ambition, however, which the parish finds it essential to thwart, under the penalty of being overwhelmed with claimants, and of being justly charged with offering a premium upon parental neglect. Mr. Rushton, the able and humane stipendiary magistrate of Liverpool, in a very valuable letter addressed to the Town-Council, on the 28th of February last, upon the question of juvenile crime in the town, gives his cordial approbation to the Industrial Schools, and states that "he knows of no institution which has done more good —whether that good be estimated by the blessings it has conferred upon the inmates, or by the evil it has prevented to the community." Mr. Rushton, than whom no man has had more practical experience of the evils which he wishes to remove, cites in his letter the case of 14 juvenile criminals, whose prosecution and maintenance in prison cost the parish, at successive times, no less a sum than £889 1s., independently altogether of the amount of their depredations upon the public when out of prison: and earnestly urges upon the attention of the Town-Council the expediency and the policy of going to the root of juvenile crime, and preventing it, by means of education, which will be in every respect a better, and what to some minds may be a very important consideration, a cheaper process. Mr. Rushton says: "By the 3d and 4th Victoria, cap. 90, the Lord Chancellor of England may assign the persons of all children convicted of felony to the custody of any persons who are willing to take charge of them, until they are twenty-one years of age. Now, if the Select Vestry of Liverpool will appropriate a department of the schools at Kirkdale to the reception of children of this description, and if the Corporation will join in the plan, we shall take the first step in the right direction in dealing with crime. If this plan were adopted, I should send the children whose history I have detailed to you, for trial. When the jury found them guilty, and the conviction was recorded by the consent of the learned Recorder, an application would be made to the Chancellor, and the children would be assigned to the care of the institution. I am convinced that the costs would not be more than those now incurred by the repeated convictions and imprisonment of juvenile offenders. If this plan, to the consideration of which I invite your serious attention, were adopted, the children detained would in the first instance be separated from the children in the Industrial Schools, and only transferred thither when the chaplain should approve. If a premium were offered for good conduct, and a moral impulse given to the children, the work of reformation would soon begin; for it must not be forgotten that the children who are criminals are amongst the most intelligent. A stupid child has neither quickness nor dexterity sufficient to make a profitable thief. What I propose to you is, that the Council and Select Vestry should nominate a committee to confer with the magistrates on this subject, and that a report should be made to each of those bodies. I shall, of course, be happy to give all the information in my power; and I feel hopeful of the result, if the Liverpool people will set about this work of mercy with a portion of that benevolent energy which they always show in the cause of humanity. If this plan should be adopted, and extended to other places, we should, in my opinion, in time, abate the anxiety respecting the disposal of our convicts; for we should, I hope, decrease the number of adult criminals."

The Town-Council have unanimously agreed to consider the proposition Mr. Rushton, and to hear further evidence upon the subject.



THE LIVERPOOL INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, AT KIRKDALE.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 98, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1850.

ROME MDCCCXLIX

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 424.—Vol. XVI.] SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1850. With Supplement, One Shilling.
VIEW OF ROME GRATIS.

STATE OF FRANCE.

The combat thickens in the French Republic. The Socialist and Ultra-Democratic candidate has been returned for the department of the Seine by a considerable majority; and the votes of the army show very clearly that the sympathies of the French soldiery are with the "Red," and not with the "Three-coloured" Republic. This fact is most important, and reveals a great and imminent danger, which France will find difficult to surmount; a danger which will tax the courage of her generals, the wisdom of her statesmen, the tact of her politicians, and all the virtue and patience of the friends of order and rational freedom to avoid.

The character of the struggle between M. Leclerc, the stationer, and M. Eugène Sue, the novelist, is well typified by the pursuits of each. M. Leclerc was put forward by the large party that represents material interests—the party that loves repose, that would rather have a mess of pottage and a full purse in slavery, than accept liberty with an empty till and an insufficient breakfast. The party represented by M. Eugène Sue is the hungry, clamorous, zealous, enthusiastic party of the dissatisfied multitude—a party that revels in crude theories of government, that dreams of social re-organisation, that has a wild and fanatical faith in human perfectability, and that would make the next generation a generation of angels, by the rather strange process of converting the present race into a race of demons. This party has in all recent appeals to the people shown itself the stronger. The capital is proved to be its fortress, and the soldiers to be its friends. What can be the result, except a new revolution?

The present Government seems, in this fearful crisis of affairs, to be repeating all the errors which signalised the last few months of the reigns of Charles X. and Louis Philippe. It is doing all in its power to goad the multitude into insurrection, and to set the whole of the reading and writing classes of French society against existing authority. The ancient proverb, "Quem Deus vult perdere, prius dementat," is as perpetual a novelty in our time as it was in the days of old. Louis Napoleon and M. Carlier exemplify its truth in a manner quite as remarkable as Louis Philippe and M. Guizot. They are marching to destruction, with their eyes shut. They refuse to open them, and ignore perils and deny their existence for no other reason than that they will not look at them. Their proceedings during the last three months have been of a kind to deprive them of the small merit of sanity. They disperse public meetings by the police; they violate every principle for which the last and the two preceding revolutions were accomplished; and they set at nought the Constitution, which is the only basis on which they themselves can repose in any security, and which is their sole title to the power they wield. They have outdone Charles X. in blindness and Louis Philippe in deafness; and have committed outrages against the first principles of a free constitution, at which M. Guizot, with all his courage, would have stood aghast. One of their last acts, immediately prior to the election which has just terminated, was to prohibit from being sold in the streets or in shops eight newspapers opposed to their proceedings. The Presse, the Charivari, the Démocratie Pacifique, the Estafette, the Evénement, the National, the Siècle, and the Voix du Peuple have been placed under the ban of the police, lest they should disseminate opinions in the excitable minds of the people and the army adverse to the present Government. Yet the Socialist candidate has gained the day; and, possibly, owes a portion of his majority to these very acts. We have but to imagine what a state our cooler and more sensible capital would be in if our Government thought fit to prohibit the sale of the Times, Punch, the Morning Chronicle, the Sun, &c., to realize to our minds the present condition of the effervescent and turbulent city of Paris. In fact, the two parties are in the field in battle array; and the final struggle for the mastery is a question of time only. The prudence of either may postpone it for awhile, but no prudence can ultimately prevent the battle from bursting forth, and the weaker from succumbing to the stronger.

The destinies of France are at all times in the hands of the army. At present, the representative of the name and fame of the Emperor does not seem as if he had preserved intact the popularity which won him his present position. If the army is to create a new Government for France, it is more probable that a real soldier, who has learned his business in the plains or fastnesses of Algeria, will vault into the high places of power, than that Louis Napoleon should be continued in his uneasy seat. Changarnier, Lamoricière, and Cavaignac—these are the men whose services will be required on one side or the other, in the contest; and who, either in the name of Louis Napoleon or in their own, will be the master spirits that shall rule the coming storm.

RETURN OF THE POPE TO ROME.—THE PROCESSION AT THE CHURCH OF SAN GIOVANNI.—(SEE PAGE 301.)

Whatever the result may be—whether in favour of the Socialist and ultra-Democratic party, or of any man who may emerge after the battle as the champion and representative of conservatism, order, and material well-being—it is clear that the army will long continue to be the sole prop of the Government. No Government whatever, be its hue red, white, or tri-colour, will be able to stand for a month without the aid of the bayonets of 500,000 men. It will then become the all-important question for the consideration of French statesmen and framers of constitutions whether society can exist in safety in a country where such a body of soldiers are privileged to give their votes in political matters. The principle of universal suffrage will have to be re-considered. Half a million of armed men, sprung from the ranks of the people, and destined, after a fixed period of service, to return to those ranks to earn their livelihood, are not a body to be wisely entrusted with political power. Half the number of disenfranchised soldiers with double pay, as a compensation for the loss of their votes, would be of far more service to the French nation. A voting soldiery will, in the long run, be inclined to vote with the multitude. If there were formerly any doubt upon the subject, the triumph of M. Sue is sufficient to remove it. What is to be the next act of the revolutionary drama, the world is anxious to know. The French themselves seem to imagine it will be a sanguinary one.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The election at Paris has ended in the return of the Socialist candidate, M. Eugène Sue. The balloting commenced on Sunday morning, and was concluded on Monday evening—the following being the numbers:—

For M. Eugène Sue	.. .. ..	128 071
For M. Leclerc	.. .. ..	119,626
Majority for M. Sue	.. ..	8345

The votes of the military natives of the department of the Seine were pretty equally divided between the two candidates, each numbering respectively—Sue, 6817; Leclerc, 6508. At first, on this disappointment of the hopes of the Conservative party becoming known, the friends of order were disposed to be discouraged; but a little reflection has shown them the utter weakness and folly of allowing themselves to despond merely because their candidate was beaten in an election contest. The re-establishment of good order does not rest on so feeble a foundation, as that they need alarm themselves at such a trifle.

As usual in Paris, all sorts of alarming rumours found ready circulation during the week; amongst others, that of an approaching modification of the ministry. The arbitrary conduct of the Prefect of Police, in preventing the sale of the Evénement and other journals, has had a contrary effect to that he had intended; for those proscribed papers are now more greedily sought after than before; while the Gazette de France, the Patrie, and the Moniteur du Soir, allowed to be vended by that functionary, have fallen considerably in circulation. The obnoxious proceeding of the Prefect is believed to have operated much in producing the unfavourable result of the Paris election; and at a Council held on Monday night, the Minister of Commerce proposed his dismissal; which, however, was overruled by the other members of the Cabinet.

The Archbishop of Paris has addressed a circular to the clergy of his diocese, informing them of the wish expressed by the Government to commemorate by a religious service the anniversary of the promulgation of the Republic, and directing that a "Te Deum" shall be performed on this day, Saturday, the 4th inst., in the churches.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—In the accounts from the Peninsula, the only news calling for notice comes from the capital of the Sovereign Pontiff, whose return to the "Eternal City" has restored all those unique and interesting characteristics which distinguish Rome from all the other metropolitan cities of the world.

His Holiness gave his solemn benediction to the French troops on the great Piazza of St. Peter's on the 18th ult. The Times correspondent gives the following sketch of the scene:—

> At the foot of the great staircase, or rather inclined plane leading to the front door of the church, a large handsome balcony had been erected; and at 4 P.M., 10 000 French troops formed themselves in excellent order from the obelisk to the church-gate, leaving an open space in the centre for the staff and military bands. It was a beautiful afternoon, and the couple-of-hours expectation, every spot and every cupola and wave-like roof of the knee ing on one knee, while the Castle of St. Angelo commenced a salute of twenty-one guns.
>
> The Pope, accompanied by Cardinals Antonelli and Della Genga, and surrounded by no different members of the Papal Court in their gorgeous dresses, advanced to the balcony, which was canopied with crimson velvet and cloth of gold. Those of your readers who have witnessed the with the grandeur of the ceremony of blessing the people on Easter Sunday from the front of the church, can form a slight idea of the scene presently; and as the Pope's voice, pronouncing the words, "Si nomen Domini benedictum," was heard distinctly at the most distant part of the Place; and when he stretched forth his hands, saying "Benedicat vos omnipotens Deus, Deus Jesus Christus," the whole vast concourse of the soldiers burst into tears. As soon as the benediction was concluded, the troops all defiled past in order, and saluted the Pope as they would have done the General at a review. The people had been all kept back from the steps of St. Peter's and from the great space in front of the balcony, but the instant the great body of troops began to move, they burst through the guard in resistless numbers, and rushed by thousands close under the balcony, waving handkerchiefs and crying "Viva il Santo Padre!"
>
> The enthusiasm of the whole army in favour of Pius IX. is unbounded. His first visit in Rome was to the two French hospitals, where his presence could hardly be prevented from leaving their beds to throw themselves before him. On the following day all the officers were presented by General Baraguay d'Hilliers, and, though it was optional to them to go, not one was absent.
>
> His Holiness made to the officers a brief and dignified address, suitable to the occasion.
>
> In the political world it was said that Cardinal Antonelli was preparing several measures for the better administration of affairs. The political tribunals had been abolished, and all trials not completed abandoned.
>
> The re-organization of the Papal army was being carried on with activity; the number of men in active service will be 12,000.
>
> Gen. Baraguay d'Hilliers is about to return to France.

GERMAN STATES.

The sham Parliament at Erfurt, which proposes to make a reality of the vision of German unity, was prorogued on the 29th ult., by a message addressed by the Administrative Council to both Houses, closing the present session. The message thanks the Parliament for the address it has passed with regard to the revision of the constitution, and promises to communicate the same to the different Governments. No day is mentioned for the resumption of its labours.

UNITED STATES.

We have accounts this week from New York to the 19th ult., which state that in the Senate at Washington, on the 17th, during a debate on the California and slavery question, a violent altercation occurred between Messrs. Benton and Foote, in the course of which Foote drew a pistol and aimed at Benton. Foote was immediately disarmed, and a committee of investigation appointed.

On the following day a resolution was passed in the Senate, referring the whole question of California and the territories to a committee of 13, to report a plan for compromise.

We learn from Washington, that the Nicaragua treaty, which was sent by Sir Henry Bulwer to Lord Palmerston about two months ago, has been returned to Washington with the approval of the British Government. The fact is said to have been communicated to the United States Government by Sir Henry, whereupon a cabinet council was held, and a slight modification was proposed. Sir Henry was requested to return the proposed amendment for the ratification of Lord Palmerston; but Sir Henry having produced plenary powers for the settlement of any such amendment as he may, on the part of the British Government, agree to, immediately confirmed and ratified the change, and the treaty was finally settled.

The cholera prevails to a rather fearful extent on the western and southern rivers, and at New Orleans. Out of 934 deaths in New Orleans the week before last, 144 were from cholera. The steamer Washington had recently two cholera deaths on board. Between New Orleans and Saint Louis, the Cincinnatus, to Louisville, lost ten passengers; and deaths on the Mississippi plantations have been numerous.

CANADA.

From Canada there is no political news of consequence.

A destructive flood has been experienced at Toronto, causing an unprecedented amount of damage to property in that city and vicinity. It commenced on the 3rd ult., the rain falling very heavily, and continuing without intermission through the whole night and the greater part of the next day. The snow and ice rapidly melted; the streams swelled to a fearful extent; the banks were overflowed, and everything that presented an obstacle to the violence of the current was swept away—mill-dams, bridges, houses, fences, lumber, trees, cattle were destroyed in an instant. The loss is enormous.

CALIFORNIA.

By the arrivals this week from the United States, we have news from San Francisco to March 1. These are more encouraging than any which have been received since the organisation of the State. The winter rains were over, and with them much of the sickness and destitution which have existed in some parts of the country. Communications were again opened between Sacramento city, Stockton, and the different mines, and the returns of the labours of those who spent the winter in gold diggings are beginning to flow down to the former places in the shape of big lumps and bushels of dust. Trade has again sprung up between San Francisco and the interior, and hopes in every quarter of a most active and prosperous season. The immigration of foreigners continues unabated, and trade with all the Pacific ports increases every month. With Sydney New South Wales, there is now regular monthly communication, and with Valparaiso, being a group of many lands. Great numbers of the Peruvians and Chilians, however, have taken their departure, and the arrivals from those countries have likewise sensibly diminished.

From Jan. 29th to Feb. 27th there arrived in San Francisco by sea 2183 passengers, of whom 147 were females. The amount of tonnage which arrived in the same period was 29,712; the total amount from April, 1849, to the latter date, 313,351.

San Francisco continues to improve with the same wonderful rapidity. It now boasts of three daily papers and two theatres, besides numbers of handsome brick dwellings. The merchants seem nowise deficient in the proper spirit of enterprise. At a meeting held for the formation of an independent Pacific Steam Ship Company, one million was at once voted, and 500,000 dollars subscribed towards it within two weeks. The capital is placed at 1,000,000 dollars. One of the San Francisco papers states that from January 1st to February 1st there were sent from the post-office in that city 67,000 letters and 5000 newspapers. Mr. Moore, the postmaster, is building a new post-office at his own expense.

All branches of enterprise have taken speedy root in the soil of California. Steam communication is now regularly established on all the navigable rivers, and it will not be long before the railroad and telegraph will bring her to a level with the Atlantic States. On February 1st a petition was presented to the Legislature for the incorporation of a magnetic telegraph company—the one to run from San Francisco to Jose, and thence to Stockton and Sacramento city.

Lieutenant Duer, U.S.A., proposes to build a marine telegraph to communicate with San Francisco from the sea, and asks of the city council 2000 dollars to begin the work.

The "floating population" is gradually drawing off; digging implements are taken up again, and the three regular steam-boats which leave San Francisco for the great point of destination, Sacramento city, are, on each of their trips, crowded with passengers for the gold diggings.

IRELAND.

ARRIVAL OF LORD CLOUGH.—The Right Hon. Lord Viscount Gough, G.C.B., arrived last week at Dublin, where he met with a most kind reception. A round of banquets in honour of his Lordship's visit to his native country are in preparation in Dublin, Limerick, and Clonmel. On Tuesday the noble Lord reviewed the garrison of Dublin in the Phœnix Park.

THE POST-OFFICE.—Mr. Godby, the head of the Post-Office in Ireland, has retired upon a pension, and is succeeded by Mr. G. Cornwall, Secretary to the Postmaster-General, who, it is said, will be succeeded by a Mr. Blake, of the county of Galway. Mr. T. O. Lees is also said to be about to retire, after a long period of service in the same department.

EMIGRATION.—The tide of emigration is getting more and more rapid, and scarcely can a vessel reach the western or southern shores ere she is chartered and crowded with the most respectable class of farmers, who are eager to seek in the land of strangers that reward for their industry which is denied them at home.

THE CROPS.—The crops in all parts of the country are described as progressing in a most prosperous manner, and the weather in all respects as favourable as could be wished.

THE POPE'S RETURN.—At the meeting of the Dublin Corporation, on Monday, the town-clerk read the conditional order recently granted in the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus to direct the Corporation to elect a Lord Mayor. Mr. Ferguson moved, "That, inasmuch as the cond tional order granted by the Court of Queen's Bench, directs the Corporation to show cause within six days why a mandamus should not issue directing the council to proceed to the election of a Lord Mayor—Resolved, that our solicitor be directed to take necessary steps to show cause against that conditional order." Alderman Keshan seconded the motion, which was carried by a majority of 20 to 5.

MYSTERIOUS ROBBERY AND MURDER.

On Sunday last, between one and two o'clock, a rumour rapidly spread throughout that part of the parish of Clapham lying near to the Wandsworth-road, that a murder and robbery had taken place that morning, during the hours of Divine service, at the house of Mr. John Maddle, Claremont-place, Wandsworth-road, and that the person murdered was that gentleman's housekeeper.

At a few minutes to 11 o'clock, Mr. Maddle, who is unmarried, and had but one servant (the deceased), left his house to attend Divine service at Clapham church. Mr. Maddle returned shortly after one o'clock, and ringing the bell at the gate several times without finding he could make no one hear, went round to the garden gate, which, to his surprise, was unfastened. He went in. The wash-house door was open, as also the back-kitchen, and it was almost purgatory to the housekeeper lying on her back in the front kitchen, her legs extending over the threshold of the door, and her head lying towards the French windows that open into the area in front of the house. Mr. Maddle did not, at first, see that her throat was cut; that life was extinct, rushed out and alarmed the neighbourhood. For some time so horrified were the neighbours, that none of them, though earnestly appealed to by Mr. Maddle, would go into the house. Mr. Maddle, on his return, found the body as he had found the deceased lying as stated, but under most extraordinary circumstances. Her right leg was partly drawn up under the body; and, entangling the foot, which was without a shoe, was a piece of rope used in hanging clothes, and other parts of the body were cold. The rope was in a slip knot. Portion of feathers, as he was observed, any marks of personal violence. The eyes were closed, as if in sleep; and, but for the ghastly expression of the face, it could hardly have been imagined but she slept.

The police were very considerate in this case, as also Mr. Parrott, jun., the surgeon to the police force, who examined the body, and pronounced life to have been extinct some time. He could detect no outward marks of violence, nor was there any forcible entry into the premises, in which the housekeeper kept her money, was emptied of its contents. A very great deal more labour appeared to have been expended in opening the various drawers, &c., than would have been used by an expert thief.

The police are active in their search after four men who are suspected of being the criminals; and there is very little doubt, from their being well known to the police, that they will soon be apprehended.

It is thought, from all the circumstances attending the outrage, that the perpetrators of it used chloroform to render the female inmate he while they plundered the house; but it is supposed, that, unfortunately for their victim, they gave more than she could bear, and caused death.

An inquest, which was commenced on Monday, has been adjourned to Monday next, to admit of fuller inquiry.

EXPLOSION OF POWDER-MILLS.—On Friday week an explosion took place at the Liskeard powder-mills, by which catastrophe two lives have been sacrificed, and a considerable amount of property destroyed.

FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY.—On Tuesday last, a series of murders was perpetrated near Stafford, by a man named Yarker, head game-keeper to Earl Talbot. Yarker had, for some months past, entertained considerable eccentricity of manner, and a few weeks ago, it is said, attempted to drown himself. On Tuesday night he must have been actuated by some sudden and unaccountable fit of malignity or insanity. Between six and seven o'clock he shot one of the under-keepers in an alcove in the grounds of Ingestre. He then proceeded homewards, and, having despatched in a similar way a servant girl in the kitchen, he went up-stairs and shot his wife, and completed the tragedy, as stated above, by shooting himself. The horror which these sad occurrences have created in the neighbourhood is, as may be concluded, very great. It is said that Yarker was dissatisfied with arrangements recently made upon the estate, and that feelings of irritation produced aberration of mind, under the influence of which he committed those dreadful acts.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION, BROMPTON.—Among the many praiseworthy efforts now being made on behalf of the rapidly progressing consumption, it was determined, at the recent meeting of the board of management, that the eighth anniversary dinner should take place at the Albion Tavern, in Aldersgate-street, in June next, on which occasion Lord Feversham has kindly consented to preside.

SELF-DEFENCE.—A statuette, 14 inches high, of Mr. H. T. Harrison, teacher of the Art, has just been issued from Green's Gymnasium, in Leicester-square. It is cleverly modelled, and the position of the athlete is admirably shown.

LYMINGTON ELECTION.—On Monday, the nomination took place in the Town-hall. The show of hands was declared to be in favour of Mr. Hutchins, the Liberal candidate, and a poll was demanded by the friends of Mr. Stewart, which commenced at 8 o'clock on Tuesday morning, and closed at 4 P.M. Mr. Stewart resigned at 3 o'clock, having only polled 103, while Mr. Hutchins had polled 161. He was therefore declared by the M.P. for the borough.

ENGLISH ARTIZANS.—A school for the improvement of the English artizan, in order to the better national competition of our workmen with the foreigner at the forthcoming Exhibition, 1851, was opened on Wednesday evening, under the title of the "Birkbeck Institution," St. Mary's-terrace, Highstreet, Camden-town, on which occasion an introductory address was spoken by Mr. W. Gave Thomas, in which English artizans were earnestly called upon to avail themselves of the opportunities there afforded to them, which are the same as they have already gained for their mechanical skill. The expediency, and, perhaps, the necessity of a school, where drawing and modelling shall be taught, is not now to be questioned. German and French workmen have, it is confessed, at present the advantage; but there is nothing in the English character, intellect, or habits, to prevent our native operative and handicraftsman from successfully competing with their skill. Means of study once provided, the course will be clear to individual improvement, and British enterprise will do the rest. This we are justified in predicting from past experience, and we trust that the school this opened will promote the object in view, and also serve as an example for all other localities in other neighbourhoods.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Their Lordships sat for a short time.

On the motion of Earl GREY, the West India Appeals Bill was read a second time.

The Duke of ARGYLL laid on the table of the House a bill for the alteration of the law in reference to fisheries in Ireland. He said he would not take the opinion of their Lordships upon the merits of that bill until it had circulated in Scotland.

The bill was then read a first time.

On the motion of the Marquis of BREADALBANE, the Titles of Religious Congregations (Scotland) Bill was reported and ordered to be read a third time.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

IMPRISONMENT OF COLOURED BRITISH SUBJECTS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. COCKBURN inquired of the Foreign Secretary if it were true, as stated in a police court the other day, that the state of Carolina was in the habit of seizing all men of colour arriving in vessels in the port of Charleston, and keeping them in prison till the departure of such vessels—a practice opposed to the spirit of the law of nations, and in direct opposition to the principles established between civilised countries. Also, whether her Majesty's Government had made any efforts with the Government of the United States to protect British subjects, whether black or white, from any such interference with their liberty.

Lord PALMERSTON replied that the subject had been brought under the attention of the British Government several years ago. In the state of Carolina, and he believed of Louisiana, there was a law by which all free persons of colour were taken out of the vessels they arrived in, and detained in prison so long as the vessels in which they came remained there. While he was applicable to the citizens of the United States equally with the subjects of other countries. In 1847 her Majesty's Government directed our Minister at Washington to make representations on this matter, and to declare that the practice was at variance with the first article of our treaty with the United States of 1815. The answer verbally made was, that the Federal Government had no power to induce the Legislature of the State of Carolina to repeal the law; and that if the British Government insisted on the right founded on the article in the treaty of 1815, the Government of the United States would find the question so difficult to deal with, that they would be obliged to take advantage of a stipulation in the treaty, and give notice of their intention to put an end to it. Her Majesty's Government did not think it expedient, under the circumstances, to insist then on their right. It was unnecessary for him (Lord Palmerston) to express his opinion of the practice; but wherever might be thought of the law of Carolina, its existence was a matter of full notoriety.

NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.

To a question from Mr. B. Osborne, Mr. GREENE stated that the differences between the architect of the New Houses of Parliament and the person who had charge of the ventilation continued, and that all the efforts of the committee had been ineffectual in reconciling them. He was aware that an action for defamation was about to be commenced by Mr. Barry against Dr. Reid.

Mr. J. Gordon inquired to notice that he would on an early day draw attention to these squabbles, with the view of getting rid of both Mr. Barry and Dr. Reid.

SAVINGS-BANKS.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Law relating to Savings-banks. The right hon. gentleman traced the history of savings-banks from their formation, about forty years ago, by a few benevolent individuals, to the present time, when the sums accumulated in them amounted to £28,000,000. After remarking on the fact that the benevolent impulses that had set these institutions in action had proved insufficient to regulate and control them in their full development, Sir C. Wood proceeded to review the acts that had passed from 1817 to 1844, for their regulation, and to describe the nature and provisions of the measure he had prepared. His bill, he said, was entirely prospective; and, as it was his intention to move for the re-appointment of the committee of last year, he requested hon. members to postpone discussing past transactions and the recent defalcations, and to confine their attention to future legislation. He proposed, by his bill, to enable the Commissioners of the National Debt to appoint paid treasurers to the savings-banks, through whose hands the whole of the receipts and payments should go. This power he considered necessary as a condition for the Government assuming the responsibility of being answerable for all deposits. He proposed also to empower the commissioners to send down inspectors to such banks as in their judgment required that course. He proposed that, should any officer, other than the treasurer or his clerk, receive more than £50 at any one time, he should be held guilty of a misdemeanor. All sums deposited should be returned in full, but the amount of deposit would be limited to £100, though facilities would be given to invest such as £50 deposits. The annual loss of interest which would arise from the proposed reduction in the rate of interest was £3 8s. to £3 per cent, and reduce the interest to be paid to depositors from £2 18s. 4d. to £2 15s. per cent. The right hon. gentleman explained at length the details of his bill, a portion of which was applicable to Ireland.

Mr. Hume, Sir H. Willoughby, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Fagan, and Mr. Gregan insisted that the Government were responsible morally, if not legally, for the past defalcations in savings-banks, and expressed their regret that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had given no intimation of his intention to propose to Parliament to make good the losses suffered by depositors who had lodged their money in the full belief that they had the national security.

Mr. Hume, Sir J. Johnstone, Sir H. Verney, Mr. Bankes, and Col. Thompson urged on the Government the necessity of rendering some assistance to those persons who had been defrauded by defaulters both in England and Ireland.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, in reply, stated that it was the intentions of the Government relative to the sufferers from defalcations, it would be necessary to re-appoint the committee of last year and wait for their report.

Leave was given to bring in the bill.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Sir GEORGE GREY moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill, the principle and provisions of which he shortly explained. It was made in accordance with the recommendation of the committee appointed in 1847 and 1848, and by it it was proposed to establish a small committee of the Ecclesiastical Commission for the management of the property, to be called the Church Estates Committee. It was proposed that this Estates Committee should consist of three commissioners, two to be appointed by the Crown, and one to be appointed by the Archbishop; two only of the Commissioners to be paid, viz. one of those to be appointed by the Crown, with a salary of £1200, and the one to be appointed by the Archbishop, with a salary of £1000. It was proposed that these three commissioners should be necessary and permanent, as a distinct portion of the Ecclesiastical Commission, the large body of the commission being retained for the general business of the commission unconnected with property. The right hon. gentleman gave notice of his intention to move cases in committee with reference to the union of the episcopal and common funds, and to the salaries and residence of deans.

Mr. HORSMAN condemned the bill as a bad one, conceived in a bad spirit, and quite incapable of effecting the objects it professed to have in view. The Ecclesiastical Commission was too numerous for business, consisting of forty-nine persons, yet it was proposed to add three more to the body. Want of responsibility was the prevailing defect of the commission; yet, by the plan of two paid commissioners, this very want would be perpetuated in a more ingenious way than before. In his (Mr. Horsman's) opinion, the three commissioners ought to be paid, if the public were to have the property properly managed by responsible agents. In his judgment, too, the Bishops should be altogether excluded from the commission, because its business was purely secular, and ecclesiastics had no right to the members of it. The hon. member, in a long and laboured speech, inveighed against the bench of Bishops, and accused them of sacrificing their spiritual duties to temporal and personal objects.

Mr. GOULBURN rebuked the hon. member for repeating the vituperations against the episcopal bench which he had so often, on previous occasions, uttered. With respect to the bill, the right hon. gentleman said he did not think there could be any objection to affirm its principle, whatever exceptions might be taken to some of its details. He lamented Mr. Horsman with being a disappointed man, who, because he was no longer a Lord of the Treasury or something higher, revenged himself by making repeated assaults upon the episcopal character.

Mr. B. OSBORNE took up the defence of Mr. Horsman, and retorted upon Mr. Goulburn by describing him as an old tea kettle, which was ever found tied to the tail of every bill for the relief of Roman Catholics, and rattling one day against Catholic Emancipation, and another day for it; one day against Free-Trade, and another for it.

Sir R. INGLIS deprecated the use of such language by Mr. B. Osborne in that House, and particularly its application to one who was his superior in station, in learning, and in talents.

Mr. B. DENISON and Lord J. RUSSELL made a few observations on the details of the bill.

Sir B. HALL moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. S. HERBERT objected to the adjournment, especially after the turn the debate had taken. The right hon. gentleman had given notice of his intention to move in committee to extend the principle to be proposed by Sir G. Grey, and to declare that in no case should deans or canons, or minor canons, be permitted to hold a cure of souls out of the cathedral city in which they shall reside.

Mr. HORSMAN challenged Mr. Goulburn to explain his insinuation, and to state what office he (Mr. Horsman) had been a candidate for.

Mr. GOULBURN admitted that he had, in the heat of the debate, foolishly alluded to a rumour that Mr. Horsman had sought for office, and, having been disappointed in obtaining it, had taken the course he had since pursued in ecclesiastical affairs.

Sir B. HALL withdrew his motion for adjournment, and the bill was read a second time Adjourned at twenty minutes past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Process and Practice (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

The West India Appeals Bill was further considered in committee.

The Tithes of Religious Congregations (Scotland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

On the motion of the Marquis of WESTMEATH, correspondence relative to the expenditure of pluralist offices, under Mr. Labouchere's letter, in the county of Westmeath, was ordered to be produced, after a short conversation.

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, the Pirates (Read Money (Repeal) Bill was reported.—Adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

EVICTIONS OF TENANTRY.—IRELAND.

Mr P. SCRIPE asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he was aware that a vast number of ejectment decrees had been recently served on a single estate in the county of Galway, whereby several thousand persons are liable to be in one day forced from the r homes, and their houses levelled; that in that and several other counties of Ireland evictions and house levellings on a summary wholesale scale have been for some time past, and are still, going on; and to ask if the opinion of the law officers of the Crown has been taken as to whether such proceedings, whereby large bodies of her Majesty's subjects are at once deprived of shelter and livelihood, and many (as may be easily proved) of life, be not illegal, and a high crime and misdemeanour by the ancient common law of the realm.

Lord J. RUSSELL had no official information as to the extent of the evictions, and the Irish papers differed very much upon the subject. Without such information he could not answer a question to the law officers, and, indeed, conceived such a question must be very difficult to put. (Hear.)

PARLIAMENTARY OATHS.

Mr. WOOD asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to propose any measure, during the present session, with reference to the oaths now administered to members on taking their seats in the House?

Lord J. RUSSELL said that it was the intention of Government to propose such a measure, and as hoped the state of public business would allow him to do so at an early opportunity.

ECCLESIASTICAL PATRONAGE.

Sir B. HALL interrogated the First Minister relative to the alleged nomination, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, of his nephew to the reversion of the sinecure office of Registrar of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. The noble Baronet said that he found the office was worth £12 000 per annum, and that Mr. Moore, the present holder, was in the receipt, between it and other ecclesiastical preferments, of £14 000 per annum. It had been usual for the Archbishop to nominate two persons to the reversion, but the late Archbishop Howley had, from conscientious motives, not nominated to the second reversion when it became vacant; however, Dr. Sumner had, since his succession to the archbishopric, nominated his son. Sir B. Hall inquired if the Government intended to revise these appointments, and if the person nominated to the reversion of this sinecure office would be entitled to compensation?

Lord J. RUSSELL replied that the present possessor of the office, Mr. Moore, had been appointed by Archbishop Moore; and the next in reversion, the present Lord Canterbury, had been nominated by Archbishop Manners Sutton. The late Archbishop Howley had refused to nominate to the second reversion, but the present Archbishop had given it to his son, a young gentleman studying at the Temple. This office of Registrar of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury was, with other offices, undergoing inquiry by the select committee of the House, and it should either be abolished or greatly modified, and, by a clause in the Act of Parliament, the young gentleman just appointed by Archbishop Sumner would have no claim for compensation. (This last announcement was received with loud cheers.)

REDUCTION OF OFFICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. HENLEY moved for an address to the Crown, praying her Majesty to direct a careful revision of the salaries and wages paid in every department of the public service, with a view to a just and adequate reduction thereof, due regard being had to the efficient performance of the several duties. He said that the subject had not been brought forward since 1821, when a revision similar to that he proposed had taken place. The necessity of a reduction at the present time was sufficiently proved by the fact that the Government themselves had within the last few years subjected more than one branch of the public service to investigation. Hitherto the reductions made in salaries applied to inferior officers, leaving higher employments untouched. The honourable member referred to upon pensions and diplomatic services, and to sinecures requiring revision, and he maintained that the price of corn ought to be the standard for the regulation of all salaries in the home service. It was remarkable that the expense of the non-effective services and our departments exceeded the expense of the effective service. It was also worthy of note that the abolition of a great number of customs duties had not led to corresponding reduction in the cost of collection for the last three

NEW RAILWAY STATION IN TITHEBARN-STREET, LIVERPOOL.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

Haag throws rich evening effects over old Roman ruins; Mr. Callow delights in broken ships and solitary coasts; Mr. Bentley, as of old, in picturesque shores; and Mr. Jenkins in touches of domestic truth, and incidents that appeal direct to the better feelings of our nature.

Mr. Fielding's great work, in every sense of the word, is his "View of Ben Cruachan, looking over Loch Awe, Argyleshire," a noble landscape, treated with admirable skill. This is the largest of Mr. Fielding's forty contributions to the Exhibition. His other works exhibit all his intimate knowledge of landscape nature; some, indeed, in certain particulars, more truthfully than in the large picture to which we refer. His "Eddystone Lighthouse" shows how much he is at home in a squally sea. The picture, however, is not much to our taste.

The attractive picture of the Exhibition occupies the centre of the east wall—"The Rharem," by Mr. John F. Lewis. This is a marvelous picture; such as man love to linger around, but such as women, we observed, pass rapidly by. There is nothing in the picture, indeed, to offend the finest female delicacy; it is all purity of appearance; but, at the same time, it exhibits woman, to a woman's mind, in her least attractive qualities. A female slave, of exquisite symmetry, and of beauty too (in the Eastern notion of the term), is brought into the kharem, and the heavy drapery in which she was wrapped has just been removed by a female attendant. What a scene is now before her! The lord of the seraglio is seen seated, and surrounded by his women, who lie in Eastern repose at his feet. Wherever the eye rests all is Oriental luxury and ease: flowers and fruit and rich dresses lend fresh variety and colour to the scene. How gracefully, how modestly she stands, while surveyed by the lord and ladies of the kharem; and how unconscious she is of the laughter of the black attendants of the palace. The rich, full lazy eyes of the ladies are exquisitely caught; indeed, the whole treatment is such, that the only regret we have to feel in leaving Mr. Lewis's picture, is that a work of so much merit should not have been painted in a material more durable than water-colours.

In criticising an exhibition of the character which the old Water-Colour Society annually sets forth, there are few points on which the critic can seize that the reader will care to have set before him. General descriptions are therefore better, on most occasions, than detailed notices, which seldom satisfy the critic, the reader, or the artist. We shall, therefore, confine whatever we have further to observe on the Exhibition to those pictures that arrest and most deserve the attention of the visitor. These are:—No. 10. "Palais Ducal et Petite Place sur le Mole, Venice," by Prout. No. 14. "Mountain Scene on the River Ese, North Wales," by Bentley. No. 20. "Gallery at Aston Hall, Warwickshire," by Joseph Nash. No. 24. "Summer," by D. Cox. No. 31. "Highland Pastime," by Topham. No. 38. "Changing the Pasture," by D Cox. No. 44. "Interior of the Hall at Speke, Lancashire." No. 48. "Mountain Scene, Snowdon—taken from Tremadoc," by Bentley. "Pont de Rialto, Venice," by Prout. No. 56. "Guildford, from the Banks of the Wey," by D. Cox, jun. No. 59. "A Group of Pilgrims in sight of St. Peter's, Rome," by Carl Haag. No. 66. "View of Ben Cruachan," by Copley Fielding. No. 77. "Wreck, St. Hillier's Bay," by John Callow No. 87. "Remains of the Temple of La Fortuna Capitolina," by Carl Haag. No. 100. "Return from the Hills—Glen Tilt from Ben-y-Gloe," by W. Evans. No. 105. "View in the Vale of Irthing, Cumberland," by Copley Fielding. No. 125. "Home," by Topham. No. 13. "The Return," by Topham. No. 152. "The Water Tower, Kenilworth Castle," by De Cox. No. 160. "Banquet given by Cardinal Wolsey to the French and Spanish Ambassadors at Hampton Court Palace," by Joseph Nash. No. 165. "Hare, Woodpigeon, &c.," by W. Hunt. No. 190. "The Angel's Whisper," by Joseph J. Jenkins. No. 198. "Lincoln Minster, from the S.W.," by Mackenzie. No. 201. "Hever Castle," by D. Cox, jun. No. 207. "Shipping, &c., on the Thames," by William Callow. No. 213. "Bellaggio, Lago di Como," by T. M. Richardson. No. 240. "A Jug of Roses," by W Hunt. No. 258. "St. Valentine's Day," by O. Oakley. No. 275. "Primroses," by W. Hunt; and No. 330. "Scene from Woodstock—Sir Henry Lee and his daughter joining in the church service at the Keeper's Lodge," by Cattermole. Of these, the larger number are marked as "sold." A really good picture is rarely, if ever, suffered to pass from an exhibition without a purchaser.

We have engraved Mr. Haag's beautiful picture, No. 59, "A Group of Pilgrims in sight of St. Peter's, Rome," which has an especial interest in connexion with the majority of the Illustrations in our present Number. Mr. Haag's painting is a finely characteristic production.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.—NO. 59.—"A GROUP OF PILGRIMS IN SIGHT OF ST. PETER'S, ROME.'—PAINTED BY CARL HAAG.

CATTLE-DROVERS.

ROMAN WINE CART.

SKETCHES IN ROME.

THE Engravings on this page illustrate some highly characteristic phases of Roman life, and three of them are sketches of incidents connected with the Pope's return to his capital. Amongst the picturesque groups of peasantry who thronged into the small towns on his route near the frontier, to welcome his Holiness in his progress from Naples, the most conspicuous were the cattle-drovers of the Campagna. Their unique appearance has been caught with happy fidelity by our Artist at present in the Eternal City, who also depicts a group still more "Roman" in the "Ecclesiastics," discussing in the PIAZZA DI CAMPIDAGLIO, on the morning of the 13th ult., the all-important topic of the reinstalment of their Sovereign-Pontiff in his temporal dominions on the preceding day. The pleased looks of congratulation which their countenances exhibit, are pretty indicative of their satisfaction at the prospect of the restoration of the ecclesiastical régime.

The third Scene represents the form which the general rejoicement of "the sons of the church" assumed in the convents of the city, viz. the giving of an extra allowance of soup to the poor, who are fed at the principal convents every day at noon. The one selected for illustration is that of the Franciscan Convent attached to the Church of ARA COELI, on the Capitol.

In the "Wine Carts" is shown the peculiarly uncouth and primitive style of conveyance adopted by the Wine Growers of the Romagna to forward their produce to Rome. At the close of the vintage season long lines of these rude carts are to be seen entering the city, carrying enormous quantities of Orvieto, the wine so much prized by the middle-class Romans.

The appearance of the peasant minstrels (The Pifferari), whose strains form the very simple, but heart-stirring "Christmas Carol" of Rome, is shown in the last Engraving. They are Calabrian shepherds, who come down from their highland homes at Christmas, and on their national instruments, a sort of small clarionet and a hautboy, perform their wild but harmonious native airs, before the various representations of the Madonna and Child which are scattered in every direction through the city. They generally remain in Rome from ten days to a fortnight; after which they disappear, and are no more seen until the return of the great festive season of all Christians, when their presence is expected by the Romans with as much certainty as the recurrence of Christmas Day itself.

ROME, April 13, 1850.

The arrival of the Pope, so often promised, so often adjourned, at length took place yesterday, the 12th, at 4 P.M. The day had been very gloomy, and the sky overcast, with a strong sirocco wind raising clouds of dust, and threatening rain at intervals—in fact, by no means auspicious weather for the ceremony. His Holiness started from Velletri at 8 A.M., accompanied by Cardinals Asquini, Dupont, and Antonelli. Arriving at Cecnano at 9 A.M., he alighted at the church, where, having received the sacrament, he gave his benediction to the assembled population. At this place he dismissed, with his benediction, the Neapolitan troops who had escorted him thus far, and then blessed the French detachment which had been despatched to that town to accompany him into Rome. Thence proceeding to Ariccia, he performed the same ceremonies as at Cecnano: at both these places he is said to have been received with much enthusiasm on the part of the population. Albano, he reached at ten; alighted at the Cathedral; again received the benediction of the Blessed Sacrament; and blessed the people from a balcony attached to the church. A splendid entertainment had been prepared for him at the episcopal residence, of which he condescended to partake. Resuming his journey at 2 P.M., he arrived at the Gate of St. John precisely at four, where he was received with repeated salvos of artillery from several pieces of cannon planted just within the walls, but with very little, or indeed no, acclamations from the immense multitude of spectators collected in the vast square before the Lateran. These were principally of the very lowest order: many carriages, indeed, were present, but chiefly filled with foreigners, among whom Americans and English, as may be supposed, greatly preponderated. The harsh manner in which the Pontifical dragoons performed their duty in clearing the road for the approaching train, riding among the spectators and chasing them off with an official insolence, happily here far from common, contributed, no doubt, in some measure, to prevent any manifestation of a return of loyal feeling which might otherwise have arisen in the minds of those present. However, no accidents occurred, although the trees were ready to break with the crowds of boys who had climbed into them to get a view of the scene. The pickpockets, too, with whom Rome now swarms—principally importations from Naples—were busy in the exercise of their vocation.

MONKS OF THE CONVENT OF ARA COELI GIVING SOUP TO THE POOR.

His Holiness, on his arrival at the sight of steps leading to the Lateran, was received by Cardinal Barberini, Arch-priest of the Basilica, attended by the whole Chapter, who opened the bronze gates of the church at his approach. Then the Municipal Commission of Rome presented him with the keys of the City—their President accompanying this act of homage by a speech, to which the Pope replied in affectionate terms. Alighting from his coach, he was received by the Cardinals of the Commission of State, and by the Cardinal Vicar, preceded by the Chapters, and all the regular and secular clergy of the capital. On his entrance into the vestibule, the several Foreign Ministers here resident presented their congratulations. His thence proceeded into the church, received the sacrament from the Cardinal Arch-priest, and paid his devotions at the shrine containing the skulls of the Apostles SS. Peter and Paul, which are preserved in silver cases upon the high altar. His Holiness had, on reaching the Basilica, quitted the plain travelling-carriage, a black and red vehicle, with the Papal arms on the panels, in which his journey had been performed, and now, on his exit from the Lateran, entered the splendid state coach, a construction richly overloaded with gold and paintings, and in which he always appears on occasions of ceremony. Thence his Holiness pursued his way to the Vatican, being preceded by bodies of French and Roman troops placed alternately, and a company of the Guard of Nobles; and followed by the French staff, his Guard of Nobles, a detachment of French dragoons, seven Cardinals, the Municipal Commission representing the Roman Senate, and the corps diplomatique. In the coach with him were his Maggior-domo and Chamberlain. On his right hand rode General Baraguay d'Hilliers, Commander-in-Chief of the French troops, and French Plenipotentiary to the Holy See; and on his left, Prince Altieri, Captain of the Guard of Nobles.

The procession moved on by the Colosseum, through the Forum of Trajan, and along the Strada Papali to St. Peter's. The houses along his route were generally adorned in the usual Italian manner, with pieces of red silk or cloth, called parati, suspended from the windows; and here, at length, acclamations were to be heard of greeting; but faint and few, if compared with the rapturous applause which two years ago used ever to attend his presence; they appeared caused rather by sympathy for the private character of the man, than by joy at the return of the Sovereign. At the gates of St. Peter's he was received by Cardinal Mattei and all the Chapter. Within the church he was met by the Sacred College, who accompanied him up the nave to the altar of confession, on which the sacrament was exposed. At this moment he was seen to be weeping profusely, and appeared actually overpowered by his feelings—no doubt, contrasting in his mind the sad vicissitudes of the last twenty months with the auspicious commencement of his pontificate. Kneeling before the altar, he remained some minutes absorbed in silent prayer; and, on his rising, the Papal choristers chanted the prayer of Urban VIII.; after which, the collect "Oremus, Deus, omnium," &c., was read by the Cardinal Arch-priest: then followed the "Te Deum," the assembly joining in the responses. His Holiness next received the sacrament and benediction, and passed to the other side of the altar, and assisted in displaying to the people the various famous relics thereupon exposed. Thence his advanced to the well-known statue of St. Peter, and having devoutly kissed its foot, retired by a side door into the Vatican Palace, attended by the Sacred College and all the corps diplomatique, where, having again received their congratulations, he dismissed them in a most gracious manner, and retired exhausted by the conflicting emotions of this most memorable day. On the whole, his reception by the population may have been called a favourable one, although far from rapturous, as the Government organs have attempted to represent it; yet no manifestations of discontent were visible, all appearing to wish to show that the existing ill-feeling is not towards PIO IX. personally, but towards the political system of the Cardinals. At night a general illumination took place, and the wind having subsided, and the night being pitchy dark, the effect was extremely beautiful; and this will be repeated the two following evenings. The Cupola of St. Peter's presented its usual magnificent appearance, all its architectural lines being brilliantly marked out by rows of huge lamps. The Capitol was similarly illuminated with lamps and wax torches. The palaces of the principal nobles were illuminated in the last sumptuous manner; the other houses, almost without exception, through every quarter of the City, with lamps in each window. The principal streets were brilliantly lit up with logs of pine, placed in tall cressets, at intervals of a few feet, whose bright and resinous glare threw a magic light over the magnificent and various architecture of the buildings. The street of the Borgo Nuovo, leading from the Ponte Sant' Angelo to St. Peter's

(Continued on page 305.)

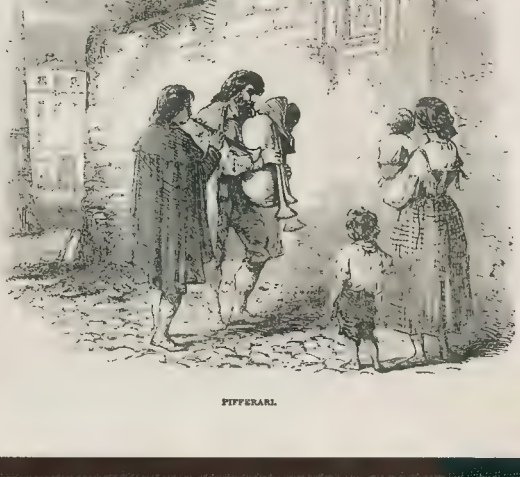
ECCLESIASTICS.



PIFFERARI.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 5.—Rogation Sunday.
MONDAY, 6.—St. John the Evangelist.
TUESDAY, 7.—Sun rises 4h. 24m., sets 7h. 30m.
WEDNESDAY, 8.—Easter Term ends. Sovereigns first issued from the Bank, 1821
THURSDAY, 9 Ascension Day.
FRIDAY, 10.—Moon rises 4h. 7m. A.M., sets 5h. 38m. P.M.
SATURDAY, 11.—Mr. Percival shot by Bellingham, 1812.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 11, 1850.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h m	A. h m	A. h m	A. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m
7 23	6 40	9 15	9 57	10 35	11 3	11 35
M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m
Tide	0 5	0 25	0 45	1 5	1 30	1 45

FRENCH PLAYS.—ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—On MONDAY EVENING, MAY 6th, M. LAFONT will have the honour of making his first appearance in the popular comedy of LES HUMORISTES DE ST. CYR, by M. Alexandre Dumas, the principal characters in which will be sustained by M. Regnier, M. Lafont, Achille, Nathalie, and Mlle. Brasseur. During the week will be performed M. Emile Augier's New Play, entitled GABRIELLE, recently brought out at the Théâtre Français, Paris, with the greatest success, and performed more than fifty consecutive nights to crowded audiences, characters supported by M. Regnier and Mdlle. Nathalie, as originally performed by them in Paris.
Subscribers for the remainder of the season may be accommodated at Mr. MITCHELL'S Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open daily from 11 till 5 o'clock.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor and Manager, Mr. W. BATTY.—Brilliant Career of the Magnificent Troupe of Equitation. Unequalled attraction in the Circle.—On TUESDAY, MAY 7th, 1850, and during the week, the Entertainments will commence at 7 o'Clock, with Finale, a gorgeous Spectacle, entitled the FOUR SONS of AYMON, or the Days of Charlemagne, produced with great splendour; introducing the beautiful steed of Horses, Camels of the Desert, Zebras, and all the vast resources of the Establishment; to be followed by the unimitable display of Batty's SCHOOLING OF THE ARENA, supported by the most accomplished Male and Female Artists of the age; to come vie with the WEAVER OF LYONS.—Box-office open from 11 till 4.—Sole Manager; Mr. W. Weit.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Subscribers and the Public are respectfully informed that the FIFTH CONCERT will take place at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS, on MONDAY EVENING, MAY 6th.—Programme:—Sinfonia, No. 4, (Beethoven); Quartet, Messrs. Blagrove, Sainton, Hill, and Lucas; Concerto in G minor (Pianoforte Mr. Lindsay Sloper (first time); "Der Erlkönig," J. Harry Greenbank, the "First Welsprgin Night" (Mendaesohn Bartoldy). Vocal Performers: Miss M. Williams, Mr. H. Phillips, Mr. Benson, Mr. Frank Chorus. Conductor, Mr. Costa. Single Tickets (with Reserved Seats), £1 1s; Double Ticket (Do.), £1 16s; Triple Ticket (Do.), £2 5s., to be obtained of Messrs. Addison, 210, Regent-street

UNDER the PATRONAGE of HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY the QUEEN, Royal Family, Nobility, &c.—The CHORAL FUND have the honour to announce for their ANNUAL CONCERT in aid of their Funds, at EXETER HALL, on FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 17, of Haydn's celebrated Oratorio, THE SEASONS, under the able Conductorship of Mr. Surman.—The Band and Chorus will consist of 300 Performers, and hold, for the relief of its distressed and afflicted members, their widows and orphans.—Doors open at Seven. Performance to commence at Half-past Seven. Tickets to be had at the principal Music sellers and at 9 Exeter-Hall. Western Gallery, 2s; Area, 2s; Reserved, 5s, ditto, Numbered, 7s. Royal Galleries, 10s 6d

LOVE'S POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENTS.—TOTAL CHANGE of PERFORMANCE.—The Celebrated Entertainments will be delivered on Monday May 6, at the Assembly Rooms Salisbury On Tuesday, May 7, at the Town Hall, Andover. On Wednesday, May 8, at the School Rooms, Gosport. Thursday, May 9, at the Pub lic Hall, Guildford. On Monday, May 13, at the Literary Institution, Gravesend. On Wednesday, May 15, at the Town Hall, Maidstone. On Thursday, May 16, at the Town Hall, Tunbridge Wells. On Friday, May 17, at the Assembly Rooms, Bath. On Saturday, May 18, at the Corn Exchange, Devizes. On Monday, May 20, at the Cape Hotel, Cheltenham. On Tuesday, May 21, at the Assembly Rooms, Lydney. On Wednesday, May 22, at the Town Hall, Hadleigh. On Thursday, May 23, at the Assembly Rooms, Witham. And on Monday, May 27, at the School-Rooms, Streatham.—Doors open at half-past 7, begins at 8. Stalls, 3s.; first Class Seats, 2s., Gallery, 1s. Books, containing Programmes, &c., to be had at the doors price 6d.

SOUTH AFRICAN EXHIBITION, CHINESE GALLERY, HYDE PARK-CORNER.—A Museum of SPORTING TROPHIES, NATIVE ARMS and COSTUMES, &c., from the Unexplored Regions of the far Interior of South Africa.—Open Daily from 11 A.M. to 10.—Admission, 1s.

NILE.—GRAND MOVING PANORAMA of the NILE; comprising all the monuments of antiquity on its banks, to which is added the interior of the great rock cut TEMPLE of ABOU SIMBEL: painted by Messrs. WARREN, BONOMI, and FAHEY. Also a Collection of Egyptian and Nubian Curiosities, EGYPTIAN HALL, Piccadilly, daily at 8 and 8. Stalls, 3s; Pit, 2s., Gallery, 1s. Children and School half-price.

INDIA OVERLAND MAIL.—DIORAMA.—GALLERY of ILLUSTRATION, 14, REGENT-STREET, Waterloo-place.—A Gigantic MOVING DIORAMA, illustrating the ROUTE of the OVERLAND MAIL to INDIA, and comprising every object worthy of notice on the highly interesting journey from Southampton to Calcutta, accompanied by descriptive detail and appropriate music (which has been in preparation for the last nine months), is now OPEN DAILY, from Two till Eight o'Clock. Admission, 1s. Reserved Seats, 2s 6d (which may be previously engaged). Doors open at Two, and Half past Seven o'Clock. Descriptive Catalogues may be obtained at the Gallery

HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.—Illustrated by a Grand Moving Diorama, with some of the most charming scenery in the country, including the lovely lakes of Killarney, by Mr. P. Phillips, now open at the Chinese Gallery, Hyde Park Corner. Days at 3, Evening at 8. Admission 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s. An interesting historical record of the event may be had at the Gallery.

TRAFALGAR.—A Large and Interesting MODEL of the BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR is now exhibiting at 168, NEW BOND-STREET, next to the Canadian Hotel This great work of art is modeled to a scale of 19 feet to an inch thereby rendering it perfectly of Size. It also possesses the great advantage over all paintings on the same subject, that visitors can walk round and notice the track of each ship as she was brought into action, and providing and pointing out the plentiful position of shots. Open from 10 in the Morning till 10 in the Evening. Admission, 1s.—Saturdays, 2s. 6d. Children, half-price.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES on MUSIC, by Sir HENRY R. BISHOP, resumed, with an increased number of Vocalists for the 1 lustrations, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at Eight, and on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Three o'clock. Dr. Bachoffner's SECOND LECTURE on the PHILOSOPHY of SCIENTIFIC RECREATION, with Optical Effects, daily at Two, and on Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, at a quarter past Nine. LECTURE by J. H. Pepper, Esq., on the CHEMISTRY of HYDROGEN, with special reference to its application for conveying by Balloons Pyrotechnic and other signals to Sir John Franklin, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Three, and on Tuesday and Thursday Evenings, at 8o'clock. DISSOLVING VIEWS, illustrating the ARCTIC REGIONS and CEYLON; also Views of London in the Sixteenth Century, and as it now is. DIVER and DIVING-BELL, &c. &c.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price. Analyses and Chemical Experiments conducted in the Laboratory, under the Direction of J. H. Pepper, Esq

THE SIXTEENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the NEW SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS is NOW OPEN at their GALLERY, 53, PALL MALL, near St. James's Palace, daily, from Nine till Dusk.—Admission, 1s.
JAMES FAHEY, Sec.

EXHIBITION of the SOCIETY of BRITISH ARTISTS.—Incorporated by Royal Charter.—The TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of this Society is NOW OPEN, from 9 A.M. till Dusk.—Admittance, 1s, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East. W. ALLEN, Secretary.

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S-PARK.—Admission EVERY DAY in WHITSUN WEEK, EXCEPT SATURDAY, at SIXPENCE EACH PERSON

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E CURTIS—Secure the interest of a Member of Parliament.
J F, near West Cowes Should apply to the au her in question for an explanation
A A W—When the New River was brought to London, in 1619, the company held thirty-two 2,000 shares, and the remainder the same number
L R N—Had better apply to the secretaries of the Water-Colour Societies for the precise conditions
GRACIOUS See Wheatly on the Book of Common Prayer
W W, Gibson, mill, perhaps, favour us by showing his Sketches
SPARTA—See the "Handbook of Games," just published by Bohn
A P—to destroy rats, apply boiling solution of alum and potash
L L, Newton Abbot—The impression is that a gold medal of William and Mary; unsatisfactorily, of no value
DOSE—We will try by next week to give our Correspondent some information on the curious impression of the ring he has sent us
WESTMINSTER—Strictly in accordance with the rules of coursing, the widow would be the Duchess Mrs Lane; and the son's wife, Mrs Jones
W B R—The arms of Maitland, Earl of Lauderdale, are "Or, a lion rampant deshanssé within a double tressure flory counterflory gu. Crest, A lion's gamb erased, grasping an oak branch all ppr. Supporters, Two lions gu. each charged on the shoulder with a crescent or, and ducally crowned of the last. Motto, Semelo viret. The best books on Heraldry are now in course of publication by Mr. Pickering
A BRITON—The Earldom of Yorkshire and Lindsey—"Arg a fesse between six cross crosslets fitchée sa." Crest, "A demi lion rampt holding a sword in the dexter paw all ppr." Motto, "Ung pour tous, tous pour un." The Earldom of Lincoln—"Barry of three fusils gu." Crest, "A demi lion rampt holding a sword in the dexter paw all ppr." Motto, "Ung pour tous, tous pour un."
A SUBSCRIBER, Gosport—The arms of Bradshaw—"Arg. two bendlets sa. between two martlets of the second. Crest, A stag at gaze, under each fore knee fracted, all ppr." Motto, "Ut cervi fortis." The arms of Cromwell—"Gu. three crowns or, two and one, within a bordure of the second. Crest, "An arm embowed, issuing from a mural crown, all ppr." Motto, "Ense et aratro." The arms of Ireton—"Arg. a fesse between three roses gu. as many ears of the field."
H B—Mr. Alma Reeves is not a Frenchman—he was born in Woolwich
MODESTO—The late Miles Du Gean was not the organist referred to R S T P—We did not reply to the query on respecting the "Royal Mint," as a translation of the words can be so easily attained at a mason-publisher's
A CORRESPONDENT at Glastonbury suggests that the forced labour of our criminals might be made available in embanking and protecting some portions of our coasts against the encroachments of the sea, and in reclaiming and cultivating alluvial waste land on the borders of estuaries
ELLA—St. Catherine is the patroness of spinsters her holiday is on the 25th of November
H W, Hackney—The meaning of he words "Hostage" "honey moon," is said to have originated in a Teutonic custom of obtaining meat, or mead, in a beverage made with honey, for thirty days after every wedding
H G J, Bermondsey—The sketch for his letter, though we have not room to print it
A B, Strand—Apply to the Secretary to the Great Exhibition, 1851, at No. 1, New Palace yard
Καρυδιωλος Έσσηρ, Ireland—Candidates for cadetships in the East India Company's Service must be prepared at Addiscombe College. The "Real Life Preceptor" by an old Resident) Pascha is pronounced as spelt
A B Cross-try, is thanked; we shall be glad to receive sketches
AN INQUIRER—We cannot undertake the inquiry, or give any opinion without a N S—Apply at the office, 198, Strand
B M—Apply at the office, 198, Strand

A NEW SUBSCRIBER—Parts, containing five consecutive Numbers, may be had, price 2s 6d
Single back Numbers are charged 1s each

W S, Exeter—Received
X Y Z—Is the Breath of Towns Act
R B F—at stroud—We have not room
R H, Ridgwood, is thanked
ALFA—There is no such institution as you name
L—N should inquire of the railway company
P D W—We cannot inform you
REBUES—The fair-si-law

T H B—Pitt (Mr Hablot Browne)
J S E—The tinder is, unquestionably, legal J S Congleton—We have no room
L W—Declined
Y Z—1. We do not know the work. 2. Yes
G H S, Cheltenham—We believe, no issue
T L O, Edinburgh—The mark denotes dollars
AN OLD S. SCRIBER—No

* * * Notices to several Correspondents are unavoidably deferred.

TO REMOVE CREASES FROM THE LARGE ENGRAVING OF ROME.—If the Print be not already damp, place it for a short time in a damp cloth; then iron it on the back with a warm flat iron.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
IN THREE LANGUAGES.

The Proprietors of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS have the honour to announce to their readers and the public generally, that they have made arrangements for the publication of a complete, carefully written, and profusely Illustrated History and Description of the GREAT EXHIBITION of the INDUSTRY of ALL NATIONS, to be held in London in 1851. During the whole period of the Exhibition they will issue a Series of SUPPLEMENTS to THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, containing the fullest and most authentic Reports of the Proceedings, and Descriptions of the various Objects of Art and Manufacture, with Illustrations designed by the most competent Artists, and executed in the highest style of Wood-Engraving.

No expense will be spared to make the Publication, in all respects, worthy of the great undertaking, of which it will form the Permanent Record; and its price, as well as excellence, will be such as will not only defy all possible competition, but place it within the reach of all classes of the community.

In order, also, that the Artists and Manufacturers of Foreign Nations, who shall send their productions to this Exhibition of the World's Industry and Skill, may have the full advantage of a permanent and intelligible record of so interesting an event, the SUPPLEMENTS of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS will be issued in the FRENCH and GERMAN LANGUAGES, as well as in ENGLISH.

GRANDE EXPOSITION DE 1851.
L'ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
EN TROIS LANGAGES.

Les Propriétaires de L'ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS ont l'honneur d'annoncer au public Français, qu'ils ont disposés avec de grands soins une complète publication dorlé et profondément illustrée de l'Histoire et Description de la GRANDE EXPOSITION de l'INDUSTRIE de TOUTES NATIONS, qui se tiendra à Londres en 1851. Pendant toute la durée de l'exposition, ils publieront des SUPPLEMENTS de L'ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, contenant les plus complèts et plus authentiques rapports des Procédés et un Description des Objets variés d'Art et de la Manufacture, avec des Illustrations dessinées par les plus eminents Artistes, et executées avec la plus grande perfection, en Gravure sur Bois.

Aucune dépense sera épargnée pour rendre la Publication en tous points digne de la grande Exposition du Monde Entier, de la quelle elle formera un permanent Rapp rt. Son prix, aussi bien que son excellence, seront tels qu'elle trouvera place dans tous les rangs de la société.

Afin, aussi, que les Artistes et Manufacturiers des Nations Etrangères, qui apporteront leurs productions à cette Exposition d'Industrie, puissent avoir l'immense avantage du permanent et intelligible Rapport d'un événement aussi intéressant et important, les SUPPLEMENTS de l'ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS seront publiés en FRANÇAIS, en ALLEMAND, aussi bien qu'en ANGLAIS.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
IN DREI SPRACHEN.
DIE GROSSE KUNST- und GEWERBAUSSTELLUNG ALLER NATIONEN, in 1851.

Die Eigenthümer der ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS beehren sich hiermit den deutschem Publicum die Anzeige zu machen, dass sie eine sorgsam abgefasste und vollständig illustrirte Beschreibung der GROSSEN KUNST- und GEWERBEAUSTELLUNG ALLER NATIONEN, welche im Jahre 1851 in London statt finden wird, herausgeben werden. Während der ganzen Dauer dieser Austellung wird die ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS mit einer neuen GROSSEN BEILAGEN erscheinen, die genaue und authentische Berichte von allem was in Betreff jener Austellung Interesse bietet, eine ausführliche Beschreibung der verschiedenen Kunst- und Gewerb Erzeugnisse und rechtzeitige ILLUSTRATIONEN, gezeichnet von den ersten Künstlern, enthalten wird. Jeder Abschnitt der ersten Classe, enthalten werden.

Die Eigenthümer der ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS schönen keine Kosten das beabsichtigte Werk in jeder Beziehung, in jeder Beziehung würdig zu machen, der Welt damit eine treue und vollständig illustrirte Beschreibung jener grossen Austellung zu übergeben welche als bleibende, allgemeinintizige Bezeichnung Epoche machen wird, und zwar in einer so eleganten Form und zu einem so niedrigen Preise dass, während die Anschaffung derselben allen Classen leicht wird, sie mit der Eleganze in den Salons der Reichen harmonirt.

Um anderen Nationen, und besonders denen Künstlern und Fabrikanten, die Gelegenheit zu geben, sich eine treue und leicht verständliche Beschreibung auf der Erzeugnisse von Intresse, welche in der grossen universal Ausstellung von 1851, Platz finden, zu verschaffen, werden die erwähnten BEILAGEN in der ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS in ENGLISCHER und FRANZÖSISCHER, sowohl als in ENGLISCHER Sprache, erscheinen.

With the present DOUBLE NUMBER of the
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
IS DELIVERED THE LARGE
VIEW OF ROME, GRATIS!

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1850.

THE recent serious defalcations in Savings-Banks have induced the Government to bring in a bill for their better regulation. Sir Charles Wood has, as usual, undertaken a measure which he is not likely to carry without much alteration or amendment. He has not contrived to satisfy practical men in all the details of his proposed bill, and he has omitted to give it a retrospective effect. There can be no doubt that the unhappy depositors who have been robbed of their money at Tralee, Scarborough, Rochdale, and other places by the defalcations of the treasurers and officers, placed it in those banks with the full reliance that Government was responsible for its safe custody. No compensation is to be made to them. The Government repudiates all knowledge of them; but says that, for the future, it will be responsible for all sums paid to the treasurers of Savings-Banks, if it have the appointment of those officers. The principle as regards the future is quite right; but we think, if the poor depositors are allowed to suffer their past losses without an effort being made to relieve them by the Government in whom they trusted, that the object of the Government in taking Savings-Banks under its protection will be to a great extent defeated. Those who have suffered had full reliance on the national credit when they deposited their money in the banks, and finding themselves deceived will not be likely to give their confidence again even under a new arrangement.

In other respects, the principal features of the bill seem unobjectionable. The Government, believing that the depositors care less about the rate of interest than about the certain repayment of their deposit, intend to limit the amount of deposit now allowed to £100. Where the accumulated interest on this amount, interest to go cease, but he is to be allowed to buy that sum into the funds, through the agency of the trustees, and the dividends may be paid through the Savings-Bank. The Government also proposes to reduce the rate of interest from £3 to £2 15s. per cent., in order to provide funds for the payment of adequate salaries to treasurers of its own appointment, and for whose deeds it is to make itself responsible. There can be no objection to this part of the project. The minor details are, doubtless, susceptible of amendment, and several have already been suggested in the debate on the introduction of the measure; but the main point is the retrospective action of the bill. It may be inconvenient to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to find the money for the purpose; but the public good demands the sacrifice both of the money and the convenience; and, unless the recent cases be properly met, a moral wrong will be committed, and the intention of Savings-Banks will be defeated. It is not only a politic thing for a Government to encourage habits of thrift and self-denial among the poor, but is a truly Christian and humane task for the more comfortable classes to undertake. Every poor depositor of money is a man gained from pauperism and crime, and enlisted on the side of order, peace, and rational liberty. The more we have of such men, the better for our pockets as ratepayers; the better for our commercial prosperity; and the better for our character as a civilised nation. It would not have been very expensive to the Government, to have reimbursed the losers by the late defalcations; and the expense would have repaid itself ultimately, in a thousand other ways. But the unlucky Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has the fatality of pleasing nobody, has tied his own hands. He has taken off the Excise duty on bricks, a measure which will not benefit any one but those who build new houses, and them not very largely; and has, in this manner, thrown away money which might have been well and wisely employed towards the relief of such hardship as that which the poor of Rochdale and other places now suffer, and in a variety of ways calculated to be beneficial to the people who are too poor to build houses. We trust, however, that it is not too late to remedy this omission; and that there is sufficient energy in the House of Commons to amend the Bill of the Government in this respect.

A RECENT case at the Thames Police-office has excited considerable interest, and led to explanations in the House of Commons. By the laws of South Carolina, and several other slave-holding states in America, no free coloured man, whether he be a subject of the United States or of any other country in the world, is allowed to be at large within their boundaries. American captains from the non slave-holding states, who seem to prefer coloured men for cooks and stewards, never venture to Charleston or New Orleans with such men on board, being aware of the law in this respect—that they will be seized on board and committed to prison until the vessel takes her departure. British captains, it appears, are not quite so conversant with transatlantic law in this matter, and occasionally arrive in a slave-holding port with a coloured man among their crew. It was a case of this kind that was brought under the notice of the Thames police magistrate, and afterwards of Lord Palmerston. It appears, however, from Lord Palmerston's statement, that there is no redress, and that the subject has already been brought by the British Government under the notice of the Government at Washington without leading to any satisfactory result. Of course, in such a matter retaliation would look absurd, but we should, nevertheless, like to see the Charleston and New Orleans slave-holders submitted to the operation of a similar law on arriving at any port in Europe. It would not be a whit more ridiculous, oppressive, or unjust, to decree that no free man from South Carolina or Louisiana, with red whiskers or black whiskers, or without any whiskers at all, should be allowed to come into the Thames or the Mersey, under the penalty of imprisonment, than it is for the men of Louisiana and South Carolina to imprison British subjects on account of the colour of their skins. Lord Palmerston declines to act further in the subject, and is possibly right, for any hostile attitude this country might assume would serve no other purpose than to exasperate the sensitive slave-holders of the South, and estrange the two nations, without leading to any benefit. We can but hope that, sooner or later, the southern states of the Union will find means, without foreign dictation or domestic coercion, to remove the foul stain of slavery from their boundaries, and that they will grant the same protection and hospitality to coloured men as are granted by every other nation having any right to call itself civilized.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

ACCOUCHEMENT OF HER MAJESTY.—BIRTH OF A PRINCE.

We have the highest gratification in announcing that her Majesty the Queen gave birth to a Prince at seventeen minutes after eight o'clock on Wednesday morning.

The Court Newsman, in chronicling the auspicious event, says: In the room with her Majesty were his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Dr. Locock, and Mrs. Lilly, the monthly nurse; and in the rooms adjoining were the other medical attendants, Sir James Clark and Dr. Ferguson, and the Ministers and Officers of State summoned on the occasion.

The Privy Councillors present were the Most Rev. Dr. Sumner, Archbishop of Canterbury; the Right Rev. Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London; the Duke of Wellington, Chancellor-in-Chief; Lord John Russell, Sir George Grey, the Marquis of Breadalbane, and the Duke of Norfolk.

Shortly before nine o'clock her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent arrived at the Palace. At ten o'clock the Queen's physicians issued the following bulletin:—

Buckingham Palace, Wednesday, May 1, 1850. Ten o'clock A.M.

The Queen was safely delivered of a Prince at seventeen minutes after eight o'clock this morning. JAMES CLARK, M.D.
CHARLES LOCOCK, M.D.
ROBERT FERGUSON, M.D.

Her Majesty and the infant Prince are well.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by Major Stevens, arrived at the Palace early in the forenoon, to learn the state of her Majesty and her Royal infant.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent returned to the Palace in the afternoon, accompanied by his Serene Highness Prince Leiningen.

At three o'clock his Royal Highness Prince Albert, left the Palace for the Council-office, where a Privy Council was held. At the Council, the Archbishop of Canterbury was ordered to prepare a form of prayer for the Queen's safe recovery. Prince Albert, after the Council, returned to Buckingham Palace.

About eight hundred of the nobility and gentry called during the day at Buckingham Palace, to make their dutiful enquiries after the state of her Majesty and the infant Princess.

At noon an Extraordinary Gazette was published, announcing the fact, and containing the usual orders in Council for "prayers and thanksgivings" in England and Wales, and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, as well as "that part of Great Britain called Scotland."

On Friday the following bulletin of the Queen's health was issued:—

Buckingham Palace, May 3 1850, 9 A.M.

The Queen has passed an excellent night. Her Majesty and the infant Prince are going on favourably. JAMES CLARK, M.D.
CHARLES LOCOCK, M.D.
ROBERT FERGUSON, M.D.

Her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess Van der Straten and Major de Moerkerke, visited the Queen on Saturday at Buckingham Palace. Her Majesty was received on her arrival at the Vauxhall station from Claremont by his Royal Highness Prince Albert (attended by his Equerry in Waiting, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon), who accompanied her Majesty to the Palace. The Queen of the Belgians partook of luncheon with her Majesty and Prince Albert.

On Monday and Tuesday last her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and his Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen dined with her Majesty and the Prince Consort.

The Queen continued in the enjoyment of excellent health, and took frequent outdoor exercise up to the period of her Majesty's happy accouchement.

Lord Byron and Sir Frederick Stovin have relieved the Earl of Lisiowel and Lieut-Colonel the Hon. Robert Boyle in their duties as the Lord and Groom in Waiting to her Majesty.

FASHIONABLE ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Duke of Wellington received a host of visitors on Wednesday morning, at Apsley House, on the occasion of his natal day. Prince Albert, the whole of the Royal Family, and all the members of the corps diplomatique, with two exceptions, paid their respects to the noble and gallant Duke. It affords as great pleasure in stating that the venerable Duke is in the enjoyment of excellent health and spirits.

Miss Coutts gave the first of a series of soirées at her residence, Stratton street, Piccadilly, on Wednesday. There were about 300 fashionables present at the reception.

Lady Kerrison gave her second soirée dansante on Wednesday night at the family mansion, in Great Stanhope-street.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston had a dinner party on Wednesday evening, at their mansion, Carlton Gardens.

Viscountess Gage's soirée dansante, on Tuesday evening, was attended by a large party of the élite of the aristocr cy now in town, and which completely filled the reception-rooms of the family mansion, in Whitehall-yard.

Sir Francis T. and Lady Arabella Baring entertained Lord and Lady Montcagle, his Excellency the American Minister and Mrs. Laurence, and a distinguished party at dinner, on Wednesday, at their residence at the Admiralty

The Comte de Neuilly, accompanied by the Duchesse d'Orleans, the Comte de Paris, the Duc de Chartres, the Duc de Grammont and suite, honoured the Gallery of Illustration, in Regent-street, with a visit on Monday last.

The Duchesse de Guiche was safely delivered of a daughter on Saturday last, at the Hôtel de Guiche, at Paris.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge went from Kew, on Tuesday, to Claremont, and paid a visit to the Count and Countess de Neuilly and her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Stafford have arrived at Tarbert House, Invernesshire, from Trentham. Her Ladyship's majority was celebrated by great rejoicings last week, on the family estates at Cromartie and other districts in the north.

The Marchioness of Salisbury was safely delivered of a daughter, on Thursday week, at Westport House.

The Countess of Clonmel gave birth to a son on Wednesday week, at Bretby Court, county Kildare.

MARRIAGES IN HIGH LIFE.—The marriage of the young Earl of Strathmore with the Hon. Charlotte Maria Barrington, eldest daughter of Viscount and Viscountess Barrington, took place on Tuesday, at Becket House, near Shrivenham, the seat of the noble father of the bride, in the presence of a large circle of the friends of both families. The bouquets, as usual on similar occasions, were supplied by Harding, of Clifford street.—On Saturday last, at Trinity Church, Sloane-street, Miss Clara Maria Burdett, daughter of the late Sir Francis Burdett, was married to the Rev. James Drummond Money, of Shernfield, Suffolk. The ceremony was performed by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London, assisted by the Rev. R. Burgess. The Earl of Harrowby gave away the bride.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

CAMDEN SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held on Thursday, the Right Hon. Lord Braybrooke in the chair. The report stated that, during the past year, the society, notwithstanding the loss by death of many valuable subscribers, had made very satisfactory progress. During the past year, the works issued by the society were "Chronicon Petroburgense" (Chronicles of Peterboro'); "Inedited Letters of Queen Elizabeth;" "Chronicles of Queen Jane;" and "Two Years of the Reign of Queen Mary." They had also, in preparation, the "Liverpool Papers illustrative of Irish History, from 1595 to the Restoration;" and the "Privy Purse Expenses during the reigns of Charles II. and James II." The balance in the treasurer's hands amounted to £137 2s. The report was adopted, and, some general business having been transacted, the meeting separated.

IRISH SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Thursday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, the Marquis of Blandford in the chair. It appeared, that, in spite of a diminished income, the most cheering prospects had crowned the labours of the society. Its stations pervaded all round the country, including Drogheda, Kerry, Clonmel, Cork, &c. They employed 3 inspecting agents; 43 inspectors; 14 Irish readers; and 116 Scripture readers; and 721 teachers. The financial statement showed that the income derived from all sources during the past year was £9685. Several gentlemen addressed the meeting on the subject of the report, which was unanimously adopted; and after a vote of thanks to the noble chairman, the meeting separated.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN.—On Wednesday afternoon the annual meeting of the members of this institution was held in the theatre, Albemarle-street; his Grace the Duke of Northumberland in the chair. The report, which was read by Dr. Granville, stated that the first subject for remark was one of congratulation viz. the increase of composition and annual fees from new members, which amounted in the past year to £724 10s., being within a few shillings of £200 over those of the preceding year. The amount of contributions from old members and subscribers, under various heads, was as nearly as possible equal to that of 1848. The miscellaneous receipts likewise had been much the same in both years, and in the income from funded property there had been naturally a considerable augmentation to the increased capital. It was satisfactory to find that the total net receipts for the year, applicable by the managers to the general purposes of the institution, had, to within a few pounds, equalled those of the preceding year, being £3231 16s. 8d. The report showed an excess over expenditure of £503 8s. 9d.; which excess, added to the balance in hand from the previous year, £449 2s. 3d., making a total of £952 11s., was the amount of the two investments, amounting to £739 18s. 9d., leaving a balance in favour of the institution of £212 12s. 3d. During the past year the library had made the acquisition of not less than 576 volumes, 290 of which were purchased by the managers, besides 60 periodicals, and 226 were presented. The report was adopted.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The annual general meeting was held on Monday, at the office of the society, in Hanover-square, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, M.P., in the chair. The report of the council stated that the total income of the society in 1849 amounted to £9688 17s. 9d., including a sum of £651 17s. 6d. the proceeds of the sale of £700 Three per Cents. The total expenditure was £9434 15s. 3d., a steady increase of £1000 having going on in the receipts of the society, indicating a greater appreciation on the part of the public of the attractions of the collection, and, it is to be hoped, an increased interest in the study of zoology. On the other hand, with an increase of £606 over the income of 1848, and of £1000 over that of 1847, it has been found necessary to diminish the funded property of the society, which was, by a recommendation of the last committee of audit, limited to a minimum of £3000, except under certain circumstances of extraordinary pressure. The collection of animals in the gardens had been diminished by the death of the bi-on the rhinoceros, and some other valuable specimens, but, as the stock has been also augmented by numerous gifts, the value of the collection is not deteriorated. The plan of not raising the price of admission to the gardens on Mondays and holidays having been found successful, the council propose to extend the reduction of price to the whole of Whitsun week, by way of experiment towards a permanent decrease of charges.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Wednesday, at the offices, Regent-street; Sir Mark Lemon, Bart., M.P., in the chair. The report stated that in pursuance of a resolution of last year, the council had refrained from embarking in any pecuniary undertaking which did not appear to be of pressing necessity. Circumstances had, however, occasioned a larger outlay for extra work than was contemplated in May, 1849 in the improvement of the premises. The charge of such of these works as had been completed was £1651 18s. 10d. The exhibitions of 1849 had been more numerously attended than in 1848, the number of tickets issued being 18,517. The receipts for 1849 had exceeded those of 1848 by the sum of £222 8s. The comparative expenditure for the years 1847, 1848, and 1849 were £3789, £3679, and £3987. The report was unanimously adopted, and the Duke of Devonshire elected president.

GREAT CENTRAL GAS CONSUMERS' COMPANY.—The first general meeting of this company took place on Tuesday, at the London Tavern; Mr. Dakin in the chair. The report stated that, while the directors had taken counsel, the financial, engineering, and surveyor's report to speak for themselves, they regarded this as the convenient opportunity for passing in review a comparison between the promises held out in their prospectus and the progress of their fulfilment in the present position of the company. First, the prospectus held forth the promise of the guarantee of the city of London for an adequate demand for the gas of the company. The actual result was that 6400 consumers in the city of London had bound themselves to purchase their whole supply from the company for five years; 634 large consumers in the line of the same road from Cornhill into connection with the company; and the company on nearly equivalent terms, and that from a very great additional number of actual and intending consumers cordial assurances had been received. The prospectus also had announced that the company engaged to manufacture gas of superior quality, the best than in use, at the rate of 1s. 4½d. per 1000 cubic feet, and pledged itself to furnish and lay down the whole plant necessary to distribute 36,000,000 cubic feet of gas, including every expense of opening and relaying the streets and furnishing service pipes and meters, for £164,808. The directors had finally completed contracts, which were now in rapid course of completion, for the manufacture and distribution of 320,000,000 cubic feet of gas, at a maximum cost of £163,083. The prospectus had contemplated an expenditure for contingencies of £13,000, for land £20,000, and for preliminary expenses £8000, making a total of £41,000. The whole preliminary and contingent expenditure up to the date of the report amounted to £14,953 2s. 5d., leaving an ample margin of £26,036 16s. 7d. for future contingent and unforeseen expenses. The parliamentary returns proved that as each company had redeemed its charges it had increased its dividends. If companies, with a capital on which dividends must be paid, according to their own calculation, of £50,000, could afford to sell gas at 4s. per 1000 feet, how was it possible to doubt that a company which was enabled to distribute as much gas for a capital of £136,000 as they could supply by a capital of £500,000 could fail to be profitable, or present the amplest security for the least speculative investor? The chairman said, he had to congratulate the company upon the very prosperous appearance of their affairs; and, though he would not wish to use harsh terms, he must say they had experienced every opposition to counteract the views which they were resolved to carry out. (Cheers.) The report was unanimously adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY MEETING.—The anniversary meeting of this society was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday, the Earl of Harrowby in the chair. Amongst those on the platform we observed Sir Thomas D. Acland, General Mitness, Mr. Pumpire, M.P., &c., &c. After a short address from the chairman, the secretary read the report, in which it was stated that in France the work of the society had been carried on in the face of many difficulties, and the issue from their depôt in Paris was 108,338 copies, making, in all, a circulation in France of 2,728,364 copies. In Belgium and the Rhenish provinces a distribution of 76,000 copies had taken place. In Holland 23,681 copies had been circulated, making a distribution in that country of 261,226 copies since 1814. From the Frankfort depôt there had been a circulation of 37,436. In Italy 12,000 volumes had been circulated; and in different parts of Germany and Italy a proportionate circulation had taken place. The committee had to congratulate the meeting that the Emperor of Russia had permitted a distribution of the Scriptures to the extent of £300. The report was agreed to; and several resolutions in favour of the objects of the society having been passed, the meeting separated.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS.—On Monday afternoon a public meeting was held at Willis's Rooms, to consider the claims of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. The meeting, which was convened by the Rector of St. James's, Westminster, was numerously attended. Lord Lyttelton presided. The noble chairman, and other gentlemen, addressed the meeting in support of resolutions affirming the duty of the Church to take more active steps for the conversion of the heathen, and I for the promotion of the spiritual interests of the colonists, and also pledging the meeting to the assistance of the society. The meeting separated, after a vote of thanks to Lord Lyttelton for his courtesy in presiding.

CENTRAL CHURCH SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening the annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this society was held at the Hanover-square Rooms; Mr. J. F. Plumptre, M.P., in the chair. The report stated, that though the funds at the disposal of the society were so limited, its operation had been attended with great success. It employed seven ordained missionaries, twelve catechists, and six schoolmistresses, who laboured among the emigrants in no less than twelve British colonies. The income of the society during the past year amounted to £3000, including the colonial contributions. This was a slight decrease on the receipts of the preceding year, but the deficiency arose from a falling off in the legacies, and not in the annual subscriptions, in which there had been an increase. The meeting was addressed by the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, the Rev. J. C. Ryle, and other clergymen and gentlemen, and resolutions in furtherance of the objects of the society were adopted.

HOME AND COLONIAL INFANT SCHOOL SOCIETY.—The fourteenth anniversary meeting of this society was held on Monday, at the Institution, Gray's-inn-road; the Earl of Chichester in the chair. The report stated that the number of teachers in course of training under the auspices of the society was 193, while the number of children receiving instruction was 12,000, an increase of 90 in the number benefiting by the institution, as compared with the previous year. The receipts for the twelve months, including donations, amounted to £5432 18s. 11d., and the disbursements to £5381 1s. 7d., thus leaving a balance of £51 17s. 4d. in the hands of the treasurer. On the motion of Mr. Labouchere, M.P., the report was unanimously approved of, and ordered to be printed and circulated. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. Mr. Nolan, the Rev. J. C. Miller, of Birmingham, and others, and resolutions were adopted in furtherance of the objects of the society.

CHRISTIAN YOUNG MEN'S ASSOCIATION.—On Tuesday morning, at six o'clock, upwards of one thousand of the friends and supporters of this association met, and partook of breakfast, in the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, after which the annual general meeting was held in the Great Hall; the Hon. A. Kinnaird in the chair. There could not have been less than 2000 persons at the public meeting. From the report it appeared that during the past year the total receipts had been £2151 6s. 8d., being an increase over the previous year of £1555. The sum expended in the same period to £1951 6s. 8d. had been spent in the formation of a library for the use of the members, leaving a balance in the hands of the treasurer of £20. The average weekly attendance at lectures was about 200. The total number of young men who have joined it upwards of 3000; and no less than 50,000 books have been distributed to them from the reading-rooms, in Gresham-street, City. Various resolutions, pledging those present to support the association, were then passed, and the meeting separated, after a vote of thanks to the chairman.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND YOUNG MEN'S SOCIETY FOR SENDING MISSIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD. The annual meeting of this society took place on Thursday evening at St. Martin's Hall, Long Acre; the Earl of Chichester in the chair. The report stated that it was impossible to ascertain the amount of good which had resulted from the labours of this society; it remained for future generations to estimate more adequately what had been done. During the last year 240 convocational meetings of this society had been held, for the purposes of exciting and confirming the interest in this work of Christian missions. The report was adopted, and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Thursday evening, at Exeter Hall; Mr. S. M. Peto in the chair. The report stated, that the schools established under the auspices of the Union at Copenhagen were still carried on at its expense. The committee had made a grant of £20 in aid of Sunday-schools in Germany, and they had flourished to a most encouraging extent, despite the prophesy of their opponents. The total number of scholars in their schools amounted to 23,893; 13,032 of whom were Scripture readers. The subscriptions and donations had amounted to £1263; and the expenditure, to £1351. The report was adopted; and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

NAVAL AND MILITARY BIBLE SOCIETY.—On Monday the anniversary meeting of this society was held at the Hanover-square Rooms; the most noble the Marquis of Cholmondeley in the chair. The report stated that during the past year 1000 bibles had been furnished to the army, and 300 to the troops in the East India Company's service, besides 88 to barrack and hospital rooms, and 90 to the Royal Marine Artillery and Light Infantry. To her Majesty's ships 1670 copies had been supplied, including 100 to the four vessels going out under Captain Austin in search of Sir John Franklin and his associates, to whom the society, before their quitting England in 1845, gave an ample supply, at Sir John's special request. The number of bibles issued during the past year of 17,695, and a general total of copies circulated by the society since its formation of 517,691. The report further stated that his Royal Highness Prince Albert had given a donation to the Naval Branch, which was 97l. 8s. The report was adopted. The receipts of cash amounted to £2638 7s. 4d., and the disbursements to £2614 17s. 7d., which, with last year's balance, showed an amount in the treasurer's hands of £2 5s. 5d.

MASTER MARINERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—On Monday evening the annual meeting of the friends of this society was held at the Bridge Hotel, London-bridge; Mr. T. Dere was called to the chair. The secretary read the report, from which it appeared that the balance in the hands of the society amounted to £7138 7s. 7d. During the past year the committee had received various sums, including subscriptions, and the funds now amounted to £7691 17s. 5d.; since the last annual meeting there had been deaths by accident and natural causes, and sums paid were £282; loss of life at sea, £300; shipwrecked members, £575; and partial loss, £-23 18s.; making a total of £1723 18s.; payments and expenses of management, £181 15s. 3d.; making a total of moneys paid during the year, £1875 13s. 3d., leaving a balance in the hands of the treasurer of £5818 4s. The report also stated that the committee had much pleasure in announcing that there had been an addition of 29 new members since the last annual meeting, a number far exceeding that of any year since 1846. The total number of registered members is at the present time 1593. The number of deaths during the past year had been 33 from natural causes, and 4 by shipwrecks. The number of annuitants on the books was 918. The report was adopted, after which the meeting proceeded to the election of trustees. A discussion then ensued respecting the formation of an annuity fund, but the subject was adjourned for further consideration.

EAST INDIA HOUSE.—On Wednesday a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of a director, in the room of Major-General Sir Archibald Galloway, K.C.B., deceased. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on Major John Arthur Moore.

VAUXHALL BRIDGE.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held at the George and Vulture Hotel, Cornhill, on Thursday.—Mr Parnell in the chair.—At which it was stated, that the revenue of the bridge, since the commencement of the past half year, amounted to £2986 2s. 4d.; the amount received for tolls being £150 7s. 3d. over the amount received in the corresponding half of last year. The report was adopted, a dividend of £2 per share declared, and the retiring directors re-elected. The meeting then separated.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL.—On Thursday, the annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of the medical college of this hospital took place; his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, Sir R. H. Inglis, and a number of other gentlemen being present. Fifty-one prizes having been distributed, the meeting separated.

HARRISON'S SPINAL INSTITUTION.—The annual meeting of this institution was held at the Freemasons' Tavern on Thursday; Dr. Epps in the chair; when a report was presented which stated that, during the past year, the institution had never had less than six patients within its walls, all of whom had progressed most remarkably towards recovery, the whole expense incurred being only £384 11s. There were now upwards of thirty applicants for admission, but their petitions could not be attended to, in consequence of the limited means at the control of the charity. The report was adopted; the officers elected for the ensuing year; and a determination come to to bring the claims of the charity prominently before the public.

ROYAL INFIRMARY FOR CHILDREN.—The thirty-fourth anniversary festival in aid of the funds of this institution was held on Wednesday, at the Freemasons' Tavern, the Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., in the chair, in proposing the toast of the evening, stated that the Infirmary had been founded, if not by, at least under the immediate sanction of the Dukes of Kent and Sussex; that it had gratuitously relieved upwards of 70,000 cases; that it extended its operations to about 400 a month upon the average, and that in the last month it had dispensed its blessings to 700. To celebrate these achievements, and to be enabled to continue them as efficiently as hereto- was the first object of the festival; the next was to carry out the charity, by making it an hospital as well as a dispensary, the expenses incident to which would be covered by £5000. Towards the amount the treasurer announced for the evening's subscriptions the sum of £1077.

NATIONAL VACCINE ASSOCIATION.—From the annual report of this establishment, presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty, it appears that during the past year 172,544 charges of lymph have been distributed, and 9080 children been vaccinated by the surgeons appointed in the London districts. The board have likewise received returns of 114,190 cases vaccinated with lymph supplied from the National Vaccine Establishment. The board express their regret that they have no means of adopting or enforcing such measures as are obviously necessary for the prevention of small-pox. The report concludes by stating the conviction of the board, that, if England is to be freed from the small-pox, the interposition of the Legislature alone, by wise and comprehensive measures, can disarm the pestilence of its terrors, and realise the fond hopes and prayers of the friends of humanity for its extinction.

HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE SKIN.—The anniversary festival of the Hospital for Diseases of the Skin, in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, was held at the London Tavern, on Wednesday night, under the able presidency of the Right Hon the Earl of Carlisle. A numerous attendance of friends of the institution assembled round the noble Earl. The secretary read the annual report of the proceedings of the hospital, which stated that since its establishment, in 1841, it had relieved upwards of 25,000 patients, and that 6.58 cases had been admitted during the past year. The secretary added that the accounts of the finances was satisfactory; and the subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to £700.

CITY OF LONDON TRUSS SOCIETY.—The sermon to be preached by the Rev. H. Melville, on the 12th inst., at St. Philip's Chapel, Regent-street, will be in aid of the above institution, and not of the "London Truss Society," as stated in our Journal of last week.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—The sum of £74,000 has already been expended on the official residences of the Speaker and the officers of the House of Commons, and a further sum of £30,100 will be required to complete them. The total amount of rent paid for the official residence of the Speaker and allowances for house rent to the officers of the House of Commons since 1834 to the present time was £26,896.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, April 27:—Males, 729; females, 770: total, 1499. Deaths during the same period:—Males, 491; females, 419: total, 903. This return shows a continued decrease in the mortality of London. Since the third week of March, when it rose, the weekly mortality has constantly fallen, as is shown by the following numbers:—The deaths were 1167, 1124, 893, 886, and in last week only 903. This last number is less than in any corresponding week during the ten years 1839-48, except that of 1842; and the average of the ten weeks being 959, or, corrected for increase of popu ation, 979, there now appears a decrease on it amounting to 189. All the important class of diseases exhibit now a decrease on the average in the deaths assigned to them. From small-pox there were 6 deaths, or about half the average; from measles 17, from scarlatina, 21, from hooping-cough 35, and from typhus 25, which diseases are less fatal than usual; croup was fatal to 5 persons, influenza to 4, purpura to 2, diarrhœa to 11, and erysipelas to 9, all near the ordinary amount. On the 19th of April, at No. 11, Wycombe-place, Kent-road, a carman, aged 40 years, died of "disease of the kidneys; English cholera: the latter complaint of nine hours' duration." Again, amongst the diseases which affect the respiratory organs, bronchitis carried off 46 persons (rather more than the average of ten corresponding weeks, but less than that of the last three in the year 1847-9); pneumonia, or inflammation of the lungs, about the same number, considerably less than the average. Only 6 persons died of asthma, and 110 of consumption, the corrected average being 138. A child died of laryngismus stridulus, two children of apthæ, a man of laryngitis. The deaths of 20 persons, of whom 18 were women, were the results of cancer, and all occurred between 35 years of age and 80. Seven girls and eight boys died after premature birth. Three children were suffocated accidentally in bed. Two cases of intoxication are recorded. The dissection of deaths in public institutions shows that 86 occurred in workhouses and 64 in hospitals; and of the latter, that 39 took place in general hospitals, 8 in lunatic asylums, 7 at the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, and 4 in other military and naval establishments.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the daily mean reading of the barometer was above 30 in. on Saturday; the mean of the week was 29.803. The mean temperature of the week was 46.8 deg., which is less by 2.4 deg. than the average of the same week in seven years. The mean temperature was, on Sunday, 3 deg. above the average of the same day, and on each of the other six days was below it. On every day but Thursday the wind generally blew from the north or north-east.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

IRISH POOR-LAW.

The Marquis of WESTMEATH, in presenting a petition, praying for an alteration of the Irish Poor-law, said that the British constitution was a constitution he held in the greatest respect; but he would rather live under a military despotism than under a constitution which tolerated the arbitrary proceedings of the Poor-law Commissioners. He did not choose to be at the beck and call of two hooded serpents sitting in Dublin.

PIRATES HEAD-MONEY BILL.

On the motion of EARL GREY, certain amendments were introduced into this bill, after which it was read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

FACTORY ACT.

In answer to a question from Lord Ashley, Sir G. GREY said that it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to bring in a Bill themselves for the Regulation of the Factory System. They proposed to limit the hours of labour for women and children between the hours of six in the morning and six in the evening, for five days in the week, and on Saturday between six and two. This would limit the hours of labour to ten, without allowing them so much range as at present. He made this statement in the spirit of the existing law, and not with any view of throwing an obstacle in the way of the noble Lord's intentions of introducing a measure which would not benefit the classes whose condition he sought to ameliorate. (Hear, hear.)

CANONRIES

On the motion of Mr. HORSMAN, an address to the Crown was agreed to for copies of all applications from the Dean and Chapter of Chichester, Rochester, Worcester, Canterbury, Norwich, Winchester, Peterborough, Exeter, and Southwell, for aid in the performance of the additional duties cast upon them by the Cathedral Commissioners' Act, and of the several orders, stating, in each case, the number of canonries existing at the date of the application, the duties attached to them, and the amounted granted in reply to each.

DISTRESSED UNIONS ADVANCES AND REPAYMENTS OF ADVANCES (IRELAND) BILL.

This bill, as amended in committee, was reconsidered, and the amendments agreed to.

The amendments in the Parliamentary Voters (Ireland) Bill were re-considered, and the report agreed to.

The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill passed through the committee. Adjourned.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT AT THE FRENCH EMBASSY.—His Excellency the French Ambassador and Madame Drouyn de L'Huys gave a grand entertainment last evening at the residence of the Embassy, in Belgrave-square, to the following distinguished party: His Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Cleveland, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Carlisle, the Earl of Minto, the Earl Granville, the Earl of Mulgrave, Viscount Palmerston, Lord John Russell, Lord Campbell, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, Lord Brougham, Lord Howden, the Lord Mayor of London, the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood, and Mr. Addington. The party broke up about eleven o'clock

MANSION HOUSE FESTIVITIES.—On Thursday evening the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress entertained, in the Egyptian Hall, a portion of the civic corporation, viz the common-councilmen of the following wards and their families:—Aldersgate, Aldgate, Bassishaw, Billingsgate, Bishopsgate, Bread-street, Bridge, Broad street, Candlewick, Castlebaynard, Cheap, Cordwainer, and Cornhill. Nearly all the inhabitants of his Lordship's ward (Bassishaw) were invited, including the Inquest, Lady Bacon's trustees, Bassishaw Club, and Bassishaw Friendly Club. Covers were laid for 300.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Yesterday's (Friday's) news from Paris represents that the Democratic candidates for the Seine at Lofre are likely to be returned.

The Moniteur announces that a commission has been formed charged to prepare a new electoral law. This intelligence has caused a good deal of surprise and discontent among the mixa parties, as it is believed that an attack is to be made upon the franchise. However, we have yet no particulars, nor quite ascertained that anything should be done to lessen the influence of the Socialist opponents.

The reports of a change of ministry have almost died away.

INDIA AND CHINA.

Accounts from India and China, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, were received in town yesterday (Friday) by extraordinary express. The dates are:—Bombay, April 3; Calcutta, March 25; and China, March 7. The Marquis of Dalhousie's health had wonderfully improved by his late voyage. He was about to quit Calcutta for Simla, whither the Maranioness had preceded him some days. Sir Charles Napier was at Lahore on the 22d of March, watching every movement of the Affghans, and the communication between Peshawar and Kohat was entirely closed. Captain Coke had a skirmish with some of the disaffected in the hills, and lost ten of his men. The Affredees have again proved treacherous, and succeeded in cutting off the supplies of water to the tower of Kohat, which placed the garrison in a helpless condition and the troops were consequently obliged to withdraw from that fortress. Another expedition to the hills was contemplated. The Rev. Mr. G. Pigott, late Archdeacon of Bombay, died at sea on the 24th February, on his return to England.

CHINA.

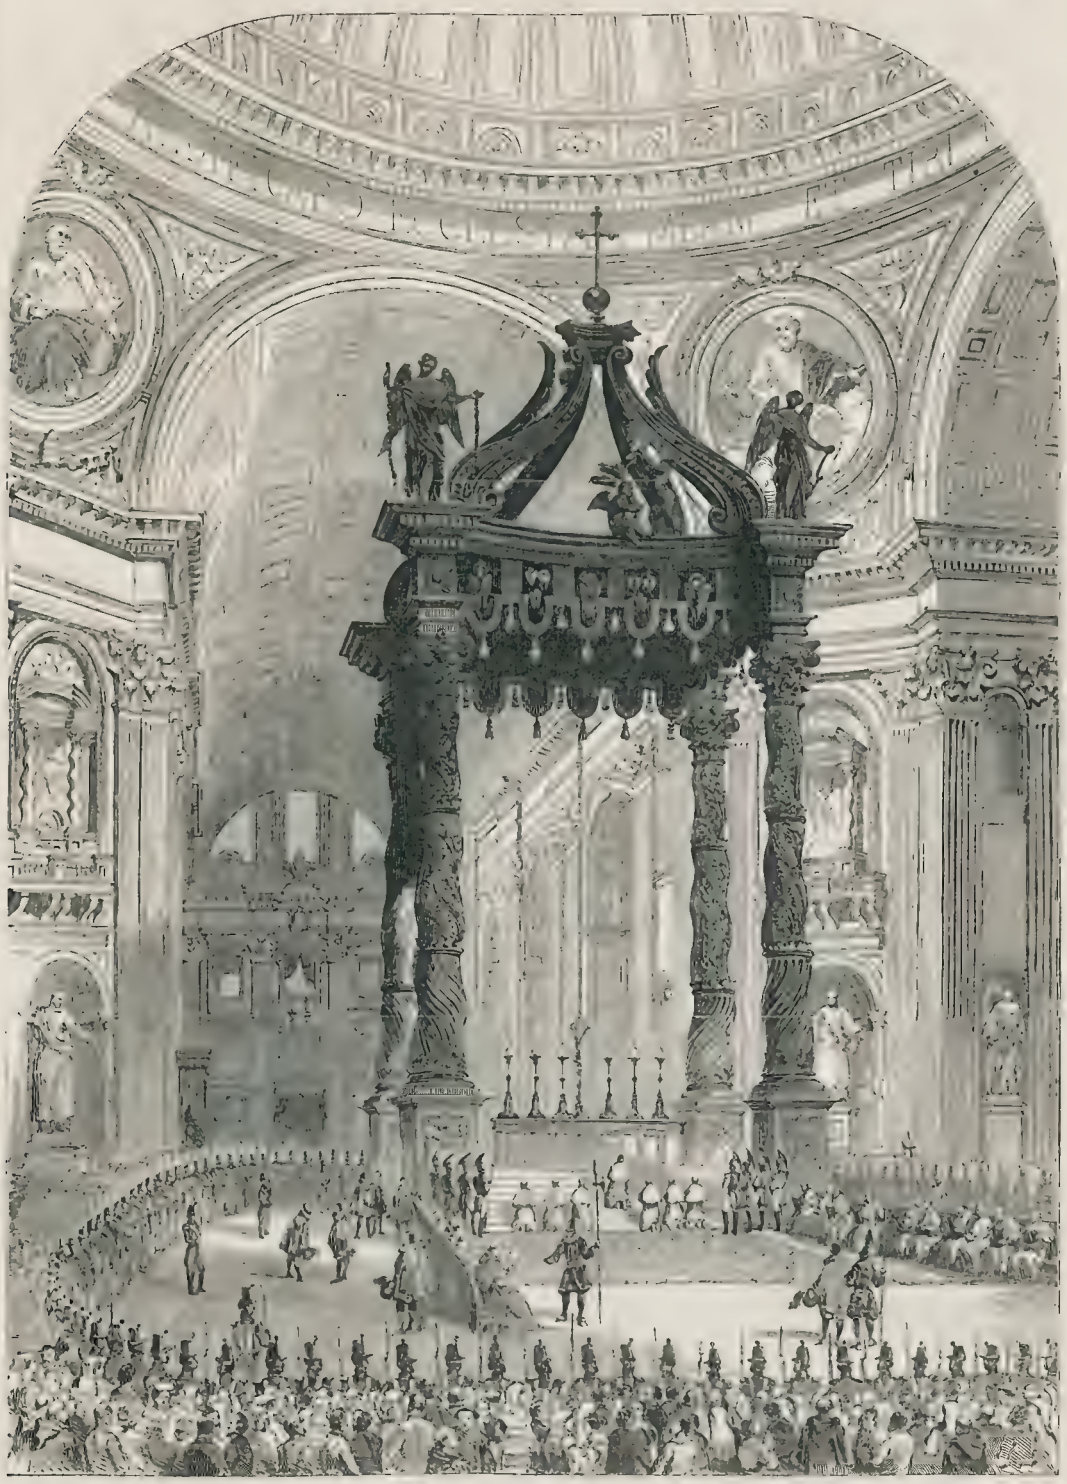
The British seamen and marines on board her Majesty's steamer Medea, Commander Lockyer, have had a gallant and victorious action with the Chinese pirates. They succeeded in capturing and destroying 13 junks, by which the sea plunderers lost 220 men killed, and 20 made prisoners, two of whom have since died [illegible] wounds. Not a single man belonging to the English party sustained the least injury.

WEST INDIES.

[illegible] arrived yesterday (Friday) bringing accounts from [illegible] and Barbadoes, to March 9. The political [illegible] The islands continued healthy. A trifling riot had taken place [illegible] Grey Town, but it was soon put down, and the ringleaders punished by flogging.

THE PROCESSION FROM THE CHURCH OF SAN GIOVANNI LATERANO TO ST. PETER'S.

RETURN OF THE POPE TO ROME.



INTERIOR OF ST. PETER'S—THE POPE AT THE GRAND ALTAR.

(Continued from page 301.)

presented a magic coup-d'œil. It was arched over at every four feet with rows of large coloured lamps, so as to give the appearance of walking under a vault of fire. The Monte Pincio, with its terraces rising above each other, and crowned by the French Academy, all distinctly made out in lines of fire, was quite a fairy scene. The Giornale di Roma, the official paper, makes the following remarks on this occasion:—"We are happy to announce, that, in consequence of the judicious measures taken by the President of Police, not even the slightest disturbance took place among so vast a multitude congregated from all parts, and that, too, not merely along the route traversed by his Holiness, but any part whatever of the city. Everywhere and concordantly prevailed order, tranquility, and joy. Rome will mark the 12th of April, 1850, among her most happy and auspicious days. Europe will now be assured that the Roman people are essentially devoted to their Sovereign and the Supreme Pontiff, and the Catholic world will learn with satisfaction, that the head of the Church has happily re-entered the Eternal City, which has been destined by Divine Providence as his seat."

TOWN TALK AND TABLE TALK.

Up and down through the political world, notwithstanding the depth of the torpor in which it is sunk, keen eyes for such sights aver that they can perceive, creeping restlessly to and fro, the gloomy and indefinite forms of those shadows which coming events project. Different seers interpret the phantasmal appearances in different fashion. To some they seem shadows of hitherto undreamt-of coalitions—of novel and startling party combinations; other soothsayers recognise in them the political ghosts which hover round the bed of a dying Parliament. And perhaps there may be some truth in the theories as rumours, hundred-mouthed gabbles of a quarrel between Mr. Disraeli and the whipper-in of his party, who it seems has been cashiered. Another oral organ of the same oracular personage—Rumour, not Mr. Disraeli—tells us that the little band which faithfully followed the fortunes of Sir Robert has broken from its allegiance, and is melting fast away. Then come the stories of the coalition-mongers. I saw a list of a combination Ministry handed about, in which Lord Johnny was translated into the Upper House; leaving, however, Sir James Graham as Chancellor of the Exchequer, with Sir Robert Peel as the new Secretary for Ireland, cheek-by-jowl with Sir George Grey upon the Treasury Bench in the Commons. I suspect that more unlikely things have—never—come to pass. In the midst of the House, the late Premier looks as isolated as the Duke of York on the top of his column. He sits and calmly watches the intriguing players, only now and then interposing with the air of a grave and good-natured ancient, calmly interested in the game which younger limbs and hotter heads are urging—now, sedately to applaud a good stroke; anon, patriarchally to offer a bit of sound advice. No buzzing, busy coterie, the nucleus of an embryo party, swarm around the ex-Minister. He sends forth no busy aide-de-camps silly to feel the pulse of the House. He issues no summonses for hasty councils in Whitehall Gardens. If ever there was a man who appeared to enjoy the retirement of political ease, and to be making no preparations whatever for a start upon a new career, that man is Sir Robert. It is quite significant to see the easy laugher with which he saunters down to the House, usually alone, occasionally leaning heavily on the arm of Mr. Sidney Herbert. It seems to say, "I am going down 'to my place,' merely for the amusement of the thing, nothing else: simply pour passer le temps. I have nothing particular to do, and I rather like to see how my old folks June as well as they used to say, and watch how Lord John manages." And this game played by Sir Robert is, oddly enough, followed closely by Sir James Graham, who sits silent and sedate upon one bench, just as his colleague upon another.

The Jack-in-the-Green is dancing beneath my windows; Mr. Merryman is cutting his antique antics; and "My Lady" is sending round the ladies for half-pence in honour of Merry May. These escapades of the gay and festive Revel, are of the most doleful kind, being nothing less than a cutting east wind and a drenching rain—a poor prologue to the drama of the brave summer-time. Nevertheless, the tokens of the advancing season become daily more numerous. Voyaging, the other day, up towards Putney, it was pleasant to see the activity of the boat-builders. Crack "eights," capacious funnies, with table and awnings, sharp-built "tan-dans," and cockle-shells of wager-boats, not weighing in all their bulk so much as a barge's oar, were being furbished up and tidied for the coming rowing time, at every boat builder's wharf; while here and there a four or six-oared, with her crew evidently in training, shot gally by the steamer. Chatting upon such aquatic matters, my companion told me of a last year's river joke which he had witnessed. A gay party left Chelsea-bridge for the pleasant sats of Richmond the purpose of the expedition being an aquatic pic-nic. Towards the going down of the sun the mirthfulness of the party reached its climax. The corks of many champagne bottles had smote the white canvas awning—the ladies' eyes were at their brightest—gentlemen's tongues at their merriest, when lo! a sudden splash in the water, a sudden surge of the boat, a sudden outcry from all the fair company. One of the party was missing! There was an instant's pause; then a lady breathlessly ejaculated, "Where—where is Mr. Smith?" The waterman's boat-hook was in his side in a moment, and in the next there appeared upon the surface, supported by the aforesaid boat-hook stuck into the collar of its coat, a blue, spluttering, sneezing face. "Where—where is Mr. Smith?" again cried the whole party in chorus. It was the boatman who was the quickest-witted amphibious man, and who gradually hoisting him further and further out of the water, answered the question by the remarkable counter inquiry of "Is this the gent?" the interrogation being put in the most perfectly placid and unperturbed manner. The drowning gentlemen were as plenty at the bottom of the Thames as mud and broken ginger-beer bottles.

And so the old Laureate is gone. It is some years since I saw him last, in the Strangers' Gallery of the House of Lords—a hard-visaged patriarch, with serene eyes and thin grey hair. A friend, who spent a portion of last autumn upon the banks of Windermere, had continual opportunities of seeing him. To poet then appeared hale and hearty. He used to wander about in a broad-brimmed straw hat, which he had brought from Leghorn. A common topic of conversation with him at that time was Mr. Layard's discoveries in Nineveh, in which he appeared to take a deep interest. The Laureate, however, was frequently disinclined to be jocular; but, from what I hear, he could hardly be said to have shone with anything like eminent lustre in the facetious line. The author of the "Excursion" was no "wag."

But two links—those of Thomas Moore and Samuel Rogers—now remain, to connect the present race with the bright galaxy of the poets who sprang from the mental clash of the great French Revolution. It is odd that the sun of the salon, the men of brilliant dinners and routes and balls, should have survived the austere-living hermits of the fields and the woods, the mountains and the lakes. Yet Southey and Wordsworth have left the Bards of Memory and the Singer of "Lalla Rookh" behind them. It is to be feared, however, that the brilliant and satiric, the witty and convivial Tom Moore, will not linger very long after his rival in a very different school. Wordsworth, notwithstanding, endured up so many a gorgeous vision, and put into satiric words so many a biting witticism, is understood to be darkened, so as to leave but little hope of any permanent recovery of its powers. Wordsworth possessed of his faculties to the end. How thoroughly he had outlived the world of ridicule which would have crushed any spirit less mildly sagacious and calmly self-relying than his! He saw many of his quondam assailants sitting at his feet, as at those of Gamaliel. I remember Alan Cunningham once saying to me, "Early in life I was infected by the blue and yellow phobia, and laughed at Wordsworth; but afterwards I saw my error, I confessed to the poet, and he forgave me!"

How constant was Wordsworth's habit of pleasing the most common things. This was, perhaps, that quality which most exposed him to ridicule. Many of my readers, no doubt, recollect the famous apostrophe to the Highland girl at Inversnaid, on Loch Lomond, ending—

> The cottage small,
> The rock, the bay, the waterfall—
> And thee! the spirit of them all!

A very few years after this was written I saw "the spirit of them all." She was a strapping middle-aged woman, engaged in loading a cart with litter from a stable!

I have mentioned Rogers as belonging to the Wordsworthian and Coleridgian era. But his reminiscences stretch further back into the brave old world—of perrwigs, and knee-breeches, and silver buckles—when gentlemen wore threecornered hats and laced coats and ruffles. Dr. Johnson carried Bozzy to Bolt-court to drink a dish of tea with Mrs. Williams. Rogers was once very near seeing Dr. Johnson, and this is how he tells the story:—

"I was a boy and I wrote boyish verses. I was proud of them myself, but I wanted better authority than my own before I took the decisive step of the grand literary autocrat, the grand builder up and puller down of literary reputations. I took counsel with myself a bright thought struck me—I plucked up courage, made up my poems in a bundle, and sallied forth to ask for nothing more than acceptance upon my rhymes. But all the way to Bolt-court my courage kept dribbling out of my fingers' ends. An interview with the great bashaw was a terrible thing, and I had nearly hazarded it. However, I would not turn back. I stalked up Bolt-court upheld by an awful resolution; I stood upon the doorstep—the Doctor's door-step; I paused for an instant, and then, with a beating heart and a trembling hand——knocked. The maid rung sharply amid the tall houses. That sound undid me. It brought the full measure of my boldness flashing before me—I paused tremblingly—I heard steps inside—it might be Frank, the black servant—it might be the Doctor himself! Awful alternatives!—I leaped off the door-step——and fled!"

Dr. Johnson died soon after, and Rogers never saw him.

Has any casual reader of art-criticisms ever been puzzled by the occurrence of three mysterious letters as denoting a new-fashioned school or style in painting lately come into vogue. The hieroglyphics in question are "P. R. B.," and they are the initials of the words "Pre Raffaelite Brotherhood." To this league belong the ingenious gentlemen who are the practitioners of "Early Christian Art," and who—setting aside the Medieval schools of Italy, the Byzantine, Guidos, and Titians, and all such small-beer daubers—devote their energies to the reproduction of saints and martyrs cut perfectly flat—as though the poor gentlemen had been martyred by being passed under a Baker's Patent—their appearance being further improved by their limbs being stuck akimbo, so as to produce a most interesting series of angles and freely-developed elbows. A glance at some of the minor exhibitions now open will prove what really clever men have been bitten by this extraordinary art-whim, of utterly banishing and disclaiming perspective and everything like rotundity of form. It has been suggested to the globe shape of the world much in the very affairs of the ingenious gentlemen in question. Sydney Smith said that Quakers would, if they could, have clothed all creation in grey. The "P. R. B." would be bold enough for their world beat it out flat, and make men and women like artfully-shaped and coloured pancakes.

A. B. H.

SECTIONAL BOATS.—A correspondent (who bears testimony to the ingenuity of Mr. Laird's invention, illustrated in our last), states this invention to have been practically carried out, at least 253 years ago, when the privateering expedition of Sir Athony Shelley and Mr. William Parker joined company at Jamaica, March 2nd, 1597. Those commanders formed a plan for crossing the Isthmus of Darien, into the Pacific; taking with them a pinnace, which was framed in six sections, to be set together with screws, when wanted.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Saturday, "Linda di Chamouni" was given for the first time this season. It is needless to remind our readers, that in this opera—up to that hour never very successful—Mdme. Sontag made her unsurpassable last season, after an absence from the stage of nearly twenty years. The performance of Saturday was looked to with much curiosity, as affording an opportunity of judging Mdme Sontag's powers as compared with those she exhibited on her first appearance last season. The result of this comparison is highly favourable, the improvement being palpable in her acting as well as in the quality and power of her voice, which practice was expected to strengthen. This was strikingly exemplified in her cavatina "Ah, luce di quest' anima," which was warmly applauded and encored; but a graceful acknowledgement of this honour was the only answer to the encachinations. Subdued feeling and an exquisite sense of the dramatic exigences of the part is expressed in every musical phrase she utters, with so little apparent art, that the dramatist's and composer's ideas are kept up in striking relief. With her habits of the highest sphere of society, still, whilst Sontag sings Linda, we see nothing but the simple-hearted mountain girl, so thoroughly does she identify herself with the part. In the scene where her father comes and implores her assistance, her struggles between shame and filial affection are admirably depicted. After the madness, which is that art most difficult about her whole performance that goes at once to the heart of the spectator. In the last act, when she is restored to reason, and recognises her parents and her beloved Carlo, the same intelligence is strongly made to share in her delight. Independent of the numerous encores, Mdme. Sontag was most warmly applauded after every passage she sang, and was twice recalled after the fall of the curtain. The other great feature of this night's performance was the second début of Signor Bancardé, in the part of Carlo. So admirably is this young artist's voice suited to the music of Verdi, that we entertained doubts of its being equally adapted to the lighter style of Donizetti. To our great surprise, however, we found that Signor Bancardé was, if possible, more at home in Carlo than in the part in which he made his first appearance. The beauty and freshness of his pure genial voice, which he manages admirably, without effort or unrestrictive control, is heard to the most distant parts of the house in the execution of the air "Linda si ritirò!" was so exquisite as to procure a general call for its repetition.

A contralto of great reputation from La Scala, Mdlle. Ida Bertrand, made her first appearance on this occasion in the part of Pierotto. She is thirty years of age, and is not handsome; but she has a powerful voice of most extended register, great science and dramatic efficiency. Her execution of the first air, "Ah! cari luoghi," though impaired by her nervousness, was such as at once to stamp her as a public favourite. Her cavatina in the second act, likewise encored, and the pains she made in singing the concerted pieces, showed her to be a thorough adept in the vocal art. Colletti and Belletti maintained their habitual supremacy, and F. Lablache was a very creditable Marchese. The magnificent chorus, "Ecco!" was encored, and the whole performance was worthy of Her Majesty's Theatre. The opera was announced for Tuesday, with the introduction of effect, except a cold which somewhat veiled the powers of Signor Bancardé.

On Thursday, Madame Sontag, as Amina, in "La Sonnambula," displayed such increase of power and dramatic spirit, with exquisite embellishment, as procured her a reception surpassing any she ever received since she came to England. To this opera succeeded a grand pas de trois, "Les Graces," in which Carlotta Grisi, Marie Taglioni, and Amalia Ferraris enraptured the audience by their pictorial, statuesque, and classical variations and pas d'ensemble. After the ballet, was given a portion of "Guillaume Tell," in which Signor Bancardé displayed more masterly powers than even his warmest admirers had dreamt of. The house was crowded to the ceiling.

Madame Sontag will appear as Semira in the charming opera of "I Puritani," on Thursday, with the new and successful tenor, Bancardé; and Lablache and Colletti in the famous "Suona la tromba." The splendid pas de trois, "Les Graces," will be repeated.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Rossini's "Donna del Lago" was performed on Saturday night, followed by the second and third acts of "Masaniello." The house was fully and fashionably attended, and the singing and acting of Grisi and Mdlle. de Meric, Tamberlik, and Mario produced much enthusiasm.

On Tuesday night, the third representation of "Zora" took place, and the opera was unanimously encored. That there should be no place under the denomination; but the finale of the third act was again attended with an excitement rarely witnessed in our theatres. The instrumental introduction to this opera was beautifully played; the duet, with its cabaletta finale, is quite exquisite. The opening chorus of lamentation, and the quatuor, with chorus in 3-4 time, "Numi pesente," were finely sung. The andantino of the duo "Ah se poi cor" was given by Mdme. Castellan and Tamberlik with the most refined sentiment. The march of the Bactrians is European: the recitative and chorus following it was cleverly got up. The most lovely duo between Anaide and Nicotri, "Tutto mi ride," was irretrievably ruined by the harshly-guttural tones of the cornetto; the only drawback in this exquisite duet. The double quartet, "Ah! cari affetti," and the prestissimo of the finale were splendidly executed. The Chorus in C minor opening the second act, "Ah! chi ne nate," is a sublime inspiration. It is curious to compare the style of this chorus with the opening chorus of Rossini, and a sensation of greater mental prostration at the visitation of the plague of darkness, have never been conveyed in music; with the melodious impulse of the young Israelites, musical and joyful, in anticipation of the German master-minds. It was superbly executed by the chorus, and the solos by Mdlle. Vera, Tamberlik, and Tamburini most artistically given. The accompaniments to the recitatives of "Zora," and the succeeding quintetto, did not elude attention, rather increasing the escaping an encore. The well-known duo between Tamberlik and Tamburini, "Parlar, spiegar," was rapturously re-demanded as usual, and the singers called for after the encore with great affection. Mdlle. Vera in the somewhat ungrateful finale of the second act for Sinaide, "Ah! d'un affitto," distinguished herself well: the instrumentation to this solo and chorus is very piquant and interesting. The gorgeous spectacle of the third act, with its Egyptian place and fête, is preceded by a march and recitatives of Osiris, the High Priest, admirably declaimed by Tagliafico. The orchestration to the recitative of Aufide (Soldi), announcing the overflow of the Nile, is another remarkable piece of writing. The rondo, "Mi manca la voce," sung with such subdued feeling by Castellan, Vera, Lavia, and Tamberlik, was unanimously encored: for thirty years this quatuor has maintained its place in the concert-rooms, and is as fresh as if written yesterday. The finale electrified the house: the marvellous energy with which the principals, band, and chorus combined to give force to the outbreak of religious rage and despotic persecution, was irresistibly impulsive, and imparted itself to the auditory, who on every occasion have not only encored the recitative, but called on the leading singers, and then insisted on the appearance of the conductor, Mr. Costa. In this finale, the chromatic cadenza of the tenor Tamberlik, delivered from the chest with thrilling power, always gains for him a spontaneous ovation amidst the "war of elements." The last act, indeed, suffers from this prodigious excitement, although it contains a charming duo between Mdme. Castellan and Tamberlik, "Quale asciutto," and a grand scena for her of immense difficulty, which she sings with consummate skill, ascending to the highest notes of the soprano, and descending to the register of the contralto, in the Paris version. A storm concludes the act, and a tableau of Egyptian life celebrated prayer, "Dal tuo stellato;" but, here, the opera ends with this last piece: during its progress the dark scene gives way to the gates of Memphis, with the departure of the Israelites for the promised land. The overture last Number, and which Grieve and Telbin have skilfully copied from the popular engraving of the Israelite departure from Egypt.

With the exception of "William Tell," there is no opera of Rossini in which his genius is more strikingly evinced than in his Parisian version of "Mose;" and although the change of subject to "Zora," the libretto of which, by the best days of the Parisian "Académie Royale," which was so completely revolutionised by his production.

Of the revival of Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," on Thursday night, we must postpone our notices until next week.

PRINCESS'.

It is within the recollection of old playgoers, that a three-act drama, taken from the French, and adapted to the English stage by Howard Payne, entitled "Therese, or the Orphan of Geneva" was produced. With the greatest success at Drury Lane Theatre, in February, 1821—Miss Kelly sustaining the part of the heroine, and Wallack, Cooper, Barnard, Knight, Gattie, Mrs. Egerton, and Mrs. Harlowe being included in the cast. A second version of this drama, called "Henriette, or the Fays of Sanange," was done the same month and year at Covent Garden Theatre, with Mrs. Vining, Mrs. Fawcit, Mrs. Davenport, Vandenhoff, Abbott, Conner, Blanchard, and Chapman; and a third adaptation was given at the Olympic Theatre. At the revival of "Therese," in 1828, at Drury Lane Theatre, with Miss E. Tree (Mrs. C. Kean), Mrs. C. Jones, Cooper, J. Vining, Webster, &c., there was so little encouragement that it was withdrawn after the first night. Charles Jeffreys has selected this subject for the libretto of Signor Schira's new opera—"Le Fanciulle di Ginevra," represented for the first time on Saturday night; and, judging from early impressions, we thought the selection judicious: but it may be doubted whether in these days the very "Victim of Circumstances" incidents of the story are not more provocative of smiles than tears—burlesque having destroyed the interest attached to well-forging and "unprotected female" villany of an adventuress, a persecuted orphan, a pining pastor, a dying sire, one lady dropping for another, and the innocence of the heroine placed beyond a doubt by the lawyer dropping his papers at the sight of a supposed spectre. Mr. C. Jeffreys has, how ever, treated his subject with more than his usual ability, and is clearly the superior of the libretto-concoctors. The composer's music must raise his reputation consider- If not remarkable for creative genius, it is full of dramatic effect and melodious and graceful, if not strikingly original—infinitely more acceptable than the would-be profound and elaborately tiresome school, too often the cant of consummate musicianship. The overture, which was encored, is the least successful piece—it is noisy and over-crowded with subjects. The opening chorus for female voices is pretty; there is a very clever unaccompanied sestette, "What fearful mystery," which was re-demanded; and the finale of the first act displayed Signor Schira's skill in the combination of choral and orchestral effects. The part-song, in the German form, in the second act, "The flocks are in the fold," is both skilful and poetical. The duo, "Turn not from me those lovely eyes," is full of passion; and the duo, "Hear me, nor tremble," is also good. The trio and canone, "My tears and prayers," is ingenious and appropriate; and the finale, in which there is a prayer, "Guardian Angel," nicely harmonised, is effective; and the bravura of the "Orphan," with the axiom, after having been accused of forgery, robbery, and assassination—that "All is for the best," enabled Miss Louisa Pyne to excite her auditory by her brilliant vocalisation. One fault in this opera is that there are too many solos—five for the prima donna (Therese), two for the tenor (Count de Morville, Mr. Allen), a buffa polka aria for Mr. Wynn (Levine), a bass song for Mr. Weiss (Carwen), and a duto for Mr. R. Latter (Picard). Miss Villars was the Countess de Morville, Miss Sunders Bridget, and Mr. H. Corri Fondeque. Of these airs, those sung by Miss L. Pyne, "A poor unfriended outcast," "My young days are o'ershadowed," and "Let me soar on the wings," charmingly instrumented with harp obligato and by Mr. Allen, "Unhappy maid," are elegant and felicitous effusions. The principal singers and Signor Schira were called for; but it is to Miss Louisa Pyne's delightful singing that the composer is greatly indebted for success, as the general execution, especially of the concerted pieces, was weak and unsteady. The "Orphan of Geneva" will alternate successfully with Auber's "Gustavus" until the close of the season, when opera will cease; and, in October, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean entre upon the dramatic management, with the Keeleys. London will then possess a really welcome theatre for English opera, being the only capital in Europe in which this anomalous state of "things musical" will exist.

DRURY-LANE.

On Wednesday, the tragedy of "Sophocles," with the music of Mendelssohn, in which Mr. and Miss Vandenhoff several years since won a high reputation as the Creon and Antigone, was reproduced on a similar scale to that on the previous occasion. The acting of the principal performers was again distinguished by its classical dignity; and that of Miss Vandenhoff merits especial mention for its sustained passion and statuesque beauty. The chorus, as on the former production of the drama, was entirely unobservable; but the difficulty of the task must be taken into account. The severity of the classical style cannot but act beneficially on the taste of the public; and the occasional exhibition of it is therefore to be encouraged.

LYCEUM.

The "Island of Jewels" having run a hundred nights, the performances at this theatre have been varied. Previous to the new piece of "Cymon and Iphigenia" on the occasion of "Not a Bad Judge" and "Dulcet Ground" were revived on Monday; and, on Wednesday, "Charles the Twelfth," concluding with "Two in the Morning." The Easter spectacle continues attractive.

SADLER'S WELLS.

On Tuesday evening the play of "Retribution" was performed for the author' benefit, on which occasion his daughter made her début in the part of Alice Raby and produced a favourable impression.

SURREY.

A new three-act drama, entitled "The Fugitive, or Duty and Honour," by Mr. Moreno, was produced on Monday. The fugitive is Private Charles Edmond (Mr. Shepherd), who claims protection from Lady Catherine Forbes (Mdme. Ponisi), and thereby so compromises the lady, that her husband, Sir Duncan Forbes (Mr. Creswick), is continually excited to suspicion and jealousy. The wife is compelled to resort to all manner of expedients and subterfuges, which give to the drama the interest and perplexity of a comedy of intrigue. The imbroglio is exceedingly well managed, and the end is reached by a powerful effective. It would have been well, however, if the entire treatment had been comic, as the attempt to impart a passionate colouring to the distresses of the husband partly fails from the unreality of the motive. The piece was very efficiently acted, and commanded the applause of a numerous audience.

The entertainments of the evening concluded with a domestic drama, founded on the story in Dickens's Household Words of "Lizzie Leigh," Lizzie being performed by Jane Coveney, and Susan Palmer by Mdme. Ponisi. The adaptation has shown much skill in the arrangement of the subject, and, by the interposition of a humourous scene or two, has contrived to mitigate the pain of the serious situations. The piece was successful.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

On Monday night the Amateur Musical Society gave their fifth concert at the Hanover Rooms, Mr. John Parry, on the same evening, had his entertainment at Willis's Rooms, "Lights and Shadows;" and Mr. Henry Phillips gave his Diddin selection at St. Martin's Hall.——Miss Hinckesman's concert took place on Monday evening, at the Sussex Hall, aided by Miss M. Hinckesman, pianiste; M. de Kontski, violinist; Richardson, the cornetist; J. Case, concertina, the Clebrat, guitarists; and F. Chatterton, harp. The vocalists were Misses Birch, Rainforth, Ransford, Owen, Eliza Birch, Mdlle Magner, Madame F. Lablache; Messrs Harman, Bodda, Orlt, Mdlle, A. Novello, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Macfarren, Mr. Benedict and Lavenu conductor.——At the second meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society, No. 3 in D, No. 8 in E minor, and No. 12 in E flat, were played by Ernst, Cooper, Sainton, and Piatti. Mr. Blagrove's and Mr. Henry Phillips gave their Diddin selection at St. Martin's Hall.——At the ninth of the new series of London Wednesday Concerts, Beethoven's "Egmont" was repeated; Dreyschock was the pianist; the vocalists were Madame Caradori Allan, Miss Birch, Messrs. W. S. Bennett and Rousselot tion. The Countess has a pretty melody in the third act, and then a passionate duo with Latimer. The Queen sings a ritornella with flute obligato :—

C'est un rêve de poesie,
Le songe même sans effets.

And then succeeds a duo between Falstaff and Shakspeare, a romance, and the finale. The opera will, no doubt, have a great run.

Alboni reappeared at the French Grand Opera, last Wednesday and Friday, as a concert-singer. She was received with the greatest enthusiasm, in the rondo finale from "Cinderella," and the "Brindisi" from "Lucrezia Borgia," the cavatina from "Semiramide," an air by De Beriot, and a duo from "Tancredi." She will sing again next Friday; and in the ensuing week will make her début as Leonora, in Donizetti's "Favorita," in which she has already sung in French at Brussels, Antwerp, Ghent, Marseilles, Lyons, Toulouse, Bordeaux, &c.; and she will also appear as Pulce, in the "Prophète." Madame Laborde has achieved a great triumph also since her appearance at the Grand Opera, in the "Huguenots," in "Lucia," in Rosina in the "Barbière," for Barrolhet's benefit.—Last Sunday a benefit for the victims of Angers took place at the Théâtre Italien. Angri singing in the first act of "Il Barbiere," and Madame Ronconi. Morlani, and Ronconi in "Maria di Rohan."——The Philharmonic Society has given its fourth and last concert for this season at the Salle Ceclie. Portions of Berlioz's "Damnation de Faust," Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," directed by Berlioz, the "Athaliah" overture of Mendelssohn, a march by David, violin solos by De Kontski, and airs by Madame Laborde and M. Roger, were included in the scheme.

——The first representation in Berlin of Meyerbeer's "Prophète" has not yet been taken place last Sunday (the 28th ult.), for the début of Viardot in Fidès (in German). It appears that such was the interest created to be present at this performance, that the offices were crowded the night before the morning of letting places as early as nine o'clock, and the applicants formed three distinct queues or lines, under the organisation of the police of Berlin—constabliers, as they are termed.

FINE ARTS.

HISTORIC RELIQUES. Drawn from the Originals and Etched by JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS. Part I.

The Engravings in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS so frequently bear evidence of the spirit of revivalism which characterises the art-manufactures of the present day, that we need scarcely add a word to direct the attention of public taste. It has, without doubt, suggested the present work; which, besides being a sort of museum for the historian and antiquary, will have claim upon both the artist and the manufacturer for the beautiful examples of form and style which it is the object to present for their admiration and adoption. The several Reliques, it is proposed, shall have historical attraction as well as artistic excellence, and when we recollect how much is now to be seen in treasures is possessed by distinguished families, and the readiness with which they are placed at the disposal of artists, we may anticipate interest of a very superior character, as well from the illustrators selected as from the accompanying descriptive matter. In this way, will be further established with engravings of the olden depositories of the Reliques, and illuminated initials of a corresponding period.

The "Historic Reliques" will be issued in parts, each including three etchings, coloured. The part before us contains a pair of Silver-gilt Andirons, originally made for King William the Third, and kept in the Gold-Plate Room at Windsor Castle. Each is surmounted by a boy bearing a basket of fruit, and the acanthus, laurel, and palm, are the main embellishments.

Next is a pair of Candelabra, now in the Cathedral of St. Baveo, at Ghent, but which formerly belonged to Charles I. They are of copper, once gilt, and upwards of ten feet in height. As a tail-piece to the letterpress is a nicely engraved vignette of Whitehall, circa 1670.

Thirdly, are a Cup and two Salts, of silver-gilt, known as the "Founder's Plate" of Christ's College, Cambridge, and originally the property of Margaret, Countess of Richmond. The Andit Cup is enriched with strawberry-leaves, roses, oak-leaves, and acorns, in bands, and the creating and pierced-work are very beautiful. From the arms which the Cup bears it is supposed to have belonged to the Protector, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. The Salts are enriched with the rose, portcullis, and fleur-de-lis.

The objects engraved in this Part are good specimens of the historic interest and artistic character which it is proposed to blend in the work. The Illustrations and details are alike in con amore spirit; the artist-author luxuriates in his vocation, and the result is redound to his taste and judgment. The work is published at a low rate (for books of this class), and it deserves to become popular.

THE DIORAMA OF IRELAND, CHINESE GALLERY.—On Monday his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Col. Gordon, honoured this exhibition with his presence, to inspect the picture of Ireland. The Prince expressed himself greatly pleased with the reality of the various scenes as they passed before him, of which he had evident recollection: Glengariff seemed especially to interest his Royal Highness from the grandeur and beauty of the scene. Upon leaving the gallery, Prince Albert complimented Mr. Phillip Phillips on the excellence of his painting.

MR. HARVEY'S LECTURES AND DISSOLVING VIEWS.—We have already noticed the atmospheric American landscapes of Mr. Harvey, exhibited at the Gallery of Illustration, in the Haymarket, as being distinguished for their characteristic minuteness of detail. On Friday that gentleman delivered a lecture on American scenery, accompanied with a profuse series of dissolving views, exemplifying, for their precise truth and peculiar beauty. They have indeed high merits as works of art, and altogether are the most delicious things that we have lately witnessed.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS DAY, AT NEWMARKET.

THAT which the Derby is at Epsom, and the Cup at Ascot, is the anniversary of the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes at the metropolis of the Turf. With such appliances of place and means of circumstance, it is the climax of horse racing. It concentrates the élite of the sporting circles; it sets before them the most famous courses of the world in their "way of life," and that, too, "in a body" which, so to speak, is to the matter made. The weather was fresh and fair upon this accountable occasion, which fell, in the present year, on Tuesday last. A gala is nothing withoutits lion: ours has one that "roars you like any sucking dove." Which would be the very last spot in this planet where you might expect to meet with a race horse? An Epsoty Court. . . . You will conceive, then, what sort of a sensation awaited those who assembled at Newmarket in April, 1850, where they were about to see in the first favourite for the approaching Derby a ward of Chancery! That is to say, should they be fortunate enough to encounter him in his morning walk: access to his presence at home could only be had by passing over the remains of a sentinel, that kept watch and ward over him night and day with a double-barrelled gun. Such is Bolingbroke as these presents the first of his species, probably, that ever occupied the post of honour at Tattersall's under the especial auspices of the Lord Chancellor.

It is the forenoon of the great Olympic festival: scene, an antique, straggling street, about which are scattered a Royal palace, an aristocratic club, and other orders of the fashionable society from the Corinthian to the plebeian midnight. Adown it wind slowly long "strings" of horses, and hurry solitary youths in search of accessory swaddling-clothes, returning from their assigned exercises—these from acquiring power, and those from "wasting." The "Rooms" with Lords and Legers overflow; and stars and garters mingle in communion with fustian jackets, and faces which compliment the "wide-awakes," from beneath whose ample brims they peer, "as keen but not so polished as your sword." It is an hour beyond noon, and the senne is removed to the Heath. Few, and at wide intervals, move the chariots; but the horsemen are legion. Of the horsewomen, who may essay to speak fitturgy? Mark you who manages that peerless brown charger, with matchless grace? It is the Countess of Sefton. Who are those riders twain of beauty? Sixteen are they —the ladies Keane and Pigott. The racing has begun. It opens with a sweepstake over the Derby course, the goal of which is the Bunnoo Beebee. Then comes the Journey is a long one—the first to reach home being the Duke of Bedford's Quasimodo. Then follows the Coffee-Room Stakes, ending in a dead heat between a filly of Lord Orford's and a colt of the Duke of Bedford's. To this succeed the race of the day, the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes—27 subscribers and half a dozen runners. The appearance of the Heath exceeds all former precedent; such a multitude was never seen at Newmarket. Fifty thousand persons for their entertainment was so low, both in quality and quantity. The field is a wretched sample—not one in it even second-rate. The race—Pitsford is first by a neck, and Beshunter (second) beats Hardinge only by a like distance. But the winner could have achieved a more brilliant victory had it been so will'd. Alfred Day, who rode him with the energy of youth and the caution of long experience, never "came" till half way up the hill inside the cords; he could have made it a couple of lengths had it been the discretion of the stable. Pitsford won't win the Derby. Will Bolingbroke, the Chancery champion? So many good judges surmise; but James Robinson, the maestro of the course, is said, also, to be so ill that he may not be able to ride him. William Scott, we are in hot case would peradventure be "up," is excellent of fidelity, but not so famous for horsemanship. What a riddle is Epsom!

Next week the venue will be laid on the banks of the Dee, the crack race of the meeting being on the list for Wednesday; the field, there is little doubt, will be large enough to allow for three ranks—a processing rendered indispensable by the narrowness and shape of the course: those who get good places will have the best of it; but, irrespective of this, John Day's powerful lot seems like y to run it to use a sporting phrase, it will be "hard to beat." The racing will occupy four days, commencing on Tuesday, and, even without the aid of heats, which we hear have been abolished, will leave nothing to complain of on the score of quantity. The importance of this meeting has induced the cricketing and aquatic authorities to keep their calendars "blank."

NEWMARKET FIRST SPRING MEETING.—MONDAY.

HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES of 25 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Newport (Pettit), 1. Colonel Peel's Vass (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 300 sovs each.—Col. ANSON's Don Juan (F. Butler) 1. Mr. R. H. Nevill's Lotitia (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs. Mr. Stevens's Knight of Gwynne (Marlow), 1. Duke of Richmond's Harum Scarum (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each.—Mr. Newton's Falcon (Rogers), 1. Mr. W. Stebbing's Osbaldeston (F. Butler), 2.

FIFTY POUNDS.—Mr. W. S. Stanley's Fire-eater (Chappel), 1. Mr. W. Stebbing's Weslow (Bashan), 2.

MATCH, 200, h ft.—Lord H. Lennox's William the Conqueror received forfeit rom Lord W. Fowlett's c by John o' Gaunt.

TUESDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 300 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Quasimodo (F. Butler), 1. Lord Eglinton's Testator (Marlow), 2.

THE COFFEE-ROOM STAKES of 50 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Bordeaux and Lord Orford's f. by Slane ran a dead heat. The Duke of Bedford and Lord Orford having agreed to divide the stakes, Bordeaux walked over.

QUEEN'S PLATE of 100 guineas.—Duke of Bedford's St. Rosalia (F. Butler), 1. Lord Exeter's Prophaca (Flatman), 2.

THE TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES of 100 sov. each.—Mr. H. Hill's Pitsford (A. Day), 1. Lord H. Lennox's Beshunter (N. Templeman), 2

WEDNESDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Duke of Bedford's Bordeaux (F. Butler), 1. Mr. Combe's Necklace (R. Cotton), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Mr. Payne's Crucible (Flatman), 1. Lord Clifden's Enchantress (Pegg), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each. —Mr. Ramsbottom's Beebee Bunnoo (S. Mann), 1. Lord Glasgow's c. by Inheritor or Jerry (Flatman), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Lord Lennox's Beshunter (Flatman), 1. Mr. Howard's Chieftain (A. Day), 2.

PLATE of 50 sovs.—Mr. W. Edwards's Whitstone (W. Boyce), 1. Col. Peel's Vass (Flatman), 2.

HANDICAP SWEEPSTAKES of 20 sovs each.—Mr. Barne's Sotterly (Flatman), 1. Mr. C. Marson nd. Plus IX. (Pettit), 2.

SWEEPSTAKES of 50 sovs each.—Duke of Rutland's Ondine (Boyce), 1. Mr. Combe's The Trump (R. Cotton), 2.

HANDICAP PLATE of 50 sovs.—Duke of Rutland's Fire-eator (Chapple), 1. Captain Lowther's Watchdog (Dockeray), 2.

THURSDAY.

SWEEPSTAKES for Three-year-olds.—Falcon, 1. Colt by The Nob, out of Harmony, 2.

SWEEPSTAKES for Two-year-olds.—Ch. f. by Slane, out of Receipt, 1. Beaufort, 2.

THE ONE THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES. -Exotic filly, 1. Tiff, 2. Won by a head.

QUEEN'S PLATE.—Yeruhill, 1. Rotall, 2. Fire-eater, 3.

FRIDAY.

HANDICAP.—Harkaway filly out of Cerunna's dam, 1. Goodwood, 2.

THE NEWMARKET STAKES.—Carriboo, 1. Nutshell, 2.—Won by a length.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J W B.—Chess is a game of chivalry. In all cases where a lady plays with a gentleman, she must be permitted to discuss terms.

Y R, Cambridge.—You have forgotten to forward the solution

E D M.—Likeness and improbability as the task too often proves to be, we examine every game and problem that reaches us Whenever you favour us with a position at all comparable to that which you have so unfairly disparaged, we shall be but too ready to acknowledge its merit

K G.—See our notice to ARGUS, in the last Number

W G The principle upon which your four-move Problem is composed, though clever and ingenious, has become hackneyed of late

BIB to S—A private communication has been forwarded

MAJOR J, St Petersburgh.—An acknowledgment has been despatched through a sure channel

BORDERER.—The Anniversary Festival of the Yorkshire Chess Association is appointed to be kept at the Assembly-Rooms, Leeds, on Wednesday, the 22nd of May. Applications for tickets should be made to the honorary secretary, Mr. Wheelhouse, 3, Belgrade-street, Leeds

C H S.—The Europes has duly brought us the remaining games of your Washington Match, and those of the late contest between Messrs Lowenthal and Turner We shall look anxiously for your games with the former; and shall expect them, and Mr Dudley's by the next mail. Should the latter not be promptly forwarded, will take case the "nominations" are not forgotten

W G.—An obvious mate in three moves

ASPIRANT.—Mediocrity is safe. Be content with the position you have reached—

PHILO-DIDACTUS.—Thanks for the communication

B W F.—We cannot decipher the biography or plan of your diagrams. If you would simply give black squares, writing on them the initials of the pieces—as W K for White King, B Q for Black Queen, and the like all would be easy enough for us, and easy for you

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—It is a great mistake to suppose that the Chess Enigmas we give each week are inferior to the Problems, because the latter have diagrams. The Enigmas are in every respect equal to them, and frequently superior

S T, Barrow.—You are indeed welcome. The play will commence at 10 A.M., and the dinner take place at six in the evening

QUERYTE. You can claim a Queen, or any other Piece you choose, for every Pawn which reaches his 8th sq, without reference to what Pieces you may at the time have on the board

DEVON.—1. The ten volumes of the Chess-Player's Chronicle, to be had of Hastings, the publisher, of Cheap street. 2 Get Bilguer's celebrated German treatise

ZOLTAN.—The new man of the club age is surely a truly regal set of chess pieces, may now be seen at Loudon's, in Piccadilly, from whom, too, you will probably obtain the rules. and list of members for the Westminster Club

SOLUTION By the actual subscription to the St George's Chess Club including free access to the fencing, Polytechnic, Institution, and the use of a library, reading-room, &c., is three guineas per annum, and one guinea for country residents. No entrance fees, and no responsibility whatever We are surprised there should ever be a vacancy.

AMATEUR, Manchester They shall be examined

H M, Richmond.—Your "first attempt," as might be expected, is a failure. Try again, you will meet with more success next time

SOLUTIONS By P G N, DERWON, BLACK AND WHITE, ARGUS, S P Q N, M P, F R S, A HUGELEY, D D, Oxford; B W, Oxford; ETONIENSIS, G, Brighton College; C A M K, BELLARY, J A W, ST. EDMUND, G S, Romford Chess-club; AN AMATEUR, Manchester; HERMAN M B D, Leicester; Rev C S L, Rev H M, Rev G V H, are correct. All others are wrong

C M J.—Its only fault is being too obvious BELLARY.—Many thanks

NEW The answers to many Chess common curious are unavoidably deferred, for want of room.

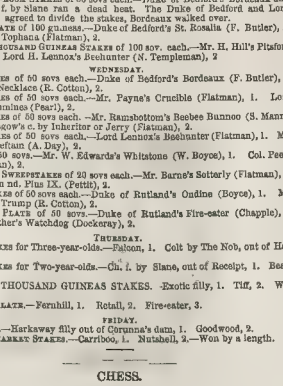
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 327.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to K sq.	Anywhere	3. P to K B 4th—Mate.
2. Kt to Q B 4th (ch)	Anything

PROBLEM NO. 328.

By H. B. B., of Lynn.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

SECOND MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM

WHITE (London).	BLACK (Amsterdam).
	5. K Kt to B 3d

London to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 668.—By Mr. W CAWLEY.

White: K at K Kt 7th, R at Q 4th, Bs at K Kt 2d and K B 8th, P at K B 4th.
Black: K at his 3d, R at Q R 7th, Kts at K B 7th and Q R sq, Ps at Q B 5th and Q R 2d.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 669.—By HERR KLING.

White: K at Q 2d, R at K 8th, Kts at K 3d and Q 8 4th, P at Q Kt 2d.
Black: K at Q 8th, Kts at Q B 4th and Q Kt sq; Ps at K B 3d, K 5th, and Q Kt 6th.

White, playing first, mates in three moves.

No. 670.—By Mr. J. R. EDDEY.

White: K at K Kt 6th, Rs at Q 8th and Q B 3d, Bs at K R 2d and Q R 2d Kts at Q 7th and Q B sq; Ps at K Kt 2d, K B 6th, and Q 4th
Black, K at K 5th, Rs at Q 7th and Q Kt 2d, B at K 6th, Kts at K Kt 2d and Q R 4th, P at Q Kt 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

After a discussion which had occupied three sittings, the National Council of Berne has just decreed, by a majority of 64 to 36, that the French monetary system shall be carried out in Switzerland. As the Council of the States had already voted it in December, this decree of Federal Assembly now becomes an obligatory law.

At the suggestion of her Majesty, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are about to make a series of important improvements in the district of Kensington. The houses in High-street, directly opposite the Queen's-road, newly formed, will be thrown down, and a road will be constructed therefrom into Brompton; a direct communication from the latter place to Bayswater will be thus acquired. The old barracks at Kensington will be thrown down, and a new pile of buildings will be erected in lieu of them in another parter of the grounds.

On Saturday last, the authorities at the National Gallery received the official instructions for the removal of the Vernon collection from Trafalgar-square to Mar.borough House, the residence of the late Queen Dowager, where the collection will be opened to the public inspection on Whit-Monday.

The Marquis of Clanricarde, her Majesty's Postmaster-General, has appointed Frederick R. Jackson, Esq., president of the Money-Order Office in London.

The British Museum was closed on Tuesday, the 30th day of April, till Tuesday the 7th inst., for the purpose of the reading rooms and Museum being thoroughly cleansed, when it will be again re-opened to the public.

A free pardon has been granted by her Majesty to Thomas Denny, convicted at the last assizes for Surrey, at Kingston, for the murder of his child. This decision has been arrived at in compliance with the recommendation of the judge (Baron Manle) who tried the case.

The inhabitants of the rising port and town of Lowestoff have unanimously elected their fellow townsman, Richard Till, Esq., late secretary of the Norfolk Railway Company, Burgomaster, and a fête will be shortly given to commemorate his entering upon the duties of his office. This is the first election of a Burgomaster in England.

On Saturday was printed a parliamentary paper of 21 folio sheets, containing an abstract of the accounts of loan societies to the 31st December last, by John Tidd Pratt, Esq., the barrister appointed to certify the rules of savings banks. From this document it appears that there are 190 loan societies, all of which, except one in Wales, are in England. The number of applications for loans in 1849 was no fewer than 69,642, of which number loans were made to 36,110.

One of the effects of free-trade at present experienced is that the bakers in the eastern and other portions of the metropolis are selling their bread at 4½d. and 5d. per 4lb. loaf, weight on delivery. A rather gratifying fact is that the poor's-rate at Mile-end has been reduced to 7d. in the pound.

On Sunday morning last a service was performed in the chapel of King's College in aid of the funds of the hospital in Fertugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields. The sermon was delivered by the Rev. T. Dale, M.A., and in the course of a very warm appeal to the rev. gentleman alluded both to the densely populated district of King's College Hospital and to the many thousands of persons who had participated in its benefits. 19-20ths of that number having been admitted without letters of recommendation. At the conclusion of Divine service a liberal collection was made in aid of the hospital funds

On Saturday last, Thomas Bonham, aged fifteen, son of Mr. Robert Bonham, butcher, Wraddon, Oxfordshire, took up a gun belonging to his father, placed a percussion cap on it, and was walking out of the shop or slaughter-house, when the gun (a very old and imperfect piece) exploded, and the contents went completely through the head of his sister Mary, aged thirteen, who was a few yards before her brother. An inquest was held. Verdict, "Accidentally killed."

On Monday last a melancholy accident befel the youngest son of William Williams, Esq., one of the magistrates of Northampton. He was out riding with a friend, and on their return home Mr. Williams's horse broke into a canter, and finally got beyond the control of his rider, who either fell or threw himself off. The injuries he received were so serious that life was almost extinct when he was taken up, and he had expired before he reached his father's house.

The Lincolnshire wheat crops this season are looking remarkably well—especially in the fen-country there appears to be a large breadth of wheat than usual growing this year; of potatoes (until lately only grown by cottagers) there will be an immense supply—many farmers have planted large fields. Mustard is also well looked to as a winter crop, and those who plant lands sowed for its growth are again trying their luck to a considerable extent. Amongst the changes taking place, we may notice a disposition on the part of the landlords to allow their tenants to break up old impoverished grazing lands. The labourers are generally employed at 9s. and 10s. a week.

The Roman Catholic Poor Schools Committee, under the auspices of the secretary, Mr. Stokes, have just issued an able report on the subject of education, containing some valuable information as to the actual state and spiritual dereliction in the country, and the dreadful state in which myriads of poor children are rapidly rising up in ignorance and crime.

The Hon. H. Dudley Ward and friend, Mr. Holyoake, whilst angling in the Nene, at the Island Pit, near Oundle, on Saturday last, had their attention suddenly attracted by a splashing and rushing sound, when they saw Garby (Inverness-shire), have captured forty-two clean salmon, weighing from 10 to 20lb.; and two trout, weighing 6 and 7½ lb. April 15, 1850.

"I remember," said Mr. Ingoldsby (lecturing before the Royal Dublin Society on tobacco), "when I was quite young, seeing a fine print, by one of the old masters, of a burley Dutchman lounging in a capacious arm-chair, 'blowing a cloud' from his beloved pipe. Underneath was this motto, 'Tobacco is a vanity,' but I asked my father what it meant. 'Why,' said he, 'it has two meanings: first, 'The glory of the world is smoke;' and, second, 'Smoking is the glory of the world'"

On Sunday morning, about three o'clock, a house in Foster-lane, immediately behind the General Post-office, was burnt down. The inmates were rescued by means of a fire-escape, but were all more or less burnt in reaching the front window, by which alone they could gain access to the fire-escape. On the previous evening, at a fire in Shoreditch, seven persons escaped by similar means without injury.

G. S. Foljambe, Esq., of Osberton, is about to build a handsome church, to cost, at least, £6000, at Brearly, near Barnsley. Briefly, in which Mr. Foljambe owns considerable property, principally agricultural, is thickly populated, and two miles from the nearest church, which is at Hemsworth.

At King's College (London), Halid Bin Ali Bin Allah, a native of the East, who has been for some time studying medicine in this country, was elected on Friday, April 26, an associate.

An eminent Liverpool merchant having some time ago forwarded a shipment of coals to Rio de Janeiro, was recently favoured with the returns in the shape of a claim for £37 14s. 6d., showing the rather unusual result of a loss of more than everything.

The late John Fooler, Esq., of Priory House, Kenilworth, bequeathed the following legacies to public institutions:—To the Church Missionary Society for Africa and the East, £100; to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, £100; to the Bishop of Jerusalem for the time being, £100; to the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, £100; to the Society for Promoting Church Accommodation, within the Archdeaconry of Coventry, £50.

The marriage of the Duke of Genoa, brother of the King of Sardinia, with the daughter of Elisabeth of Saxony, was celebrated at Dresden on the 21st inst.

The Archdeacon of London has issued a notice to the Rev. Henry Hutton, M.A., Rector of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, of his intention of holding his annual visitation to the clergy of the metropolis at the parish of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, on this day (Saturday), at eleven o'clock precisely.

On Saturday, the new church of St. Stephen's, Kent-street, Southwark, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of London

A horse belonging to Mrs. Ball, Marsh-lane, Leeds, died, after being ill for a day or two, on the 29th of March, and on a post mortem examination of the animal being made by Mr. Carter, smith and farrier, two round stones were found in the stomach. The largest weighed 4½lb., and the other upwards of 13oz. They were quite smooth, and there is little or no doubt they were the cause of the animal's illness and death. They have this week been presented to the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society by Mr. Jowett, of York-place.

An amended bill to regulate the receipt and amount of fees receivable by certain officers in the Court of Common Pleas, has been printed. Fees are to be entered into a book and accounted for to the Treasury. On vacancy in the office of Senior Master, they may be reduced. Compensation may be granted to persons affected by the act.

A marine named Thompson last week performed the extraordinary feat of walking from the Marine barracks, Chatham, to London-bridge and back, in 24 hours and a quarter. He was dressed in heavy marching order—that is, great-coat, knapsack, musket, bayonet, belts, cartouche-box, and 60 rounds of ball cartridge. He accomplished the first 12 miles in less than two hours.

Last week, two privates of the 74th Highlanders, stationed at Clonmel, committed suicide by shooting themselves through the head—the one on Monday evening, the other on Tuesday morning. They were totally unacquainted with each other, though in the same regiment

A vessel which has arrived from New York has brought 58 barrels of mutton, as a portion of her cargo consigned, the produce of the United States of America. No previous importation of this description of animal food has taken place from the United States, either in a fresh or salted condition, if we except some small importations, at uncertain intervals, of hams made from mutton legs, and termed mutton hams, and which, not being smoked and entirely prepared for use as hams, according to the common acceptation of the term, have been admitted duty free.

Mr. Spooner, M.P. for North Warwickshire, has been suffering for several days from severe indisposition We are happy, however, to state that the hon. gentleman is considered convalescent; and there is little doubt, in a few days, he will be able to resume his parliamentary duties

Two meetings, the one at Preston, the other at Bradford, were held on Monday evening, to petition Parliament in favour of extending and improving national education on the secular and local basis. Resolutions in accordance with this anti-church view of the subject were passed unanimously.

A parliamentary return of the amount of money expended in our dockyards, at home and abroad, since the year 1832, has been printed. The smallest amount during these 31 years was in the year 1835-34, when it was £903,850. The largest amount was in 1847-48, when it reached £1,470,062. Last year it was £1,399,014.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

CRINOLINE HAT, FOR OPERA, &c.

The simplicity which hitherto seemed to be the peculiar attribute of the fashions for this season, has given place to an extreme elegance, that reminds one strongly of the middle ages. We have never seen ladies wear so many ornaments. Bonnets, dresses, and mantles are trimmed all over with puffings of net, flowers and lace. A great change has taken place in the width of the skirts, which, from being very large, are now worn almost narrow. Ball dresses à tablier (viz. with an apron trimming) are much in vogue, covered with puffings of net; the three flounces of lace forming the trimming at the bottom of the dress have all a puffing of net at the top of them, the whole being fastened to the apron with a rosette of ribbon. A precious gem is usually in the centre of the rosette, either diamond, emerald, or ruby, according to the colour of the dress. Wreaths are worn very full, composed of flowers and fruits of every kind: they are placed on the forehead, and the bunches at the end of them are long, and fall on the neck. Bouquets in the shape of bunches are put high up on the body of the dress. Such is the mania for mixing fruits of every kind, that some even wear small apples, which are, however, infinitely less graceful than bunches of currants, grapes, and tendrils of the vine. So decided is the love of massive ornaments, that roses and poppies of enormous dimensions are preferred. Wreaths of delicate flowers, lightly fastened together, falling upon the shoulders, are, however, always the prettiest for young persons of middle or slight stature, who cannot well carry off these heavy garlands of fruits.

CRINOLINE HAT.

STRAW HATS, FOR PROMENADE.

Worsted lace is the height of the fashion for mantles, which are trimmed with quillings of this article, plaited in the old style. Glacés silks, deep blue and yellow, green and lilac, chocolate and white, are the most worn. Italian and China silks are the dresses for this time of year. Damask and glacé barèges also dispute the palm. The dresses are made with several flounces, narrower than last year, and more numerous. The flounces of barège dresses are made on the straight. Nearly all the sleeves of visiting dresses are Chinese, or "pagoda" fashion. The bodies are open in front, and laced down to the waist. Low dresses are made falling on the shoulders, and straight across the chest; others are quite square, and others again are made in the shape of a heart before and behind. Opera polkas are worn short, with wide sleeves, and trimmed with large bands of ermine. Open-work straw bonnets of different colours are adopted, and are most seasonable for spring, especially in lilac or ornamented with branches of lilac. White drawn silk bonnets are much worn, but are covered with foldings of net. Drawn lace and crape bonnets begin to appear, and already black and white lace bonnets are being prepared. Branches of fruit are much worn upon those last-mentioned bonnets.

THE TULIP BONNET.

As May is decidedly the gayest month of fashion, we have engraved a few of the elegant novelties, in addition to our illustration of whole-length costume.

First are two Crinoline Hats, of open pattern, trimmed generally with a flower or feathers, and worn to the opera, &c.

The broad-brimmed Straw Hat in the centre is for the promenade.

The Tulip Bonnet is composed of white silk, covered with white spotted tulle the edges of the front foisted

STRAW BONNET.

The Straw Bonnets are of dark-coloured ground, ornamented with fine open straw-work.

The elegant black Lace Jacquette, worn by the lower figure, has loosely hanging sleeves.

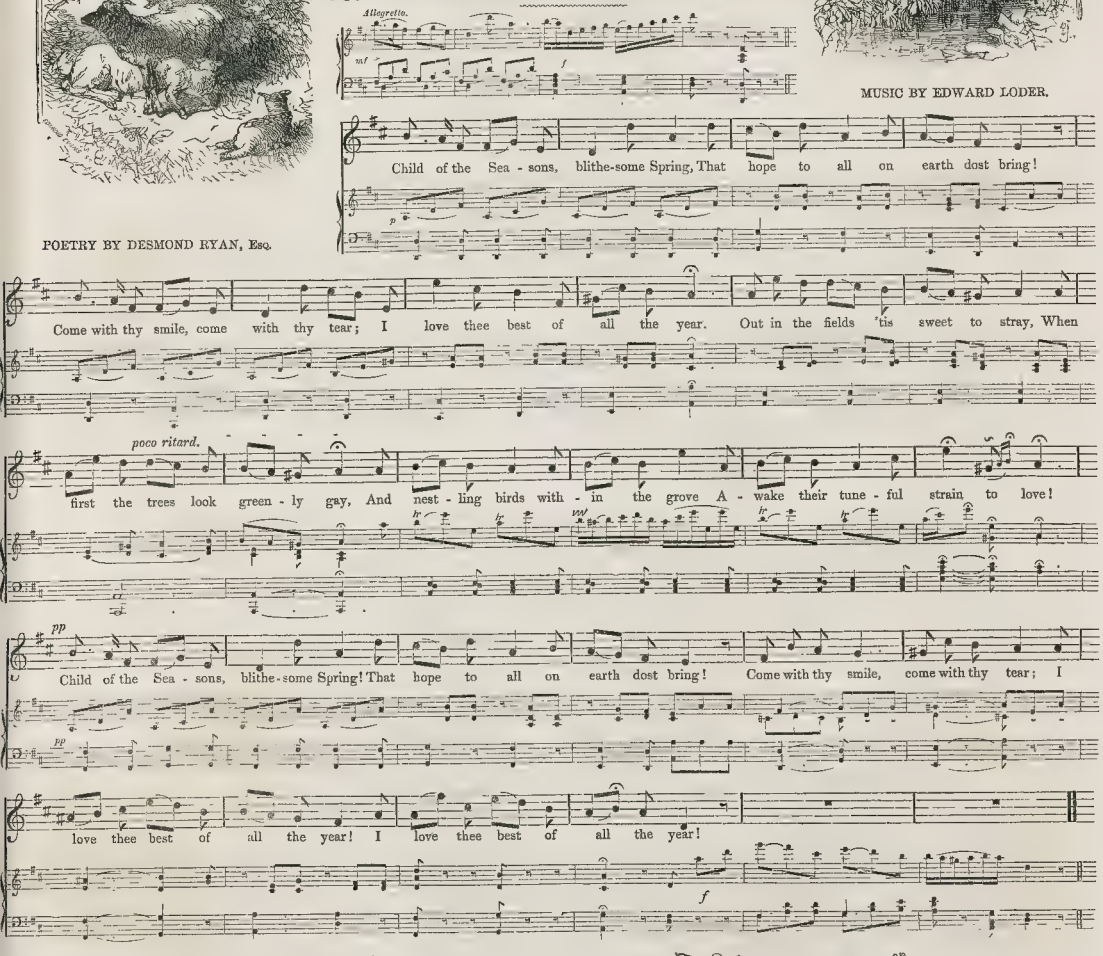
PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

LACE JACQUETTE.

A SONG OF SPRING.

POETRY BY DESMOND RYAN, Esq.

MUSIC BY EDWARD LODER.



Allegretto.
Child of the Sea - sons, blithe-some Spring, That hope to all on earth dost bring!
Come with thy smile, come with thy tear; I love thee best of all the year. Out in the fields 'tis sweet to stray, When poco ritard.
first the trees look green - ly gay, And nest - ling birds with - in the grove A - wake their tune - ful strain to love!
Child of the Sea - sons, blithe-some Spring! That hope to all on earth dost bring! Come with thy smile, come with thy tear; I love thee best of all the year! I love thee best of all the year!

The snowdrop, firstling of the shower,
The violet, thine own favourite flower,
Nursed by the winter, gather might,
And peer into the dazzling light.
Fair as the hawthorn's silver bloom,
The dew-drop glistening on the broom;
All Nature smiles, each living thing
Laughs in thine eye, O joyous Spring!

Child of the Seasons, &c.

The ploughboy's whistle, shrill and strong,
Comes blended with the milkmaid's song;
The low of kine, adown the dale,
And call of bleating flocks, prevail.
All Nature wide—heaven, earth, and sea—
Resounds with varied melody;
Proclaiming loud, in joy most dear,
That Spring, the beautiful, is near.

Child of the Seasons, &c.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. J. Letherdale to the rectory of Beacon Ash Norfolk; the Rev. Shadwell Barkworth to the rectory of St. Clement's, Oxford; the Rev. George Porter to the rectory of Lympstone, Devon: the Rev. Havilland de Sausmarez to the rectory of St. Peter's, Northampton: the Rev. — Gresley to the vicarage of Boston.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION (IRELAND).—The annual report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for Ireland for the year ending last of August, 1849, states that 76 benefices have been united with benefices, consisting of nine dignities, including the united bishoprics of Down, Connor, and Dromore, and the united bishopics of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, 10 prebends, and 57 parochial benefices.

The Rev. Gilbert Elliot has been appointed Dean of Bristol.

The report circulated by a weekly paper, rather notorious for its manufacture of conversiouf, that the Rev. W. Palmar, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, has seceded to the Greek Church, is, we have reason to believe, entirely without foundation.—The Guardian.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—A special general meeting of the graduates of this University was held on Tuesday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern, the objects of which were explained by an opening address by Mr. J. E. Quain, who occupied the chair. The first matter to be considered was the propriety of presenting a congratulatory address to the Senate, on the occasion of the meeting to be held on the following day, for the purpose of conferring degrees. This, it appeared, was the first start in public life of the University of London; its first indication of anything like a distinct corporate existence. It had, therefore, been thought expedient to address the Senate on the present occasion, and to express the gratitude felt by the graduates at their having established a public day for conferring degrees, as well as for their other exertions in behalf of the University. From such a proposition the chairman thought none could dissent, however they might have differed, or have ever much they might hereafter differ, with the Senate on other points. Mr. F. J. Wood, LL.D., spoke in favour of the address, which he considered due to the Senate; though he did not, of course, suppose that, in adopting it, they in any way pledged themselves not to persevere in their endeavours for the attainment of other objects to which the Senate might be opposed. The adoption of the address was seconded by Dr. J. Sharpey, and the motion was unanimously carried. Mr. G. Jessel, M A., then moved, and Mr. F. S. Osler, LL.B., seconded a resolution appointing a deputation to present the address; and this having been adopted, a discussion arose upon the following resolution:—

That this meeting regrets that the Senate, in providing for the exercise of the powers conferred by the first branch of the supplemental charter, has adopted regulations by which a distinction is made in the case of graduates in medicine between the degrees of this University are to be subjected, irrespective of circumstances of peculiar hardship; and by which a portion of the examinations of candidates for degrees is delegated to examiners not appointed by the Senate, and not under their control.

That this meeting is of opinion that the powers contained in the supplementary charter, enabling the University to grant certificates in the several branches of knowledge, irrespective of any proof that the candidates have gone through a regular and liberal course of education, are inconsistent with the true functions of a university with the constitution of which a liberal system of education in this country, by discouraging the prosecution of a liberal and extended course of study.

To the power to grant certificates in isolated branches of knowledge the strongest objections were expressed, on the ground that, by such a permission, the institution would be degraded from a university to a mere licensing board, and the gentleman who had received from it every branch of a liberal education confounded with, and disgraced by, their connexion with men who had merely studied one; whilst, for the privileges given to students from other universities no ground could be shown. These motions having been adopted, the meeting separated.—On Wednesday, a convocation of the University was held in the great hall of King's College, for the purpose of conferring degrees and honours on such candidates as have passed their examination during the twelve months just expired. This being the first occasion on which the ceremony has taken place in public, very considerable interest was manifested, and a large attendance of members and visitors was the result. The meeting was to have been held in the apartments belonging to the University in Somerset-House; but, in consequence of the Surveyors of Woods and Forests having expressed some doubts as to the safety of the large room (now used as the School of Design), an adjournment took place to the great hall of King's College, the use of which was kindly granted for the occasion. The Right Hon. the Earl of Burlington, Chancellor of the University, took his seat on the throne, and the usual formalities on such an occasion and gentlemen present were his Excellency the French Ambassador, Viscount Mahon, M.P., Lord Overstone, Lord Radstock, the Dean of St. Paul's, Colonel the Hon. E. Cust, Major-General Sir W. Cotton, M.P., Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P., Mr. Heywood, M.P., Dr. E. Colebrooke, M.P., the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, &c. The body of the hall was crowded with students and their friends. The registrar having read the report, showing the progress of the students in the various branches of learning, several degrees of LL.D., M.D., M.A., &c. were conferred.——On Thursday a meeting of students of University College was held at Lawson's Rooms, Lower Gower-street, to consider the conduct of the council in having recently expelled two students for a breach of discipline, and in having declined to accept the course pursued by the council as too severe, and soliciting the council to allow evidence to be brought before them which would, in some degree, palliate the errors committed by the students. Resolutions founded on the resolutions was also adopted, and a deputation appointed to carry it up to the council.

THE GORHAM CASE.

A large portion of the clergy of the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol have presented an address to the Bishop, declaring that they were troubled at the thought that the guilt of sanctioning heretical opinions may appear to be incurred by the Church. They are perplexed to know how to act for the best in these circumstances, but they implore him, in concert with his brethren, to guide and assist them in taking such steps as may seem to him suitable in this "unparalleled exigency of the Church." Before he (the bishop) and the clergy, that the Court of Appeal in ecclesiastical matters is unsatisfactory, that the episcopate are now deliberating on what shall be done, and he hopes to have the prayers of all the clergy in the address, that the Holy Spirit may guide the Bishops may come to a conclusion favourable to the peace and unity of the Church.

In reply to an address from the clergy of Nottingham, the Bishop of Exeter rejoices at this manifestation they have made of "sound Church principles, and earnestness for Christian truth." "The time is coming," he says, "rather is already come, when every one must declare himself if he is faithful. Individual confession of the true faith is now necessary, for we have ceased to have security for the assertion of that faith by the laws of the State, and the very possibility of asserting it by Synod is denied to us." He looks on the trial of the Church as appointed in goodness and mercy.

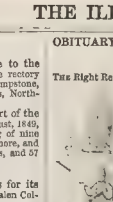
Mr. A. J. Beresford Hope having stated to the Bishop of London how greatly he was distressed at the recent judgment of the Judicial Committee of Privy Council in Mr. Gorham's case, and having expressed his apprehension that some excellent men might be driven by that decision to quit, if not the communion of our Church, yet the offices which they hold in it, the Bishop replied, in a letter dated March 11th, but not published before April 20th, he could readily understand the uneasiness which Mr. Hope, in common with many others, felt at the position in which the Church appeared to be placed by that judgment, but he thought it to be their plain and unmistakeable duty not to desert the Church at such a moment, when she was most in need of support and assistance. "If a vessel," continued the Bishop, "in which you were embarked should spring a leak, you would surely do your best to stop the leak before you thought of abandoning the ship, and leaving it to its proper fate. Upon the same plan I would desire you to consider in what respect the recent judgment has so altered the character of our Church as to justify any of her members in severing their connexion with her. That judgment may be erroneous—that is wrong interpretation of the Church's mind; but it is the interpretation adopted by a few fallible men, not by any body authorized by the Church to settle any point of doctrine; nor can it have the effect of changing any of the Church's doctrines. That of baptismal regeneration stands in her Articles and Liturgy as it did before. That is not denied, nor even questioned by the judgment, the purport of which is, that to those who do not admit the Church's doctrine of baptismal formularies are altered by the authority of Convocation, or of some synod equivalent to Convocation, her character as a teacher of truth remains unchanged. I cannot regard any sentence of an Ecclesiastical Court as finally settling a question of doctrine: that can only be done by a synodical decree, and even then judges may err in their interpretation of that decree, and yet the decree itself will hold good, and in another appeal respecting the very same point of doctrine, another court might pronounce a different judgment. I feel sure that nothing short of a formal act of the Church itself repudiating what it has hitherto asserted as truth can warrant a man in quitting her communion. What we really want is a court of appeal so constituted that the members of our Church can place reasonable confidence in its decisions, but it must still be borne in mind that any such court will be liable to errors in judgment, and that it belongs to the office of a judge not to make laws, but to expound them to the best of his ability. Again, then, I say that when the Convocation shall, by a solemn act, reject the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, it will be time enough to think of quitting the Church's pale; but, till that shall happen (which Heaven forefend), to leave her would be an act of schism."

A long correspondence has been published between Mr. Maskell, the Vicar of St Mary's, Exeter, the Bishop of Exeter, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, relative to the first-named gentleman's doubts as to the doctrines of the Church, and his intention to resign his cure of souls. Mr. Maskell seems to be much disturbed that he has no longer, as he assumes, a guide in the Church for what he is to teach, and that there is no explanation of the doctrines of the Church of such a guide may be in error. The Archbishop has vouchsafed a very long reply, in which he referred the reverend gentlemen each to the articles of the Church he had subscribed, given him an explanation of the doctrines of the Church, and reminded him of the command of Paul to "preach the word," which, as ordination, he received authority to do. The Bishop of Exeter thinks Mr. Maskell's doctrine, that every sound branch of the Catholic Church is bound to have dogmatic teaching on all the points mentioned in Mr Maskell's letter, untenable.

The matter has been twice brought before the Arches Court within a few days—the last time on Tuesday, when an order was asked for to enforce the Bishop of Exeter's obedience to his monition to conduct Mr. Gorham. The Bishop, by his attorney, declared that he had no intention of disobeying, but that he had pressing reasons for not immediately complying. The court ordered the matter to stand over till next court day.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE BISHOP OF CLOGHER.



The Right Rev. Lord Robert Ponsonby Tottenham, D.D., Lord Bishop of Clogher, was the second son of Charles, first Marquis of Ely, brother of John, the second Marquis, and uncle of the present possessor of that title. The Right Rev. Prelate was born the 5th September, 1773; he was educated at Christchurch, Oxford, and, having entered into holy orders, attained the degree of B.D. before being consecrated Bishop of Killaloe. He was translated to the see of Ferns in 1820, and obtained the Bishopric of Clogher in 1822.

The Bishop of Clogher has always borne his surname of Tottenham: for Tottenham Green, in the county of Wexford, and the other property of the Tottenham family being inherited by his Lordship, he retained the original name when the rest of his family assumed that of Loftus.

Dr. Tottenham, while Bishop of Killaloe, married, in 1807, Alicia, third daughter of Cornwallis Maude, first Viscount Hawarden, and has had issue ten sons and one daughter. The Right Rev. Prelate died in Ireland on the 26th ult. The Bishopric of Clogher merges in the Primacy.

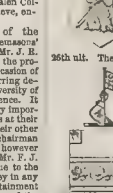
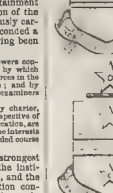
SIR SAMUEL HENRY PIERS, BART.



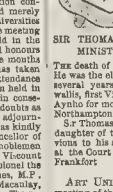
The death of this Baronet occurred at Tristernagh Abbey, his seat in Westmeath, on the 16th ult. At the age of 37. He had enjoyed the title but a short time, having recently succeeded to it by the death of his uncle, the late Sir John Caulfeild Piers, Bart. The Piers family has been long one of high position in Ireland. Its founder, William Piers, Esq. (son of Richard Piers, Esq., of Piers Hall, Yorkshire), was sent over to the kingdom in 1565 by Queen Elizabeth, whom he is said to "have saved at one time from the fury of her sister, by conveying her privately away," and to have married "the sands of great value, particularly the Abbey of Tristernagh.

THE REV. CHARLES MONTAGUE DOUGHTY, OF THEBERTON HALL, COUNTY OF SUFFOLK.



This gentleman died at his seat in Suffolk on the 23rd ult. He was born 23rd July, 1796, the fifth son of the late Rev. George Clarke Doughty, of Theberton Hall, Vicar of Hoxne and Rector of Denham and Martlesham, by Catherina his wife, only daughter and heir of Ezekiel Revett, Esq., the descendant of a very ancient Suffolk family. His grandfather, George Doughty, Esq., of Leiston, and afterwards of Theberton Hall, served as High Sheriff of the county in 1793. Mr. Doughty married, 29th January, 1840, Frederica, third daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Frederick Hotham, Rector of Dunnington, and has left issue

SIR THOMAS CARTWRIGHT, G.C.H., ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTER PLENIPOTENTIARY AT THE COURT OF SWEDEN.



The death of this eminent diplomatist occurred at Stockholm on the 17th ult. He was the eldest son of the late William Ralph Cartwright, Esq., of Aynho, for several years M.P. for Northamptonshire, and grandson maternally of Cornwallis, first Viscount Hawarden. His ancestors were possessed of the Manor of Aynho for more than two centuries, and continuously represented the county of Northampton in Parliament.

Sir Thomas we born in 1795, and married, in 1824, Maria Elizabeth Augusta, daughter of the Count of Sandizell, in Bavaria, by whom he leaves issue. He previous to his appointment as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of Stockholm, was Minister Plenipotentiary to the Diet of Frankfort

ART UNION OF LONDON.—DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES.—The annual meeting of this association took place on Tuesday, in Drury-lane Theatre, for the purpose of receiving the report of the council, and distributing the prizes awarded to subscribers; the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. The chairman opened the proceedings by stating that the differences between the Government and the society relative to the admission of paintings by exhibitors were now at an end, and he was quite sure that this information could not be otherwise than gratifying to the present company. He had the pleasure of announcing to them that the prints which had been distributed amongst the subscribers had met with general satisfaction, and that the subscriptions for the past year had considerably increased. From the report of the council, it appeared that, in the report read at the last general meeting, it was stated that subscribers for the ensuing year would receive an illustrated volume, and an impression of a line engraving then in progress. The council afterwards found, however, that it would be late in the present year before these works could be completed; and, being fortunately enabled to purchase the plate of "Sir Roger and the Frown," engraved by Mr. C. W. Sharp and Mr. W. D. Taylor, from pictures by T. Webster, R.A., and a series of designs by D. Maclise, R.A., illustrating Shakspeare's "Seven Ages," the members of the society for the year 1849 and 1850, and to postpone the issue of those first alluded to. "The Smile" and "The Frown" being finished, they were enabled to deliver the prints on payment of the subscription, and so to obviate an objection which had been taken on other occasions. The selling price of the pair of prints alone, it may be mentioned, would have been double the amount of the annual subscription. The illustrations of the "Seven Ages," to be read with reference to the above, have been etched on steel plates by Mr. Edward Goodall, and are now at press. The result of this arrangement is, that the subscriptions for the year amount to the sum of £11,180 8s., being an increase of £788 on the sum subscribed in 1845. The entire fund now amounts to £20787 13s. 10d. It has been aided by the earlier payment of subscriptions, on the amount of which interest has been obtained. The following is a general statement of the receipts and disbursements; a more detailed account will be published hereafter:—

Amount of subscriptions	£11,180 8 0
Allotted for purchase of pictures, statuettes, medals, &c.	8,073 0 0
Cost of engravings of the year	3,253 4 8
Cost of report, advertising, rent, &c., reserve of 2½ per cent. ..	2,254 4 4
	£11,180 8 0

The sum of £4260 appropriated to the purchase of works of art for the prizeholders will be thus allotted: 20 works of £10 each; 16 of £15, 14 of £20; 12 of £25; 13 of £40; 10 of £50; 6 of £60, 6 of £70; 6 of £80; 3 of £100; 1 of £150; 2 of £200. The different progress of the 1848 and 1849 plates, now in portfolios, of the designs, in outline, illustrative of "the Pilgrim's Progress," the society's "Cartoons," "Gertrude of Wyoming," or "The Castle of Indolence:" 307 impressions of "Sir Roger and the Frown," 307 impressions of "Sir Roger and the Frown," 307 impressions of "Sir Roger and the Frown,"

NEW BOOKS, &c.

LONDON IN 1850.
In the press, a pocket volume, entitled
CURIOSITIES OF LONDON, for TOWN and COUNTRY READERS: a Guide to the more Rare and Remarkable Particulars of the Metropolis
By JOHN TIMBS, Editor of the "Year-book of Facts," &c.
DAVID BOGUE, 86, Fleet-street

Imperial 4to, lavishly illustrated with richly emblazoned shields, price 31s 6d,
THE HERALDRY of HEREFORDSHIRE, from the Norman Era to the Present Day; interspersed with Pedigrees and Remarks of the late Sir SAM. MEYRICK, K.H. By GEORGE STRONG, Esq.
LONDON: CHARLES WILLIS, 13, Hart-street, Bloomsbury.

THE TRUE CROSS. By the Rev. C. MALAN, D.D. Fourth Edition, price 1s 6d. Translated from the French by MRS GEORGE STRONG.
London: J. NISBET and Co., Berners-street.

Second Edition
LIFE and LETTERS of THOMAS CAMPBELL. Edited by WILLIAM BEATTIE, Esq., M.D. (one of his executors). With a Portrait of Campbell, after a Painting by Sir THOMAS LAWRENCE, a fac-simile of the Poet's Handwriting, and an Engraving of the proposed Monument in Westminster Abbey. In 2 vols, cloth, lettered, £1 1s
London: A. HALL, VIRTUE, and Co., 25, Paternoster-row.

GIBBON'S ROME (ILLUSTRATED), with NOTES by GUIZOT.
In two super-royal octavo volumes, price £1 16s, cloth gilt,
GIBBON'S DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE, carefully reprinted without abridgement, from the original edition, embellished with Fifty Steel Engravings, a Portrait of the Author, and Maps of Rome, Constantinople, and Alexandria. Also, an Original Translation of the valuable Notes and Biographical Sketch written for the Work by M. GUIZOT.
London: A. HALL, VIRTUE, and Co., 25, Paternoster-row.

CHEAP EDITION OF "JANE EYRE."
Now ready, in one vol, small post 8vo, price 6s in embossed cloth, the fourth edition of JANE EYRE. By CURRER BELL, Author of "Shirley"
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill

BOHN'S CLASSICAL LIBRARY for MAY.
EURIPIDES, literally translated according to the text of Dindorf, Vol. 3, which completes the work. Containing Hecuba, Orestes, Iphigenia in Tauris, Iphigenia in Aulis, Rhesus, Alcestis; Sophocles' Philoctetes; Theognis; and Herodotus. All with Engraved Busts.
HENRY G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden.

Monthly, price 5s per volume,
BOHN'S ILLUSTRATED LIBRARY.—
LODGE'S PORTRAITS of ILLUSTRIOUS PERSONAGES of GREAT BRITAIN embellished with 80 Portraits, beautifully engraved on steel. Vol. 1. The only complete and uniform edition published in which after which will follow other works of the same high character
HENRY G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden

BOHN'S SHILLING SERIES.—IRVING'S LIFE and VOYAGES of COLUMBUS and his COMPANIONS is the previous volumes are, Irving's Life of Mohammed, Successors of Mohammed, Wilkie's People I've Met, The Genuine Autobiography of Franklin; and Emerson's Representative Men.
HENRY G. BOHN, York-street, Covent-garden.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON READING BOOK.
Companion to the ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING BOOK
Containing a Series of Lessons on the most amusing and instructive subjects, selected with great care from the best English Authors, in Prose and Verse. The whole beautifully illustrated with above TWO HUNDRED and FIFTY ENGRAVINGS.
Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, London; and sold by all Bookseller

Just published, price 25s, bound in embossed leather, large 8vo., illustrated with 1,000 Engravings, and containing 1,200 pages, double columns, Roman coins, executed by a new process in actual relief, ANCIENT COINS and MEDALS. An Historica. Sketch of the Origin and Progress of Coining Money in Greece and her Colonies, its progress with the extension of the Roman Empire, and the decline of the Art of Medallic Sculpture. By H. N. HUMPHREYS.
"It is the most popular and complete numismatic compendium on the subject of ancient money that we have met with."—Morning Post.
"It richly deserves a prominent place in the library of every lover of literature, science, and the fine arts."—Morning Herald.
"A novel and excellent mode of illustration has been adopted, expressing the coins in actual relief, in gutta percha, and copies produced by casts from the originals, so that you appear to be looking upon the coins themselves. The whole forms a most valuable and beautiful of these ancient works."—Art Journal.
Chapman and Hall, 186, Strand; and St. Paul's Churchyard.

Royal 16mo. with Engravings, price 3s 6d plain, 4s 6d coloured,
THE WONDERS of HOME: in Eleven Stories. By GRANDFATHER GREY.—CONTENTS: 1. The Cap of Liberty. 2. A Lump of Coke. 3. Hot Water. 4. A Piece of Sugar. 5. The Milk Jug. 6. A Fib. 7. Jenny's Sash. 8. Harry's Jacket. 9. A Pair of Shoes. 10. A Suit. 11. The Story of Daily Bread.
"The idea of this book is capital, and its execution equally commendable."—Weekly News.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, St. Paul's Churchyard.

TALES of SCHOOL LIFE. By AGNES LOUDON. Illustrations by J. Absolon. Royal 16mo, 3s 6d plain, 4s 6d coloured. "Faithful pictures of every-day occurrence, and will be read with pleasure by children."—Athenæum
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, St. Paul's Churchyard.

In a beautiful enamelled cover, price 7s. 6d. plain, 12s. coloured,
A TREASURY of PLEASURE BOOKS for YOUNG CHILDREN, with One Hundred Illustrations, by J. ABSOLON and H. WEIR.
"Taken altogether, the book is a de light For every one of the justly Moral and humorous and pretty stories are capitally illustrated. No little family could desire a more amusing book."—Literary Gazette
"A treasury indeed, the very paragon of pleasure books."—Observer
GRANT and GRIFFITH, successors to J. Harris, St. Paul's Churchyard.

NEW VOLUME of the FAVOURITE GEMS.
THE SCOTTISH ORPHANS; a Moral Tale, founded on an Historical Fact. By LADY STODART (Mrs Hackgrill). Price 1s.
"The KEEPER'S TRAVELS in SEARCH of HIS MASTER Being a Sequel to the O iginal Edition. Price 1s.
The above form the Seventh Volume of Gems for the Young, each with an illustration, and bound in an elegant cover, at the uniform price of One Shilling.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

THOMAS'S HISTORICAL ALBUM
New and Cheaper Edition, containing Nearly 200 Engravings, 3s each cloth, 4s half-bound morocco,
TRUE STORIES from ANCIENT HISTORY, chronologically arranged, from the Creation of the World to the Death of Charlemagne. Tenth Edition.
TRUE STORIES from MODERN HISTORY, from the Death of Charlemagne to the year 1849. Seventh Edition.
TRUE STORIES from ENGLISH HISTORY, from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Queen Victoria. Fifth Edition.
GRANT and GRIFFITH, corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

SECOND EDITION.
THE GUIDE to WATER-COLOUR PAINTING. By R. P. NOBLE
With an Illustration in Colours
Price 1s 6d stitched, to be bound in cloth, post free, 6d extra.
Sixth Edition.
GUIDE to OIL PAINTING.
By J. S. TEMPLETON.
Price One Shilling; or, post free, 1s 6d.
THE FINE ARTS ALMANACK, or, ARTIST'S REMEMBRANCER for 1850.
Price One Shilling; post free, 1s 6d.
Containing 176 closely printed pages of valuable information connected with the Fine Arts not to be met with in any other publication.
ED. ROWNEY and Co., 51, Rathbone-place, London.

TAYLOR'S BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL.—FOURTH EDITION. In 8vo, Revised, Enlarged, and additional 2 illustrated, price 4s.
THE BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL; or, Practical Hints on the Management and complete Preservation of the HONEY BEE. By HENRY TAYLOR.—"It is a well-arranged and useful work, and will command most approximately."—Mark-lane Express.—"A work of truly practical utility."—Florist's Journal.—"The author gives the results of his own experience, and describes various kinds of hives, some of his own construction."—Annals of Natural History.—"Written in a plain and easy style, at a reasonable price, with many engravings of different hives, &c."—Birmingham Review.
GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, 5, Paternoster-row, London.

TAYLOR'S BEE-KEEPER'S MANUAL, Fourth Edition, price 4s, with Plates,
A PRACTICAL TREATISE on HIP-JOINT DISEASE; showing the Advantages to be derived from a System of Mechanical Management in the Prevention and Cure of the Contraction of the Limb. By W. CURTIS HUGMAN, M.R.C.S., Surgeon to the Vernal Hospital for the Treatment of Spina. Disease and Distortion. The author has invented a Gentle Apparatus for bringing before the profession a method of treatment which, doubtless, will be attended with great benefit."—Medical Times. "These advantages are doubtless great, and are what the surgeon wishes to obtain for those suffering from this disease in a severe form."—Lancet.
S. HIGNLEY, Fleet-street, London.

THE HOME CIRCLE. One Penny.—The NEW WEEKLY FAMILY MAGAZINE, contributed to by MISS AGNES STRICKLAND and other eminent writers, embracing Essays, Pictures, Tales, Poetry, History, Science, Biography, Accomplishments for Ladies (comprised in Knitting, Crochet, Embroidery, and Wax Flowers), Lessons for Boys and studious Youth, Carnival Questions and Examinations, Solutions, Gardening, Fashion, Miscellaneous Treasures, Receipts in Cookery, Chess Problems, Intertainments Column, &c.—Monday Parts, 6d; Stamps, 8d, now ready. The Number, containing Nos. 41 and 44 9d, gilt. Office, 66, St. Martin's-le-Grand, London.

Just published, price 2s 6d, PART I. of a Series of Representatives of ARMS, JEWELLERY, GOLD and SILVER PLATE, FURNITURE, ARMOUR, &c., in Royal and Noble Collections, Colleges, and Public Institutions, &c., and which FORMERLY BELONGED to INDIVIDUALS EMINENT in HISTORY Drawn from the Originals and Etched by JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS.
HISTRIC RELIQUES;
PART I will contain:—
Andiron, William III; at Windsor Castle.
Candle Branch; in the Chapel, St. Stephen, Walbrook.
Silver-gilt Cup, Margaret Beaufort, Christ's College, Cambridge.
To be completed in Ten Parts, Price 2s 6d each. Large paper copies 5s. Office, 66, St. Martin's-le-Grand.

"THE FLIGHT OF CARE," Quadrille, price 3s., with the Vocal Finale ad lib; first performed before her Majesty, and now at most Soirees Dansantes, by Adams' Band, is just published. LONDON: D. RAMSDEN, BERNER, &c. Post-free to any part of the kingdom for thirty-six stamps, sent to the Composer, 9, De Vere-gardens, Kensington.

MUSIC.—THE FAMILY FRIEND for MAY 1st contains "THE SECRET," composed by J. F. DUGAN, Esq., words by the EDITOR. Extract:—
Within a fall lyre the fairy flowers,
That grace the garden and the glade;
I love the flowers, we warblers love the shade;
That cheer the sunshine and the shade
But dearer than the flowers, or sunshine I see,
And sweeter than the songsters that warble over the lea,
Is the maiden who in this my secret shall be."
There is an arch wreathana in this song which will make it a worldwide favourite.
The same Number contains the answer to the celebrated PRIZE ENIGMA, illustrated by a fine Engraving, showing a MENAGERIE within a Lyre. Price 2d; Post-free 3d.
London: HOULSTON and STONEMAN, and all booksellers.

CHEAP MUSIC, bound and classed in volumes.
Eighty shillings' worth at full marked price for 8s., comprising Overtures, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Dance Music, Songs, Ballads, Waltzes, Quadrilles, Piano Duets, Songs, Glees, and Sacred Music (Vocal), by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Balfe, Labitsky, Strauss Schubert, and all the first authors. The public will observe the Music is all new, and clean and perfect, the whole of two hundred works always on sale at WALKER'S Old Established Cheap Music Warehouse, 17, Soho-square.—The new Catalogue gratis, on receipt of two stamps.

PIANOFORTES.—TOLKIEN'S splendid Cottage Pianofortes, 7½ octs. C. to F., Metallic Plate, only 15 guineas. Parties requiring a first-rate instrument for a little money, will do well to purchase at TOLKIEN'S old established house, 27, 28, and 29, Old Compton-street, Soho-square. Drawings of the instruments sent post free. Old instruments taken in exchange.

WHITE PARIAN BROOCHES of new design, in 9s. Fetlarfanacle, in very Elegant Gold Mounting, 16s. Black and White Porcelain Brooches, 7s 6d. Parian Shawl Pins, 1s 6d. Post free direction Mrs MARY BROUGHAM, Burslem DRAWINGROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM FURNISHING of Every Design, Candlesticks, Tables, Watchstands, Inkstands, Paper-weights, &c., imported and manufactured by MARY), 43, Strand, Corner of Southampton-street.

WATCHES and their MANAGEMENT.—T. COX SAVORY and Co. have published a PAMPHLET, describing the construction of the various Watches in use at the present time, and pointing out the advantages of each, with lists of prices. It is intended to give the information which is often to be obtained previous to the purchase of an article, the principal characteristics of which should be accurately and durability. It also contains remarks on the proper management of a watch by the wearer. It may be had gratis, at the manufactory, 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY and Co.'s Pamphlet of Prices, with outline drawings of the various articles, is now ready, and will be forwarded free, if applied for by a part owner. The contents are the prices, weights, and patterns of new and second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks, new and second-hand Tea and Coffee Services, Cruets, Candlesticks, Candelabra, Dish Covers, Corner Dishes, Metal Cases and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Cutlery, Ladies Gold Neck Chains, and Jewellery.
T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS and CORNER DISHES. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, invite an inspection of their STOCK of SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS, Corner Dishes, Cruets, and every article of superior quality, cheaper than any other house in the trade. Manufactured with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the kingdom, postage free

SILVER TEA SERVICES, of New Patterns, A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill (opposite the Bank), have just finished some new and elegant patterns of TEA and COFFEE SERVICES, of novel and elegant forms, and the highest finish. The following have been gotten up and admired:—

The Portland Pattern, tastefully Chased			The Louis Quatorze Pattern, richly Embossed
Strong Silver Tea-pot	£12	15 0	Strong Silver Tea-pot	£15	10 0
Ditto Silver Cream Ewer, gilt	3	5 0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt	4	0 0
Ditto Coffee-pot	2	5 0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt	3	15 0
			Ditto Coffee-pot	17	17 0
	£42	0 0		£47	12 0

A large stock is offered for selection in the Show-rooms, including every variety of patterns, from £34 upwards
14, CORNHILL, and 1, THE BANK.

THE SARK SHIRT is a garment made entirely without gathers. "It may confidently be eulogised for its acuracy of fit, and great ease and comfort."—Morning Herald. In all qualities and sizes, at 38s, 42s, and 45s each. Illustrations and patterns sent direct.—N.B. Printed Saxonia for dressing-gowns, cravats, and ties.
SHIRTS of EBENEZER FLINT continues to supply the BEST SHIRTS out only from the Golden Fleece Linens and Longcloths, at 30s the Three are recommended strongly, and are the only genuine Shirts made. Detailed catalogues containing lists of prices, and directions for self-measurement, sent post-free. Patterns and the new coloured shirtings sent post-free on receipt of six postage stamps.—Richard Ford, 185, Strand, London.

LORD'S TARKKA SHIRT, an unchilling Series of cooling Shirts to the very best manner in which they can be made for the climate, by JOHN LORD'S TARKKAS, the most simple, and the only genuine Turkish Shirt made. Detailed catalogues containing lists of prices, and directions for self-measurement, sent post-free. Patterns and the new coloured shirtings sent post-free on receipt of six postage stamps.—Richard Ford, 185, Strand, London.

SIX VERY SUPERIOR SHIRTS for 26s., from the best and largest stock in London. Superb SHIRTS (50 to choose from) for gentlemen, at 3s 6d. the half dozen. A choice of 200 patterns in regatta and other fashionable coloured shirtings, 6s 6d. or six very best (made to measure) for 35s. The BRITISH SHIRT (a shirt upon an entirely new principle), 45s for 35s. They are made with the Patent Elastic Gussets (an oval) guaranteed, or the money returned. Printed prices-lists, with directions for self-measurement, post-free.—RODGERS and Co., Shirt Makers, 59, St. Martin's-le-Grand, E.C., at the corner of New-street, Covent-garden, Established sixty years.

THE CORAZZA SHIRT.—CAPPER and WALKER, Shirt Makers, 23, Piccadilly, London, can guarantee can have the Corazza, or any other form of Shirt, by sending measures, taken tight, round the neck, round chest, waist, wrist, and height of figure. Fine Cloth Shirts, with Linen fronts, fine Linen Fronts, Collars, and Wristb, at every price from 6s. to 12s. Fine Linen Shirts, ready made. Additional caps for Dress Fronts 1s to 4s. Sample Shirts are sent, carriage paid, to any part of the kingdom, on receipt of the price of the Shirt, with the addition of two shillings, which addition is deducted from the amount of the order.

REFORM YOUR TAILOR'S BILLS.—BOUDNEYS, being honoured with Five Special Appointments —the Queen, Prince Albert, and Royal Family recommend their PATENT LIFE OF GUARDS, which will maintain a fleet of Lilywhites, 23 to —17, Old Bond-street, 35, Buckingham Arcade, and 49, Cornhill-street.—Established 1790.

DOUDNEY'S OLYMPIC GIRTH, 10s 6d.—Protection against Rupture; the support at the bottom edge of the Belt producing upward pressure, unequaled abdominal and spinal support.—DOUDNEY'S, 23, Old Bond-street, 35, Burlington Arcade, and 67, Lombard-street.—Established 1790.

AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND, CAPE of GOOD HOPE, NATAL, &c.
PASSENGERS to the COLONIES, generally, may obtain their OUTFITS from 6, W. SILVER and Co., CLOTHIERS, &c., 66 and 67, CORNHILL, corner of Finch-lane. SILVER and Co. make ready-made whole of the articles comprised in an outfit to secure durability, so that the Emigrant may be sure of getting many pounds' worth for his money. Furniture on arrival in the colony.
Lists of the articles, with prices, and give ship-sailing INFORMATION, but they neither receive nor pay a commission, their object being to give PASSENGERS who place themselves in their hands every benefit, and they forward small packages for their customers (gratis) through their AGENTS in the COLONIES.
SILVER and Co. have a large stock of SURPLUS, at sixty days' sight, of £103 for every £100 paid here.
The EMIGRANT Fitting-out Branch is at No. 4, BISHOPSGATE-STREET, opposite the London Tavern, where a comfortable 51-cent, for which the Goods are delivered on board, may be obtained for FOUR POUNDS.
A Branch of each at St. GEORGE'S CRE-CENT, LIVERPOOL

HOW to KEEP a HORSE for LESS than ONE SHILLING per DAY.—Do you broke the oats you give your horses?—No. Then you lose one bushel out of every three, and your stable do not do half so well.—MARY WEDLAKE and Co.'s DAY-BRUISING MILLS, superior Chaff Machines, simple in construction, doing from 30 to 500 bushels daily, and more. Nearly all horse-dealers consume oats crushed in Lond on the Hydraulic Mills, Fenchurch street, opposite Mark-lane close to the Railway. Lissard-mills, hand-mills, and mill-mills in great variety.

A PURCHASE BY TENDER.
KING and Co., SILK MERCERS, &c., 243, Regent-street.
Respectfully beg to announce, that on MONDAY NEXT, and following days, they will show 500 worth of this year's Spring SILKS, &c., at half the usual prices, having purchased by Tender a Manufacturer's entire Stock. Prices and other particulars will be found in the six following advertisements.
Address KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

THE RICHEST
BROCADED POULT DE SOIES at 37s 6d the full dress.
Address KING and Co., 243, Regent-street.
* * Patterns sent Post free.

THE RICHEST BLACK, WHITE, and COLOURED
GLACE SILKS, three-quarters wide, at 37s 6d the full dress.
Address KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.
* * Patterns sent Post free.

THE RICHEST
STRIPED and CHECKED SILKS, At 31s 6d the full dress.
Address, KING and Co., 243, Regent-street.
* * Patterns sent Post free.

KING and CO., LACEMEN, &c., 243, Regent-street, respectfully beg to announce that they will forward Patterns (postage free) of their VALENCIENNES and LACE, Black and White Flounces, &c. &c., to any part of the Kingdom, on application, by letter, addressed as above.

THE NEW FRENCH PRINTED
BAREGES, MUSLINS, PERCALES,
Jaconnets,
French Lawns,
Glace Bellonas,
Llama Cloths,
Mousseline de Laine,
Plain Barages, and every other Novelty for Spring and Summer Dresses, at 8s 9d and 11s 9d the full dress.
* * Patterns sent, Post Free.
Address, KING and CO., 243, Regent-street.

KING and CO., LINENDRAPERS, &c., 243, REGENT-STREET, beg to announce that they have selling magnificent Lace, and Embroidered Swiss Muslin Curtains, at 15s per pair.
A Sample Pair sent to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of a remittance. Address KING and Co., 243, Regent-street

DAMASK TABLE-LINENS, &c.—FAULDING, STRATTON, and Co.'s LINEN WAREHOUSE, 13, Coventry-street, Haymarket, is always supplied with every description of Household Linen at Wholesale Price

ELEGANT COMBS.—The largest and best stock of Tortoiseshell Combs of every kind, and very superior colours and workmanship, will be found at PROUT'S Brush and Comb Manufactory, 220, Strand, London, seventh house from Temple-bar.

PARASOLS.—T. SANGSTER respectfully informs the Nobility and Public that their Parasols this season are much larger than usual, but, owing to the peculiarity of their make, are also much lighter. They are made of glace and striped silks, of perfectly new mixtures of colours, of the most striking and elegant description. The Paris Shape is also a large amount of the much admired Swiss Parasol, upwards of 30,000 of which were sold last season —140, Regent-street; 94, Fleet-street; 10, Royal Exchange; 75, Cheapside.

ELEGANT MUSLINS.—Thousands of elegant MUSLIN DRESSES are now offering at 3s 11½d the dress, or any quantity at 4½d the yard. They are the newest patterns, fast colours, and cannot be had elsewhere. By sending three shillings' worth of postage-stamps, a dress in any of the fashionable colours, namely, chocolate, blue, pink, lilac, green, black and white, or plain black, with an assortment of patterns, will be forwarded. Beautiful printed cloth or striped muslins, for the use of large or small families, at 6½d; and a rich blanc dunape silk dress for 42s 6d Merchants and Shippers supplied for exportation. Address, ROWLAND HOOPER, muslin printer, 59, Oxford-street.

FRENCH and ENGLISH STAY WAREHOUSE, No. 23, Ludgate-street, directly opposite (Dakin's Tea Warehouse) No. 1, St. Paul's. To Wholesale Buyers, Shippers, Outfitters, Hosiers, Drapers, Milliners, and Dressmakers.—The Proprietor, Wm. CARTER, Importer, Manufacturer, and Exporter of French and those employing Agents abroad, would call attention to his unusually large supply of Paris Wove, French Coutil, and Basin STAYS, suitable for the present season, which he can supply at any former low quotations, and the quality of rare excellence. His list of prices will also be found lower than any other house in the trade, as he is ready to sell for cash at an early application is recommended, either at the factory, Charlotte-street, Landport, Portsea, or at Wm. S. CARTER'S new premises, No. 23, Ludgate-street, London

LINNENDRAPERS TO THE QUEEN.
Established in 1778
LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, and WEDDING and GENERAL OUTFITS for HOME, INDIA, and the COLONIES, are supplied by
JOHN CAPPER and SON, 49, Branch-church, STREET, London, under competent Female superintendence. The prices are economical, and the articles a sure and reasonable guarantee.
BABY LINEN, of superior work, decidedly CHEAP.
Parcels of Linen carefully packed for Exportation.
SAMPLES, which may be returned, sent for inspection on receipt of a London reference, or money-order.
ESTABLISHED 1778.

BONNETS.—PARISIAN MILLINERY.—To Cash Purchasers wishing to avoid the charges of private Milliners' Accounts and Credit, the Proprietors of the Old Established Bounets, al. colours, Cap, &c., complete, 12s 9d to 16s 9d; Morning Satin, or Bonnets, richly trimmed, patent Crape Veil, 14s 6d to 18s 6d; White or Black Lace, elegantly finished, 15s to 18s 6d; Aeroplane Crape, all colours, drawn or en Paris mut shapes, 14s 6d to 18s 6d; Paris Crape, for Brides, One Guinea each; Fine Sown Crape, 5s 6d to 10s; White Bernoulli Hats, 9s 11d to 12s 6d; Horticultural Whole Straw, the new shape, 5s 11d to 8s 11d; Fine Rice Straws, 3s 11d to 5s 11d; Leghorn Hats, Prince of Wales Shape, 9s 11d; very fine, 4s 11d. More fashionable or more becoming Bonnets cannot be procured at any price; and the largest stock in London to select from for Cash only, at Graubourn House, No. 39, Cranbourn-street, Leicester-square.—Proprietors, S. WOOKEY and Co.
* * Country Milliners supplied with Pattern Bonnets monthly

SPECIALITE de DENTELLES et de BRODERIES.—At HAYWARD'S, 81, Oxford-street (opposite the Pantheon).
This House having been established upwards of seventy years for the exclusive sale of LACE and EMBROIDERY, they are enabled to offer unusual advantages to purchasers during Wedding Seasons, as the Instantes manufacture for their own goods, and employing their own workpeople, they can therefore offer to the public the whole of the profits usually divided between the manufacturer, the wholesale and retail dealer, at a considerable saving in price.
Their extensive and very choice Stock of the following articles is part quality warranted:—
Honiton Bride Squares and Scarfs, from 5 Guineas.
Brussels and Honiton Scarfs, Squares, Flounces, Dresses, Berthes, Habits, Cloaks, Caps, Collars, and Sleeves.
A beautiful Imitation of Honiton and Brussels Lace, in Squares, Scarfs, Flounces, Berthes, and Habit Shirts.
Embroidered Handkerchiefs, in great variety, from 3s 6d to 8 Guineas.
Embroidered Muslin Curtains and Muslins by the Piece.
The latest Novelties in Laces and Embroideries always ready for Inspection.
HAYWARDS (SIDDLE and CO.), Lacemen to the Royal Family, 81, Oxford-street (opposite the Pantheon).

EXTENSIVE and UNRIVALLED SALE of PRINTED JACCONOTS, SWISS and ORGANDIE MUSLINS, PLAIN and PRINTED BALZARINES, BAREGES, &c. &c., at HOWELL and JAMES', 214, 215, 216, and 64, REGENT-STREET.
ALL WARRANTED FAST COLOURS, AND CUT IN ANY QUANTITY
Thousands of Yards of New Printed Jaconnets and Organdie Muslins, at 5½d to 9½d. Beautiful Designs in Swiss, German, and French Ditto, at 10½d, 9½d, and 1s 3½d. Very Large Assortment of Rich Stone and Satin Ditto, 1s 6½d, 1s 9½d. Black and all Colours in Plain French Barages, at 8½d per yard, worth 1s 6d.
The above are the Cheapest Goods in the Trade.
Patterns sent Post Free.
Address, HEECH and BERSALL, 83 and 64, Edgware-road.

GREAT BARGAINS in SILKS, including Rich Striped Glacés, Black Watered Silks, Rich Striped Silk Manchester, and Lyons manufacturers. Messrs. BEECH and BERSALL respectfully solicit an inspection of the above, feeling assured they will be found in excess of variety, cheapness, and quality not to be excelled. For instance—
Rich Striped Glacé Silks, 1s 9½d and 1s 11½d per yard
Elegant ditto, and Satin Striped, 2s 6½d to 2s 9½d per yard
The new and elegant Checked Silks, 2s 9½d to 3s 6½d per yard
Richest Brocaded do, 2 wide, 3s 9½d to 4s 9½d, real value, 4s 6d to 5s 11d
Beautiful Glace Silks, in all the new Colours, 1s 9½d and 1s 11½d per yard. Ditto, ditto, 2 wide, 2s 9½d per yard
Very Rich Pearl-de Soies, 2 wide 4s 6d, usual price 6s 6d
Fashionable Silk Mixtures, Black Watered, and Damask Silks, Ottomans, Armures, &c., and Black Dress Satins, at one-third the prices generally asked.
Patterns of the above forwarded to any part of the country, postage free.
Address, BEECH and BERSALL, 83 and 64, Edgware-road
N.B. All parcels above 20s sent carriage paid to any part of England, Ireland, or Scotland, carriage paid, with the utmost dispatch, and safely guaranteed.

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—The Tooth-brush searches thoroughly into the divisions, and cleanses them in be most extraordinary manner, hairs never come loose; is. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Mexia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes brush, [illegible] Address, 130, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.—Metcalfe's Almanack Tooth-powder, 2s per box.

W. SHEATH, SILK-MERCER, &c., 264, Regent-street, begs to draw the attention of the Nobility and Gentry to inspect his new and well-assorted STOCK of Satins, Sarsnets, Muslins, Chinc Crape, and Barege Shawls, French de Laines, Barages, Lama Cashmeres, &c. &c. For the convenience of Ladies residing in the country, Patterns forwarded postage free to any part of the kingdom, by addressing to
W. W. SHEATH, Silk Mercer, 264, Regent-street.

EXTRAORDINARY SALE OF
MOIRE ANTIQUE SILKS
The richest qualities at 5d Guineas the Robe
(Or silly sold at 8 Guineas)
Do'ours—Pink, Sky, Silver Grey, Mauve, Nun Reens, Drabs, Browns, Black, White &
* * Patterns sent (post free). Address W. W. SHEATH, 264, Regent-street

THE RICHEST 1 WIDE
GLACE POULT DE SOIES,
at 35s the full dress
Patterns sent (post-free). Address, W. W. SHEATH, 264, Regent-street.

THE NEW 1 WIDE
DOUBLE VENETIAN SILK,
at 29s 6d the Full Dress.
Very rich FRENCH MOIRE ANTIQUE SILKS,

FASHIONABLE ORGANDIE MUSLINS,
(Fast colours), 1s 3½d per yd
The best English ditto, 6½d per yd
Extraordinarily cheap Barages, 6½d, 9½d, and 1s per yd
Superior plain ditto, 1s 2½d per yd
Patterns sent (post-free). Address W. W. SHEATH, 264, Regent-street

A WARDROBE, SIDEBOARD, and CHIMNEY PIER GLASS, to be SOLD CHEAP.—Apply at Mr. T. MADDICK'S, Upholsterer, 11, Farrance-street, Islington.

RAMSGATE ROYAL SEA-BATHING ESTABLISHMENT is now OPEN for the SEASON, by PAULIN R. PEAKE, Proprietor and Swimmer. Elegant Bathing Machines, double and single. Terms—Lady's or gentleman's, 6d each; three baths, 1s. Swimming taught on safety principles, by P. H. P., for One Shilling.

SOUTH WALES.—To be Let, at Penally, cum mis from Tenby, a genteel Cottage Residence, completely furnished, comprising two sitting-rooms, communicating by folding doors three bedrooms, two attics, store-room, pantry, wine cel ar, dairy, well-spring of fine water, also, a two-stall stable and coach-house, a small flower-garden, and good kitchen garden. The Cottage is beautifully situated, facing the sea, within two minutes' walk of the Parsonage House, £25 a year. Apply on the spot, or at No. 15, Alfred-place, Bedford-square, London.

GLOBES and ORRERIES by NEWTON and SON.—Patronised by her Ma,esty and Prince Albert.—The nobility, gentry, and public in general, are respectfully informed that NEWTON and SON have constantly on sale a large assortment of GLOBES of all sizes and kinds of mounting, varying in price from 3 to 40 guineas per pair, smaller sizes, suitable for presents, at from 5s to 30s each; School Globes, 12 inches in diameter, on an improved principle. Globes of every description Manufacturers, 66, Chancery-lane.

FRESH SELTZER WATER.—FIRST ARRIVAL.—J. SCHWEPPE and COMPANY have just received the first parcel of this year's filling from Germany, soda Potass, Magnesia Waters, and Lemonade manufactured, as usual, upon the largest scale.—81, Berners-street.

CITY DOMESTIC BAZAAR!!!—The Proprietor of the above Establishment is desirous of making known to his patrons and the public generally, that he has REMOVED from 83, Ludgate-hill, to 3, OLD BAILEY (one door from Ludgate-hill), where Ladies will find SERVANTS, with good characters (during their approval), and Servants may there meet with the acquisition of speedy places without any fee. 36, Old Bailey.

GRAHAM and HEDLEY'S ROLL COCOA a perfectly pure, and so well prepared as to afford, with but very little milk, a liquid, aromatic, salubrious, and highly nutritive article of diet. Manufactured by ALEXANDER GRAHAM, M.D., F.R.S., Chemist and Professor of Chemistry. Sold retail by all Grocers and Tea dealers throughout London, and wholesale at Hedgegate-street.

Post-Office Orders cost 3d.

FIVE POUNDS of Superior Black, Green, or MIXED TEA, for 20s. Packed in a tin case, and sent carriage-free to all parts of England.—ALEXANDER GRADEN, Tea Merchant, 15, High street, Islington, London

MANSELL, HORNE, and CO., Wholesale Tea and Coffee Dealers, Importers, and Roasters, beg to call the attention of families, hotel-keepers, and other large consumers, to the peculiar system of their establishment, which is to supply them on the same terms as the trade, and to allow the same profits. Price list and samples forwarded free. A single pound and upwards sent free within the limits of the London Postage, pounds and upwards forwarded free to any part of England.—Address, MANSELL, HORNE, and Co., 8, CARTER'S-lane, Doctors'-commons, London

COCKERELL & CO.'S BEST COALS ONLY.
Purfleet Wharf, Earl-street, Blackfriars; Baton Wharf, Lower Belgrave-place, Pimlico; and No. 1, Coal Exchange. Cash price, 24s per ton.

FIRE and ROBBERY.—Safety for Plate and Cash.—CHUBB'S PATENT FIRE-PROOF SAFES and BOXES are the most complete protection for deeds, cash, plate, account-books, &c., both from fire and burglars. All are fitted with the detector locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, 28, Lord-street, Liverpool, and 16, Market-street, Manchester.

GLENFIELD STARCH.—The Ladies are respectfully requested to make a trial of the Glenfield Patent Double-refined Powder Starch, which, for domestic use, now stands unrivalled Sold by all the wholesale houses, and retail by all leading keepers in the kingdom. AGENTS WANTED. Apply to Mr. R. WITHERSPOON, 65, Dundas-street, Glasgow.

W. THOMAS'S UNIVERSAL NEWSPAPER, ADVERTISING, AND PUBLISHING OFFICES, 19 to 27, CASTLE-STREET, HOLBORN, and 2, GRAND-STREET, LONDON NEWS, and all the London, Country, and Foreign Newspapers, are forwarded from these offices to all parts of the globe with the utmost dispatch; and Advertisements, Births, Deaths, and Marriages inserted with the strictest punctuality.

BIBLES, PRAYER-BOOKS, &c.—By Royal Letters Patent.—LEIGHTON'S INDIA-PAPER BIBLE BINDING, a peculiar preparation of India-rubber, used in place of Glue, causing great flexibility with strength, so that the book may saved in the usual manner, opens with greatest freedom, and lies perfectly flat when open.—Sold by EYRE and SPOTTISWOODE, Fleet-street, and all Booksellers and dealers. Manufactured by LEIGHTON, Son, and SON, Harp-alley, Shoe-lane, who apply the Patent to all kinds of Books—Account Books, Music, Ledgers, &c. Specimens from the Manufacturers' rooms limits each Book, without which none are genuine.

Retail agent, J. W. TURRELL, 3, Bridges-place, where gentlemen wishing to apply it to their Libraries can see specimens, and obtain every information.

ELECTRO PLATE.—SELLING OFF, at 136, High Holborn, the entire STOCK of ELECTRO PLATE, at prices that must convince the Public it is the only Establishment where they can purchase bargains, as the whole must be sold immediately. Electro-Plated Corner Dishes and Covers, £6 10s 6d the set of four, former price £10 10s. Cruets, Soup Tureens, &c. A splendid assortment of Cake Baskets from 38s 6d. Chamber Candlesticks from 8s 6d; Table Candlesticks from 6s per pair; Dish Covers, Tea Urns, Electro-Plated Table Spoons or Forks, 7s per dozen; Dessert Knives or Forks, 18s; Teaspoons, 10s 6d per dozen. Every other article equally low in price at W. H. CRANBROOK and Co.'s,

"THE FINDING OF ROMULUS AND REMUS."—FROM THE PICTURE BY PIETRO DA CORTONA.

THE accounts which several of the classical writers of antiquity have left us of the time-honoured legend of Faustulus, the shepherd, having found a she-wolf on the Tiber's banks mildly suckling two infants, in whose veins flowed not mere human blood, but the true Olympian ichor of "the immortal gods," and who, under the names of Romulus and Remus, grew up to be first great chieftains amongst their more mortal pastoral companions, and ultimately the founders of "THE CITY," show what a firm hold the old traditions on the subject had taken of the popular mind in ancient Rome.

The fable has inspired the celebrated Italian artist of modern times, Pietro da Cortona, with one of the most happily-conceived productions of his genius and, as the subject has so interesting an affinity with the contents of our additional Number of this week, we present an Engraving of the painting, the more so that acquaintance with the chef d'œuvre is by no means general in this country.

The picture tells its own story.

KEY TO THE LARGE VIEW OF ROME.

The large View of Rome (drawn in Rome by Mr. G. Thomas; and engraved in London by Mr. Walter Mason,) is taken from a point on the Janiculum, close to the Gate of San Pancrazio; and the numbers in the foreground refer to prominent localities in the siege operations:—Thus, 1 and 2 show the effects of the assault in the direction of the Porta Cavallegieri; 41, entrenchments; 40 and 38 indicate the scene of the fiercest part of the struggle, viz. the rear of the Paoline Fountain, and the Church of S. Pietroin Montorio, together with the Villa Spada (37) where the Roman troops had a battery, and close to which was their great stronghold, Bastion No. 8. It was through the breach in the walls contiguous to this spot that the French made their final and successful assault, on the night of the 29th of June.

The letters A A A A show the course of the river Tiber through the city.

The other numbers indicate remarkable places and the principal structures in and around the city, viz.:—

3. St. Peter's and Vatican
4. Monte Mario
5. Hospital of S. Spirito
6. Ponte Molle
7. Mount Soracte
8. Castle of St. Angelo
9. Piazza del Orologio
10. Church of S. Maria in Vallicella
11. Villa Borghese
12. French Academy
13. Corsini Palace
14. Cancellaria Palace
15. Sapienza (University)
16. Farnese Palace
17. The Pantheon (Church)
18 and 19. Palaces Massimi and Pio, and Church of S. Andrea della Valle
20. Quirinal Palace
21. Collegio Romano, and Church of St. Ignatius
22. Professed House of Jesuits, and Church Del Gesù
23. Baths of Diocletian (Ruins)
24. Piazza of Trajan, Column and Churches
25. Ara Coeli (Church)
26 and 28. S. Maria Maggiore (Church)
27. The Capitol
29. Basilica of Constantine
30. Porta Maggiore (Gate)
31. Island in the Tiber
32. The Colosseum
33. Temple of Vesta
34. Palatine Hill (Ruins)
35. Basilica and Palace of St. John Lateran
36. Ruins of Aqueducts
39. Bridge leading to Island in the Tiber
42. Bridge, called Ponte Sisto

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1850.

A MEMOIR ON THE HISTORY AND TOPOGRAPHY OF ROME.—BY WILLIAM JOSEPH O'HEA.

Here a proud people's passions were exhaled,
From the first hour of empire in the bud,
To that when further worlds to conquer failed.
Childe Harold, Canto iv.

Of all the great centres of civilisation which have at different epochs filled the world with their glory, there has not been one whose vicissitudes have attracted such universal attention or excited such abiding interest, as have been created by the varying fortunes of the "Eternal City." The seat of a mighty Empire, which for centuries was almost co-extensive with the known world; attaining the zenith of its grandeur at that cardinal point of history where the darkness of Paganism begins to recede before the advancing light of Christianity; contributing by the Imperial unity of its wide-spread dominion, and by its laws, its language, and its literature, which the majestic genius of its people had made current amongst all nations and for all ages—the only humble means which could most speedily and effectually diffuse and establish among the different races of mankind the knowledge of the true God; presenting in the miraculous vitality of its existence, which has preserved it a metropolis for nearly three thousand years,* an extraordinary contrast to the fate of the other great cities of antiquity; recovering in later times, as if grown young again, its wonted supremacy, though of a character widely different from that which it had possessed of old, Rome, must continue to be, as it has been at every period, the admiration as well of the gifted and the learned, as of the less accomplished among the students of its wondrous ruins. At the present day, even amidst the "chaos of ruins" all around, the modern city is graced by monuments of architecture, by works of science and of art, which the structures of no other capital can rival, and which are well worthy to have ranked amongst the noblest features of the City of the Cæsars; and it constitutes one of the most peculiar and attractive of the charms which the investigation of the topography of Rome presents, that you can at the same time gratify the imagination and the taste by the pursuit of antiquarian research and by the study of the most perfect productions of genius in modern times; while the history of the causes which brought down "the Mistress of the World" from her high estate sometimes startles and instructs, and elucidates much that would otherwise be obscure and unintelligible. Those causes were manifold—

"The Goth, the Christian, time, war, flood, and fire."

But long before the name of Alaric had become the terror of Italy, the seeds of decay had entered into the constitution of the Imperial City. Previously, however, to adverting further to the circumstances of its decline, it is requisite to notice the various catastrophes, restorations, and rebuildings of "Old Rome," which finally resulted in the production of an Epitome of the Universe, as it was called, in order that we may the more distinctly mark the epoch to which that marvellous aggregation of magnificent structures belonged, the remains of which have become "a marble wilderness."

The mean straggling town which, in the early ages of the Republic, was destroyed by the Gauls under Brennus, was rebuilt with quite as little taste and regularity as presided over its first foundation. The streets were narrow and irregular; the dwellings of rude construction, low, and devoid of ornament. As the State advanced in power and prosperity, the public buildings were re-constructed on a grander scale, and new ones were added, which redeemed, in some degree, the meaner aspect of the private houses, even of the patricians, in the erection of which neither elegance nor beauty was introduced until at a comparatively later period, when the stern simplicity of the early days of the Republic gave place to the luxury which resulted from the constantly increasing wealth of all the great families of rank, who monopolised the governments of the provinces, and amassed riches by the most oppressive exactions and the most corrupt administration of the provincial revenues.

IMPERIAL ROME.

Where gorgeous tyranny had thus amass'd
All treasures, all earth's pride, that eye or ear,
Heart, soul could seek, tongue ask.—Childe Harold, Canto iv.

A great fire which occurred a short time previous to the concentration of the Imperial power in the hands of Augustus, gave to that Emperor an opportunity of displaying his magnificence in the restoration of the city, the greater portion of which had been destroyed in the flames. baths, palaces, porticoes, and shrines—"the temples of the immortal gods"—reared their gorgeous piles under the creative power of the Imperial munificence; and it was his boast that "he found Rome built of brick, and that he left it marble."† But Augustus did not remedy the chief defect in the construction of the city—its irregular, ill-arranged plan, with its narrow winding streets. These remained as imperfect as in the rebuilding after the demolition by the Gauls; and the grand work of remodelling was reserved for Nero,‡ in the tenth year of whose reign occurred that stupendous conflagration, from which only four out of the fourteen regions§ into which Rome was divided escaped unmolested, three were completely demolished, and the remaining seven suffered such havoc as to be left with scarcely a monument or trophy of past ages standing. In the ten quarters where the flames raged, all was desolation and ruin; and of the site of "the seven-hill'd city" became almost literally a tabula rasa, whereon was subsequently raised by Nero and his immediate successors that assemblage of architectural wonders, which made the name of Imperial Rome for ages synonymous with all that is grand, gorgeous, and magnificent. The graphic pen of the historian Tacitus has left us a fearful picture of the horrors of that dreadful catastrophe. The fire, he tells us, began in that part of the Great Circus which contains the Palatine and Cœlian Mounts; it quickly spread far and wide to the higher, as well as to the lower districts of the city: the shrieks of women—the various attempts to save the young, the feeble, and the aged—the hurrying in all directions through the narrow tortuous streets, of those anxious only for their own safety,—the vain efforts to rescue rich property and valuable articles of consternation of those who, flying from the flames in a direction of apparent safety, turned back in despair on finding the conflagration extending in front of them as well as behind and on either side—combined to produce a scene of inextricable confusion and inconceivable horror. which was aggravated by the terror inspired by gangs of ruffians, who ran about in all directions, flinging lighted brands to feed and spread the flames, and preventing, with menaces of denunciation, all attempts to stay the progress of the fire, declaring at the same time that they had authority for so acting. From this and other circumstances of the time, Nero, whose cruelty and wickedness made him obnoxious to charge, was accused of being the wilful author of the disaster; and the rumour received universal belief, that during the height of the conflagration he looked on calmly, enjoying the terrific scene, while he accompanied himself on his lyre, as he sang the destruction of Troy,—to which he compared the devastation around him. The fire lasted six days, at the close of which it was stayed by levelling to the ground large masses of buildings at the foot of the Esquiline Hill. It burst out a second time, but was soon finally subdued.

Amongst its ravages were included, not only the destruction of the most interesting remains of the Republican city, but also the loss of the noblest works of Grecian art—painting, sculpture, and bronze. To remove from his own shoulders the odium of such a nefarious crime, Nero charged the Christians, who were then becoming somewhat numerous at Rome, with being the authors of the calamity; and to give colour to the calumnious accusation, he subjected them to the most exquisite tortures.

On that part of the site of the ruined city lying between the Palatine and the Esquiline Hills—a space which was more than a mile in breadth —Nero erected his celebrated "Golden House," as he called the new palace in which he fixed his abode. The vastness of extent and the varied magnificence of this Imperial residence, and its ornamented grounds, almost surpass belief; and if the details that have come down to us respecting it were not too well authenticated to admit of doubt, they might justly be regarded as fabulous. Within its enclosure were comprised spacious fields, groves, orchards, and vineyards, artificial lakes, hills, and dense woods, after the manner of a solitude or wilderness, the whole being encompassed by an ample portico. The palace itself consisted of magnificent buildings, raised on the shores of the lake, like buildings of miniature city. The various wings were united by galleries, each a mile in length. The "house" or immediate dwelling of the Emperor was decorated in a style of the most excessive gorgeousness. It is described as having been tiled with gold (whence its name), with which precious metal also the marble sheathing of the walls was profusely decked, being at the same time embellished with ornaments of mother-of-pearl (which was in those times valued even more highly than gold), and with a profusion of precious stones. The ceilings and wood-work were inlaid with ivory and gold, and the roof of the Grand Banqueting-Hall was made to resemble the firmament. It was contrived to have a rotatory motion, so as to imitate the supposed motion of the heavenly bodies; and from it were showered perfumed waters. The vastness of the plan, which was projected by two famous architects of that period, named Severus and Celer, prevented its being finished during Nero's life; and one of the first expenditure of Otho's reign (anno 69) was for the completion of the palace, which, however, was not long destined to stand in its entirety a monument of Nero's extravagance, for it was in part destroyed by Vespasian, who commenced on the site the celebrated Colosseum; and a fire in Trajan's reign proved fatal to many of its majestic piles of building.

The portion of the site of the lately-destroyed city which was not occupied by the "Golden House" was appropriated to the streets and the private and public buildings of the restored capital; and in the formation and erection of these, good taste and judgment prevailed. The thoroughfares were spacious, straight, and laid out with order and regularity. The houses were built of an uniform height, and the court-yard of each was enlarged. The Emperor's intention was that every house should stand detached in its own inclosure; but this magnificent idea was only carried out in part. The mansions that were isolated were called from that circumstance insulæ, or isles, and had large porticoes erected in front of them. It was, however, in its public buildings that the splendour of Imperial Rome was most conspicuous. In this category were comprehended temples, theatres, amphitheatres, porticoes, triumphal arches, obelisks, baths, fountains, aqueducts, &c. These last were amongst the grandest of the majestic wonders of the capital. Pliny, in treating of them, says:—"If any one will diligently estimate the abundance of water supplied to the public baths, fountains, fish-ponds, artificial lakes for galley-fights, to pleasure-gardens, and to almost every house in Rome, and will then consider the difficulties that were to be surmounted, and the distance from which these streams are brought, he will confess that nothing so wonderful as these aqueducts is to be found in the whole world." The names of fourteen of the principal of these must needs of the monuments of Rome have come down to modern times; that which conveyed the largest stream into the city was the Claudian (begun by Nero and finished by Claudius); and it precipitated its waters in a mighty volume, like a mountain cataract, into an immense marble reservoir. The fountains, both for ornament and use, were almost numberless, and of exquisite design; while the thermæ, or baths, were in fact magnificent temples of health and recreation, on which were their lofty apartments decorated with mosaics and sculptured groups and ornaments, while the purifying element flowed in copious quantities, and of every variety of temperature, into capacious marble basins. Attached to these baths were libraries and pleasure-grounds, having places set apart for gymnastic exercises, and for the philosophic disputants and their schools, wherein they lectured and discussed the doctrines of their respective sects.

Of all the localities of Rome, the most celebrated in history, as well as the most superb in architectural decoration, was the district called the Roman Forum. It bore that name from its comprising within its precincts the far-famed Forum Romanum—now a desolate field of ruins, called by the undignified name of Campo Vaccino, anglicè Bullock Field. Here, amongst the crowded profusion of public edifices, stood the Temple of Concord, which so often resounded with the eloquence of Cicero, Cæsar, and others of the great "conscript fathers," during the deliberations of the Senate. In this region, also, the great Temple of Jupiter reared its lofty marble elevation upon the Capitol; and around, or adjoining the Forum, were the Temple of Saturn, the Temple of Castor and Pollux, the Temple of Janus, the Temple of Fortune, the Temple of Jupiter Tonans, the Tabularium (where were deposited the bronze tablets on which were engraved the decrees of the Senate and other public acts), the Arch of Tiberius, the Temple of Vespasian, the Arch of Septimus Severus, the Curia Julia (where the Senate usually assembled), the Arch of Titus, the Græcostasis, the Temple of Vesta, the Julian Basilica, the Temple of Antoninus and Faustina, &c. The Forum Romanum usually signifies, by way of distinction, the Forum.* The precise limits of its site, and its extent, in the area at the foot of the Capitoline and Palatine Mounts, have long proved a subject of perplexity and controversy amongst antiquarians, the views of many of whom have been justly condemned by later and more able investigators as improbable and extravagant. The celebrated book and map of the accomplished Roman archæologist, Canina, have effectually dispelled the clouds of error which have hitherto obscured this the most interesting question connected with the topography of ancient Rome.

Adjoining the Forum was the Comitium, or Assembly, an open space used in the early times of the Republic for the three grand descriptions of assembly, to which the people were summoned by the magistrates for the exercise of their rights and privileges as citizens; viz. the assembly by tribes, by centuries, and by curiæ. Subsequently, it was in part roofed and walled in, decorated with columns, &c., and became one of the ornamental buildings of the locality.

Facing the Forum, and opposite the Temple of Concord, was the tribune for public speakers, which is so famous in Roman history under the name of the Rostra, so called from its being, originally, in the time of the Republic, decked with the beaks or prows of ships taken from the enemy. From this platform (if we may use so modern a term) the orator harangued the Quirites (as the Romans loved to be called) assembled in the Forum.

The Mamertine Prison and the Tullian Dungeon, with which every classical student is familiar as the scene of the death of the Catiline conspirators, and which have an all-absorbing interest for the Christian tourist as the places in which Saints Peter and Paul were imprisoned, previous to their martyrdom in the reign of Nero, were situated also near the Temple of Concord; and, though built—the former so early as the year 630 before the Christian era, by Ancus Martius; the latter by Servius Tullius, nearly a century later—they are, at the present day, in excellent preservation, owing to the cyclopean strength of their original construction, and to the circumstance of their having been consecrated, at a very early period of Christian Rome, as shrines of the holy Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, in commemoration of their incarceration there. The Church of San Giuseppe dei Falegnami stands above these subterranean chambers, the walls of which preserve the appearance they presented in their earliest existence, being constructed of large blocks of stone, rudely put together without cement, in the ancient manner known as the Etruscan style of building. The Tullian, or lower dungeon, is approached by a flight of steps from the Mamertine; and in it is a well of clear water, in which tradition says St. Peter baptized his gaolers Processus and Martianus, whom he had converted to Christianity in the course of his nine months' incarceration: there is also inserted in the floor a fragment of a column, to which, it is said, the holy Apostle was chained.

The Forum of Julius Cæsar, the Forum of Augustus, and the Forum of Trajan—all equally celebrated for their architectural wonders—especially the latter—were in this region, through which also ran the Cloaca Maxima, or Great Sewer, built by the elder Tarquin, in the early days of the Kings, prior to the Republic, and constructed with such solidity, and of such capacious dimensions, that a great portion of it remains perfect at the present time.

Finally, within this gorgeous quarter of the city the Capitol reared its Imperial head. It was distinguished into three parts; viz. the two peaks of the Capitoline Mount—the northern crowned with the Great Temple of the Capitoline Jupiter, the southern forming the fortress known as the Tarpeian Rock (in modern times bearing the very unworthy designation of Monte Caprino), from which criminals condemned to death were precipitated; and the intervening area between, called, from its position, the Intermontium, now styled the Piazza di Campidoglio. The site of the Temple of Jupiter is occupied by the Church of Santa Maria d'Ara Celi. The Temple was begun by the Tarquins, but was not completed until the establishment of the Republic, when it was consecrated, in the year 508 B.C., to Jupiter Optimus Maximus. It was constructed and embellished on a scale and in a style of grandeur extraordinary for that period of the State; and in all the succeeding improvements, the original conception of costly decoration was fully carried out. The gates were of brass, and the tiles of the roof were of bronze gilt. A conflagration 425 years after its foundation having reduced it to ashes, its restoration was immediately commenced, and was brought to completion under the dictatorship of the celebrated Sylla, who, however, did not live to witness its dedication. Consuls, Generals Dictators, and Emperors lavished gifts of immense value upon it from time to time. Sylla did not hesitate to despoil the Temple of Jupiter Olympus, at Athens, of brazen ornaments and pillars for it. Augustus gave a collection of precious stones of great price, and 2000 lb. of gold for its decoration. It contained bronze, gold, and silver, and gilt shields, and a profusion of various treasures, including a golden chariot. Its façade, which looked to the south, in the direction of the Forum and the Colosseum, was adorned with three rows of columns; its sides with two; and the interior presented the aspect of a triple temple—for the three naves were separated, not by open arches or pillars, after the manner of a Basilica, but by party-walls of white marble. Those divisions were dedicated respectively to Juno, Jupiter, and Minerva—each being furnished with a statue of the divinity to whose worship it was appropriated; viz. the central with that of Jupiter, the lateral compartments with those of Juno and Minerva. The fan ous Sybilline books were carefully preserved in a chapel beneath the shrine of Jupiter. In the civil war between the Emperors Vitellius and Vespasian, A.D. 61, the Capitol was again destroyed by fire; and, having been restored by the latter, it was a third time reduced to ashes during a great conflagration which, in the reign of Titus, raged during three days and three nights, and inflicted vast injury on the city. The Emperor Domitian restored it (for the third time) in a style of magnificence far exceeding its ancient splendour, the gilding alone cost 12,000 talents —an amount nearly equal to two millions sterling of our money, while the columns were of Pentelic marble—one of the finest of the white marbles of Greece. It stood thus without further mishap, in all the pride of beauty, the grand seat of Pagan pomp, the metropolitan temple of Roman idolatry and superstition, until with the decline of the heathen ritual, under the Emperor Gratian, who, in the course of his reign (A.D. 375 to 383) confiscated to the service of the state, or of the Christian church, the revenues of Pagan priests and vestals, and abolished their honours and immunities—it became a prey to neglect, and consequently slow though certain ruin. "Auratum squalet Capitolium," says St. Jerome, writing shortly after this period, "fuligine, et aranearum telis omnia Romæ templa coperta sunt;" and again the same learned and holy authority tells us, "Squalet Capitolium, templis Jovis et cæteris omnibus ruinosa pendent." The exact period of the final destruction of this grand shrine of Satan has not been ascertained. On the entrance into Rome of Theodosius, in the beginning of the year 389, after his victory over Maximus, he summoned the Senate, which was still composed of the adherents of the heathen superstition, and put to the vote the important question whether the Pagan or Christian worship should be the established and recognised religion of Rome; and the Senate, in compliment to the Imperial predilections, decided by a large, though hypocritical majority, in favour of the religion of Christ; and in the succeeding reign of Honorius, an Imperial edict (A.D. 399) ordered the closing of all the Roman shrines and temples, the number of which amounted to no less than 424. These circumstances sufficiently account for and confirm the accuracy of the description of St. Jerome, "Squalet Capitolium." It must have suffered considerably in the first sack of the Goths (A.D. 410), as well as under the operation of the edict of Honorius; because the younger, who, in the year 426, decreed the destruction of the fanes and temples. But, to the ravages of Genserick (A.D. 455) and Ricimer (A.D. 472) must in all probability be ascribed the final demolition (except, perhaps, the walls) of this grand edifice, in which, for upwards of eleven hundred years "the altars of the immortal gods" had smoked with incense and the blood of victims, according to the ritual established by Numa Pompilius.

The Palaces and Villas of the nobles contributed likewise in no small degree to the magnificence which everywhere saluted the view in the Imperial metropolis. The enormous wealth of the Patrician families, derived from vast and numerous estates which they severally possessed in all the most fertile provinces of the Empire, far exceeded any modern standard of private riches, and enabled them to indulge in the most luxurious habits and tastes; one of the most universal of which was the construction within the city of residences of more than Royal splendour, surrounded by parks after the fashion of the grounds surrounding Nero's Golden House, presented the appearance of miniature cities, in such thronged profusion were they studded with baths, temples, theatres, hippodromes, open decorated places or fora, fountains, aviaries, lakes, groves, gardens, groups of statuary, &c. These splendid mansions and villas not only filled within the limits of the city, properly so called, as marked by the circuit of the modern walls, which follows pretty closely the line of circumvallation built by the Emperor Aurelian, but extended out in all directions towards the country along the great roads for several miles, bringing within the suburbs many considerable villages; and thus making Rome somewhat like modern London, an aggregate of towns, rather than a single city.

The Campus Martius should not be omitted in a notice of the memorabilia. Originally a private demesne of the Tarquin family, it became, on the expulsion of that Royal race, the property of the Republic, and was appropriated to the purposes of a national training-ground for the Roman youth, where they were taught those martial exercises which fitted them to become the conquerors of the world. Augustus and his successors expended large sums in its decoration. Pleasure-grounds, embellished with fountains and cool groves, afforded a grateful retreat after the exercise of the various games—racing, wrestling, throwing the quoit, &c. Numerous Egyptian obelisks, magnificent structures, and monuments of great beauty—amidst which rose the marble mausoleum† of Augustus, crowned with a bronze statue of that Emperor—added to the attractions of this noble park, and rendered it a suitable appendage to the mighty city.

The Circus Maximus, where the chariot and horse races, the games of the athletæ, &c., were held, is noticed in another place.

The Palatine Mount likewise possessed an ample share of the wonders of the city. Here stood the great Library of Apollo, stored with the best collection of Greek and Latin works extant in the time of Augustus, and containing the immense statue of Apollo, 50 feet high, from which the building derived its appellation. In it Augustus, towards the close of his reign, frequently convened the Senate. Adjoining were the Temple of Apollo, the houses of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, &c., and that aggregate of splendid structures which formed the Imperial Palace of the Cæsars.*

We may close this hasty, and we fear insufficient, glance, through the ruins of ages, at the stupendous structures of Imperial Rome, by the mention of the Gardens* of Sallust, the Gardens of Lucullus, the Baths of Caracalla, the Baths of Diocletian, the Colosseum, the Pantheon, and the Mausoleum of Hadrian, all of which were amongst the most conspicuous of the admirable monuments of its magnificence.

The Imperial City was continually enlarged and improved during the first century and a half of the Christian era by the Emperors, who were constantly replacing meaner edifices by grand and imposing structures, of the most varied character and vast dimensions, on which, by lavishing enormous treasures—the spoil of conquered provinces—and employing the cheap labour of countless captives and slaves, they were able to accomplish with facility what would, under other circumstances, have been impossible. The fires that occurred in the civil wars of Vitellius and Vespasian, and during the reigns of Titus and Trajan, furnished opportunities to the three last-named Emperors to indulge their taste and their grand, in the respective restorations they were thus called on to make; but, independently of such occasions, they and their immediate successors were ceaseless in their efforts to produce an aggregation of

* Rome was founded, according to Varro, Plutarch, and Dionysius Halicarnassus, about the year of the world 3428, i. e. 776 years before the Christian era. There are other dates mentioned, differing slightly from this.

† Ὅτι μὲν παραλαβὼν λιθίνην ἔμεινε καταλέπων.—Dion.

‡ Nero reigned in this respect A.D. 54.

§ The fourteen regions of Ancient Rome were:—1. Porta Capena; 2. Collmontana; 3. Isis and Serapis; 4. The Temple of Peace, or the Via Sacra; 5. The Esquiline; 6. Alta Semita; 7. Via Lata, i. e. Broadway; 8. The Roman Forum; 9. The Flaminian Circus; 10. Palatium; 11. Circus Maximus. 12. Piscina Publica; 13. The Aventine; 14. Transtiberina. The regions, or districts, of the modern city are named:—1. Rome Monte; 2. R. Trevi; 3. R. Colonna; 4. R. Campo Marzo; 5. R. Ponte, 6. R. Parione; 7. R. Regola; 8. R. Sant. Eustachio; 9. R. Piena; 10. R. Campitelli; 11. R. Sant' Angelo; 12. R. Ripa, 13. R. Trastevere; 14. R. Borg.

‖ The seven hills are the Palatine (which was the first enclosed by the founders of Rome), the Capitoline, the Quirinal, the Celian, the Aventine, the Esquiline, and the Viminal.

* The Forums were open spaces, surrounded by buildings, and were usually oblong in form. They were of two kinds; viz. markets for the sale of meat, vegetables, &c.; and places of public resort, corresponding, in some degree, with what in modern Continental cities are par excellence named places. The erections around the latter kind were usually edifices of a splendid character, such as triumphal arches, porticoes, temples, &c., of which the Forum of Trajan presented some of the best specimens in Imperial Rome.

* By the term gardens, the Romans meant not merely ornamental grounds in the form under which we understand the word, but extensive pleasure-grounds without the precincts of the city, which embraced within their extensive boundaries artificial lakes, mounts, groves, villas, porticoes, lofty towers, terraces, and whatever other objects that boundless extravagance could suggest, or exhaustless wealth create, to minister to their sensual appetites and habits of excessive luxury. The two gardens named above were amongst the most celebrated of those in that beautiful quarter of the city which encompassed and stretched up the slopes of the Pincian Hill, and which was called, in consequence, Colle Hortiorum, i.e. the Hill of Gardens. They subsequently became the property of the Emperors, in whose hands their sumptuous character was greatly augmented. In the vicinity of the site of the Gardens of Lucullus is the quarter of the modern city chiefly frequented by the English.

architectural wonders commensurate with their own exalted conceptions of that beauty and majesty which should characterise the City of the Cæsars.

It may not be inappropriate to add a few words here on the habits and manners, which, with little variation, during the five centuries that Rome flourished an Imperial city, characterised the daily life of its inhabitants. The Plebeians, or humbler classes of the gens togata, degraded, as servile and degrading, the manual industry and mechanical arts which form the basis of the wealth and independence of commercial and trading communities. The labour of the husbandman was the only industrial occupation deemed worthy of the Roman citizen; and the frequent interruptions of military service rendered agriculture by no means a very profitable pursuit. Hence, from an early period, the Plebeians were overwhelmed with debt; and the possession of those who were proprietors of land speedily fell into the hands of the avaricious nobles, who plied the practice of usury in the most unscrupulous fashion. Their wants were, however supplied by the corrupt liberality of the candidates for offices of distinction and emolument in the State, as long as the possession of the right of suffrage vested power and patronage in their hands. But, with the loss of power which they suffered under the Emperors, all sense of dignity, which they might otherwise have had amidst all their poverty, passed away, and they degenerated into a mere pauper rabble, whose numbers were continually recruited from the idle, the dissolute, and the vagabond members of the community, in the various and most dissimilar provinces of the Empire. So that the lower orders of Rome presented a population the most motley and heterogeneous imaginable; who, if they had their cry of "Panem et circenses" (bread and the public games) gratified, were content to pass the day basking in the sun in idleness, or in the grossest dissipation and debauchery — the prototype of the modern lazzaroni. They were allowed, at the public expense, originally, a certain quantity of corn monthly for their support; subsequently that was converted into a daily allowance of bread, which was baked at the public ovens, and distributed to the people at their respective districts. To it were added a certain portion of pork or bacon, and a measure of oil, and also of wine, at an insignificant price, thus constituting a very substantial and effective species of "out-door relief." They had a superabundant supply of wholesome fresh water for domestic purposes at the numberless fountains erected in every locality of the city, whilst at the thermæ they could avail themselves of the most luxurious baths free of expense. Independently of this participation in the bounty of the State, which laid its richest provinces under heavy contributions, in money and in kind, for the purpose, every rich noble kept open house for a large train of dependents, who regarded the great man as their patron, and "the crumbs that fell from his table" as one of the chief sources of their sustenance. The mansions of the nobles, as already mentioned, occupied the greater portion of the area of the city, and, from the splendour of these, their mode of life can be readily understood. But the plebs—the profanum vulgus, as Horace called them—were crowded into small, badly-lighted, and ill-vent lated apartments, in houses which were raised in narrow, confined streets, to a lofty elevation, story above story, to accommodate the vast numbers of the citizens. These numbers have been variously computed, in the absence of any fixed data. The moderate estimate of Gibbon, of a million and a quarter, applies to a period when the Empire, and with it the metropolis, was fast declining, as well in popul usness as in power and prosperity; but it may serve to indicate how numerous (including slaves") must have been the population of the Eternal City in the palmy days of Trajan, of Hadrian, and of the Antonines.

THE DISASTERS OF THE IMPERIAL CITY.

The Goth, the Christian, time, war, flood, and fire,
Have dealt upon the seven-hill'd city's pride:
She saw her glories star by star expire,
And up the steep barbarian Monarchs ride,
Where the car climb'd the Capitol; far and wide
Temple and tower went down, nor left a site.
Chaos of ruins! who shall trace the void,
O'er the d m fragments cast a lunar light,
And say, "Here was, or is," where all is doubly night?

Childe Harold, Canto iv.

The first of the grand shocks which proved fatal to the splendour of the Imperial City was communicated during its capture and brief occupation by Alaric and his Gothic hordes, anno 410. For upwards of a century and a half, however, previous to that catastrophe, the operation of the causes which had most contributed to its magnificence had been suspended; while others had come into force, of a character positively prejudicial, and well calculated to foster a certain, though gradual decay. From the reign of the Emperor Decius, A.D. 249, to that of Diocletian, in the year 305, he incessant incursions of the Goths and Vandals on the eastern side of the Empire, and the civil wars and insurrections headed by various pretenders to the Imperial purple, which had distracted Gaul and the western provinces, whilst they wholly absorbed the attention of the Emperors, and kept them constantly absent from the metropolis, had served at the same time to dissipate the diminished treasures which the crippled resources of the provinces were still able to yield, and which in more prosperous times had been applied to the decoration of the capital. On the restoration of a comparative state of tranquility under the latter Emperor, Rome, in a great degree, ceased to be the seat of government. Diocletian, associating Maximian with himself in the dignity of the purple, and dividing the empire into the Eastern and the Western, fixed his own residence, as ruler over the former, in Nicomedia, on the Sea of Marmora, the chief city of Bithynia, in Asia Minor; while Maximian chose Milan as the metropolis of the West; and though the Senate still sat in their ancient halls beneath the Capitol, they no longer exercised any of the administrative powers of the State, which had become wholly centred in the vigorous and unscrupulous hands of the Illyrian peasants, whom the chance of war and the caprice of the army had placed upon the throne of the Cæsars, and who, quite regardless of, and probably insensible to, the majestic beauty of the Eternal City, regarded the expenditure necessary for the maintenance of its lustre unimpaired as money uselessly squandered.

The short restoration of the Imperial presence, in the person of the pernicious Maxentius (anno 306–312), was more than counterbalanced to the city than the absence and neglect of his predecessors had been.

The reign of the Great Constantine did not stay, but, on the contrary, it accelerated the tendency to decline, which the circumstances of the times had produced. As soon as the defeat and destruction of his rivals had laid the whole Empire prostrate at his feet, he transferred the seat of dominion to the shores of the Bosphorus; and Constantinople, called after his own name, founded (A.D. 324) on the site of Byzantium, and decorated with profuse magnificence, quickly attracted from the discarded banks of the Tiber that numerous section of the patricians, who had everything to hope or fear from the countenance or disfavour of the Imperial Court. Many of the wealthy Christians also withdrew to the new capital, for the more unrestricted exercise of their religion; for Rome was in a great degree still Pagan. The deserted palaces of those absentee nobles soon became a prey to neglect; and the numerous retainers and dependents, who thickly swarmed in the vicinity of the aristocratic mansions, disappearing with the departure of the lordly sunshine which had called them into existence, the first feature of decay—a diminishing population—began to characterise this epoch of mighty Rome.

The incessant wars and revolutions, external and internal, which had harassed and exhausted every province of the Empire, during the close of the fourth century, notwithstanding the transcendent abilities of the great Theodosius, evidenced its steady progress towards final dissolution into its original elements—a condition, however, which was indicated with still more emphatic distinctness in the aspect of material decay which Imperial Rome assumed under its Emperors and opentuon; while whatever advantages of honour or of splendour which were connected with the residence of the Imperial Court and of the great officers of state and justice, were monopolised by Milan, Ravenna, and Constantinople.

It was in this state of things, that, during the reign of the feeble Honorius, Alaric and his myrmidons, after long hovering about their prey, at last pounced upon the ill fated city, which they entered at midnight, on the 24th of August, 410. During six days the ferocious rapacity and licentious fury of the barbarians raged unrestrained through its marble palaces and gilded temples. The destructive agency of fire was called to the aid of their violent passions, which were directed with unerring certainty against the noblest and richest monuments of art and luxury by the hatred and revenge of forty thousand slaves, who had deserted from their Roman masters to join the Gothic camp. Unheard-of atrocities were inflicted on the wretched Romans. Indiscriminate massacre, tortures, captivity, and exile were the ultimate fate reserved for them; and, when the savage leaders withdrew from the half-ruined city, the numbers of the inhabitants were so thinned, both by the previous flight of the terror-stricken who had withdrawn at the approach of Alaric, and by the slaughter of those who, vainly confiding in the strength of their walls, had remained, that the streets and public places, once so populous and full of life, presented the aspect of a solitude. On the return of the population, no less than 14,000 entered the city in one day.

To the Christian churches alone, especially that of St. Peter's, which had been erected by Constantine the Great, was any immunity from the general destruction extended; but with respect to the other great structures of the city, though the massive piles of marble masonry and brick-work, and the enormous beams of bronze, resisted the impotent violence of the destroyer, yet, in their dismantled state—the impoverished condition of the citizens furnishing but slender means for their subsequent repair and restoration—they readily fell to decay. The prestige of inviolability which had so long encompassed the renowned city with a mystic character, as it were, of divine sanctity, was irretrievably lost; and, from this disastrous era, the march of ruin advanced with an accelerated step for a full century with little or no interruption. Although some restorations were effected through the zeal and energy of the Prefects of the city, yet they were by no means commensurate with the ravages which had been committed by the hordes of Alaric.

The Western Empire, on the stability of which the grandeur of Rome depended, was torn and dismembered during the first half of the fifth century by the savage tribes of the North. Alans, Huns, Suevi, Burgundians, the Franks, Saxons, who established permanent kingdoms in those provinces which had regarded Rome as their capital—their metropolis and who only looked upon the former seat of the Cæsars as a rich object of plunder. Africa, too, which had hitherto been the granary from which the luxurious citizens of the capital had drawn their supplies, soon fell into the hands of the barbarians; and thus, under the operation of famine, the population shrank into fearfully diminished proportions, and many noble mansions became tenantless ruins.

In the year 452, Attila, "the Scourge of God," at the head of 500,000 Huns—the fiercest, the most hideous in personal aspect, and the most savage of all the barbarian hordes that had been let loose on the civilised world—advanced with furious haste across the Alps towards Rome, devastating with fire and sword the countries through which he passed; but the payment of a large sum of money, and the persuasive exhortations of Leo (justly surnamed the Great, for his many virtues and abilities), who then sat as Pope in the chair of St. Peter, operated so powerfully on the mind of the barbarian, that he withdrew his forces beyond the Danube, and the imminent destruction was thus averted.

But the respite of ill-fated Rome was not of long duration. In less than two years from Attila's retreat, Genserick, the King of the Vandals, who had a few years previously entered Africa from Spain, and had made himself master of the whole southern coast of the Mediterranean, set sail for the Tiber, with a numerous host of Moors and Vandals, and on the 15th of June, A.D. 455, entered the defenceless capital.

During full fourteen days and nights the barbarian horde rioted in wanton pillage. They set to work on the rich booty like practised corsairs, and, free from any apprehension of interruption, they loaded their ships with the spoils of both Pagan and Christian Rome. All that had been restored during the forty-five years that elapsed since the hasty ravages of Alaric, was again dismantled and despoiled. From the Pagan temples on the Capitol the gilt statues of the gods and heroes, and all the rich paraphernalia pertaining to the shrines and worship of Jupiter, Juno, and Minerva, which had hitherto continued untouched, notwithstanding the abolition of heathenism as the religion of the State, were carried away,* together with what remained of the costly decorations, the magnificent furniture and plate of the Imperial Palaces, and Nero's Golden House, on the Palatine Hill. The gold and silver taken away amounted to several thousand talents; and even the brass and copper fixtures and sculptured marbles were torn from the buildings, whose structure, in which they had been imbedded, was thus left shaken and tottering, a ready prey to certain ruin.

The most remarkable, however, of the various objects of curious value and importance of which Genserick rifled the Eternal City, were the spoils of the Temple of Jerusalem, which, four centuries before, had decorated the triumph of the Emperor Titus, on his return from the subjugation of the Jews, and had subsequently been deposited in the Temple of Peace. The golden tables of the Law, the seven-branched golden candlestick, the elaborately-chased golden vessels, and the various costly utensils of the gorgeous ritual of Israel, were now degraded to the base purpose of enhancing the plunder of a savage sea-robber.† The Emperor Valentinian III. was also included in this general rapine, and the Vandal followers of the blasphemous Arius deemed it no sacrilege to lay violent hands on the altars of the Roman Catholic temple.

Thousands of unhappy captives, of both sexes and all ages, were torn from their homes by the barbarous conquerors; and solitude and desolation reigned in the once gay and crowded thoroughfares of Rome.

The Imperial ruines of the once proud Empire city were now fast hastening to their final end. During the short period that intervened to the dissolution of the Western Empire—from A.D. 455 to A.D. 476—its last convulsive struggles were felt with fatal violence at the heart and centre of vitality, the metropolis. There the supreme power was vested in the hands of a barbarian chief, Ricimer—the Patrician or Count Ricimer—who, from the prejudices entertained against his birth, being unable to assume the Imperial purple himself, conferred that empty dignity upon such of his creatures as he deemed the fittest tools for his own selfish purposes—hastening or delaying their downfal as suited his caprice or ambition. Not finding in Emperor Anthemius (whose daughter he had espoused) as pliant and subservient as he desired, Ricimer set up another Emperor (the senator Olybrius), and, advancing from Milan, appeared under the walls of Rome, with a numerous host of Burgundians, Suevi, and other barbarians. He readily took possession of what may be called the Eternal City, which had gradually sprung up in the vicinity of St. Peter's, beyond the Tiber; while his adversary, Anthemius, held the old or heathen city. During three months, while famine and pestilence thinned the inhabitants, the ravages of unscrupulous barbarians on both sides (Anthemius being chiefly supported by an army of Goths) levelled ruins on ruins, many a noble pile and classic monument. At length Ricimer forced his way over the bridge of St. Angelo, and the fury of the soldiers exhausted itself on the devoted city; in the language of a contemporary writer, the Pope Gelasius, it was subverted (A.D. 472). Anthemius perished in the slaughter; and forty days afterwards the Roman was rescued from the destructive protection of Ricimer by his death, which happened on the 20th of August in the above year.

At this period Italy was over-run by bands of barbarian soldiers called Confederates, whose chiefs aspired to, and contended amongst themselves for, the possession of the supreme power. One of these, Orestes, having placed his son Romulus Augustus (who in derision was styled Augustnius) on the Imperial throne, they and their adherents were attacked and conquered by a barbarian adventurer, Odoacer, who put Orestes to death, and deposed the feeble Augustulus, A.D. 476; and the Senate consulting to the discontinuance of that Imperial succession, which had now become a mockery, the existence of the great Empire of the West was thus ingloriously brought to a close, after a duration of twelve centuries and a half!

Although not pertaining, in the strict sense of the word, to the history of the city, the decisive battle that was gathering around the Roman epoch requires to be noticed, as the destruction of the resources of the surrounding country put an end to any reparative powers which the capital might and would have derived from a populous and prosperous rural district in its vicinity.

Odoacer, who was the first of the barbarians that ruled as "King of Italy," and his successor the Ostro-Goth Theodoric, gave up to their rapacious soldiery a third of the lands of Italy. But these dissolute and idle adventurers were not the men to maintain the fertility of the Campagna. "Their poverty," says Gibbon, "was incurable, since the most liberal donations were soon dissipated in wasteful luxury. As the most fertile estates became barren in their hands, they despised, but they envied, the laborious provincials; and when their subsistence had failed, the Ostro-Goths embraced the familiar resources of war and rapine." Oppressed by the presence of such destructive hordes, the soil quickly ceased to supply the natural wants of man; and in a chronic condition of scarcity, and amid repeated famines and their attendant pestilence, that population that was spared by the sword gradually wasted away, until at length whole districts, extending many leagues in every direction, became entirely depopulated, presenting the appearance, which many of them still retain, of an uncultivated desolate wilderness.

During the sixty years immediately succeeding the fall of the Western Empire, the dominion of the barbarians in Italy is not marked by the occurrence of any grand disaster to whatever remained of the beautiful and wonderful in the Imperial city. Theodoric, the Ostro-Goth, who was a statesman as well as a warrior, indeed, endeavoured to arrest the universal decay that he saw around him. We learn from his minister, the accomplished Cassiodorus, that there were even then (the close of the fifth and beginning of the sixth centuries) many imposing structures still remaining—so numerous, so lasting, and so stupendous had been the monuments of Rome's magnificence, and so difficult their final destruction! Their still stood, either wholly or in great part preserved, the Colosseum, the Forum of Trajan, the Circus Maximus, the Capitol, the Palace of the Cæsars, and the Theatre of Pompey. All around, scattered far and wide, broken columns, piles of masonry, and blocks of marble lay prostrate on the ground.

The celebrated Belisarius, the General of the Emperor of the East, Justinian, having entered Italy to re-assert the sovereignty of his master over the West, advanced in the year 536 to rescue Rome from the barbarians; and such was the fame of his arms, and so crippled at that period were the resources of the Goths, that, without waiting his approach, they evacuated the city, and Belisarius made his entry without opposition on the 10th of December, amidst the acclamations of the inhabitants, who hailed him as their deliverer. During the following sixteen years Rome was captured no less than four times successively; viz. by Totila, the Goth, in 546; by Belisarius, in 547; by Totila again, in 549; and finally by the Greek General the eunuch Narses, in the year 552. The dilapidation of Rome by barbarian hands is usually considered as having terminated with Totila's last capture; but the various assaults, sieges, and efforts at defence, which mark this fatal era, filled up the measure of destruction, and completed the deformity of the wide-spread ruins which now occupied the site of the Imperial City. The desolation of the adjacent country, from the Appenines to Naples, advanced pari passu with the ruin of the capital. During those fearful oppression of the Greek Emperors and their Exarchs, ultimately, with the consent and by the desire of the Roman people, confirmed and strengthened, until the princely donations of Pepin and Charlemagne, at the close of the eighth century, gave shape, and communicated stability and independence to the Papal dominions and sovereignty.

THE CAPITOL.

PIAZZO DI SPAGNA.

"The same character," says Gibbon, "was adopted by the Italian, the Greek, or the Syrian, who ascended the chair of St. Peter; and, after the loss of her legions and provinces, the genius and fortune of the Popes again restored the supremacy of Rome." In the two centuries that the Lombard kingdom lasted, their incursions (which laid waste the Campagna) did not affect the city itself, with the single exception of the assault of Astolphus, in 755, which proved fatal to the structures without the walls; and, until the wars and disorders of the middle ages, Rome (under the Popes) enjoyed a long immunity from siege and capture, which was but once interrupted, viz. in the year 896, when the forces of the Emperor Lambert defended its walls against the Bavarian Prince Arnulphus, who, however, succeeded in entering the city as conqueror.

The prime causes of the desolation of the Eternal City having been thus briefly indicated, it remains to add a word or two on the other co-operating agencies, which largely helped to reduce her to a "marble wilderness."

The pious zeal of the early Christians, whose horror of idolatry frequently found expression in the destruction or defacement of the Pagan temples, altars, and statues of gods and heroes; and the poverty or willing economy of Popes and Bishops, nobles and private individuals, who, for want of more easily attainable materials, had frequent recourse in almost every age from the fifth to the fifteenth century, in the erection of churches, and the repairs of the walls, fortresses, and habitations, to the massive buildings of the Imperial city, as to an inexhaustible quarry,* contributed in no slight degree to produce this result. Causes equally destructive are also to be found in the fires which generally accompanied the numerous tumults and outbreaks of the populace, and which occurred with more fatal frequency after the withdrawal of the Imperial Court to Constantinople. The repeated inundations of the Tiber were likewise a fertile source of dilapidation. Ancient Rome was far more exposed to the irruptions of the Tiber than the modern city, the soil of which, by the accumulation of centuries of débris and alluvial deposit upon the ruins of open places, streets, and buildings, has been elevated from thirteen to fifteen feet above the old level, and is therefore, less accessible to the rising waters. Add to these, the endless feuds of the rude aristocracy of the middle ages, which were carried on within the walls; the effects of tempests and earthquakes, the violence and frequency of which are noted both in early and comparatively recent times; the abstraction of marbles by Charlemagne in the ninth, and Robert of Scily in the fourteenth century, for the construction and decoration of their respective palaces at Aix-la-Chapelle and Naples; and the silent wear of time in the deserted quarters, and some conception may be formed of the manifold agents of destruction that concurred to humble "the seven-hill'd city" pride."

MONTE CAVALLO.

* The marble slabs and ornaments were frequently broken up and burnt for lime. The Colosseum was for years a colossal lime-kiln.

ARCH OF DRUSUS.

TOMB OF CECILIA METELLA.

BASILICA OF CONSTANTINE.

TEMPLE OF VESTA.

The Rome of the middle ages demands but brief notice. Our limits, and the inferior interest of the period, as far as relates to the purpose of this memoir, do not admit of a detailed account of the ruinous effects upon the skeleton of the Imperial city produced by the intestine quarrels and bloody strife of the feudal factions—of the adherents of the Popes and Emperors, in the dissensions between the Church and the revived Empire of the West—and of the Guelphs and Ghibellines, in the distracted epoch between the tenth and the fifteenth centuries. Pitched battles of the most sanguinary character were repeatedly fought within the walls; ancient ruins and modern churches were alike made subservient to the purposes of domestic war, either by furnishing lime and materials for, or by becoming the substructures of, towers and fortresses sufficiently strong to resist the assault of a siege. In the tenth and eleventh centuries the chief places of the city were thus parcelled out amongst the Colonna, the Orsini, the Conti, the Frangipani, the Savelli, and other noble families. The ravages of the Normans under Robert Guiscard, and of the troops of the Emperor Henry IV. towards the close of the latter period, desolated the Leonine City beyond the Tiber (built by Pope Leo IV. in the middle of the ninth century), the mighty fabric of the Colosseum, and the districts around the Esquiline, the Celian, and the Viminal Hills.

In 1291, after the death of Nicholas IV., there was an interval of six months during which no Pope was elected; and, there being no legitimate authority in existence, a loose rein was given to the violent passions of the factions, who rioted in an internecine warfare against life and property.

Some of the occasions most fertile in disorders of this kind were the coronations of the Western Emperors; but, perhaps, the most calamitous period of all, during those turbulent times, was the interval between the years 1305 and 1376, when the Popes took refuge from the dangers and difficulties by which they were beset, in the dominions of the French Monarch, and fixed their abode at Avignon—a period which is also remarkable in history for the attempt made by the celebrated Rienzi to establish, under the quaint title of "The Good Estate," a Republican form of Government, in the room of the Sovereignty of the Popes—an attempt which proved as futile as the revolutionary efforts of our own day.

The strong measures adopted by Pope Eugenius IV., in 1434, to coerce the obedience of some of his revolted subjects, are cited amongst the destructive agencies of that era, but there is much surmise and conjecture in what is advanced on that head.

Rome at this time had degenerated, after a duration of upwards of two thousand years, to a condition and aspect as mean as, and infinitely more wretched than, it presented in the days of its first founders. A very small portion of the great space within the walls was occupied by the inhabitants; the rest of the inclosure being field, marsh, or garden: the streets were narrow, irregular, and filthy; and the houses, devoid of elegance or ornament, were built, without reference to order, either upon or amongst the rubbish of the Imperial ruins. From this paltry town sprang the modern capital which we now behold, and which the taste and magnificence of its ecclesiastical Sovereigns has studded with monuments of art that rival the architectural prodigies of the City of the Cæsars.

MODERN ROME.

Thro' every change the seven-hill'd city hath Retain'd her sway o'er nations, and the Cæsars
But yielded to the Alarics, the Alarics
Unto the Pontiffs; Roman, Goth, or Priest—
Still the world's master! Civilised, barbarian,
Or saintly—still the walls of Romulus
Have been the circus of an empire.

Like Thebes, or Babylon, or Carthage, the name of Rome might have been erased from the earth, if the city had not been animated by a vital principle, which again restored her to honour and dominion. GIBBON.

THE rise of modern Rome cannot be referred to a date earlier than the close of the fifteenth century* (1480), when Sixtus IV. wholly recast the city, on a scale in some degree commensurate with its noble destiny, and the grandeur of the title which admiring ages have conferred upon it—"the Eternal City." This enterprising Pontiff engthened the streets, and made them wider and straighter; he cleared them of the obstructions created by the shapeless ruins which rose in deformed masses on every side; he repaired the walls; he improved the communication between the two banks of the river by the erection of a new bridge; and the buildings which were raised in every quarter under his auspices were of a superior character. The spirit of improvement which he introduced was zealously carried out by the Popes immediately succeeding, and Julius II. and Leo X. are distinguished among the principal contributors to the re-construction and re-decoration of the city in this period. The Roman nobles, too—especially the Colonna and Orsini—instead of wasting their resources in intestine feuds, applied them to the purposes of luxury, and erected family mansions—or, as they were more appropriately termed, palaces—of the noblest extent and proportions, which the revival of the arts and the abundant living genius of the period enabled them to finish in a style of splendour unsurpassed and rarely equalled in ancient or modern times. Painting, sculpture, and architecture, in their palmiest day of excellence, copiously

CHARIOT RACE IN THE CIRCUS MAXIMUS.

* The pontificate of Nicholas V., from A.D. 1447 to 1455, though marked by some restorations in the city, is more distinguished by his firm establishment of the Papal power over the hitherto turbulent and ungovernable Romans, who, until his reign, proved themselves true to their ancient reproach of inability to endure either perfect servitude or perfect freedom. The last Emperor crowned in Rome (Frederick III.) received the diadem at his hands, A.D 1452.

contributed their most felicitous efforts to the decoration of those gorgeous edifices, many of which still attest the proud pre-eminence of Italy over all other modern nations in the domain of art.

Magnificent churches also reared their lofty dimensions, under the untiring zeal of Popes and Cardinals. Most of the various buildings of the Vatican, including the Loggie and the Belvedere, a great portion of St. Peter's, the palaces of the Cancellaria, the Farnesina, and, a little later, the Farnese, with its noble cortile; the Lungara and Giulia streets, spacious, long, and straight, on either side of the Tiber, and a vast number of other great works, especially in the lower city, on the banks of the river, attest the spirit of enterprise which distinguished men of the period under consideration brought to the restoration of the city.

In the Pontificate of Clement VII. (A.D. 1523—1534), however, a frightful storm of destruction broke over the capital of Christendom, as disastrous in its effects as the first fury of the Goths, eleven centuries previously. The political complications with Spain and Germany, which had for some time prior become more menacing daily, at last reached a crisis by the irruption of the German army, under the command of the Emperor Charles V. across the Alps, towards the close of the year 1526. They were commanded by George Frundsberg; and being, like their leader, attached to the new movement of the Reformation, their hostility was animated by the fervour of religious zealotry. They advanced through Italy with little or no obstruction to their impetuous career; and, with numbers greatly increased by accessions from the Spanish and Italian armies of the Emperor, arrived before the city on the 5th of May, 1527. The resistance was feeble; and the next day these modern Goths poured their hostile masses into Modern Rome. Their thirst for spoliation and plunder was heightened by the absence of all control over their proceedings; for Frundsberg had been seized with a dangerous illness on the line of march, and the constable, Bourbon, on whom the command then devolved, had been killed under the walls at the first assault. For upwards of nine months, until the 17th of February, 1528, Rome, with all its revived magnificence, was given up to the ravages of these barbarous hordes. Clement was besieged in the castle of St. Angelo, while the Imperial troops rioted in the sack of his capital. Churches were in an especial manner devoted to pillage: not only were the sacred vessels of gold and silver taken from the altars, but the rich vestments of satin and velvet embroidered in gold, tapestries and carpets, the costly productions of the Italian loom, precious stones, and rare valuables with which the munificent piety of princely and noble families had endowed the religious temples of the city, were seized with fierce rapacity and carried off. Palaces and private mansions shared a like fate; and amongst the works despoiled or destroyed were statues and columns, and many monuments of antiquity. Two years later witnessed another calamity of a different character—an inundation of the Tiber, which was attended with considerable damage to many edifices.

But the glory of Rome was not to be thus extinguished: the vital principle which has so long animated its checquered existence from its first foundation had lost none of its elasticity in the sixteenth century. The work of restoration and embellishment was renewed with increased vigour in succeding Pontificates. Under Pius IV. (A.D. 1559—1566) the foundation of the Palazzo dei Conservatori on the Capitoline Hill, the church of Santa Maria degli Angeli, on the Viminal (erected by Michael Angelo), and the Porta Pia, in the neighbourhood of the Quirinal, evinces with what earnestness that Pontiff applied himself to the accomplishment of his cherished object—the re-peopling and re-clothing with habitations the deserted hills. The taste and luxury of the nobles, cardinals, and prelates ably seconded the designs of the Popes, and Rome once more began to resume her ancient pre-eminence in monuments of art.

The grand restorer, however, of the sixteenth century was the celebrated Sixtus Quintus (A.D. 1585—1590). By means of the Aqua Felice, he brought a copious supply of water—sufficient to feed 27 fountains—from a distance of 22 miles into the city.

The ruined site neighbourhood of the Church of the Trinità dei Monte, on the Pincian Hill, and the Piazza di Spagna, was also the scene of his improvements; and the streets named after him, Felice, Sistina, &c., perpetuate the memory of his labours in this quarter. The spirit of the antiquarian, which would guard with tender veneration from even a rude or careless touch the relics of a past age, by Christians was wholly unknown to the utilitarian Sixtus, and he felt little scruple in christianizing the statue of the Capitoline Minerva, by replacing the spear of the goddess with the cross, as emblematic of Christian Rome; and the columns of Antonine and Trajan, which he crowned, the former with the statue of St. Paul, the latter with that of St. Peter, he also raised from their prostrate condition several ancient Egyptian obelisks which had decorated the Imperial city.

The course of improvement thus vigorously entered upon was followed up in succeeding reigns, though not with quite the same energetic assiduity. Clement VIII. made several important additions to the Vatican, to St. Peter's, and to other churches; but it was reserved for the opening of the seventeenth century to produce a rival of Sixtus, in the person of Paul V. (Borghese—A.D. 1605—1621), who, following out the plans of his predecessor, not only founded and decorated palatial and ecclesiastical structures, but also applied himself to the creation of improvements of a character to promote physical comfort and convenience, by widening and lengthening streets, cutting thoroughfares through the dense masses of mingled rubbish and wretched dwellings which blocked up several localities, and rendering those and other crowded districts open and airy, by the formation of piazzas or squares, which he surrounded with stately buildings. He crowned his labours by the completion of a still more stupendous project than the Aqua Felice of Sixtus, viz. the aqueduct which bears his name, the Aqua Paola.

Paul V. also resolved to signalise his pontificate by putting a final hand to what remained to be finished of the structure of St. Peter's: he accordingly enlarged and extended the principal nave, and completed the façade and portico of the gigantic basilica. Urban VIII. (Barberini—A.D. 1623—1644) erected churches, palaces, and fortifications; he repaired and strengthened the lines encompassing the Castle of St. Angelo and the Vatican, and by this means included the latter by continuing the fortified wall from the latter to the gate of San Pancrazio, which he rebuilt, he united the Leonine City to the Trastevere, and completed the entire circumvallation of the city on the right bank of the Tiber.

The Piazza Navona, with its fountains and obelisk, occupying the site of the ancient Circus Agonalis of Alexander Severus, the church of St. Agnes, with its noble façade, the Palazzo and Villa Pamfili, and various other works, attest the building industry of Innocent X. (Pamfili—A.D. 1644—1655). The sculptured Colonnade of the Piazza of St. Peter's, the Acqua Felice, the Collegio Romano*, the Sapienza (the National University of the States of the Church), the Propaganda,† and the Piazza del Popolo, were also the objects of his restorations and embellishments.

Many of the modern improvements were, however, but too often obtained at the cost of relics of antiquity.

Rome had thus, towards the close of the seventeenth century, become almost wholly the city of splendid churches and palaces we now behold. Some further improvements were made in the last century, but they were not numerous, nor of much importance; and many of the streets, especially those of the poorer class, were suffered to remain the mean, dingy, narrow lanes which they were in the beginning of the fifteenth century, and which, without much essential improvement, they continue to be at the present day.

Modern Rome occupies scarcely more than a third of the space contained within the circuit of the walls; extending from north to south little more than a mile and a half, and from east to west (from Santa Maria Maggiore to the banks of the Tiber at the Ponte Rotto) about a mile and a quarter. Like the ancient city it lies chiefly on the left bank of the river, but in other respects the population has shifted its quarters altogether. The most thickly inhabited parts of Imperial Rome lay to the south and east of the Capitoline Hill, and comprised the Palatine, the Aventine, the Quirinal, the Esquiline, the Viminal, the Celian Hills, and their intermediate valleys. All this area is now a wilderness, covered with ruins and mounds, clothed with weeds, and interspersed with fields, gardens, vineyards, and a few scattered churches, convents, and humble habitations. The modern city stretches to the north of this desolate region; its most densely-peopled quarters lying upon the site of the Campus Martius, which was the park of the city of the Cæsars, and upon the slopes of the Pincian, which was the Hill of Gardens.

THE RUINS.

Cypress and ivy, weed and wallflower, grown
Matted and massed together, hillocks heap'd
On what were chambers, arch crushed, columns strown
In fragments, choked up vaults, and frescoes steep'd
In subterranean damps, where the owl peep'd
Deeming it midnight: temples, baths, or halls?
Pronounce who can; for all that Learning rear'd
From her research hath been, that these are walls.

Childe Harold, Canto iv.

With respect to the ruins of Ancient Rome, few and fragmentary as they are at the present day, it is undoubtedly to the late ingent and laborious excavations of the French during their occupation of the city under Napoleon, from the year 1809 to 1814, that we owe that spirit of truly learned inquiry which has elucidated, by enlightened research and actual discovery, the history, origin, and purpose of those interesting relics, with a truthfulness that until now had been deemed utterly unattainable. Much, however, remains to be done; and let us indulge the hope that the fruit of the investigations hitherto pursued may stimulate those who alone have the power to renewed efforts in a cause of such high and noble interest.

All dissertation on the ruins, without an enlightened and comprehensive system of excavation down to the original level, can be at best but guess-work, more or less correct or erroneous as chance directs. As the "Childe" hath it—

The double night of ages, and of her,
Night's daughter, Ignorance, hath wrapt and wrap
All round us; we but feel our way to err:
* * * * * * *
Rome is as the desert, where we steer,
Stumbling o'er recollections.

And, in good sooth, the Roman antiquaries, in all their numerous and voluminous treatises, have been doing scarcely aught else than "stumbling o'er recollections." To enter, then, in this place, upon a topic the treatment of which must be necessarily of a critical and inquiring character, would be as inappropriate as it would be dry and uninteresting to the general reader, and more calculated to repel than to attract his attention—a result certainly the least desirable possible on our part. We shall, therefore, restrict ourselves to noticing a few of those ruins which are not only the most stupendous of the relics of antiquity, but are also the best authenticated, both as to their purpose and history.

THE COLOSSEUM.

Arches on arches! as it were that Rome,
Collecting the chief trophies of her line,
Would build up all her triumphs in one dome,
Her Coliseum stands.
* * * * * * *
And here the buzz of eager nations ran
In murmur'd pity, or loud-voiced applause,
As man was slaughter'd by his fellow man.

Childe Harold, Canto iv.

The Colosseum, or Coliseum, as it is sometimes written, claims attention first among the ruins, as well on account of its majestic proportions as of its having been the grand theatre of those games which bore the especial impress of the national character of the Roman people; and upon which some explanatory observations are requisite, in order to arrive at a fuller understanding of what this giant structure really was, and in what respect it constituted the most characteristic feature of Pagan Rome.

Under the generic title of Ludi Circenses (games of the circus), may be classed all those public amusements which consisted of the exhibition of gymnastic feats of strength or skill, where the accomplishments displayed were those of the body, as contra-distinguished from scenic representations, at which the drama—the emanation of the intellect—was presented to the attention of the spectators. The theatre was the home of the latter; the amphitheatre, the circus, the naumachia, or artificial lakes, the stadia, &c., were the localities devoted to the former. These comprised, first, the Penthathlum, or Quinquertium, that is, the Five Games which were always classed together; viz. running, leaping, throwing the discus, wrestling, and boxing; and next, the chariot races, the combats of gladiators, the exhibition and combats with wild beasts, the ludus Trojæ, and the naumachiæ, or naval engagements. All these games were celebrated either in places set apart for each respectively, as the Circus for the chariot-races and the ludus Trojæ; the Stadium, for the five games of the Penthathlum; the Amphitheatre, for the combats of gladiators and wild beasts; and the Naumachiæ, for representations of sea-fights: or they were all, with the exception of the chariot race, exhibited occasionally, especially on grand festivals, in the amphitheatres; and this occurred most frequently after the erection of the Colosseum, the vast dimensions and more perfect construction of which presented, for such a variety of display, facilities unattainable in other amphitheatres.

Attached as the Romans were to these various kinds of entertainment, the gladiatorial combats and the races were those which excited their highest admiration, and the inordinate love of which formed the great and master passion of all the desires with which dissipation, depravity, or luxury inspired the Roman heart. To indulge to the full to blood—at once inflamed and gratified by the sanguinary scenes of the arena—was a part of furor with the populace, intense as it was lasting; for the gladiatorial shows were the latest remnants of Pagan barbarism that yielded to the humanizing influences of Christianity: the Gospel having been preached full four hundred years before those murderous spectacles were abolished. The races, whether with or without the chariot, were conducted by persons who were classed into four companies or factions, which were distinguished by separate colours—the Prasina (green), the Russata (red), the Alba or Albata (white), and the Veneta (azure or sky-blue). The interest excited in the public mind by these races, that the entire population of the city was divided into the adherents and abettors of the four factions, whose quarrels frequently led to sanguinary tumults, according as the chief citizens, in the time of the Republic, or at a subsequent period, the Emperors, by favouring one faction or the other, and thus placing it in the ascendant, rendered it more powerful, insolent, and overbearing to the rest. In the days of Caligula and Nero the Greens was in the ascendant.

The Circus was an oblong enclosure, semicircular at the farther end, and surrounded by seats rising one above the other, for the accommodation of the spectators. The enclosed area was divided by a low wall which ran nearly through it, parallel to the oblong sides, a passage being left at both ends, for the horses to run round. This partition was called the spina, and the course round it was named the spatium. The spina was usually decorated with ornamental structures and architectural embellishments, such as porticoes, columns, obelisks, &c. The barrier, or starting-place, was termed the carcer, and upon each end of the spina were raised three conical pillars, grouped together upon a basement, and they were designated the metæ, or goals. The chariots, after starting from the carceres, or barriers, where their station had been determined by lot, ran seven times round the spina; and the great aim of the charioteers was to round the meta in each of the seven heats as closely as possible—to graze it, in fact, as by effecting that, their circuit would be so much the shorter than that of their rivals outside them, and their chance of success in arriving first at the winning goal, at the end of the last heat, proportionally increased. The struggle is pictured by Horace with laconic force, in the words "Metaque fervidis evitata rotis."

Of these circi there were several in Rome, such as the Flaminian Circus (now occupied by the Palazzo Mattei), the Circus of Nero (on the site of St. Peter's), of Elioga balus (near the church of Santa Croce), of Alexander Severus (now the Piazza Navona), of Flora (now the Piazza Barberini), of Hadrian (adjoining the castle of St. Angelo), &c., the principal or remount being that known as the Circus Maximus, which was situated in the low ground between the Aventine and the Palatine Hills, and which, originally founded in the infancy of Rome by Tarquin the Elder, became, by subsequent repeated enlargements, improvements, and decorations, one of the grand sights of the city. It was surrounded by noble porticoes and seats of marble, wherein, during the Empire, no less an multitude than 485,000 spectators could be accommodated. Upon the spina of the Circus Maximus were raised the two Egyptian obelisks, which now stand, one in the Piazza del Popolo, the other in the Piazza of St. John Lateran. There are some fragmentary traces of this circus still to be seen on its well-known site, now called the Via de' Cerchi.

The Engraving, page 317, represents the Circus Maximus as it stood in ancient Rome, towards the close of the Empire.

The chariots had generally either two (biga) or four (quadriga) horses, yoked abreast. There were sometimes, however, six or seven horses yoked to the chariot, which was then called sejugis, septemjug s, according to the number; and Suetonius tells us that Nero, when he played the charioteer in the circus, had ten horses yoked to his car (decemjugis). The same Imperial madcap introduced races between camels, matched two and two, in the circus; and Heliogabalus delighted the populace with an equally strange variety of contest—that of racing elephants. The number of chariots entered in each missus, or match of seven heats, was four, and the usual number of matches in a day amounted to twenty-four; to which there was one generally added at the close of the day's sport, at the expense of the people, who made a collection for the purpose on the spot—hence this twenty-fifth match was called Missus Alexandrus. Originally, the sound of the trumpet announced the commencement of the race; but, ultimately, in the times of the Empire, the signal was given by the display of a napkin (mappa) hung out at the chief magistrate's seat.

The Troja, or Ludus Trojæ, was a game handed down from the earliest period of Latin history. It was celebrated in the circus by youths of the most noble families, who, dressed in ornamental costume, and armed with spear and javelin, sustained a mimic combat on horseback, something in the manner of a joust or tournament.

The Naumachiæ, a Greek word signifying naval engagements, and applied by the Romans to the contests both in the open place of representation, were originated during the first Punic War, when the Romans began to be imitated in the mysteries of sea-fights, and were at first practical schools of naval exercise, as well as public amusements. They were sometimes merely races to test the skill and swiftness of the rowers, but usually they consisted of battles on board galleys; and as the engagements were real combats, in which the blood of slaves and gladiators was copiously shed, the interest attaching to them was very great. The Emperor Augustus constructed a magnificent naumachia, in the Transtiberina, on the site of Cæsar's groves. It was elliptical in form, 1800 feet long, and 1200 feet broad, and was supplied with water by his aqueduct, called Aqua Alsietina.

The Shows of Wild Beasts comprised combats between the animals alone, and combats of men with animals. Lions, tigers, panthers, leopards, camelopards, elephants, and almost every description of wild beast, were pressed into the service of these amphitheatre. The combatants thus engaged the wild beasts were called by the general name of bestiarii, whether they fought on foot or mounted; and were for the most part insolent or criminal slaves sold by their masters for the service of the arena, prisoners of war, or the vilest malefactors. At times these unfortunates were merely ordered to be thrown to the beasts (ad bestias dari), to be torn to pieces before the assembled people, without having arms allowed them for their defence—a practice which was constantly adopted towards the primitive Christians during the persecutions from the time of Nero to that of Diocletian.

The Gladiatorial Combats were the most ancient and strictly national of all these sanguinary spectacles, and were originally exhibited only at the funeral games of distinguished citizens by their children or heirs, who, in the ferocious superstition of early Pagan barbarism, believed that, by thus shedding human blood over the graves of their deceased kinsmen, they appeased and put at rest their manes, or departed spirits. These funeral games soon became the delight of the savage populace, and, accordingly, whoever wished to obtain their votes at elections, or aimed at popularity for other purposes, pandered to their cruel appetites by an abundant supply of these exhibitions, in their varied forms.

The number of the gladiators was so very great as frequently to threaten danger to the State; and various laws were passed in the time of Cicero and of Augustus Cæsar, particularly restricting as well the occasions for giving those games as the number of the gladiators who might be at one time within the precincts of the city: but these laws, opposed as they were to the fierce spirit of the age, soon became a dead letter, and under Caligula, Nero, Domitian, and the more immediate successors of the Emperors these massacres were exhibited on the most extensive scale imaginable and with the most unbounded licence, so that not only dwarfs and women fought, but even senators and knights, divesting themselves of the dignity or modesty pertaining to their condition, mingled with slaves, malefactors, and professional gladiators in the butcheries of the amphitheatre—a degradation in which they were frequently countenanced by the example of their Imperial masters. The gladiators, in the most comprehensive sense of the term, included several different classes of combatants, according to their costume, arms, or country. The Thracians were the principal and most highly prized gladiators, on account of their fierce courage and skill. They carried their national weapon, the sica, or sabre, and a small round shield (parma). The hired or professional combatants were divided into familiæ, or companies, and lived apart from the rest of the community, in ludi, or schools, where they were trained and instructed in their art by regular professors, called lanistæ. Their board was the best and most nutritious to be had; so that seginæ gladiatoriæ (gladiator's fare) was synonymous with good cheer. Such of them as were freemen, and fought for the love of notoriety, or hire, were designated auctorati. The person who gave the exhibition was called the editor, and he either furnished his own slaves, who had been trained to the fight, or hired the combatants from the lanistæ; and, for a few days prior to the games, he posted up libelli, or bills, setting forth the number of gladiators and naming the most celebrated, the description of combat, the day and hour, and all the other circumstances requisite to be known. At the appointed time, on the day of exhibition, the gladiators were marched round the arena, so that all their points might be seen and understood by the assembly; they were then carefully matched, according to age, weight, strength, &c., and were supplied with wooden foils (rudes), bead-like spears, and other harmless weapons, with which they exhibited their dexterity, and at the same time raised their own courage and the expectations of the assembly to the proper pitch of excitement. Then, at a signal, these were laid aside, and they were handed their proper weapons, and immediately commenced the fight. As soon

* The Collegio Romano was the grand central establishment of the Jesuits, for the purposes of education. It is a huge pile of building (about any great architectural pretensions, especially [illegible] rather court, surrounded by a portico of two stories high, and is situated on the northern side of the piazza of the same name, a little to the right of the Corso, as you advance towards that in southern entrance of the Corso. It was erected by Gregory XIII., about the year 1582, after the designs of B. Ammonati. The northern angle of the structure is formed by the Church of St. Ignatius. Its chief attractions for the stranger are its noble library (100,000 volumes, and the Kircherian Museum (so called from Father K., who collected for its complete collection of ancient Roman and Etruscan vases, cameos, rings, &c.

† The Propaganda is a college founded upon the most comprehensive plan ever yet devised for any purpose of country. Its object is to educate and train young men of every complexion, natives of every habitable part of the globe, for the service of the altar, and the propagation of the Roman Catholic faith, in their own language and amongst their own countrymen; and, accordingly, professors of the various branches of learning which constitute the education of a Catholic priest—viz. the learned languages, history, physical science, logic, metaphysics, the Scriptures, and theology—direct the studies of these pupils through the medium not only of Latin, the common language of the college, but also of the native tongues of each; and hence the extraordinary circumstance of upwards of forty different dialects spoken within its walls is of daily occurrence. Amongst these languages are the Hebrew, the ancient and modern Chaldean, the Samaritan, Syriac, Arabic, modern and ancient Armenian, Persian, Coptic, Kouranic, ancient and modern Greek, Latin, Italian, Illyrian, Slavonic, Polish, various Africans dialects, three different dialects of Chinese, other dialects of Tartary, and India, comprising Hindustani, Pagu, Georgian, &c.; and the various [illegible] languages of Europe, such as the Irish and other branches of the Celtic tongue, the German, Danish, English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, Polish, Bulgarian, &c.

One of the most interesting sights which the scholar can witness in Rome is the annual examination of the students, which occurs in the second week of January. The natives of the various climes, dressed for the occasion in their national costume—a Chinese, African, Indian, Egyptian, or Negro, as the case may be—recite speeches, sing songs, or enact a portion of a play in their respective tongues before a crowded auditory, which is always attracted by so extraordinary a spectacle. A characteristic group of the students in their academical costume is presented in the Illustration, page 325.

‡ Propaganda, so called because it is the college de propaganda fide, is situated in the Piazza di Spagna, in the most fashionable quarter of the town, and occupies the beginning of the seventeenth century, during the pontificate of [illegible] VIII., from the designs of Bernini and Borromini.

as a gladiator was disarmed, or wounded so as to be disabled, his adversary called out "Habet" or "Hoc habet," ("He has it"), and the party worsted lowered his arms in token of defeat, while a pause ensued in the combat, and the victor looked up to the spectators to decide the fate of his opponent, who at the same time appealed to them for mercy. If they happened to be in good humour, or were pleased with the skill or courage displayed by the vanquished party, they pressed down their thumbs (pollices premebant), and he was saved; and if they disapproved of the poor wretch's conduct in the fight, they bent back their thumbs (pollices vertebant), as a signal to despatch him -and he was forthwith butchered on the spot, and his grey body was dragged out of the arena with a hook, into a place set apart for that purpose, and called the Spoliarium.

The rewards accorded to the victors consisted either of money; of the woollen fillet or cap of liberty, which, if they were slaves, conferred freedom upon them; or, last y, of the rudis, or wooden foil—the effect of the latter being to exempt the recipient from further gladiatorial combat in the bloodshed of the arena. They then hung up their arms in the temple of Hercules, the patron deity of gladiators, as a votive offering, and an indication of their release from all obligation to fight for the future; and they usually became lanistæ, or teachers of the gladiatorial art.

Such, then, being understood to have been the sports of the Roman amphitheatres, the purpose and character of those buildings become obvious, and a description of the principal one in Rome—the Colosseum—is rendered more clearly intelligible. The origin of the term "Colosseum" has not been precisely ascertained, neither has the period at which it first came into general use. It has been traced to the middle of the seventh or beginning of the eighth century, and is supposed to be derived either from the colossal proportions of the building itself, or from the colossal statue of Nero which was ultimat ly placed near it, after Nero's Golden House had been destroyed. The usual name of the Colosseum, during the first s v centuries of its existence, was the Flavian Amphitheatre, from its founder, the Emperor Favius Augustus (Vespasian). It occupies the site of Nero's Lake, in the valley between the Palatine, the Esquiline, and the Cœlian Hills. Vespasian commenced its erection A.D. 72, 70 or 71; but it was not completed until some nine years subsequently, about A.D. 80, in the reign of his son, the Emperor Titus, who dedicated it with great pomp and magnificence. Its form was that of an ellipsis, 564 feet long, and 467 broad in its greatest extent. The interior area, or arena (so called from being covered with sand), on which the games were exhibited, was so capacious that upwards of 10,700 beasts could stand within its circuit. This area was surrounded by a wal. twelve feet high, over which was a projecting row of seats fourteen feet in depth, and covered at top, for the chief m i trates, senators, foreign ambassadors, &c., which was called the podium Here, also, were accommodated the vestal virgins and the editor, or person who gave the games; and behind the senators sat the equites, or knights, on fourteen seats set apart for them, as the second order of nobility. In the times of the Empire, the podium was furnished with an elevated tribune, surmounted by a canopy, in which the Emperor sat in state. The front of this first range of seats was protected from any irruption of the wild beasts by a breast-work or parapet of gilt bronze; and, as a further security, an iron pal sade encomposed the arena, at the foot of which, beneath the podium, there was a deep cut or canal full of water. This, the first story of the structure, rested on a base nent of eight, arches: behind it rose three walls in succession, each increasing in height until the outer one reached an elevation of 140 feet—a wide passage, or corridor, called an ambulatorium, being left between each wall, which communicated with the outside by means of eighty portals called vomitories, and with the corridors of the upper stories, by means of numberless flights of stairs. The separate height of each of the three walls on the inside constituted a distinct story, and from each a tier of marble seats, covered with cushions, ran sloping down towards the arena, and afforded accommodation for the people. These seats were called popularia, and the number of persons who could view the games from them and the podium amounted to no less than 87,000; whi e in the wooden galleries erected over the outer wall, for the lowest classes, 20,000 individuals found room to assist at the spectacles of the arena. A large awning, called the velarium, was extended around the summit, and protected the spectators from the sun or rain, while the atmosphere within was tempered to cool and delicious by the play of numberless fountains, and the odour of aromatic perfumes; and such was the extraordinary skill and simplicity of contrivance with which the various passages and means of ascent and descent were constructed, that all parties, of whatever rank, found their way to and from the respective localities allotted to them, without the least difficulty or confusion, notwithstanding the vast masses with which the amphitheatre was thronged at every representation. The exterior wall presented a façade consisting of four compartments, of different architectural orders, rising one above the other, viz. the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian orders, the highest having pilasters instead of columns, and every second interval being pierced for w indows.

It was in this vast edifice, amidst the brutal shouts of a populace maddened with sanguinary excitement, that, for near y 300 years, the blood of thousands of the primitive Christians was poured out like water, and their bodies torn to pieces by furious beasts. Its walls perpetually resounded with the cry, "Christiani ad leones!" during the earlier part of the exhibition, when the gladiators butchered each other for their entertainment; and the day's sport was generally brought to a close by the sight of a mangled victim writhing in the grasp of a lion, a tiger, or some other beast of prey. On the occasion of the dedication of the amphitheatre, Titus exhibited shows of gladiators, combats with wild beasts, &c; and Trajan, during an exhibition which lasted 123 successive days, brought upon the arena one thousand pairs of gladiators. Sometimes the arena was converted into a forest, by means of large trees and bushes, &c., being transplanted to it for the occas on, with the soil around them, as they stood, and then various beasts of the chase were hunted through its mazes. In this manner the Emperor Probus on one occasion exhibited 6 ur thousand ostriches, boars, deer, wild sheep, &c. But it was the gladiatorial combats the human massacres, which were the most prized by the dissolute nobles, who were buried in luxury, and consumed by the desire of morbid excitement; and by the blood-thirsty populace, who, when every other quality of the Roman citizen had fled from their breasts—leaving them a debauched, degraded rabble —retained the sanguinary ferocity of a fallen age, without any redeeming courage. It was in vain that the then feeble voice of Christianity was raised in abhorrence and denunciation of these demoniacal sports, which cut off thousands yearly in the prime of life: even the Imperial authority itself failed to put down the various fashion of the time; and the edicts of Constantine the Great were of little avail in the cause of humanity. At length, what neither the Sovereign power of the Christian Emperors nor the humanising influence of polished civilized on could effect, was accomplished by the devoted zeal of an humble monk. On the 1st January, A.D. 404, Almachius, or Telemachus, an ascetic of the Eastern Desert, who had come to Rome, inspired with the holy purpose of putting an end to those feasts of the Prince of Darkness, even though it an ant cost him his life, entered the amphitheatre with the eager crowd of spectators, and when the gladiators commenced their mutual butcheries, rus ed in between them and endeavoured to put a stop to the combat. Stones and missiles of every descrip t were immediately hurled at the tow-ering Reformer; and, by the order of the Pre or Ar pius—a person possessed of the most inordinate love of those exhibitions—he was slain on the spot. But in this, as in other instances of the effusion of the blood of the martyrs, the sacrifice was fruitful in happy results. The feeble, vacillating spirit of the Emperor Ho orius, often, but in vain, urged by his Christian counsellors to grapple with the inveterate abuse, was at last r used to action by the horror inspired by the murder of Telemachus; and enforcing with the full weight of the Imperial power the existing laws, and issuing new edicts, he put an end to the gladiatorial shows for ever. The fighting with the wild beasts, however, was not abolished until towards the close of the reign of the Gothic King of Italy, Theodoric, about A.D. 523.

After the Colosseum had ceased to be used for its original purpose, history is, for a considerable time, silent as to its fate; but, when mention of it again occurs, at a long subsequent period, its dilapidated aspect plainly indicates how fully it shared in the disastrous vicissitudes of the Eternal City. In the Middle Ages, during the turbulence and commotions of the intestine factions, it was converted into a fortress, and was variously held by one or other of the contending parties. In the year 1332 it was in the possession of the "Senate and People of Rome," as the dominant portion of the citizens at that period styled themselves, in contradistinction to the noble families, and was applied to a purpose of the same character as that of its original design. A grand bull-feast was given in its arena, a description of which has been left us by a contemporary writer, Ludovico Monaldesco. It was also used as an hospital, as an artisans' factory, and in various other ways, until at length, shorn of more than half its proportions by the combined effects of the decay of time, aided by earthquakes and inundations, and the incessant spoliations, for centuries, of Popes and Princes, who only regarded it as an inexhaustible quarry, it was consecrated within a comparatively recent period to the offices of religion, and the destructive agency of man was thus staved. More active measures were taken for its preservation in the present century by Pius VII. and Leo XII., who secured it on the outside by strong buttresses at the south-east and north-west extremities. Gregory XVI., also, made some considerable restorations in the middle and outer walls on the south side, where they had disappeared.

As to the present appearance of the Colosseum, apart from its stupendous height and its enormous dimensions, which must strike every beholder with astonishment, its most characteristic feature is the marked contrast presented in the aspect of strength and durability which the huge blocks of stone composing its structure exhibit, and the perfect picture of ruin and desolation conveyed by the yawning rents and fissures in the walls, and the extraordinary luxuriance of the mural and parasitic plants and shrubs with which they are covered in various places, and which often attain the size of full-grown trees.

Within the arena, the sacred character, communicated to the building in recent times is indicated by a large black cross, which is planted on a mound in the centre of the arena, and by a series of pictures representing the various stages of Christ's passion and death, which are hung round the podium, or brick basement wall of the interior, as appropriate decorations of the place where so many martyrs fell, by their tortures and death, borne witness of their faith in the truth of the Redemption. There is also at one end of the area an altar surmounted by a Madonna, which forms a simple species of Lady-chapel. In order to ascend to the upper corridors, an application to the custodian is necessary; but from the lower parts of the building there is the freest access, as the arena is in fact a public thoroughfare.

Taken altogether, the ruins of the Colosseum constitute, perhaps, the best representative which modern times could have of ancient Rome: it was the national amphitheatre: its form and construction are sufficiently connected to show with the greatest clearness and intelligibility the style and manner of the most exhibitions of the arena, which were so peculiarly Roman; its majestic proportions impart to the mind an adequate conception of the grand character of the public edifices of the Imperial city, while its present desolate state eloquently proclai ns the violence of the vicissitudes which laid them prostrate. To have the imagination, however, fully impressed with the associations pertaining to the locality, it is perhaps advisable to visit the Colosseum by moonlight.

The ruins of the vast edifice are represented in the Engrav.ng, page 320.

The Arch of Constantine cannot correctly be called a ruin, since its preservation is almost quite perfect; it is a relic of the Imperial times, and almost the only one which the lapse of centuries and of revolutions has left uninjured. It is situated in the immediate neighbourhood of the Colosseum, at the top of the Via San Gregorio, not far from the spot where the celebrated Via Sacra leading from the Forum to the Colosseum debouched; and appears from the original inscription on the attic, to have been dedicated to the Emperor Constantine the Great by the Senate and People of Rome after his triumphal entry into the city on his defeat of his rival Maxentius.

The arch is generally understood to have existed on the spot previous to the time of Constantine; and, as its sculptured ornaments show that an arch of Trajan's had been despoiled for the purpose of decorating this in honour of Constantine, many have thought that this is the arch itself, alleged to have been so despoiled; and that, being left unfinished by Trajan, its embellishments were completed in such a manner as to make it a memorial of triumph for Constantine. This supposition, however, is based only on the fact of the arch of Trajan which was in his Forum having remained intact long after Constantine's age. It is probable, however, that it was an arch of that Emperor's existing in some other locality, that furnished the sculptures. The only thing certain in the matter is the spoliation, which this evidence of the decline of reverence furnishes of the decline of the arts in the beginning of the fourth century, when the Imperial conqueror was obliged to have recourse to the productions of a former epoch, however inappropriate they might be, to adorn the monument of his victory and triumph. It is a massive lofty structure, supported by a large central arch and two smaller lateral ones, and presents a façade or rectangular elevation of the same character on both sides, viz. an entablature sustained by fluted Corinthian columns, backed by pilasters, resting upon the same pedestals, the arches being in the intercolumniations. A sculptured frieze runs above the angles round the entire structure; and on the attic over the entablature there are four statues corresponding in position with the columns below, the intervening spaces at either side being occupied with bas-reliefs, and the centre with the inscription referred to. All the lower portions of the structure, the pedestals of the columns, the exterior and interior of the arches, and the sides are also profusely embellished with sculptured bas-reliefs—those on the attic representing Pagan sacrifices, or relating to the exploits of Trajan in Parthia and Dacia; while the others, executed in an inferior style, illustrate the victories of Constantine, and are accompanied with appropriate inscriptions. The excavations which exposed to view the lower parts, which were imbedded in some fifteen feet of accumulated soil, were begun in the present century by Pope Pius VII., and completed by Leo XII.

Proceeding in a north-western direction from the Arch of Constantine towards the Forum, along the road that is supposed to be on the site of the Via Sacra, the most conspicuous ruin that will be also associated with the first Christian Emperor—the BASILICA OF CONSTANTINE, which for a long time was thought to be the Temple of Peace. From its style of architecture being similar to that of the Baths of Diocletian, the reign of Maxentius (A.D. 306—312) is fixed as the age of its erection, though it was probably not completed until the succeeding reign of Constantine; but that the chief portion of the structure dates from the former reign, has been proved by some coins of Maxentius having been found embedded in the building. The ruin consists of three colossal brick arcades, of great height, standing in a line together and facing westward. On the summit there is an accumulation of soil, covered with plants and verdure; and, as the ground gradually rises behind them, access can be had to the top from an adjoining convent garden. There are some remains of a white marble entablature, which was supported by lofty columns of the same materia, one of which remained standing in its original position so late as the pontificate of Paul V., little more than two hundred years ago, but that Pontiff had it removed to the piazza in front of Santa Maria Maggiore.

The present aspect of the ruin is shown in the Illustration, page 317.

The Forum Romanum, however, of all the ancient and venerable localities of ancient Rome, presents the most deplorable contrast in its present appearance to its former magnificence. Even by its modern name of Campo Vaccino (Cow's Field), expressive as it is of degradation and desolation, no adequate idea is conveyed of the utter devastation which has overwhelmed the once splendid and reserved monumental features, made even its exact boundaries a problem, and reduced it from being the grandest and populous city that ever existed, to become an unsightly, shapeless, barren field—a very waste and wilderness. The tourist whose inmate acquaintance with classical literature and history enables him to picture vividly to his mind the Forum as the centre of the excessive and turbulent vitality of ancient Rome in the days of Cicero, of Cæsar, and of Pompey, and of the more placid but equally intense spirit of life which pervaded its thronged thoroughfares in the time of Augustus, can alone fully estimate the desolation of the Campo Vaccino.

On entering at the north-western or upper end the irregular oblong area which bears that name, a piece of waste ground lies before the view stretching towards the south-east in the direction of the Colosseum, with some stunted trees growing in the centre, and fragments of ruins scattered throughout, some in close neighbourhood to each other, the rest more apart or interfering with modern erections. A casual passenger, or curious tourist, or perhaps a peasant with his cart and clumsily yoked oxen, are all the indications of life to be met with in this once famous arena of eloquent debate and political deliberation. The whole space open to view comprehends a much larger area than was occupied by the Forum, the exact limits and extent of which has long been a vexed question with antiquarians. Signor Canina, however, whose research and erudition have thrown such great light on the topography of ancient Rome, describes it as reaching from the Arch of Septimius Severus to the Temple of Antoninus and Faustina in length, that is from north-west to south-east, and in width from the remains of the Basilica of Paulus Emilius at the modern Church of San Adriano, to an excavation (on the Palatine side) containing steps leading to what he considers to have been the floor of the Julian Basilica; and, as he supports this opinion with arguments that have learning and probability in their favour, he is generally followed as the best authority upon this, as he is upon most matters of the disputed points of ancient topography. The whole locality, however, bears in ordinary parlance the name of the Roman Forum, or Campo Vaccino. The ruins which it contains have been equally the subject of conjecture; and the fitful dge that such ancient buildings as the Temple of Concord, the Temple of Jupiter Tonans, the Temple of Fortune, the Tabularium, &c., were either in the Forum or its immediate neighbourhood, was quite sufficient to cause the antiquarians in their own peculiarly hap-hazard fashion to affix any one of those names to the ruins, without the conjecture being fortified by those results and discoveries, the base of which could only be extensive excavation, conducted with care and intelligence, and illustrated by the study of ancient coins, medals, bas-reliefs, writings &c.—a course which has been followed to a greater or less extent by those who engaged in this perplexing study in more recent times.

The most crowded collection of ancient remains is to be seen in an excavation, from fifteen to twenty feet deep, to the ancient level at the upper end, just under the Capitoline Mount. Three of the principal are the ruins of temples, which have been variously designated; the fourth, which is the most perfect in its preservation, has been always known as the Arch of Septimius Severus, who was Emperor, A.D. 193—211. It was built about he eleventh year of his reign, as a monument of honour to himself and his sons, Caracalla and Geta, as appears from the inscription which it bears.

The structure, of the same character and form as the Arch of Constantine, is pierced by a large central and two small side arches, which communicate with each other by cross openings also arched, the entablature being sustained by fluted columns and pilasters, resting upon sculptured pedestals. The attic is plain, and bears only the inscription but the interstices of the columns are decorated with bas-reliefs. Originally, the summit, to which there is access by a flight of steps, bore a triumphal car, containing statues of the Emperor and his sons. At the foot of the arch, a portion of an ancient paved way that led to the Capitol is laid bare.

The view at page 321 is a most faithful representation of the present aspect of the Forum. The arch on the left is that of Septimus Severus, just referred to.

The eight Ionic Columns, which next claim attention, are now ascertained to be the remains of the Temple of Saturn, which was originally founded nearly 500 years B.C., in the Consulship of Aulus Semp ronius and Marcus Manlius, and was used as the Roman Treasury, and the repositarie of the public records and registers, among which were the Libri Elephantini, or great ivory tablets, containing the lists of the tribes, and the plans of the public accounts. This ruin was long supposed to be either the Temple of Vespasian, the Temple of Fortune, or the Temple of Concord, in which, at latter times, the Senate held its deliberations, and it received one or other of these names, from different writers. More recent and accurate information has dispelled the error. The columns, which are about forty feet in all, support a part of the marble entablature and the angles of a pedimont. The original temple was burnt down in the time of the Empire, and was restored at the public expense, as set forth in the inscription on the façade.

The three Corinthian columns of white marble, with the fragment of entablature, are commonly attributed to the Temple of Jupiter Tonans, erected by Augustus in thanksgiving for his narrow escape in a thunder-storm which overtook him when travelling by night in Spain, and in which one of his attendants was killed by the electric fluid. But Canina shows that that temple was the Tabularium, and that the beautiful fluted columns in question belonged to the Temple of Vespasian.

An elevated platform covered with a broken tesse ated marble pavement, constituting the foundation and floor of the cella, is now all that remains of the Temple of Concord, which was first built about four centuries before Christ, on the decision of Camillus after the dictatorship of Camillus, and as it was the monument of the reconciliation of the Patricians and Plebeians, the Senate held its meetings there more frequently than in its other places of assembly. It was rebuilt with much magnificence by the Emperor Tiberius The ruin was discovered in the year 1817.

Not far from this excavation there is another which contains an isolated column that is now ascertained to be the Column of Phocas, from the inscription on its pedestal; though previously to the year 1813 (when its base was laid bare) much learned ignorance was lavished in conjecture upon its history and origin—the simple process of solving the difficulty, by removing the accumulated soil that concealed its lower proportions, never having been resorted to until then. The shaft is between thirty and forty feet high, of white marble, fluted, and of the Corinthian order, and is planted upon an ill-constructed pedestal and basement of common stone, some fifteen or twenty feet in height; and the whole erection exhibits that want of harmony which marks the fallen state of the arts in the seventh century; the shaft having evidently belonged to some ancient edifice or monument, from which it was taken to serve the purpose of its present existence. It was erected in the year 608 by Smaragdus, the Exarch of Italy to the Emperor of the East, Phocas, who reigned A.D. 602—610. Close to its base three other pedestals of brickwork were also found, which are supposed to have sustained other similar columns.

The most beautiful relic of antiquity in the Forum remains to be noted. It stands opposite the façade of the Church of Santa Maria Liberatrice, which is close to the north-eastern angle of the Palatine Hill, and consists of three fluted Corinthian Columns of white marble, about thirty-five feet high, extending across the Forum, and surmounted by a portion of their richly-wrought entablature; the whole constituting, from the elegant proportions, exquisite finish, and style of the work, the most beautiful specimen of the Corinthian order in the city, and the most conspicuous object in the centre of the Campo Vaccino. Up to a recent period this graceful ruin was supposed to have belonged to the Gregostasis, or Hall of Audience, where the foreign ambassadors accredited to Rome were received; but more correct investigation has assigned it to the Curia Giulia, when Augustus rebuilt with great magnificence after its destruction by fire on the occasion of the burning of the dead body of Cæsius, when the people tore up the seats to make a funeral pile. The Senate sometimes sat in the Curia Giulia, and Justice was also administered there.

The eastern side of the Campo Vaccino, corresponding pretty closely with what had been the eastern side of the Forum, and the continuation of the line of the Via Sacra, or Sacred Street, already noticed as having run in a direction south from the Forum, is now occupied by various churches, some of which are in part constructed upon the ruins of the ancient Pagan edifices. Taking as a point of departure the Arch of Septimius Severus, there are along this eastern line the Churches of Santa Martina, San Adriano, San Lorenzo in Miranda (built on the ruins of the Temple of Antoninus and Faustina, and Santi Cosmas e Damian*; none of which possess any very peculiar feature of interest, though they are the restorations of some of the most ancient Christian churches in Rome, with the exception, perhaps, of the crypt or soterano of Santa Martina, which was restored and decorated principally at his own expense, by the celebrated architect Pietro da Cortona, in the middle of the seventeenth century, in a very ornate style of ecclesiastical embellishment.

All around this immediate neighbourhood are to be seen among the buildings of modern date, ancient ruins of walls, shapeless masses of masonry, pavements, &c.

The southern boundary of the Campo Vaccino is formed by the church of Santa Francesca Romana, founded in the eighth century on the site of the Pagan Temple of Venus and Rome, and by the Arch of Titus. The Temple of Venus and Rome was one of the most magnificent edifices in

* It was in the wall of the crypt of this church of SS Cosmas and Damian, which was originally built in the first quarter of the sixth century, by Pope Felix IV., that the fragments of the ancient plan of Rome, carved in the marble, it is supposed, in the reign of Septimus Severus, were found in the fifteenth century. They are considered to have formed the marble floor of the little circular temple of Romulus and Remus (now the vestibule of the church) and are preserved in the Capitoline Museum.

BATHS OF CARACALLA.

ARCH OF TITUS.

t a ancient city, and was built by the Emperor Hadrian on a plan designed by himself.

The Arch of Titus (engraved at the top of this page), which is in great part preserved, was erected by the Senate and people of Rome, in the reign of Domitian, to perpetuate the memory of the conquest of Jerusalem, and triumph of Titus over the vanquished Jews, and is situated on what was the highest point of the Via Sacra, thence called Summa Via Sacra. Like the other triumphal arches mentioned, it is a lofty massive structure of white marble, presenting a two-fold façade of similar character, looking north and south. It is, however, only pierced by one arch; the entablature is supported by four columns on each façade, and above these is an attic bearing the inscription—

SENATVS. POPVLVSQVE ROMANVS.
DIVO. TITO DIVI VESPASIANI. F.
VESPASIANO. AVGVSTO.

There is no monument, perhaps, of Imperial Rome still remaining which possesses so much interest as this arch; for amongst the various bas-reliefs upon its exterior and interior, executed in a high style of art, there is one representing the triumphal procession of Titus to the Capitol, on his return to Rome after the destruction of Jerusalem, which contains delineations of the sacred utensils and instruments of worship appertaining to the sacrificial rites and religious ceremonies of the Jews, and other spoils of the Temple of Jerusalem, of which descriptions are given in the book of Holy Writ. There, amongst the Jewish captives who follow the triumphal car of Titus, are to be plainly recognised, notwithstanding some slight defacements, the bearers of the seven-branched golden candlestick, the silver trumpets, the tables of the law, &c. All these are on the sides within the arch.

A portion of the columns and of the eastern side of the structure having been destroyed in the lapse of ages, their restoration was effected under the late pontificate of Pius VII.; and, though the material used for the purpose was not marble, like the rest of the arch, but merely Tiburtine stone, yet the whole structure is now presented to view in its original proportions.

THE COLOSSEUM.

On the western side of the Campo Vaccino there is nothing calling for especial notice.

The narrow valley lying between the Capitoline and Palatine Hills, now known by the general name of the Velabrum, and occupied by the inferior streets called Via della Consolazione, Via delle Grazie, and Via di San Teodoro, is a spot, the associations connected with which bring back the mind to the earliest and legendary era of Roman history. There stood the Ficus Ruminalis, or Fig-Tree (close to the Temple of Vesta) beneath the shade of which Romulus and Remus were suckled by the she-wolf.

Towards the river and the Forum Boarium there stands a remarkable ruin, consisting of a large solid square erection, of the time of Septimius Severus, and composed of white marble. It is pierced on each of its four sides by arches, which meet in the centre, and there form a vaulted apartment, which served as a sort of Exchange for the cattle-merchants. It is called Arcus Quadrifrons, and is supposed to have been under the especial auspices of the God Janus. It has a superstructure of brickwork, which was added in the Middle Ages, when it was used as a fortress by the turbulent nobles.

Here, also, adjoining the Church of San Giorgio, is another Arch of Septimius Severus, called in Velabro, to distinguish it from the one noticed above of the same name.

In this vicinity is to be seen a portion of the celebrated Sewer of Rome, constructed at the very earliest period of its history by the Tarquins—the Cloaca Maxima, which traversed the Velabrum from the Forum Romanum to the Tiber; and which now forms a channel by which the stream of one of the ancient aqueducts, under the modern

SANTA MARIA MAGGIORE.

THE PANTHEON.

THE ANCIENT FORUM.

name of the Acqua di San Giorgio, empties itself into the Tiber, near the Ponte Rotto. The solid Etruscan masonry of this capacious tunnel is now, after the lapse of 2500 years, as firm and solid in appearance, as durable as when it was first completed, in the days of King Tarquin. Here, also, on the Tiber's banks, stands one of the best preserved relics of Imperial Rome—the ruins of one of the many temples of Vesta

FRENCH ACADEMY.

ST. JOHN LATERAN.

which the city contained. It is a circular structure, with a peristyle of fluted Corinthian columns of white marble, and dates from the reign of Marcus Antoninus, in the middle of the second century of the Christian era. Its full proportions are not perceptible until, approaching closely, it is seen to be imbedded in the accumulated soil, which has been excavated all round to the old level. The interior is in pretty good preservation. It was formerly used as a Christian church, but is so no longer.

PIAZZA DEL POPOLO.

The view at page 317 shows the temple towards the left; the Cloaca Maxima, where it opens into the Tiber, in the centre; and on the right the ruins of the Ponte Rotto, the three arches of which are all that now remain of the ancient Pons Palatinus, the first stone bridge that was ever built over the Tiber, about a century and a half before Christ. It has been often restored and rebuilt in modern times, and the upper-works of the present ruin belong to the middle of the 16th century, when it was rebuilt by Pope Julius II. It was in part destroyed by an inundation some fifty years subsequently, from which period its present appearance dates.

Of the great temples and palatial structures which crowned the Palatine, and of the Circus Maximus at its foot, no definable traces now exist, except in the case of the latter (as already stated), the mere outline of the form and the name preserved by the Via de' Cerchi; and in that of the former, large shapeless mounds of masonry and brickwork overgrown with verdure, and scattered through some vineyards and gardens which crown its summit.

A little to the north-east of the Forum Romanum, extending towards the Quirinal, there were other places of public resort to which the name of Forum was also given, and they were called from their founders respectively—the Forum of Cæsar (Julius), the Forum of Augustus, the Forum of Nerva, and the Forum of Trajan. Of these there are scarcely any remains now, with the exception of the last-named.

The FORUM OF TRAJAN is an excavation some fifteen feet deep in the Piazza Trajana, an oblong open area which occupies the site of the ancient Forum, and lies a little to the east of the southern extremity of the Corso, between the Capitoline Hill on its north-east end and the Quirinal Hill on its south-west extremity. The excavation assumes the shape of the Piazza in which it is sunk, the sides of the one being parallel to those of the other, and a roadway is left on the surface above on all four sides, the whole place presenting somewhat the figure of a modern square, with a deep pit in the middle, instead of the usual green enclosure. At the northern end of the excavation stands the Column of Trajan, one of the most perfect works of ancient art that time has spared. The spot which it occupies was originally cut out of a spur or offshoot of the Quirinal Hill, down to the original level of the rest of the Forum, and the height of the column is exactly the same as the portion of the hill which was removed, as stated in the inscription on the pedestal, from which we learn that the monument was erected by the Senate and People of Rome, not only to commemorate the victories of Trajan over the Dacians, but also as a memorial of the height of hill which it was necessary to cut away, in order to make room for the noble structures which adorned it. The column height is about 130 feet, exclusive of the bronze statue of St. Peter, eleven or twelve feet high, on its summit, which was placed there by Pope Sixtus V. in the latter part of the sixteenth century, instead of the statue of bronze gilt which had formerly occupied the top, but which had long previously disappeared. The whole structure, pedestal, plinth, shaft, and Doric capital, is composed of large blocks of white marble; those of the shaft ascending in a spiral band, and covered with bas-reliefs illustrative of the exploits of Trajan in the Dacian war. The number of human figures, exclusive of other objects, such as horses, arms, chariots, &c., represented on the shaft, is said to be nearly 3000; the number 2500 has, at all events, been ascertained by actual enumeration; these figures are generally about two feet high each. The pedestal is decorated with crowns of victory, garlands, and other insignia of triumph.

The column was made by the Emperor Hadrian a place of sepulture for the ashes of Trajan, which, according to a tradition immortalised by Byron, were supposed to have been contained in the head of a spear or, according to another version, in a globe which the statue bore in its hand:—

Apostolic statues climb
To crush the imperial urn, whose ashes slept sublime.

But the ashes were, in reality, according to Cassiodorus, placed in a golden urn, which was deposited in a receptacle beneath the column. In the interior, a spiral flight of steps leads to the summit, but the view is limited, by intervening roofs.

Trajan's Forum contained many of the noblest edifices in Rome: amongst them, the Temple of Trajan, and the Ulpian Basilica and the Ulpian Library—both so designated from the family name of Trajan; there were, also, baths and porticoes, and statues of illustrious men in great number within its precincts. Of these, the only remains now visible at present are several fragments of broken columns, some standing on their bases in the excavation, broken off at various heights of from ten to twenty feet; others, of smaller size, lying upon the ground, on which, also, may be seen several patches of the original pavement.

The MAUSOLEUM OF HADRIAN, now the Castle of St. Angelo, was erected in the Domitian Gardens, on the banks of the Tiber, by the Emperor Hadrian, as a depositary for his own ashes and those of succeeding Emperors, several of whom found a tomb there. The main body of the structure, converted into a fortress in the middle ages, has come down to modern times in perfect preservation, and consists of a strong circular edifice, raised upon a quadrangular base, was originally sheathed with marble, and surrounded by a peristyle of noble columns; but these have disappeared long since, together with the statues that decorated its summit. On the top of the circular building there has been raised a modern square edifice, which serves as the dwelling-house of the Governor of the Castle; and on the summit of all stands a bronze statue of the Archangel Saint Michael, with extended wings, and in the act of sheathing a sword—the whole presenting a very mongrel appearance. It is a place of great strength, however, and the rooms in the basement are used as dungeons for State prisoners. The Bridge of St. Angelo, which leads from the left to the right bank of the Tiber towards St. Peter's, is exactly opposite the fortress, the bastions of which come close to the river's edge, as shown in the view, page 324.

Outside the city walls, to the north, and about two miles up the Tiber, the stream is crossed by the famous PONTE MOLLE, the ancient Pons Milvius, so celebrated in Roman story. Here it was that Cicero caused to be arrested, according to Sallust's perverted scheme, the Allobrogian ambassadors, who were implicated in the conspiracy of Catiline; and it was at the Pons Milvius that Constantine the Great, hoisting the Christian standard or Labarum, completely routed the forces of his opponent Maxentius. The piers and arches are all that remain of the ancient structure, the battlements and other works being modern. Its present appearance is represented at page 325.

The ruins and relics thus indicated constitute but a few, although some of the most interesting, of the remains of ancient Rome; but there are numbers of others which will also excite the attention of the scholar and the antiquarian, such as the ruins of the Gardens of Sallust, the antient mound of the Wall of Servius Tullius; the walls of the Pretorian Camp, the large fragments of building in the Colonna Gardens on the Quirinal, ascribed to the Temple of the Sun, and the remains of what are supposed to have been the Baths of Constantine, adjoining the same gardens; the Arch of Dracus, near the Gate of St. Sebastian, the last of all the triumphal arches which spanned the noble thoroughfare which ran through the ancient city from the Flaminian Way (now the Corso) southward to the Appian Way. The arch was erected in memory of Drusus, the father of the Emperor Claudius, during the reign of the latter, about A.D. 42 or 43. Its present appearance is seen in the Engraving, page 316, with the gate of St. Sebastian in the background; the Arch of Gallienus, near the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore; the Arch of Dolabella and ruins of the Neronian Aqueduct, on the Celian Hill; the Pyramid of Cestius, at the gate of St. Paul; the various ruins on the Appian Way, including the Tomb of Cecilia Metella, which was erected about half a century before the Christian era. Its history is involved in the greatest obscurity, all that is known about it being contained in its inscription, "Cæciliæ. Q. Cretici. F. Metellæ. Crassi.;" that is, "To Cecilia Metella, the daughter of Quintus Creticus, and wife of Crassus." Its present appearance is shown in the Engraving, page 316. Those on the road leading from the Porta Pia, such as the Church of St. Constantia, and several other monuments outside the walls in different directions; the Baths of Titus, on the Esquiline; the Baths of Diocletian, on the Quirinal; the Baths of Caracalla, south of the Celian Hill; Monte Testaccio, &c.

A word or two may be added on the four last named. The Monte Testaccio, as the name imports, is a large oval hill formed of broken vases, jars, &c., of red pottery ware, and situated on the banks of the Tiber, just within the walls, in the fields lying between the Gate of St. Paul and the river. Of its origin or history nothing whatever has been ascertained, and all excavations and tunnellings through it have only produced broken pottery. It is presumed to be the accumulated refuse of a great factory, which was, probably, in the neighbourhood, and at which were manufactured the vessels of pottery ware in which the ancients kept their wine, vast numbers of which were in constant use among them.

The BATHS OF CARACALLA, next to the Colosseum the largest ruins in Rome, are situated at the other or eastern side of the gate of St. Paul, between the Aventine and Celian hills, in the direction of the Gate of St. Sebastian. They were built, or rather their erection was begun, and in great part finished, between the years 212 and 217 of the Christian era, by the Emperor Caracalla Antoninus, and their completion was effected in the two reigns immediately succeeding. This vast establishment originally consisted of a large quadrangle, surrounded on its four sides by a double row of chambers and porticoes. The inner quadrangle is all that now stands erect, but the vast dimensions of the outer can be traced by the remains of the brick walls, which are still, in many instances, some two or three feet above the ground. Owing to the spoliations and limeburnings, which were continued with unabated assiduity while a slab of marble or a column remained, especially in the time of Cardinal Farnese, afterwards Pope Paul III., who was one of the most active of the depredators, the long suite of chambers, roofless, and with bare walls, present scarcely a trace of the beautiful decorations with which it is known they were embellished. Some of the noble sculptures which were at this period found amongst the ruins, as the group of the Toro (Farnese), the Hercules (Farnese), and the colossus of Flora, are even lost to Rome, having been transferred, along with other property of the Farnese family which came into the possession of the Neapolitan Monarch, to the Royal Museum of Naples, where they now are. Some other valuable specimens of Greek art, however, which were also rescued from these ruins, including the celebrated Torso of the Belvidere, are to be seen in the Vatican.

The present aspect of the ruins is shown in the Engraving, page 320.

The BATHS OF TITUS, lying a little eastward of the Colosseum, are recognized by a round structure which was probably the theatre belonging to the baths. They were erected by the Emperor Titus upon a portion of the site which had been covered by the Golden House of Nero, many of the chambers of which were appropriated to the purposes of the baths; and hence it is supposed that those apartments in which, during the excavations of Pope Leo X., were found the beautiful frescoes that were copied by Raffaelle in his decorations of the Loggie of the Vatican, belonged to the palace. These frescoes, after an existence of nearly 2000 years, appear still fresh and brilliant as far as the imperfect light with which they are viewed in their present half-buried condition enables one to judge. Some other exquisite frescoes, as also a few statues of the finest sculpture, were likewise found here; and at a little distance the celebrated group of Laocoon, with which innumerable copies have made every civilized country familiar, was dug up in a vineyard during the pontificate of Julius II.

The BATHS OF DIOCLETIAN were erected by the Emperor whose name they bear, at the close of the third century, on the locality where the Viminal and the Quirinal Hills form a junction, and which is now the Piazza de' Termini. They were like all the great Imperial thermæ of Rome—a quadrangular series of buildings surrounding a square courtyard, and were so large that upwards of 3000 persons could bathe at the same time in the various cold, tepid, or warm baths of the establishment. The tenth general persecution of the Christians raged in that reign throughout the whole Empire, and thousands of the faithful were condemned to work like slaves at this enormous structure. At present its remains spread over a large surface, and consist of little more than shapeless masses of masonry, and some large chambers which are used as places to store corn, hay, straw, &c. There are, however, two remarkable exceptions; viz. the large hall which was converted by Michael Angelo to the purpose of a church, called Santa Maria degli Angeli, which has been noticed in a former place, and the round building which is now used as the Church of San Bernardo, belonging to the Cistercian Monastery adjoining.

THE TIBER.

The Tiber, in a very winding course of about three miles, from north to south, skirts the main division of the city on the west, and is crossed by three bridges, which maintain the communication with the two suburbs on the right bank, named respectively the Trastevere and the Borgo—the latter containing the Vatican and St. Peter's. The Ponte St. Angelo, erected by Bernini for Clement IX., occupies the site of the ancient Pons Ælius and is the high st up the river; the Ponte Sisto, rebuilt by Sixtus IV., was originally the Pons Janiculensis, and is the intermediate or next bridge; while the lowest unites both banks to the island of San Bartolomeo, in the Tiber and is named the Ponte a Quattro Capi: it was the ancient bridge of Fabricius and Cestus. There are, also, the ruins of three other bridges belonging to the times of the Empire; viz. the Triumphalis or Vaticanus, just below that of San Angelo; the Pons Neronianus, or Triumphalis Nostri, and foundations of the celebrated Pons Sublicius, the first bridge thrown across the Tiber, in the earliest ages of Rome. The banks of the river are not protected by walls or quays, but are, in most cases, lined with mean, narrow streets—the backs of the houses being close to the water's edge, or separated only by a strip of gravel, which is covered with water when the river, near the Porta Portese, where the few small sea-going craft that ascend the Tiber discharge their cargoes beside a custom-house, which is on the wharf. On the left bank, just opposite, there is a piece of waste ground, which bears the fine-sounding name of the Marmorata (the site of the ancient Navalia), and is intended to serve as a landing-place for the marble brought from the quarries of Carrara; but the name is all that is great about it, for the business carried on there is nil. Both banks in this locality have been used as wharves from time immemorial. Until a few years ago there was a quay for landing fire-wood, called Porto di Legna, at the highest part of the river, within the walls: it is now a public promenade.

THE WALLS.

The walls encompassing Rome Proper (on the left bank) follow generally the circuit of the Emperor Aurelian's walls, built about A.D. 271. The ancient rampart of King Servius Tullius, which served as a boundary to the infant city, had, in Aurelian's time, been long lost amidst the constantly increasing growth of streets, squares, gardens, &c., which extended in every direction to a great distance. That prudent Emperor, therefore, finding the Goths, who even at that time had established a footing within the Empire, hovering about Italy in an attitude somewhat too menacing not to create considerable apprehension for the fate of the city, if the barbarians should pounce upon it, wholly unprotected as it then was; and warned by sad experience, that Rome's proudest and best defence of old, the invincible arms of her iron legions on the frontiers, must no longer form her sole reliance, drew a line of circumvallation around the more compact proportions of the city, not seeking to enclose the long rows of villas, which stretched out like arms from the main trunk, lining the Appian, the Flaminian, and other great roads. The extent of this enclosure has been variously estimated, but the best concurrent testimony fixes it at between twelve and thirteen miles, including the Transtevere; and the same line has been generally observed in all the subsequent rebuildings and repairs made by the Emperor Honorius, the Gothic King Theodoric, Belisarius, the Greek exarch Narses, and the various Popes, from the Gregories (II. and III.), Adrian I., and Leo IV., who included the Borgo in the year 847, down through a succession of Pontiffs to Urban VIII., who united the Borgo to the Trastevere by a rampart running along the ridge of the Janiculum, from the Vatican to San Pancrazio, which he continued thence to the Porta Portese, on the banks of the Tiber, and thus completed the circuit as it now exists, measuring about fourteen miles. The height of the wall now is considerably, but generally it averages about fifteen feet: there is no ditch, but it is strengthened by towers and bastions. Its many restorations suffice to account for its very quiet-look appearance, which is rendered more remarkable by the irregularity of its contour in several places where parts of buildings that stood in the way were incorporated in its structure, without regard to the fitness of their form or otherwise—as, for instance, the walls and arches of the Claudian and Julian Aqueducts, the three sides of the Pretorian Camp, on the north-east, and the outer wall of the Amphitheatrum Castrense, on the south-east side. The leaning wall, or Muro Torto, at the Pincian, is, perhaps, the most extraordinary feature, seeing that even in the time of Belisarius it presented the same menacing appearance that it does at present. The general substance is brick, intermixed in some places with blocks of stone and rubbish. Some antiquarians profess to tell the date of each particular portion of the wall by the nature and materials of its construction, but they are more ingenious than matter-of-fact in their speculations. There are sixteen gates, several of which, however, are closed or walled up. They occur in the following order, making the circuit eastward from—1. The Porta del Popolo, where the great north road (the ancient Flaminian Way) enters the city; 2. Porta Pinciana; 3. Porta Salaria; 4. Porta Pia; 5. Porta S. Lorenzo; 6. Porta Maggiore; 7. Porta S. Giovanni; 8. Porta Latina; 9. Porta S. Sebastiano; 10. Porta S. Paolo, and beyond the Tiber; 11. Porta Portese; 12. Porta S. Pancrazio; 13. Porta Cavalleggieri; 14. Porta Fabrica; 15. Porta Angelica; and 16. Porta Castello. Of all these the handsomest is the Porta Maggiore: it is a fine majestic arch of Travertino stone, and formed originally a part of the Claudian Aqueduct.

THE STREETS AND PALACES.

The STREETS of Rome, though for the most part narrow and without footpaths, are, however, frequently long, straight, and regular, and lined with fine lofty mansions, which impart to their appearance an air of grandeur; while the great number of spacious squares, piazzas, quadrangles, oval and circular enclosures, and gardens, render the city open and airy, and combine with the bright sunny climate to give it a generally cheerful aspect.*

On entering the city through the Porta del Popolo, by the ancient Flaminian Way, the open circular area in front is called the Piazza del Popolo (see Illustration, page 321); and with its fountains and Egyptian obelisk in the centre (noticed in another column), the heights of the Pincian Hill crowned with public gardens on one side, and rows of trees on the other, and its southern sweep flanked by the domes and porticoes of the churches Santa Maria del Popolo, and Santa Maria del Miracolo—the whole terminating in three long and spacious streets, which carry the eye a long distance—it forms one of the handsomest entrances to be seen in any capital in Europe, and presents a most imposing effect to the view. Leading southward from the Piazza, the Corso, the Ripetta, and the Via del Babbuino, are three fine streets of considerable length, which are crossed nearly at right angles by the streets Fontanella and Condotti, the latter communicating with the Piazza di Spagna and the lofty flight of steps ascending to the Piazza della Trinità de' Monte, on the Pincian Hill, from which there is a magnificent view of Rome.

The Corso is the principal street of Modern Rome, and is the central of the three thoroughfares leading from the Piazza del Popolo, from which it extends something better than a mile, in a straight line south, to the Piazza di Venezia. The houses which line it on either side, though generally large and lofty, are so irregularly placed—some jutting out into the street, others retiring far back, and few or none forming a continuous regular range either as to the height of the eaves or of the window rows—that the general effect is bad and disagreeable. The footways for passengers partake of the general irregularity, being in some places of moderate width, and in others so narrow that scarcely two persons can walk abreast; while they are raised inconveniently high above the carriage-road, which is sufficiently broad to constitute a pretty capacious thoroughfare. The name of Corso is derived from the street being used as the "course" for the riderless horses which run races during the Carnival. In the Corso, also, all the masking and mummery, the riotous and uproarious sports of that festive season, take place.

The Ripetta, which is the street leading from the Piazza del Popolo westward of the Corso, runs for a considerable distance along the bank of the Tiber. The Via del Babbuino, which proceeds eastward to the Piazza di Spagna, is a handsome thoroughfare lined with good shops and some of the principal hotels of the city, and is decorated with the fountain of the Babbuino, or Babboon, which gives name to the street, and is itself so called from the appearance of its chief ornament—an antique figure of a sylvan god, or satyr, the features of which are defaced and shattered by the wear and accidents of time. The Collegio Greco is situated in this street, nearly opposite to the fountain.

The Piazza di Spagna is the grand head-quarters of the English and foreign residents of fashion. The houses are lofty and of good construction, and in the centre of the area is the Fontana della Barcaccia. The piazza is named from the Spanish Embassy, which is situated there. The celebrated college of the Propaganda also bounds a portion of its limits: its grand feature, however, is the noble flight of steps on its eastern side communicating with the public promenade on the Pincian Hill, where all the fashionable world of Rome is to be met in crowds every evening for two or three hours before sunset. (See Engraving, page 316.)

The Via Sistina, the Via Felice, and the Via della Quattro Fontane, conduct from this place, by the Piazza Barberini, towards the Quirinal, and on to the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore, on the Esquiline, the Via della Quattro Fontane being intersected by a noble avenue that runs from the Piazza di Monte Cavallo, upwards of a mile, to the Porta Pia. All these streets are a good breadth, and well built. At the intersection last mentioned there is an open area, adorned with four fountains, whence the name. Adjoining the Capuchin Convent and garden at the north of the Piazza Barberini, is the Pembino, or, as it is sometimes called, the Ludovics Villa, with its beautiful grounds and handsome casino, which, amongst other gems of art, contains Guercino's fresco of "Aurora." The Palazzo Barberini, which, as well as the piazza in which it is situated, and the two fountains there, owes its origin to Pope Urban VIII., is a large pile of building erected after the designs of Bernini. It contains a fine library, which possesses many valuable manuscripts; and a good collection of paintings, among which is the portrait of Beatrice Cenci, which was taken by Guido a few days before her execution. In the Piazza di Monte Cavallo, beside the Papal palace of the Quirinal, there are the Palazzo della Consulta, and the Palazzo Rospighosi, in one of the principal apartments of which is Guido's great masterpiece—the group of "Aurora and the Hours ushering in the Dawn," for a view of which alone the Rospighosi is well worth a visit.

The PIAZZA DI MONTE CAVALLO, a view of which, with the Quirinal Palace on the right, is given in the Illustration, page 316, occupies the crest of the Quirinal Hill, and is so called from the celebrated groups of "Horse-tamers" at each side of the entrance, which is styled, which stand on each side of the Egyptian obelisk, and close to the fountain, both of which are noticed in another page. All three form most conspicuous objects of decoration in the open elevated place where they are situated, and are a portion of the treasures which have rewarded the trouble of excavation; they appear in the Illustration on the left hand, being the Palace. The horses and their riders were found in the year 1589, amongst the ruins of the Baths of Constantine, within a short distance of their present position, where they were planted by Pope Sixtus V. They are said to be the work of the celebrated Grecian sculptors Phidias and Praxiteles, and to have been brought to Rome by Constantine the Great from Alexandria, in which city they had stood for several centuries previously.

The principal entrance to the Quirinal Palace—the Pope's summer residence—in this piazza, opens into a large square court surrounded on all four sides by the buildings of the palace, neither the style nor decoration of which do of so ornate a character as might be expected. The grand attraction of the palace is its gardens, which are planned in the Italian fashion. The long broad walks, bordered with high close-cropt hedges of evergreens, having niches at frequent intervals filled with statues, afford a grateful shelter from the sun's rays, while the present play of fine fountains cools the atmosphere and soothes the ear with the murmuring sound of the falling water. Pleasure-grounds, aviaries, shrubberies, grottoes, and summer-houses complete the decorations of this exquisite retreat. All this quarter (from the Pincian to Santa Maria Maggiore) constitutes the eastern portion of the town, and is not very thickly inhabited.

The immediate neighbourhood of the Corso, on either side, is remarkable for the various palaces which it contains. It is a quarter much more densely peopled than the district just glanced at, and is the chief scene of the busy movement and daily intercourse of the population. About midway down the Corso is the Piazza Colonna, with its ancient column of Antoninus; immediately adjoining is the Monte Citorio, a small hill formed from the ruins of the Amphitheatre of Statilius Taurus, where the Curia Innocenziana—the seat of the Treasury and some other public offices—is situated. The Curia is a fine building, and owes its foundation to Innocent X. A little further down the Corso, on

* It must be admitted, however, that in the matters of paving, lighting, cleansing, &c., and those other local arrangements which with us are deemed absolutely essential to comfort and convenience, Rome is sadly deficient. Nothing can be more dismal of a wet night than the "darkness visible" of the oil lamps; and while in the cross streets there is no trottoir, the mud or dust according to the character of the weather, is quite appalling.

